The Annual Report of the Board of Managers was read by the Corresponding Secretary. It stated that besides issuing regularly the Sabbath Recorder and the Sabbath-School Visitor, the Board have taken measures to secure the publication of a Denominational Magazine, to forward the preparation of a Denominational History, and to facilitate the purchase of Libraries for the Sabbath-Schools and Bible Classes connected with our churches. A concise account is given of what has been done in each of these departments, furnishing all the facts necessary to a complete acquaintance with the operations and condition of the Society. As the Report is soon to be printed, and a copy sent to each member, we do not think it necessary here to enter into the details. We will say, however, in regard to the Magazine, that its publication has been contemplated by the Board for some time—Lucius Crandall, Walter B. Gillett, and Thos. B. Stillman having been appointed more than a year ago to take charge of the work, and bring it out at their discretion. They have already collected considerable matter for it—have procured lithographic portraits of a number of persons, including Elders Thomas Hiscox, Wm. Bliss, Wm. Satterlee, John Davis, Eli S. Bailey, Wm. B. Maxson, Solomon Carpenter, and Nathan Wardner—and they have in preparation wood cuts of several of the oldest meeting-houses of the denomination. They propose to issue the first number of the Magazine on or before the first day of January, 1852, and to continue it quarterly. Each number will contain a portrait and one or more wood cuts, together with biographies of individuals, historical sketches of churches, and such statistical and miscellaneous matter as appears suited to give a correct view of the origin, progress and condition of the denomination.

On the motion to adopt and print the Report, interesting remarks were made by several individuals. In the course of these remarks, the notion which prevails in some quarters that it would be well to reduce the price of the Sabbath Recorder, and indeed the whole subject of "cheap papers," was thoroughly canvassed. The conclusion seemed to be general, that a reduction of the price of the paper would be bad economy for all concerned.

The original Constitution of the Publishing Society, as prepared by the Convention of Delegates from the several Associations, was very brief and incomplete, creating a necessity to incorporate in the by-laws of ths Board some regulations which belong more properly to the Constitution. To remove this difficulty, the Board had prepared, and presented with their Report, an enlarged and amended form of Constitution, which was adopted with great unanimity, and will be printed with the forthcoming Report.

The following is the list of officers of the Publishing Society for the ensuing year:—

President,
LUCIUS CRANDALL, of Plainfield, N. J.

Vice Presidents.
NATHAN V. HULL, Alfred, N. Y.
WM. B. MAXSON, Leonardsville, N. Y.
JOHN A. LANGWORTHY, Genesee, N. Y.
CHARLES POTTER, Adams, N. Y.
JAMES H. COCHRAN, Berlin, N. Y.
DAVID DUNN, New Market, N. J.
ISAAC D. TITSWORH, Shiloh, N. J.
ALFRED B. BURDICK, Pawcatuck, R. I.
STILLMAN COON, Milton, Wis.

Corresponding Secretary,
GEORGE B. UTTER, of New York.

Recording Secretary,
THOMAS B. STILLMAN, of New York.

Treasurer,
BENEDICT W. ROGERS, of Williamsburgh, L. I.

Auditor,
THOMAS S. ALBERTI, of Plainfield, N. J.

Managers, (with the other officers.)
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, Plainfield, N. J.
WALTER B. GILLETT, New Market, N. J.
RANDOLPH DUNHAM, Plainfield, N. J.
JONATHAN MAXSON, Jr., Westerly, R. I.

The next Anniversary of the Society is to be held at Plainfield, N. J., on the Second-day following the second Sabbath in September, 1852.

The Tract Society.

On First-day, Sept. 14, the American Sabbath Tract Society held its Eighth Anniversary—a pleasant and interesting occasion—preceded by a sermon from Eld. A. B. Burdick.

The Report of the Treasurer showed that $608 38 had been received within the year, of which $259 72 had been paid out, and $348 66 remained in the treasury. Work is in progress, and is soon to be completed, which will probably absorb nearly all of this balance, and leave the treasury in a condition to welcome the continued and liberal contribution of the Society's friends.

The Annual Report of the Board of Directors states, that soon after the last Anniversary efforts were made to secure the services of a suitable person as General Agent of the Society—one who could devote his whole time to the preparation and distribution of tracts, and lecturing on the subject of the Sabbath. In this, however, the Board were unsuccessful; and therefore the best plan of operations for the year was judged to be, to print tracts as extensively as the funds of the Society would warrant, and to distribute them through the agency of colporteurs employed for that express purpose, through the missionaries of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society and of the several Associations; and through private individuals who were interested in the work. Accordingly three persons have been employed portions of the year in the work of tract distributing—one in Western New York, another in Central New York, and the third in New York City. The Report embodies extracts from the journals of these laborers, Eld. Azor Estee, a missionary in Ohio and Virginia—Eld. Elias Burdick, a missionary of the Central Association—and Eld. H. P. Burdick, a missionary of the Western Association—have each done something in the way of distributing tracts in their respective fields of labor. By private individuals, who purchase the publications of the Society, and distribute them gratuitously from their own houses and in their travels, more than usual has been done during the past year. Several tract depositories have been established in different sections of the denomination, and in a number of instances parcels of tracts have been sent to places in foreign lands where facilities for their distribution were known to exist. New editions of all the tracts have been printed within the year, most of which are already in circulation. The Board have also recently ordered an edition of all the tracts on a quality of paper, and in a style suited to binding, with a view of placing a copy in the library of each Sabbath-School in the denomination, and in families as far as practicable.

S. S. Griswold moved the adoption and printing of the report—a motion which he sustained by appropriate remarks, and which was adopted.

Wm. M. Jones presented, and advocated with much earnestness, a resolution to the effect "that the fact mentioned in the Report of the Board, that private individuals are beginning to feel their responsibility to engage in the work of tract distribution, is encouraging to the Society, and is commended to the consideration of all friends of the tract enterprise." Mr. J. mentioned many circumstances illustrative of the success of individual effort, and portrayed the probable consequences if every Sabbath-keeper in the land were to become a tract distributor according to his abilities and opportunities.

A resolution, "that the Spirit of inquiry on the subject of the Sabbath which is abroad in the land should excite Sabbath-keepers to great diligence in the dissemination of their views," was offered by O. P. Hull, who remarked upon the evidences that such a spirit of inquiry exists, and the encouragment to efforts to promote a Sabbath reform.

James H. Cochran presented and advocated with the zeal and eloquence of thorough conviction, and deep feeling, the following resolution: "That our hope of success in efforts to promote a Sabbath reform through the instrumentality of tracts and other agencies, rests upon the promise of Him who has said, 'My Word shall not return unto me void;' and that, therefore, we request all who desire the success of these efforts to make them the subject of frequent and importunate prayer."

A resolution was presented by W. B. Gillet, "that the Board of the Tract Society be instructed to emyloy a colporteur who is conversant with the German language to travel and labor among the German population of Pennsylvania and other parts of our country." Mr. G. accompanied this resolution with a lengthy and interesting account of the German Sabbath-keepers of Pennsylvania, and of the German population in that State generally,

After a session of nearly four hours, during which the house was filled to overflowing, the Society adjourned to meet at Plainfield, N. J., on the Third-day following the second Sabbath in Sept., 1852.

MEETING OF THE AM. BIBLE UNION.

We are informed by the Corresponding Secretary, Wm. H. Wyckoff, that the American Bible Union will hold its Second Anniversary on Thursday the 2d of October, in the meeting-house of the First Baptist church, in the city of New York. The exercises will be commenced at 9 A. M., and will be continued in the afternoon and evening.

Among the speakers who are expected to address the Union, are the Rev. Messrs. D. E. Thomas, of Zanesville, Ohio; Jas. Inglis, of Detroit, Mich.; S. Adlam, of Newport, R. I.; and Rev. Drs. J. L. Waller, of Louisville, Ky.; S. H. Cone, and A. Maclay.

A committee, consisting of Rev. Messrs. S. Adlam, of R. I., James Pyper, of Canada West, Jas. Inglis, of Mich., J. L. Waller, of Ky., general chairmen of the Southern Provisional Committee for a Revised English Version; D. E. Thomas, of Ohio, Eld. James Challen, of Cincinnati, Secretary of the American Christian Bible Society, and Hon. Thomas Swaim, of New Jersey, is expected to commence its session at the Bible Rooms, 90 Chambers Street, on Friday the 26th of September, and to report to the Union upon the Plan and Proceedings of the Board and the Committee on Versions for the correction of the English Testament.

The Temperance Cause.—The British Banner, referring to the temperance movements of our people, remarks that, to the praise of their humanity and the piety which produces it, there is no nation in which greater efforts are being made to arrest the fearful pestilence, and to save the country from ruin. We do not know, it says, that a more important and cheering document ever crossed the Atlantic than the last Journal of the American Temperance Union, "Would that in our own, and other countries," exclaims the Banner," "appearances were less discouraging! In Great Britain the consumption in a single year, of 22,962,012 gallons of home spirits, 3,044,758 of West India rum, 435,139,965 of malt beer, 2,187,500 of brandy, and 6,136,547 of wine, at a cost of sixty millions of pounds sterling, resulting in a frightful amount of pauperism, crime, and premature death, tells a sad tale!" There was to be a World's Temperance Convention in London on the 4th of this month.

The Christian Union says Mr. Newman, who went over from the Church of England to Rome, a few years ago, has recently made the following novel interpretation of the apocalyptic number, 666: "Astonishing to say, Queen Victoria is distinctly pointed out in the book of Revelation as having the number of the beast! The number is 666. Now, she came to the throne in '37, at which date she was 18 years old. Multiply, then, 37 by 18 and you have the very number, 666, which is the mystical emblem."

EDUCATIONAL.

The Teacher's Association of Vermont held its first annual meeting lately at Waterbury, Rev. Dr. Smith, of the Vermont University, in the chair. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Joseph King, of Newbury, Mr. Z. K. Pangborn, of Johnson, Professor Pease, of Burlington, and by Mr. C. G. Burnham, State Superintendent. The attendance of teachers was not large, but the discussions arising from the addresses, and on other topics which came before the meeting, are said to have been highly interesting.

From the recent report of Dr. Ryerton, Superintendent of Education in Canada West, it appears that during the preceding year, there were £88,478 currency paid to teachers, and £14,189 for erection and repairs of school houses. The number of pupils had increased nearly 15,000—the whole number being 151,891—which, however, leaves nearly 100,000 children in the province, who never enter the door of a school house. Of the 8,059 schools only 2,097 are in the habitual use of the Bible; and in 3,059 religious instructions of an unsectarian character is given. During the year 2,476 teachers have been employed, of whom 779 only are females—191 had been trained at Normal schools—858 are Presbyterians—904 Methodist—796 Episcopal—390 Catholics—238 Baptist and 73 Congregationlist. The average of their remuneration was from £30 to £60 for males, and from £20 to £40 for females.

The initial anniversary of Cleveland University took place on the 20th ult. The President, Rev. Asa Mahan, delivered an address on the comparative merits of the old and new systems of education, taking decided ground in favor of Dr. Wayland's system at Brown.

The Rochester University proposes to take from the Public schools in that city, three pupils each year to educate gratuitously.

Rev. Dr. R. I. Breckinridge has been reelected Superintendent of Public Instruction for Kentucky.

The Bridgwater Normal Association held its annual convention on the 20th ult., Dana P. Colburn presiding. Rev. Horace James, of Wrentham, orator of the day, gave a very able discourse on General Culture. The Rev. Dr. Sears, Rev. Mr. Babcock, of Dedham, Hon. Charles Upham, of Salem, Rev. Mr. Otherman, member of the State Board of Education, Rev. Mr. Brigham, of Taunton, and others, made addresses bearing upon Normal Schools.

The American Association for the Advancement of Education recently met at Celeveland, Ohio. Pres. Mahan, and a professor of Brown University, supported the cause of Academic Enlargement, and Prof. Agnew. Dr. Duffield, Bishop Potter and others, took groung in favor of the old system.

Good News from Mr. Oncken.—Mr. Oncken, in a letter to the Macedonian, dated Hamburg, July 10, furnishes an account of the labors of Mr. Hinrichs in East Friesland aided by Mr. Menger, who is supported by the Northwestern Association of churches. Eight stations are supported in that country, and the laborers have extended their efforts into Holland, made tours in various parts of Hanover and Oldenburg, and visited and distributed the Bible in the Island of Borkum. Mr. O. says: "The seed that has been sown far and wide has been watered by the dews of heaven, so that not less than forty-five believers were added to the little church at the different stations. None were excluded during the past year, and the number of members at the close of the year, at all the eight stations, were 116. In 1846, I baptized the first two members at Leer in the dead hour of midnight, for fear of being arrested by the police, and was obliged to leave Leer the next day. At that time there was not the shadow of a hope that such results as the above would be achieved in so short a period. But all things are possible with Him in whose service we are engaged. At the three principal stations, Leer, Ihren and Weener, there are Sunday schools numbering seventy-two scholars and thirteen teachers."

American Bible Society.—The monthly meeting of the Board of Managers of this Society was held on Thursday, September 4, Dr. Thomas Cock presided, assisted by Hon. Luther Bradish. The Scriptures were read by Rev. Dr. Dewitt. Eight new auxiliaries were recognized. A letter was read announcing the death of one of the Society's agents, Rev. H. J. Durbin, who was killed, while in the prosecution of his labors, by the falling of the limb of a tree during a violent storm. A letter from Rev. E. G. Nicholson, missionary at Santa Fe, in regard to the moral condition of New Mexico, and the need of the Holy Scriptures there. Among others was an interesting letter from Rev. R. J. Breckenridge, D. D., Superintendent of the Public Instruction in Kentucky, in regard to the introduction of the Scriptures, as a school-book, into the common schools of that State. Appropriate action was taken on the subject. A gratifying communication from Bishop Boone of Shanghae, that the preparation of the Old Testament is the Chinese language is progressing satisfactorily. Numerous grants of books were made in our own and other languages; Swedish and English Testaments, Danish and English Testaments, &c., with several Bibles, or portions of the Bible for the blind.

Relinquishing the Episcopal Ministry.—Says the Protestant Churchman: "It is stated by Bishop Burgess that for the last two or three years the relinquishments of the ministry of our Church have been half as many at least as the deaths, and about equal to one in seven of the ordinations to the Diaconate. He adds, with much justice—the want of candidates for the ministry will soon, I apprehend, be felt as the most urgent necessity of the church, since there can be no progress at home, no missionary success abroad, and no means of spiritual growth adequate even to the necessities of existing congregations, without an increased and constantly increasing company of preachers."

Endowment of Rochester University.—An educational meeting of much interest was held in the city of Oswego, last month, in behalf of Rochester University, in connection with which subscriptions were obtained to the endowment of that Institution, amounting to about $3,000. Considering that the Baptists are not numerous there, that was a liberal contribution, and speaks well for their interest in the cause of general and ministerial education. The agents of that Institution report $190,000 as subscribed for endowment. The Baptist Register, our authority for the above facts, says, "With such a University at Rochester, and Madison University at Hamilton, both well endowed, the Baptists of this State will be able to do more for the secular and sacred learning than they have hitherto done throughout the United States. We hope to see the day when these noble Institutions will be able to educate gratuitously all who come to them. Let intelligence be as free as the sunlight and the darkness of ignorance will flee away."

Female Medical Education Society.—The president and directors of this Institution, which was organized in Boston in 1848, and incorporated last year, have issued an address to its friends. The legislative committee on education last winter, made an elaborate report in favor of the objects of the society, and of a grant to it of $5,000. These objects are to provide for and promote the education of females as professional attendants upon their own sex, in the duties of midwifery, and in the treatment of disease peculiar to women and children; also, to educate nurses, and incidentally diffuse physiological, sanatory, and curative knowledge among females generally. As one means of doing this, this school has been established. During the ten years of its operation, the pupils have numbered above sixty, and they have come from all the New-England States, New York, and Ohio.

Conference of the Evangelical Alliance.—The leading spirits of this alliance are making great efforts so draw representatives from a wide circle to the approaching Conference, which will occupy nearly a fortnight. France, Belgium, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, will be well represented, and no doubt startling and most interesting facts will be presented to the Christian world. Sir Culling Eardley, who is at the head of the movement, is on the Continent, laboring to promote its objects. Dr. Steane (Baptist) is also in Germany to aid in making arrangements for the representation of the German Protestant churches. There is increasing evidence that the Pietists of Germany are marvelously active. There is great excitement at Heidelbelberg consequent upon the commencement of a Jesuit mission there.

Memoir of Dr. Cote.—The Grande Ligne Magazine says we are glad to inform our friends, that a short memoir of the late Dr. Cote has been prepared by one of the ministers of the mission, which will shortly be issued by the American Baptist Publication Society. The life of Dr. Cote is an extraordinary one, and shows the power of the grace of God, which can transform a rebellious leader into a fervent believer, who, after having found the true source of happiness in this world and the world to come, delights in making it known to others. Such changes are exceedingly gratifying, and speak loudly in favor of the gospel which is able to accomplish them.

One Hundred and Fifty-eight Monks Drowned.—A letter from Moscow states that, on the 20th ult., as the monks of the convent of Waldimir, a town about 120 miles to the north-east of that city, were setting out in a procession, to visit an image of the Virgin at a neighboring village, a wooden bridge thrown over the moat of the convent (formerly a fortress) gave way, and out of 200 of the monks, 158 were drowned. This immense loss of life was caused by the water being 45 feet deep, and the sides of the moat being perpendicular.

The Irish Roman Catholic Bishops.—It is asserted on good authority that twenty-three of the twenty-seven Roman Catholic Prelates of England are about to sign a public document, drawn up in such a manner as to violate the spirit and terms of the new Act, for the purpose of provoking a prosecution by the Attorney-General. Dr. Murray, Dr. Ryan and two other Roman Catholic bishops, refused to sign the paper, which will be forthwith published.

Toleration in 1851.—Mr. Venillot, the editor of the Univers, a Romish daily at Paris, says in his Pelerinages, de Suisse, page 187, 4th edition:—"What I regret, to speak fankly, is, that John Huss was not burnad sooner, and that Martin Luther was not burned as well as he; that no prince was then to be found, pious enough or politc enough, to set on foot a crusade against the Protestants."

Bibles.—The returns laid before the House of Commons show that during three years ending Dec. 31, 1850, the Queen's printers printed 1,157,500 Bibles and 754,000 Testaments. For the same period there were printed at the Oxford press 875,750 Bibles and 750,000 Testaments. At the Cambridge press, 138,500 Bibles and 204,000 Testaments.

Liquor Law in Main.—Neal Dow, Esq., of Portland, in a letter to The Temperance Union, says:—

"Our law works well. We are gradually contracting the area within which we have the Rum traffic enclosed; and, in good time, we will exterminate it all. In the interior towns, the law is found to be efficient and sufficient. At some of the railway stations liqour has been seized and destroyed before the face of the owners; and there is no remedy; for the law says: "No action shall be had or maintained in any Court in this State for the recovery or possession of intoxicating liquors, or the value thereof."

Quite an animated discussion is going on in Methodist circles at the West, respecting pewed Churches. A series of articles, replying to some person's articles advocating pews, is now publishing in The Nashville Christian Advocate.

General Intelligence.

Foreign News.

By the arrival of the steamer Niagara we have dates from Liverpool to August 30; London, 29; Paris, 28.

The great race between the American yacht America and Mr. Stephenson's Titania came off on Thursday, the 28th, and resulted in the complete triumph of the America.

The political news brought by the Pacific is unimportant. The Queen has gone to Scotland, and is received with the usual festivities.

The affair of the Lyons plot is upon the point of ending in confusion. The news reached Paris that the counsel for the defense had retired in a body from the court, and with the consent of the acccused, had refused to take any further part in the trial. We are without precise details as to the immediate cause which led to this determination, if indeed there were any other that the monstrous injustice of which the Government has been guilty from the very beginning of the descussion.

On Thursday, the 26th, the Anniversary of the Death of Louis Philippe, funeral ceremonies were performed in nearly all the churches of Paris. The Debates newspapers, sent a correspondent to England, to be present at the ceremony at the French chapel in King-st., at which the exiled Royal family attended in deep mourning.

M. Petin's ærial machine is ready for flight, and only waits for the permission of the Perfect of Police, M. Franconi, the lessee of the Champ de Mars, being in treaty with that officer for the necessary authorization. Last Sunday, the two small engines were set in motion, before a large attendance, and worked as all engines of four horse power do. It is believed that M. Petin will make a signal failure.

The Opinione, of Turin, of Aug. 23, publishes a letter, dated Florence, 19th Aug., which says: "On Sunday night, an Englishman, named Walker, and three or four Florentines, who met in his house to read the Bible of Diodati, were arrested and conveyed to prison. Mr. Walker is a great friend of Count Guicciardini, who was exiled from Tuscany for a similar motive by order of the police."

From Rome we hear of two more political assassinations. A Milan paper contains a letter from Rome to the 12th, which says, "A man named Orlandi, was assaulted last night and stabbed by an unknown hand. As the crime was preperated near the squares of Colonno and Monte Citorio, close to the residence of Major Caramelli, it was believed that he was the marked man, and that it was by mistake that Orlandi was killed. The director of the police of Pesaro has been murdered at the gate of his dwelling."

At Nowawess (a coloney of weavers near Potsdam, founded by Frederick the Great,) a shocking scene happened on the 19th. As the new guilt cupola of the church was being put on, the workmen asked for brandy; the priest opposed, and a riot began, wherein the clergyman received blows in the face, was thrown to the ground, and ill-treated in a most atrocious manner, within the very precincts of the church. The better class of the inhabitants hastened to the rescue, and saved him from the hands of his assailants.

From Syria we have accounts of the massacre of a number of Christians in Armenia. It appears that a number of Mussulmen attempted to pillage the Government bank. The banker resisted the assailants, who returned in great numbers, and, it is reported, murdered every Christian they met. The Government succeeded in seizing the culprits, and dealt with them in the most summary manner.

Riot in Christiana.

On Thursday last there was a serious riot at Christiana, Pa. The cause may be learned by the following extracts from the Baltimore Clipper:—

Mr. Edward Gorsuch, in company with his son Mr, Dickenson Gorsuch, and several of his neighbors, Dr. Pearce, Mr. Nathan Nelson, Mr. Nicholas Hutchins (son of Joshua Hutchins, Esq.,) and his nephew Mr. Joshua Gorsuch, proceeded to Philadelphia, and there obtaining the services of a Deputy U. S. Marshal, started on Thursday morning for the village. At an early hour in the morning, the party encountered a negro man and boy, the latter of whom Gorsuch immediately recognized as one of his slaves. Both of the negroes, on observing the party, immediately ran, pursued by the U. S. Marshall, Mr. Gorsuch, and his friends. After pursuing the fugitives a short distance into the village, they finally took refuge in a house, which appeared to be strongly secured from within. While standing before the house, and the Marshall demanding admittance, an upper window was raised by some one, and a heavy billet of wood was thrown down, which took effect on one of the party, felling him to the earth. The Marshal, and those with him, here attempted to force an entrance, but while vainly endeavoring to do so, a bugle was sounded by some one in the house, and very soon a party of some sixty negroes and whites appeared, armed with scythes, clubs, guns and pistols, and completely surrounded the house, as well as the Marshal and the others. About this time those within fired several guns, which took with fatal effect upon Mr. Gorsuch and his friends. The old gentleman was shot dead upon the spot, and his son, Mr. Dickenson Gorsuch, received a severe wound in his arm. Here followed a general melee. The nephew of Mr. Gorsuch, we also understand, was quite seriously injured, and reached York, Pa., the same night. So far as we can ascertain, no arrests were made. The Marshal was entirely powerless to do anything, and could obtain no cöoperation or assistance from the local authorities, It also stated that a number of the negroes were wounded in the affray, which took place between them and the Messrs. Gorsuch and friends. One account is to the effect that some three or four were killed. How far this may be relied on we are unable to say.

From China.—China is still in a disturbed state. The new Emperor (of the rebels,) was reported to be at Sinchau, a department of the city of Kwang-si, having a water communication with Canton, whence it is distant about two hundred miles. In a letter from one of his followers we find it stated that Teen-teh is himself at the head of the rebel forces, whom he led to victory "in the middle term of the third month of the present year" (about two months ago,) "when 10,000 of the Government troops were destroyed, being hemmed in a narrow pathway through a wood in a mountain pass." Having been duly proclaimed Emperor, Teen-teh dates the commencement of his reign from the month of September of last year, and has published an almanac, which his emissaries are busily distributing in various parts of the Empire. In Kiang-si, the province between Hunam and Fekieo we hear that great demonstrations are made in his favor.

The Cherokee Indians in the States.—Congress, in July, 1848, having passed an act allowing interest to that portion of the Cherokees located principally in North Carolina, and in parts of Georgia and Tennessee, to be paid anually, on commutation of removal and subsistence—they preferring to remain where they were, instead of accepting of new homes west of the Mississippi, with many of their red brethren—Colonel A. M. Mitchell was a short time since appointed by the Treasury Department, and L. R. Smoot, Esq., by the Indian Department, as his assistant, to visit the people and disburse the annuity. These gentlemen returned to Washington on Friday, having traversed the wide extent of country over which these Cherokees are scattered, and paid off about fifteen hundred of them in the course of seven weeks.

These Indians have been represented to us as in the enjoyment, generally, of a condition of prosperity, having well-cultivated farms and school-houses, and other blessings of civilized life. At Quallatown, Haywood County, North Carolina, Messrs. Mitchell and Smoot met with Kalosteh, or Little Dog, who is 120 years of age. He does not seem to be more than 75 or 80. He walks with a stick, but says that he "can kill a deer yet." Che-o-we-loskee, his wife, aged 125 years, died last year, or, as he expressed himself, "went out like a candle." We learn that a number of the Cherokees have attained to five score years.

Lake Superior.—A correspondent of The Lake Superior Journal, speaking of the Norwich Mine says:

They have a mile square of mineral and agricultural land, on which they have sunk three shaft on one vein, one to the depth of twenty-eight feet, one seventy feet, and one thirty-two feet. They are separated some eighty rods from one another. An adit has been driven in, 103 feet in length, which cuts the deepest shaft sixty-three feet below the surface, serving to ventilate and drain the mine. They have drifted on the vein at sixty-three feet fifty feet, showing a well-defined vein at the west end of twenty-six inches in thickness and at the east end thirty-six inches in width, carrying copper in small masses and good stamp work. They have about five acres under improvement; they have lately made a call for $10,000 for carrying on their Winter operations, and with their good show and efficient agent, Mr. Davis, I shall look for a handsome shipment of copper the coming Spring.

The Late Samuel Bowdes.—The Hartford Courant thus speaks of him: "Mr. B. was a practical printer, and served his apprenticeship in this city. For a number of years he was one of the publishers of the Hartford Times. We think it was in 1828 that he removed to Springfield, where he commenced the publication of the Republican, and his connection with that paper was continued till the time of his decease. He was a Democrat of the old school, but on the breaking up of the old parties, he could not go with those of his political associates who favored the election of Gen. Jackson, and his zeal and services in the Whig cause are well known. Mr. B. was noted for his habits of industry, for the soundness of his opinions, for his consistency, for honesty of purpose; and few who have occupied the post of editor have gained more friends or made fewer enemies." Mr. B. had followed to the grave, within a week previous to his death, a daughter, a sister and a grandchild.

The Crops in Canada.—The Quebec Mercury of the 4th says we have received information from a correspondent, who a few days ago visited the adjacent parishes of Ste. Croix and Lotbiniere, that the crops in that neighborhood look exceedingly well, especially the wheat crop. The farmers admit on all sides that this grain has been thus far free from the attacks of the fly, smut and so forth, and from its advanced state, they do not anticipate any danger. In several fields the reapers were at work. Oats also promise abundantly. The hay has been well secured and proves to be above the average quantity. Potatoes look well, and those that were dug out, appeared finer and larger than is usually the case at this time of the year. In detached places, however, there appeared evident signs of the rot. Garden stuffs have proved a complete failure, such as melons, cucumbers, onions, cabbages, &c., nevertheless, there is a feeling of contentment among the farmers.

Another Woman over the Falls.—The Buffalo Courier of the 10th inst. says: "We learn from a reliable source, that yesterday morning, about 7 o'clock, a woman fell into the water at the edge of the Horse-shoe Fall and was carried over. She was a crazy woman, well known to all visitors on the Canada side, and for some years has been a terror to ladies walking alone. A man was arrested and examined on a charge of pushing her into the water, but we understand he was discharged for want of evidence. He alleged that the motions made by him, and which were thought to be made in pushing her over, were only attempts to save her. Still, some by-standers think they plainly saw him push the poor creature into the stream.

Rust in Cotton.—The Lone Star mentions that a new disease has made its appearance in Washington Co., Texas, resembling rust in wheat. The farmers account for it by the slacking of the lime in the land, caused by the cool heavy rains coming suddenly after the long continued drouth. It seems to be confined to the prairie lands. It is thus described by The Lone Star: "From the time it makes its appearance on a plant, until it is thoroughly stripped, is about four days. On the first day, small yellow or rusty spots may be seen on the leaves; the next, perfectly yellow; the next day it is drooping; and the next, entirely stripped of leaves, blooms, squares, and bolls, less than half grown. In riding around the neighborhood we, have seen fields with from a fourth to a third of the cotton dead caused by this disease."

Crops in Texas.—The Galveston News of the 22d ult., says that advices from the interior of the State represent the Cotton crop as uncommonly large, and at that date it was beginning to come into market. In Northern Texas, however, the crops had suffered severely from drouth. The Marshall (Harrison Co.) Republican of the 26th ult. says:

"We have been fifteen years in the Cotton growing States, and we have never known a drouth so long continued, and disastrous. On very few plantations will there be even a fair crop, while on all others scarcely anything will be made. Many planters will not make more than corn enough for bread, and if the drouth continues a few days longer, the Cotton crop will be almost entirely destroyed. It is already so far injured that scarcly a fourth of the usual yield will be realized."

Addition to the Capitol.—From the Washington Republic of the 10th inst., we learn that the work is progressing finely. There are upwards of two hundred and fifty persons employed in the various departments of business. The east basement wall of the south wing is already ten feet in hight, and last Thursday workmen commenced laying stone at the north wing. The foundation walls are eight feet nine inches thick. We will have three hundred seats for members, besides accommodations for persons privileged to the floor. The Senate Chamber will be provided with one hundred seats. The galleries of each branch will accommodate two thousand persons, or more than three times the number under the present arrangements. There will be upward of one hundred new committee rooms. It is thought that the erection of the "addition" will occupy upwards of five years.

Danger to the Rice Crop.—The Georgetown (S. C.) Observer says, we have seen about two thousand acres of rice since the gale of the 24th, and regret to say that all of it was more or less injured; old rice which was ripe or nearly so, had fully ten per cent. of the grains whipped off the ears. That which was in milk and blossom fared much worse. As well as we could judge, fully a third, and in many instances a half of the grains on the ear were blasted and could not mature. We have spoken to many of our best planters, who all agree with us that it is not at all improbable that the damage to the crop will reach twenty or thirty-five per cent. If the freshets, of which we read in our exchanges, should come down the Pee Dee and Santee Rivers the loss will be still greater. Those plantations nearest the sea board appeared to suffer most.

Sad Fatality.—The Albany Evening Journal of the 8th says William Carl, aged about 15, went in bathing yesterday morning, in the Upper Reservoir, about five miles from the city. William Bringham, Jr., was passing by at the time, and saw him struggling in the water—having got beyond his depth Mr. B. immediately ran to his aid, and succeeeded, at great peril to him in bringing him to the shore senseless. He resorted to such means as suggested themselves to him, to revive the unfortunate boy, and succeeded, after some time in restoring him to consciousness. Having done so, Mr. B. left him, supposing him to be out of danger. But the poor fellow had not the strength necessary to get home. He wandered a short distance up the creek, where his body was found soon afterwards, cold and lifeless. The verdict of the Jury was that Carl died from exposure and exhaustion.

A Novelty in Architecture.—We examined, on Saturday, says the New-York Tribune, a new mode of building houses, introduced into these parts by O. S. Fowler, the Phrenologist, who is fitting up a splendid mansion in his new style. The walls are composed of slate, gravel and lime mixed together and laid in boxes, which are raised up as the walls they form become firm enough to receive another layer. In his way, Mr. Fowler has raised four stories high, on a much less cost than any other plan. His design is of octagon shape, eighty feet in diameter, with water, waste and gas pipes, inserted into the walls. There is to be a large reservoir on the roof to receive rain-water for bathing and other purposes. There is a large ice house on the north side, also connected with the wall, which is as firm as the rock on which it stands. All the rooms are angular, presenting a unique but pleasing appearance.

Destruction of Crops, &c.—The Charleston Courier of the 3d inst., publishes the following extract from a letter from Beaufort District: "The crops on St. Helena are in the estimation of some persons, cut off one-half; they are generally good, but on riding down to White Hall Ferry to-day, I see they are awfully whipped, in fact knocked down flat in the alley and looking wretchly. It is the heaviest gale I have ever known to continue so long, it is considered the most destructive since 1824. In Beaufort it was particularly severe. The streets are blocked up with trees, and you will be astonished to hear that every one in the square by the Arsenal has been upset, not one left standing, every fence in the town has been blow down or damaged in some degree."

The Hungarians.—The Washington Intelligencer of the 10th says Capt. Brich, Capt. Lichtenstein, and Cap. Bukvoiz, late of the Hungarian army, are now in this city a delegates of 128 Hungarians who lately arrived from Shumla. We learn that they have been directed by Kossuth to advise with Mlle. Jagiello (now Mrs. Tochman) about the means of reaching the coloney which Gen. Ujhazi formed in Iowa, where they all propose to settle. There are fifteen Hungarian ladies with them, all married. The delegates were yesterday introduced by Major and Mrs. Tochman to the President, and cordially received by him. In answer to their salutations, the President expressed his satisfaction that they and their leader, Kossuth, have chosen this country for their home, and assured them that they will find friends wherever they may settle.

Crops in Wisconsin.—A correspondent of The Chicago Tribune, writing from Janesville, Wisconsin, says the wheat crop in that section of country, notwithstanding the destruction of great portion of it by the blight, is fair. The average yield is from twenty to twenty-five bushels to the acre, and of a superior quality. The yield of oats is the heaviest ever known, amounting, in some instances, to sixty bushels per acre. Corn generally is late, owing to the wet weather o the spring; yet if the frost hold off, a fair crop may be expected. Considerable attention is being paid to the culture of flax, for the purpose of manufacturing flax cotton; for which object, I understand an establishment is to be erected at Beloit.

The Fire Annihilator.—The Baltimore Patriot of the 5th says: "An experiment with one of these annihilators, several of which have been imported by Messrs. Edwards, Sanford, & Co. of Adams & Co.'s Foreign Express, was made yesterday afternoon in the yard of the Merchant's Shot Tower, in this city, under the superintendence of Messrs. Samuel M. Shoemaker, William Peters, and George A. Rawlings, in the presence of a number of gentlemen who had been invited to be present. The machine used was one of the smallest size manufactured, and cost, in England about £3. The mode of operation was as follows: A flour barrel was closely packed with shavings and a quantity of light wood of an inflammable nature, and then set on fire. The effect was almost magical; in a very brief time the fire had almost entirely disappeared, and nothing remained but a heavy volume of thick, black smoke. The experiment was repeated several times, and with the same success; and all present concurred in the opinion that the invention was fully entitled to all the praise which had been conferred upon it, and that it was entirely competent to perform all that has been claimed for it."

SUMMARY.

Dr. David Long died at Cleveland, Ohio, a few days ago, at the age of sixty-three. He commenced the practice of medicine in Cleveland in 1810, when there was scarcely a physician in that part of the country. The region was wild, without roads or bridges, and cabins, in many instances, from eight to ten miles apart, On one occasion, in the fall of the year, about midnight, the doctor rode nine miles in fifty-one minutes. In another instance, in the daytime, he rode fourteen and a half miles in forty-five minutes, by changing horses twice on the route. He brought the news of Hull's surrender of Detroit from the mouth of Black River, twenty-eight miles, in two hours and fourteen minutes. Such was his character for promptness in responding to all calls that were made upon him, and they were, it is stated, far from being few.

A poor widow woman, named Douley, with a child in her arms scarce ten months old, was recently found at night in an old shed in Cincinnati, almost dead from want and exposure. She was unable to speak and could hardly move, but her emaciated form and the desolate hovel which sufficed for her abode, told in unmistakeable terms a tale of suffering and crushing poverty, which to many in a proud city of wealth and plenty would seem fictitious. Providentially the poor creature and her babe were discovered by a man of sincere benevolence and sympathy for the unfortunate, who had them conveyed to his own residence, and furnished with everything requisite to ameliorate their condition, and save, if possible, from a premature grave, the hapless widow and mother.

About three weeks ago, Mr. C. H. Gherkin, of Norfolk, Va., well-known in the community as a professor of music, went to an undertaker, during the forenoon, and though apparently in excellent health, ordered his coffin, stating that he felt an unmistakeable presentiment that he would die in the afternoon. The undertaker, regarding it as a jest, took no further notice of the matter, and in a short time forgot all about the affair. Mr Gherkin, after leaving the establishment, went home, was shortly afterwards taken sick, and at an early hour in the evening was a corpse. The matter is altogether inexplicable, as Mr. G. appeared in excellent health, and was not subject to aberations of intellect.

On Sunday last, an officer in Troy was called by the sexton of St. Mary's Church, to get a woman, named Mrs. Haggerty, down from the belfry. She was discovered by the sexton, who, upon trying to ring the bell, found that it would not go. He then ascended to the tower, and found the woman clinging to the tongue of the bell. She refused to let go her hold and come down, and it was only by the exercise of much persuasion and some force that she was induced to adandon her exalted position. It is supposed that she had been there two days and one night, as she had been missed during that time.

An industrious married couple are carrying on an extensive boot and shoe business on Dupont street, between Jackson and Washington streets, San Francisco, with the aid of a little girl some ten or twelve years old. The "shop" consists of four dingy boards nailed together and placed up against the bank on a vacant lot on the west side of the street, in which this industrious man and his wife sit engaged in patching and mending old boots and shoes, with a side of sole leather, tools, cooking utensils, blankets and bedding, and their only bunk, scattered around them in "masterly disorder," while the little girl attends to the culinary duties of the outdoor household.

An Irish woman, now living in her native country, and the widow of an Irish wagoner who served in the war of the revolution, has just got pension money to the amount of $6,000, and secured under existing laws $500 per annum as long as she lives. She is very poor, and during most of her long life has been living upon a pension of $120 a year. Richard Smith, Cashier of the Metropolis Bank, Washington, rendered the service to the old lady without fee or any other reward than the gratification of serving a poor widow.

Mr. Oliver S. Tilden, of Fitchburgh, Mass., lately lost his life under somewhat singular circumstances. Some two weeks since, he ran a small sliver into one of his thumbs, which he, as he thought, immediately extracted, but after two or three days, it not healing, he employed the usual medicinal remedies, but it continued to grow worse, the effects extending to his arm, and finally to his whole system, resulting in his death.

We learn from the Wetumpka (Ala.) State Guard, that a young man named Benjamin F. Norman, aged near twenty years, a son of Charles Norman, was found shot near his father's residence in Benton county, on the 4th inst. The ball entered the left breast, and it is supposed that he accidently shot himself.

A gentleman in San Jose, California, writes to a southern paper the following paragraph:—"To give you a slight idea of the quantity of rats in this town, I have only to insert the following copy of a sign on Eldorado street, in a conspicuous position:—'Rat-proof Boarding House, by E. Benson.'"

The eccentric and efficient temperance lecturer. Thomas P. Hunt, recently stated that he once persuaded a dealer in Philadelphia, who was extensively engaged in making wines, brandies, etc., to abandon his horrid traffic. He learned from him one of the secrets on the trade, which was, that in order to produce the "nutty flavor" for which Maderia wine was so much admired, he put a bag of cock-roaches into the liquor, and let it remain till they were dissolved.

A few days since, a young Irish woman, who had been in the almshouse in Quincy, Massachusetts, took her infant, aged three weeks, and deposited it in a clump of bushes near that town. The child was accidentally discovered, owing to its cries, by a prsser by. It had been nearly two days in the place where it was found. The unnatural mother is now in prison.

A young woman, whose name is not given, was lately arrested in Charleston, Mass., for stealing shawls, table cloths, and other articles of value, from the family in which she was employed as a domestic, and throwing them into a sink. She confessed to the thefts, and also stated that she had attempted five times to set fire to the house. She assigns no motive for her extraordinary conduct.

They have a very inconsistant method of administering justice in California. Some men they hang for stealing, and others they punish lightly for murder. Charles Duane, known in this city as a bully of the first water, and commonly called Dutch Charley, recently kicked a Mr. Ball to death in San Fancisco. For this, he has been sent to the states prison for one year!

The great railroad celebration at Boston is to take place on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September. The President has received an invitation, by a deputation of the city Government, to attend. Mr. Webster has been also invited. Lord Elgin, Governor General of Canada, and other officers of the Canadian government will be present.

An experienced medical gentleman of Boston lately stated, that, the period of the year in which the highest mortality occured here is now two months earlier that it was twenty years ago. Then, October was the sickly month; in a few years it was September; then August; and now the sickly season commences the latter part of July.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of Wednesday says: "We learn by a gentleman from Detroit that Dr. Fitch the leader of a gang of conspirators, died recently. He is the third one who has died since the commencement of the trial—a singular fatality. It is supposed that they poisoned themselves."

A few days ago, the Salem Standard states, a shark was seen in Salem Creek, near the Truss Bridge. About seven feet of the monster were seen above the surface at one time. It is supposed to be the first instance of one being so high up from the ocean.

A gigantic piece of gold was recently shown to the editor of the Sacramento Times. It weighed fifteen pounds two and one eighth ounces nearly. It was free from all impurities. This beautiful piece of gold was found upon a bar on Scott's river.

A man named Lucas was killed in Richmond, Me., on the 30th ult., while engaged in blasting rocks. It is not certainly known were the unfortunate man belonged. He was a widower and has children livinging Boston. He was about 48 years old, and a very steady, likely man.

Mr. Smith R. Rounds, of Fall River Mass., died on the 4th inst, from injuries received by the bursting of a camphene lamp. This only adds another to the list of the victims of this abomination, which is increased weekly, if not daily.

At Mr. Lowell Fletcher's counting room, Cincinnati, is an ear of corn containing of corn containing twelve hundred and six kernels. It was raised on Mill Creek Hill, at the farm of Jacob Aumack.

In a list of measures to which to which the Governor-General of Canada has given the royal assent, a few days ago, was included the act to abolish the right of Primogeniture in the succession of real estates.

The average number of persons ascending the Bunker Hill Monument is stated at 18,000 a year, and 12½ cents admission is charged, giving an annual income of about $2,000.

A child only nine years of age was recently sentenced to ten years' transportation from England, for setting fire to a stack of corn belonging to a farmer.

Sixteen persons, comprising four respectable colored families, are expected to leave Hartford for Liberia next week.

New York Market—September 15, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $5 12 a 5 18; Pearls 5 50.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 68 a 3 94 for Michigan and Indiana, 3 81 a 4 00 for Ohio, 3 81 a 3 87 for State, 4 00 a 4 12 for old pure Genesee.

Grain—Wheat, 84c. for red Ohio, 93c. for white Michigan, 1 00 for common Genesee, 1 23 for a lot of prime Genesee Seed Wheat. Rye 65c. Barley 85c. Oats 32 a 33c. Corn, 60 a 61c. for mixed Western, 62c. for round yellow.

Provisions—Pork, 12 50 a 13 25 for mess, 15 00 a 15 75 for prime. Beef, 5 00 a 6 00 for prime, 8 75 a 11 00 for mess. Butter, 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 10 a 14c. for State. Cheese 4 a 6½c.

Beeswax—Prime 27c.

Feathers—Prime Western 38c.

Seeds—Clover 10c., Timothy 15 00 a 20 00 per tierce.

Tallow—7c. for prime country.

Wool—Sales have been made at 31 to 44c. for Fleece, which is a decline. Pulled 29 a 32c.

MARRIED.

September 9, by Eld. Lucius Crandall, Dea. Matthew S. Kenyon, of North Stonington, Ct, to Miss Lucy Ann Irish, of Hopkinton, R. I.

In Hopkinton, R. I., September 11, 1851, by Eld. Henry Clarke, Mr. Varnum S. Ennis and Miss Sarah M. Crandall, both of Westerly, R. I.

By the same, at the same time and place, Mr. Charles F. Burdick and Miss Tacy A. Palmer, both of Hopkinton, R. I.

At Berlin, N. Y., September 1, by the Rev. James H. Cochran, Mr. Maxson Saunders to Miss Frances Hull, all of Berlin.

DIED.

In Locustville, R. I., of consumption, on the 8th inst., Mrs. Sarah H. Chipman, wife of Charles H. Chipman, aged 23 years. Though she had never made a public profession of religion, yet she indulged a hope that God for Christ's sake forgave her sins before her sickness. She expressed regret for not having more openly manifested her love for Christ and his cause; but became resigned to death, and even anxious "to depart and be with Christ."

In Waterford, Ct., on the 9th inst., Daniel Brooks, Jr., aged 30 years.

North-Western Association.

THE North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association will hold its Fifth Anniversary with the Church in Christiana, Dane County, Wisconsin, commencing on the fourth day of the week before the first Sabbath in October, 1851. A. W. Coon, Cor. Sec.

The Ohio Association.

THE Seventh-day Baptist Ohio Association will hold its first Anniversary with the church in Jackson township, commencing on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October, 1851.

J. G. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

People's Line of New York and Albany Steamers

THE steamers ISAAC NEWTON, Capt. Wm. H. Peck, and HENDRIK HUDSON, Capt. A. P. St. John, forming the People's Line between New York and Albany, leaving foot of Cortland-st., New York, every evening at 6 o'clock, and Albany evening on the arrival of the Express Train from Buffalo.

The steamer NEW WORLD, Capt. Acker, leaves foot of Chambers-st., New York, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning, at 7 o'clock, and Albany on alternate days.

For passage or freight apply on board, or to A. P. Schultz at the office foot of Cortland-st.

Daguerrean Gallery.

GURNEY'S Daguerrean Gallery, No. 189 Broadway, has been known for years as one of the first establishments of the kind in the United States, and the oldest in the city of New York. He has recently greatly enlarged his Gallery by the addition of more rooms and large skylights, and other improvements, rendering it one of the most extensive establishments in this country. Mr G. attends personally to his sitters, and from his great experience in the art he is enabled, at all times, to give perfect satisfaction. The large-sized pictures recently taken by his new process are universally acknowledged superior to any heretofore taken in this country. A large collection can be seen at all hours of the day. Ladies and gentlemen are respectfully invited to examine them.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH,
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 will commence the first Wednesday in September, and continue forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.

Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant ~~in Mathematics~~.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall and middle of the Winter Terms, and continue seven weeks. Those intending to teach District Schools are solicited to become members of this department. Especial attention will be given to the common English branches, and to familiar lectures and discussions on School-Teaching.

During the Winter Term the Agricultural Department will be under the instruction of Prof. Gurdon Evans, A. M., and will embrace the study of the best authors, and daily recitations. Two hours each day will be spent in the Laboratory well furnished with apparatus and chemicals, where students will be instructed in the Elementary Analysis of Soils, Minerals, Ashes of Plants, &c., and the various modes of testing for their constituent elements. Also, a course of Public Lectures will be delivered on the application of Science to Agriculture, and illustrated by a great variety of philosophical and chemical experiments. The object of this course of instruction is to afford ample facilities for farmers to become scientific, as well as practical; and enable them to render waste and worn-out lands productive, and retain them constantly improving under a high state of cultivation.

In connection with classes, Courses of Lectures will be delivered, during the Fall Term, on Natural Philosophy and Elementary Chemistry; during the Winter Term on Astronomy and Physiology; during the Spring Term on Geology and Intellectual Science.

Tuition—from $3 50 to $5 00 per term, to be settled in advance, or by satisfactory arrangement. Extras—Drawing, $1 00; Oil Painting, $6 00; Monochromatic, $3 00; Agricultural Chemistry, including chemicals, (breakage extra,) $10 00

Board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense.

Every care will be taken to render the school of the highest advantage to the student. The regulations will be few, but strictly and steadily enforced. Our object is at the same time we cultivate the intellectual and moral powers to develop also the practical.

Nothing sectarian will be taught or countenanced in the school. The exercises of the Institution will be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

LEWIS HOWELL, Pres. of the Board of Trus.

Election Notice.

State of New York, Secretary's Office,
Albany, August 27, 1851.

TO the Sheriff of the City and County of New York:

Sir,—Notice is hereby given that at the General Election, to be held in this State, on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Samuel A. Foot.

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan.

A Comptroller, in the place of Philo C. Fuller.

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt.

An Attorney-General, in the place of Levi S. Chatfield.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Hezekiah C. Seymour.

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Charles Cook.

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Alexander H. Wells.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court, for the First Judicial District, in the place of James G. King, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Senator for the IIId, IVth, Vth, and VIth Senate Districts, in the place of Richard S. Williams, Clarkson Crolius, James W. Beekman, and Edwin D. Morgan, whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

County officers to be elected for said County:

Sixteen Members of Assembly.

A Register, in the place of Cornelius V. Anderson.

A Recorder, in the place of Frederick A. Tallmadge.

Two Judges of the Superior Court, in the place of Thomas J. Oakley and John L. Mason.

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Daniel P. Ingraham.

A Surrogate, in the place of Alexander W. Bradford.

A Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, in the place of Jacob L. Dodge.

Two Governors of the Alms-House, in the place of Simeon Draper and Francis R. Tillou.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, there is to be elected a Justice for each of the six Judicial Districts, into which the City of New York is districted, pursuant to Chapter 514, Laws of 1851. Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary of State.

Sheriff's Office, August 28, 1851.—I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of the notice of the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, received this day, from the Hon. Christopher Morgan, Secretary of State.

THOMAS CARNLEY,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

N. B.—All the public newspapers within this County will please publish this notice once in each week, until the Election, and send in their bills for advertising the same as soon as the Election is over; so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors and passed for payment. Sept. 4.

Miscellaneous.

Robert Hoe—A Reminiscence.

BY LAURIE TODD.

In September, 1805, the yellow fever prevailed to a fearful extent in this city. As I never left town while it was raging, I was sitting in my tent door in the cool of the day, and lifting up my eyes I beheld a stranger, a rare sight in fever times. He was moving from Cedar street along Nassau, having his face set toward Maiden Lane. He walked in the middle of the street, and was reading the sign-boards on the right and left. He paused in front of my open door, and mine was the only store open in the block. As he stepped in, he said, "Mr. Thorburn."

"Where did you learn my name ?" I inquired.

"I saw it over the door," said he. "I have just come on shore from the ship Draper, from Liverpool. I am a carpenter by trade; my name is Robert Hoe; I am now in my eighteenth year."

Says I, "Robert, was your indenture fulfilled before you left England ?"

Says he, "I never was bound, I learned my trade with my father; I can't find work, I have no money; can you recommend to me a house in a healthy part of the city, where I may board till I get employment, when I will pay them honestly ?"

I knew the heart of a stranger, having been a stranger myself, and there was so much of honest simplicity in his speech and deportment, my heart warmed toward him; I gave him a chair, and ran up stairs; says I, "Gude wife, a stranger standeth at our door; shall we take him in ?" "If thee pleases," she replied. "If he takes the fever, will thee help me to nurse him ?" "I will," she answered. "Thank you, dear, for this; God will bless you." "Now" says I, "come and look on his honest English face." The impression was favorable. Says I, "Robert, this neighborhood is accounted the most healthful in the city; you will lodge here; if you take the fever, my wife and I will nurse you; you shan't go to the stranger's hospital." His eyes spoke thanks more eloquent than words. As he had no business abroad, I advised him to stay at home.

The fever seized him however, in less than a week. I procured an eminent physician; my wife and I nursed him. In seventeen summers that I've nursed among the sick, I do not think that I ever saw a case so violent but it terminated in death, his only excepted. On the fourth day, generally the crisis, the burning fever was coursing through the veins, and drinking up his English blood. His skin burning, dry, and yellow, heart-sick, all-bound sick; and his spirits sunk down to his heels. I sat by his bed-side; he fastened his restless eyes on mine: "O Mr. T., Mr. T., I shall die, I shall die—I never can stand this;" and he threw his brawny arms across the bed as if going to grapple with death. "Die," says I, "Robert! to be sure, we must all die, but you are not a going to die this week." In this I spoke unadvisedly with my lips, but I thought of Pope Pius and his Bull, to wit, that the end would sanctify the means. He was under the influence of powerful medicine at this moment; I knew there would be a lull, as the sailors say, soon; and I meant to take advantage of the circumstance, to persuade him to live if possible. Fancy kills and fancy cures. I left him for fifteen minutes. On my return I felt his pulse; said I, "Robert, you are fifty per cent. better already; I hope to see you walk from the bed and sit by the window to-morrow." I sat by his bed conversing to cheer his spirits. I continued, "Death is nigh at hand at all times and in all places; but my impression is that you will not die with this attack. I hope to see you a thriving master builder, married to one of the bonny Yankee lassies, and to hold your grand-child in my arms."

From this hour the fever left him. Shortly after this the fever disappeared from the city. He became a master builder, and died in 1843, aged 56. But his name will never die while types are set and printers breathe. Hoe's Printing Press is probably the most useful discovery that has blessed the world, since the first sheet was struck from the press. Formerly we paid one hundred and fifty cents for a Bible; now we buy one as good for twenty-five cents. It may be said of his sons, (a rare occurrence in this country,) that they are better men than their father, inasmuch as they have added many inprovements to their father's plans. Mr. Hoe dwelt in New-York thirty-eight years. After his recovery from the fever in 1805, we met times without number; his never-failing salutation was, "Grant, as the instrument under God, I have to thank you for my recovery from that fever." I have received many tokens of kindness from his worthy family of sons and daughters. And nothing in my past life affords such pleasing reflections at this act of duty and humanity to a stranger. When his aching head lay on my breast, as I held the cooling draught to his parched lips, I little thought that in this head lay the germ of a machine destined to revolutionize the world of literature, and shed light on the dark places of the earth, whose habitations are full of horrid cruelty.

About seven years ago I stept from the cars in a country town. Among those who were looking on, stood a man of genteel appearence; said I, "Sir, I wish to stop here for a week; I don't like to put up in a hotel; can you direct me where I can lodge in a private family ?" He said he could. We entered the next street; he stopped in front of a respectable two-story brick tenement; on the front stoop sat a comely matron. She might have seen twenty-eight summers; on her lap sat a babe. Said my friend to the matron, "Gude wife, this is Mr. Thorburn, from New-York; he wished private board for a week; can you accomodate him ?" "Yes," say she, "for a year or for a lifetime, if it is his wish. Oft has my father told me, when he was sick and stranger, that Mr. T. took him in, and ministered to his wants." "What was your father's name ?" I inquired "Robert Hoe," she replied. "And is this your child ?" "It is." I held the babe in my arms; it smiled on my face. "Now," says I, "madam, this day my prophecy is fulfilled in your eyes; it's just forty years, at a critical moment in your father's life."

LAWSUIT ABOUT AN AUTOGRAPH.—The conservators of the National Library have just recovered, after several tedious lawsuits, an autograph of Montaigne, formerly belonging to their collection. A trial, some months ago, resulted in the defeat of the conservators, who had sued M. Feuillet de Conches, who had in his possession the missing autograph, given to him by a third person. The conservators appealed, and the Court of Appeal, after a long hearing, have decided in their favor on the ground that there certainly was in volume 712 of a certain series of books, for 150 years in the possession of the Library, a letter of Montaigne which is there no longer; and that the autograph in question bears the marks of having belonged to a bound collection. M. Feuillet de Conches is sentenced to restore the signature under a penalty of 10,000 francs.

Size of Books.

Every reader of a newspaper in which books are noticed, frequently meets with the terms quarto, octavo, duodecimo, &c. This is frequently a great puzzle to the unitiated; and it may not be amiss, for the benefit of mankind, to give a little explanation of these enigmatical signs of ideas. This is the more necessary, as it is the only method by which the size of a book is designated in print. If one understands the vo's and mo's, and has the number of pages which the book contains, he can immediately form an idea of its size; as for instance, when it is stated that a book is a 12 mo., of 400 pp., [pages,] he knows at once what must be its appearance as to size, making due allowance for the difference in the thickness of paper.

First, then, be it understood, these vo's and mo's indicate the number of leaves in a sheet, and correspond to the leaves, not the pages which the sheet contains. Take a sheet of a given size, say a medium, a sheet nineteen by twenty-four, and give it one fold, like a common newspaper, and you have a folio with two leaves, or four pages; give it another fold, and you have a quarto, [4to,] with four leaves, or eight pages; give it another fold, and you have an octavo, [8 vo,] of eight leaves or sixteen pages, and so on. By another mode of folding, you obtain a 12mo, 24mo, 38mo &c., and another again, an 18mo, 36mo, &c. These figures and letters, though abbreviations of Latin, are ordinarily in these days turned into rather barbarous English, by printers, publishers, and booksellers, for the sake of brevity. Thus they say a 12mo, a 48mo, instead of a duodecimo, &c. [Det. Adv.

Parisian Justice.

A writer in Dicken's Household words gives the following amusing instance of Parisian justice in the case of a cab driver. If regulations equally stringent were adopted in some of the principal cities in the United States, the public comfort would be materially served.

Coming out of the theater one night, with two ladies, I found it raining heavily. The weather had been beautiful, and we had intended to walk home, but this sudden change obliged me to seek a hackney coach. I found one in the Place of the Palais Royal, and was so glad to get it—for it was the only coach there—that I did not observe, when I called the driver, that he had no hat on, but was sitting on his box, in the rain, bare-headed. I remarked this singularity as I was handing the ladies in, and asked him where his hat was? "Oh!" he said very coolly, "it's inside." "And why don't you put it on then ?" "Well! I may as well put it on, to be sure," says he; "will you please to hand it up? A thousand thanks!" It is so unusual in Paris to see a man of this kind drunk, that I never suspected him of being anything but eccentric, until we came to a neighboring street where there were a number of carriges waiting at a party, among which we began to make such havoc by bumping wildly about, that I soon understood what was the matter with my friend, and awoke him with some difficulty, from a sound sleep. I then got the ladies out, and said to him in what I considered a highly impressive manner, tempered with a gentle amiability, "Now, my friend, you are drunk, and I am not going to pay you anything. You had better go home and keep out of trouble!" not in the least affected by this softening address, he immediately cast his arms and legs into the air all at once, as nobody but a Frenchman could, clutched roughly at my throat and tore my coat; whereupon I hit him, according to the custom of my country, and he tumbled into a confectioner's doorway. Other coachmen came up, and the confectioner came out. "Monsieur is a foriegner," said he, on hearing the merits of the case; "it is late, and these men make common cause. My advice is, pay him for the course, and make complaint to Monsieur le Prefect. He will do justice." With a very bad grace I paid for the course, and went home breathing vengeance. I relieved my mind by writing to Monsieur le Prefect before I went to bed—waited three weeks for an answer—got none—every day for three weeks anathematized France. Early one morning at the expiration of that time, appeared the coachman, with a beard, and an old blouse, looking very miserable. He had been in prison ever since, and was now sent to repay the money I had paid him, and get a receipt in full for it. He also brought an official paper stating that he was deprived of his number, and that unless I chose to accept his apology and sign that recommendation for its being restored to him (which I was not asked to do) he was thenceforth incapable of driving any public carriage. I considered it right to take the money, but of course I signed the paper and gave him some breakfast.

He tlod my servant that he had been summoned to the Prefect's Office. That they had said to him, "Now, two hundred and so-and-so, this letter of complaint has been received against you. Attend while it is read. If you deny the charge, and oblige us to demand the writer's presence, you will take the greater consequences if it is proved. If you admit the charge at once, and save the trouble, you can take the lesser consequences." "Well! it was all true!" said the cabman, with a shrug "so I took three weeks, and here I am."

ISOLA GIULIA.—It will be remembered that an island, about 120 feet high and 2,000 feet in circumference, suddenly sprang up in 1831 between Sicily and Pantellaria. It disappeared about a month after, and at a late period even the sounding-lead could give no indication of its existence; but vessels passing over the place it had formerly occupied would sometimes feel a sort of shock which showed that it was of volcanic origin. In March last, however, the French vessel Eole, which was taking soundings in the vicinity, discovered some traces of its existence; and we now learn from Naples that in the course of the last month her Majesty's ship Scourge, Capt. Kerr, verified the truth of the preceding observation, and further that the island, which has been christened "Isola Giulia," was only nine feet under water. Captain Kerr had a pole with a streamer and an inscription set up on the spot.

Metallic Type for Printing Chinese.

Some of our readers have doubtless heard of the Rev. Samuel Dyer, an excellent man who labored in the cause of missions for many years in Singapore and Malacca, and who died in Macoa in 1843. One branch of labor he was active in for many years, was the preparation of a font of metallic type for printing Chinese, and the difficulties he surmounted in commencing and carrying out his plan would have discouraged most men from attempting it. He, however, after nearly ten years of dilligence, brought one font of large type to such a state of completeness as to be able to print Scriptures and tracts with it; and had commenced another small font when he died. The small font was too incomplete for any service, and remained in this condition for several years, while, too, Mr. Dyer's large font was found to be deficient in many important characters.

About three years since, Mr. Richard Cole, of New York, was engaged by the London Society's Mission at Hong Kong to take up these two fonts where Mr. Dyer had left them, and make the assortment of characters in both sufficient to print all common Chinese books. Mr. Cole had already been successfully engaged in the printing-office of the Presbyterian mission at Ningpo, in bringing the Parisian divisible font of Chinese type into operation; and the result of his industry and skill is seen in the two fonts now made, which surpass anything yet done in this line. There were, when he begun, many characters in the large font to be re cut, and matrices for all in the small had to be trimmed or entirely cut. The size of the small type is what printers would call three-line diamond, but for the great number of strokes in Chinese characters, the size, in proportion, is nearer to brevier type than any other. The characters are all solid, and being made by native workmen educated under Mr. Cole's eye, and each one subjected to the closest scrutiny, they exactly correspond to Chinese taste, and far exceed in symmetry the font cast at Paris ten or twelve years ago. The number of characters in this font now made is 4,800, and this large number will perhaps require to be increased for unusual characters sometimes wanted. The type is sold at $1,25 per lb., and about 15,000 lbs. are required for a serviceable font; the large font contains 4,800 characters, and can be furnished for 60 cts. per lb. Facilities are thus multiplying for printing books in Chinese, and in such a manner, too, that pictorial illustrations can easily be introduced into the page, which they cannot be in the common method of block-cutting. Those Chinese who have seen books printed with this type, express their admiration at the fineness and beauty of the characters, in a way that proves they are sometimes willing to award the palm to the foreigner. [N.Y. Obs.

Long-Keeping Apples.

A great deal of inquiry is made for the best long-keeping varieties of the apple; and the subject is worthy of much inquiry. It is easy enough to have a good supply through winter—a period when the requisite degree of coolness is so obtained for the preservation both of the fruit and its flavor. Hence the ease with which even the later autumn apples may be kept during winter in cool cellars. But on the approach of warm weather, those that escape decay soon have their flavor and freshness dissipated in the air. A vacancy of many weeks then occurs before the ripening of early fruits, which can be supplied only by long-keepers.

A fruit must possess two distinct qualities for this purpose, namely, endurance from decay, and retention of flavor. For this purpose we shall probably not soon find any equal to the Newtown Pippin; and next to this are the English and Roxbury Russets. The Northern Spy is a fine keeper, and when preserved in a cool cellar retains well its freshness, even in the first of summer; but later in the season it loses its flavor while yet retaining its juicy flesh and showy appearance. The Kingsley Apple, a new variety, introduced by Dr. Long, of Rochester, a small fruit of unusual delicacy of texture, will keep a long time, but it does not usually retain its best flavor long after the approach of warm weather.

For conveyance to distant markets, the Northern Spy does not seem so well fitted as some others, being more liable to injury. This fine apple, in truth, not only needs more care in cultivation than most others, but when gathered, packed and shipped, should be handled with the same care that is given to a fine piece of crockery or a looking-glass.

One of the best long-keeping sweet apples is the Ladies' Sweet. We know of no sort which presents so beautiful an appearance by its brilliant coloring late in spring, although in richness of flavor it does not reach the the highest point. A drawback is the slow growth of the tree. It is a profuse bearer. [Cult.

Natural Water-Purifiers.

Mr. Warrington has, for a year past, kept twelve gallons of water in a state of admirably-balanced purity by the action of two gold fish, six water snails, and two or three specimens of that elegant aquatic plant known as Valisperia sporalis. Before the water-snails were introduced, the decayed leaves of the valisderia caused a growth of slimy mucus, which made the water turbid, and threatened to destroy both plants and fish. But under the improved arrangement, the slime, as fast as it is engendered, is consumed by the water-snails, which reproduce it in the shape of young snails, whose tender bodies again furnish a succulent food to the fish; while the valisperia plants absorb the carbonic acid exhaled by the respiration of their companions. fixing the carbon in their growing stems and luxuriant blossoms, and refreshing the oxygen, (during sunshine, in visible little streams,) for the respiration of the snails and the fish. The spectacle of perfect equilibrium thus simply maintained between animal, vegetable, and inorganic activity, is striking and beautiful; and such means may possibly hereafter be made available on a large seale for keeping tanked water clean an sweet.

STATISTICS ABOUT LONDON.—If the streets of London were put together, they would extend 3,000 miles in length; the main thoroughfares are traversed by 3,000 omnibuses and 3,500 cabs, employing 40,000 horses. In 1849, the Metropolis alone consumed 1,600,000 quarters of wheat, 240,000 bullocks, 1,700,000 sheep, 28,000 calves and 35,000 pigs. One market alone supplied 4,024,500 head of game. London the same year, ate 3,000,000 salmon, which were washed down by 43,200,000 gals. of porter and ale, 2,000,000 gallons of spirits, and 65,000 pipes of wine. 13,000 cows are yearly required for London milk, and reckoning two gallons a day from every cow, we have here, say 72,000 gallons of "London peculiar" consumed, if not enjoyed, by the London inhabitants. 360,000 gas-lights fringe the streets. London's arterial or water system supplies the enormous quantity of 44,383,328 gallons per day; a thousand sail are employed in bringing annually to London 3,000,000 tuns of coal and to clothe and wait upon London's people we have no fewer than 23,517 tailors, 28,579 bootmakers, 40,000 milliners and dressmakers, and 168,701 domestic servants.

A Curiosity.

At the Mechanic's institute, in Cincinnati, a planetarium is on exhibition, which, if it answers the newspaper description, is a marvelous production of scientific and mechanical skill. It is not a mere orrery, one of those ordinary machines which confuse more than they enlighten the student of astronomy. This combines all the motions and positions of the planatory bodies, so as to preserve their relative positions towards each other at all times, when put forward or backward in any given epoch. All the complicated movements of the earth and moon, in their several orbits, and their perturbations, precisions and mutations, are so accurately arranged, that their relations towards each other, and to the sun, are said to be absolutely accurate, whenever the machine is set to any day, or for any celestial phenomenon, The Cincinnati Times states that when the instrument was finished, it was adjusted to an astronomical phenomenon of 1845, and every portion was found absolutely correct, and that being then carried back to another date in 1785, every position was again found to be perfectly true. Prof. Mitchell is said to have verified the correctness of the demonstrations of the planitarium by its own records and observations, and to be astonished at the result.

A Yankee Bell Ringer.

A tall, awkward looking chap, just from the Green Mountains of Vermont, came on board one of the splendid North River boats at Albany. His curiosity was amazingly excited at once, and he commenced "peeking," as he called it, into every nook and corner of the boat. The captain's office, the engine room, the water closets, the barber's shop, all underwent his inspection; and then he went on deck and stared in amazement at the lever beam, the chimneys, and the various "fixin's," till at last he caught sight of the bell. This was the crowning wonder, and he viewed it from every position, walked around it, got on his knees and looked up into it, exclaiming, "Wal, raly, this beats the bell on our meetin' house a darned sight." By this time the attention of the captain and several passengers was attracted to the genius. "How much would you ask to let a feller ring this bell ?" "You may ring it for a dollar, sir," said the captain. "Wal, it's a bargain, all fair and agreed, and no backin' out ?" "It's a bargain, sir," said the captain.

Our hero went deliberately and brought a seat and took hold of the bell rope, and having arranged every thing to his satisfaction, commenced ringing, very slowly at first, and gradually faster and faster, till everybody on board thought the boat was on fire, and rushed on deck, screaming with alarm. There stood the captain, and there sat the "Vairmounter," ringing away, first slow and then fast, and then two or three taps at a time. The passengers began to expostulate; the captain said it was a bargain.

But the passengers became urgent that the eternal clangor should be stopped. All the while there sat our hero undisturbed, ringing away more ways than a cockney chime ringer ever dreamed of. At last the captain began to think it time to stop the simpleton, but his answer was, "a fair bargain and no backin' eout," and he rang away for dear life. "Well," says the captain, "what will you take to stop ?" "Wal, captin, I guess I sheant lose nuthin' if I take five dollars and a free passage to New York, but not a red cent less." "Well, walk down to the office and get your money and passage ticket," said the captain. After that we all went to sleep.

An Early Rising Machine.

One of the Birmingham contributions to the World's Fair that affords a considerable amount of amusement, and attracts a good deal of attention, is the alarm bedstead. To many persons this will be an invention of real utility; and to any one who entertains a too deen appreciation of the charms of Morpheus this may be safely recommended as a most effective remedy for such tendency to neglect the popular and wholesome adage touching an early bird. By means of a common alarm clock hung at the head of the bed, and adjusted in the usual way to go off at the desired hour, the front legs of the bedstead, as soon as the alarm ceases ringing, are made to fold underneath, and the sleeper, without any jerk or the slightest personal danger, is placed on his feet in the middle of the room, where, at the option of the possessor, a cold bath can be placed if he is at all disposed to insure being rendered rapidly wide awake. The expense of the bedsteads is little, if any more than the ordinary ones, and from their extreme simplicity, they are very likely to come into general use. They are exhibited in action at the building, many gentlemen, and even some ladies, making a trial.

DISCOVERY IN SURGERY.—A Prussian named Aran is said to have recently made a discovery in surgery that is exciting considerable interest in the scientific circles of Berlin. It is the application of chlorine to relieve pain. Unlike chloroform it can be used without the least danger to the patient, and is veay effectual in its operation. From the account, a small quantity of the fluid, (from ten to twenty drops) is dropped on the part affected, or on a lint bandage slightly moistened with water, and then applied, and all bound up in oil silk, and a linen band. After from two to ten minutes the part becomes insensible, and the pain is no longer felt, whether it be from rheumatic, nervous, or other desorders. After a time it returns again, but usually weaker, and with several applications it is often entirely relieved. The discoverer has presented a memorial on the subject to the Academy of Paris.

IMPROVEMENT IN THIMBLES AND SCISSORS.—Mr. Charles Marsden, of London, has taken out a patent for an improvement in thimbles and scissors, which is worthy of attention. He makes his thimbles ventilating, so as to permit the free escape of perspiration. There is a metal lining within the large cylinder of the thimbles, and this is perforated and attached by metal points to the outside one; this allows the perspiration to pass up out of the thimble. In cutting with scissors, it is necessary, in order to keep the cutting edges in contact, to give them a side twist, which not only inflicts injury on the fingers but precludes the use of them with both hands. One of the bowl arms, with a vertical projecting arm which presses on the other arm, gives a permanent side pressure to the blades, ensuring proper contact of the cutting edges without effort of the user; this also ensures a good cutting edge from end to end of the blades.

Buckwheat.

This crop is one of considerable importance in many parts of New-York. It is usually sown in July, sometimes as late as August. A bushel of seed to the acre is the usual quantity. Sometimes it is sown on land from which a crop of hay has been taken the same season, and on a clover ley, if the soil is loamy and friable, it will frequently do well. This grain is also sometimes sown in connection with winter wheat, as a protection to the latter for winter. From personal experience, we cannot speak of it for this purpose. The consumption of buckwheat flour in our cities, during the winter months, is very great, and it commands a price but little inferior to that from wheat. The coarse parts of the grain, after the floar has been separated, make good food for swine, milch cows, or other stock; and as a good yield—twenty-five to thirty bushels per acre—can frequently be obtained on land where wheat cannot usually be cultivated to profit, the crop has many advantages.

A GRAND SANITARY REFORM.—An old Sanitary Reformer proposes in a London pamphlet to turn the site of Smithfield Market to account by erecting "a public market, baths, and washhouses in such a way as to occupy the whole available area of ground with them; and then instead of usual form of roof to cover the whole of the buildings at the same elevation, with a roof, so as to sustain a coat of earth and soil, four or five feet thick, on which form the park and gardens—rebuilding, so to speak, the hanging gardens of ancient Babylon, in modern London. Art and science might then claim to have done something for the wives and daughters of the citizens of London; when they could, in the midst of their world-renowned city, inhabited by nearly two millions and a half of souls, walk among shady trees and bowery groves, or recline in the balmy grotto, watching the fountains play and the fish swim, and perhaps hear the singing of birds also, as joyously as the ancient queens of Babylon could do, in the midst of that great city."

Variety.

The Rev. Mr. Reed says in his Narrative, that while passing in a steamer he saw an old lady sitting on a box, watching the rest of her baggage at her feet and singing frequently—

> Great box, little box,
> Band-box and bundle—
> One, two, three, four.
> Great box, little box,
> Band-box and bundle—
> One, two, three, four.

Of riches, as of every thing else, the hope is more than the enjoyment; while we consider them as the means to be used at some future time for the attainment of felicity, ardor after them secures us from weariness of ourselves; but no sooner do we sit down to enjoy our acquisitions, than we find them insufficient to fill up the vacuities of life.

The real object of education is to give children resources that will endure as long as life endures; habits that will ameliorate, not destroy; occupations that will render sickness tolerable, solitude pleasant, age venerable, life more dignified and useful, and death less terrible.

A chartist was holding forth, and gratifying his audience with his notions of liberty and equality. "Is not one man as good as another ?" he exclaimed, coming to a point, and "pausing for a reply," as the saying is. "Ay, coorse he is," shouted an excited Irishman, "and bether too!"

"I remember," says the celebrated Wesley, "hearing my father say to my mother, 'How could you have the patience to tell that blockhead the same thing twenty times over ?' 'Why,' said she, 'if I had told him but nineteen times, I should have lost all my labor.'"

The London Punch says the revolution in female attire which has commenced in America may extend to this country. Well; no matter, if the attributes of the husband are arrogated. It may be well that the ladies should know what it is to be continually having to put the hand in the breeches pocket.

A ship from Port Glasgow was recently lying in the harbor at New Orleans, when an Irish emigrant one day came on board, and thus addressed the cook, who was also Irish —"Are you the mate ?" "No," said he; "but I'm the man as boils the mate!"

A gravel train on the Hudson River Railroad was last Thursday thrown off the track near Hudson by running into a drove of cows and hogs. Three Irishmen were killed, and several others wounded.

The Bible Society of the Southern Baptists has formally disowned connection or sympathy with the New Version Society of New-York, the Bible Union, of which Dr. Cone is president.

We have much pleasure, says The London Times of the 19th of August, in stating that a Great Medal has been awarded by the Council of Chairmen of Juries, to Mr. Cyrus Hall M'Cormick, for his Reaping-Machine.

The new and extensive mills and distillery belonging to H. & L. Averill, at St. Johnsville, Montgomery County, were destroyed by fire September 1. The loss is estimated at $10,000, of which $4,000 is covered by insurance.

Hannah More said to Horace Walpole: "If I wanted to punish an enemy, it should be by fastening on him the trouble of constantly hating somebody."

Nature makes us poor only when we want necessaries, but custom gives the name of poverty to the want of superfluities.

Every man is rich or poor, according to the proportion between his desires and enjoyments.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Summer Arrangements, commencing Monday, March 31, 1851.

THIS Road extends from ELIZABETHPORT, 35 miles, to WHITE HOUSE, N J, reducing the staging between the terminus of the Road and EASTON to 25 miles.

This line leaves New York by steamboat Red Jacket from pier No 1 North River, and connects with trains on the New Jersey Railroad, which leaves New York from foot of Cortland-st.

TRINS UP—Leave New York by steamboat Red Jacket, pier No 1 North River, at 9 A M, passenger; 1 P M, freight; and 5 P M, passenger; and by N J Railroad, foot of Cortland-st, at 9 A M, and 2 and 5¼ P M.

Trains leave White House and following places for New York as follows:

White House at 3¼ A M, freight; 5 40 A M, passenger, at 1 40 P M.

Somerville at 4 30 A M, freight; at 6 05 A M, passenger, at 2 05 P M.

Bound Brook at 4 50 A M, freight; at 6 15 A M, passenger, at 2 15 P M.

Plainfield at 5 20 A M, freight; at 6 35 A M, passenger, at 2 35 P M.

Westfield at 5 50 A M, freight; at 6 50 A M, passenger, at 2 50 P M.

Elizabethtown at 7 15 A M; freight at 10 30 A M; passenger at 3 15 P M.

Elizabethport at 7 30 A M; freight at 10 45 A M; passenger at 3 30 P M.

On Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, trains leave Somerville for Pespack, Lesser Cross-Roads, and Pluckamin.

STAGES will be in readiness on the arrival of the 9 A M train from New York at the White House to convey passengers to Easton, Wilkesbarre, Bethlehem, Allentown, and Mauch Chunk, Penn. and to Clinton, Flemington, Lebanon, Milford, and Belvidere, N J.

N B—All BAGGAGE at the risk of the owners until delivered into the actual possession of the Agents of the Company and checks or receipts given therefor.

Milton Academy.

A. C. SPICER, Principal.
Mrs. S. M. SPICER, Preceptress.

Terms.

The Fall Term of 1851 of this Institution will commence Tuesday, August 19th, and close Thursday, November 20th, continuing thirteen weeks and three days.

The Winter Term of 1851–52 will commence Tuesday, December 2d, and close Thursday, March 4th.

The Summer Term of 1852 will commence Tuesday, March 23d, and close Thursday, June 24th.

Expenses.

Tuition per Term, from $3 00 to $5 00, settled invariably at the commencement of each Term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Oil Painting,	$7 00
Monochromatic Painting,	2 00
Water-Color Painting,	3 00
Drawing,	1 00

Board can be obtained in private families from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained, by those wishing to board themselves, at a reasonable expense.

Remarks.

All the English branches usually taught in our Eastern Academies, together with the Classics, and the Modern Languages, (French, German, and Italian,) will be taught in this Institution. The mode of instruction will be in accordance with the latest and most popular method adopted in our best Eastern Institutions, aiming, primarily, at a thorough and practical qualification of School Teachers, and preparing students for an advanced standing in a College course.

Weekly meetings are held in the village by three different evangelical denominations, either of which students can attend.

The plan of instruction and government of this Institution will aim at a harmonious development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of students, in a manner to render them thorough scholars, and practical, useful citizens; and the public may feel assured that no exertion shall be wanting on the part of the teachers and proprietors of the school to render it worthy of patronage and confidence. au14 4t

MILTON, Rock Co., Wis., July 11th, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:

No. 1 Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.

No. 2 Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.

No. 3 Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.

No. 4 The Sabbath and Lord's Day A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.

No. 5 A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.

No. 6 Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.

No. 7 Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.

No. 8 The Sabbath Controversy The True Issue. 4 pp.

No. 9 The Fourth Commandment False Exposition. 4 pp.

No. 10 The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.

No. 11 Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.

No. 12 Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

No. 13 The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville..Albert B. Crandall.
Persia..Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Cressingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to

GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 15. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1851. WHOLE NO. 379.

The Sabbath Recorder.

From the London Examiner.

THE EMPIRE OF JAPAN.

Memorials af the Empire of Japan. Edited, with Notes, by THOMAS RUNDALL. Printed for the Hakluyt Society. [Concluded.]

The English arrived in Japan in 1613, and quitted it in 1623, so that their whole experience of that empire was but of ten years' duration. Fifty years after, they attempted, in the reign of Charles the Second, to renew their intercourse, but were baffled by the Dutch, who represented their king as having for wife a countrywoman of the rebels who had so recently endangered the empire; and this is supposed to have been sufficient to defeat the scheme of a renewed intercourse. But their first mission under James the First, and their last under the Merry Monarch, were received in a very friendly and hospitable manner by the Japanese court; but it seems to us that our countrymen were, at the moment, wholly unequal to the conduct of so distant and precarious a branch of trade, which even the Portuguese and Dutch, with ampler means, only carried on because they enjoyed each in their time an exclusive monopoly of it. The first English ship brought an ill-assorted cargo, and returned without any cargo at all. The Japanese appear at one time to have had rather a strange and fanciful opinion of the English, not perhaps in all respects, however, beside the truth. It is given by Captain Saris, the agent, or, as he is queerly called, "the General," of the Hon. Company of Merchants, writing in the following words:—

"The twentie ninth, (of June, 1613,) a Soma or Iunke of the Flemmings arriued at Langasaque, from Syam, laden with Brasill wood and skins of all sorts, wherein it was said that there were Englishmen, but proued to be Flemmings. For that before our comming, they passed generally by the name of Englishmen; for our English Nation hath been long known by report among them, but much scandalled by the Portugals Iesuites, as pyrats and rovers upon the seas; so that the naturals haue a song which they call the English Crofonia, shewing how the English doe take the Spanish ships, which they (singing) doe act likewise in gesture with their Cattans by their sides, with which song and acting, theiy terrifie and skare their children, as the French sometimes did theirs with the name of the Lord Talbot."

It is remarkable that both the English and Dutch trade in Japan were established chiefly through the influence of an Englishman, whose four letters rendering an account of himself and of Japan form an interesting portion of the present publication of the Hakluyt Society. William Adams was a native of Gillingham, in Kent, and served a twelve years' apprenticeship to a shipowner of Limehouse. He acted afterwads as pilot in one of the ships of the Royal Navy, and in the same capacity served the Dutch in their first adventure to Japan. Here his merit attracted the notice of the emperor, with whom he became a great favorite, having access to him when it was often denied to his highest ministers. Possessed of this influence, he invited his countrymen to trade with Japan, and it was his influence which secured to them a friendly reception. The emperor conferred on him and his heirs forever a lordship of one hundred farms, and many vassals. Singularly contrasted with the liberality of the Japanese monarch is the strange haggling of the E. India Company, now the masters of a revenue of £20,000,000 a year, about an advance of £20 which they had made to the wife and children of Adams in England! This man, of low origin and rough education, was unquestionably a person of original character and true merit. He died in Japan, after a residence there of twenty years; and his will, transmitted to England, is to be found in the archives of the India House, in the Japanese language.

As a fair example of the present publication of the Hakluyt Society, we shall give a specimen from the first essay in the volume, which is printed from the Harleian manuscripts, and entitled A Description of the Kingdom of Japonia.

"The inhabitantes shew a notable witte, and an incredible pacience in sufferinge, labour, and sorowes. They take greate and dilligent care lest, either in worde or deede, they shoulde shewe either feare, or dulness of mynde, and lest they should make any man (whomsoever he be) partaker of their trowbles and wantes. They covet exceedinglye honor and prayse; and povertie with them bringeth no dammage to the nobilitie of bloude. They suffer not the least iniurie in the world to pass vnrevenged. For gravitie and curtesie they gyve not place to Spainardes. They are generally affable and full of compliments. They are very punctuall in the entertayning of strangers, of whom they will curiously inquyre even trifles of forreyne people as of their maners, and such like thinges. They will as soone lose a limbe as omit one ceremonie in welcoming a friend. They use to give and receive the cup at one the other hands, and before the master of the house begins to drinke hee will proffer the cup to every one of his guests, making shew to have them to begin. Fish, rootes, and rice, are their common junkets, and if they chance to kill a hen, ducke, or pigge, which is seldome, they will not like churles eat it alone; but their friendes shall be surely partakers of it. The most parte of them that dwell in cyties can write and read. They only studie martiall feates and are delighted in armes. They are far from all avarice, and for that cause detest both dice and all other playe which is for gayne.

"The people be fayre and verye comely of shape. The marchantes, althoughe verye riche and wealthye, yet nothing accompted of there; those that are of nobilitie are greately esteemed althoughe they be never so poore. Both men and women goe bareheaded without any difference, both in the sunne and rayne. They washe theyre yonge children in rivers as sone as they are borne, and when they are weaned they are taken out of their mothers sight, and are exercised in huntinge and armes. When theyre children once come to fourteene yeares oulde, they were sword and dagger and as they be taught do revenge the least injurye that is offered them.

"They have the same kyndes of beasts that we have, both tame and wilde, but they seldome eat anye flesh. but that which is taken with huntinge. Indeed they delighte not much in fleshe, but they lyve for the most parte with hearbas, fyshe, barley and ryce; which thinges are their chieffe nowrishments.

"Their ordinarye drinke is water, and that is made most times hot in the same pot where they seeth their ryce, that so it may receive some thicknesse and substance from the ryce. They have strong wine and rack distill'd of ryce, of which they will sometimes drinke largely, especially as their feasts and meetings, and being moved to anger, or wrath, in the heate of their drinke, you may as soone parswade tygres to patience and quietnesse as them, so obstinate and wilfull they are in the furie of their impatience. As concernyng another drinke, they take great delighte in water mingled with a certeine powder which is very pretiouse, which they call CHIA.

"Theire buyldinges are for the most parte of tymber, for the mediterranean countreys hath almost no stonne, and it aboundeth with trees verry fytte for buyldings, amongst which there are cedars that growe to a marvellous height and bignesse. At Falcata there is a wood of pine treese neere about three miles square, which is all the summer time swept and kept so cleane. that you shall hardly see any small twig, boughe, or leafe, under the trees, and the trees stand so close together, that you may solace and recreate yourselfe there at all houres of the day without any hurt or heate of the sunne. In the midst of it there is a great pagod, or church, very richly adorned with gilded images, and all sortes of curious carved workes. Yet they be cunninge workers in stone. Ozechya, the most famous castle that the emperour hath, or that is within the empire, is of an extraordinarie bignesse, and compassed round with three severall walls. The castle of Edo is likewise walled and moated, having some few ordnance on it. At Crates and Falcata there are likewise castles, both walled and moated; the circumference of each of them beinge neere about two miles. The chiefe noblemen of those kyngdomes have houses within the castle walls to come and live there, either at the king's or their own pleasures. Within each of those castles there is a storehouse kept full of ryce, which may serve for their provisions at all occasions and needs.

"Every one may change his name three times; when he is a childe; when he is a young man; and when he is ould. Some change their names more often. Every one as he pleaseth may make choyce of his owne name; and they are commonly named either by the king, or else by some noble or great man with whom they are chiefly in favor. They have the use of writing and printing, and have had, the space of many years; no man knowes certeinly how long. They have seven sorts of letters, each single letter serving for a word, and many of them in their placing serve for six or seven, and each alphabet hath eight and fortie letters; and yet with all these letters they have not the true pronunciation H, B, T, and some other letters.

"They observe no Sabbath, but certeine Faste Dayes, according to the moone—as the first of the moone, the 15, or 28. On these dayes they goe to the church, and visit the sepulchres of the dead. The ninth day of the moone throughout the year they hold for accursed; and therefore on that daye will not begin, or undertake, any worke of consequence or importance. They strictly observe a faste on that day of the moneth on which their father or mother died; which they doe so precisely keepe, that they will not touch or eate anything that hath blood."

"This is the fair side of the Japanese character, but there is also a very dark one. There is no country pretending to civilization in which life is held so cheap by the lawgiver as in Japan, and no country in which the sufferer undergoes death with so complete a sang froid. Executions, and some for very venial offences, are frequent; and they are accompanied by details of cold ferociety which would be incredible, were they not well authenticated. The writers in the present collection bear testimony to this effect, and their statements are confirmed by Kœmpfer and Thunberg. The anonymous author of the Harleian manuscript gives the following account of the Japanese laws:

"The lawes are very strict and full of severitie, affordinge no other kinde of punishment, but either death, or banishment. Murther, theft, treason, or the violation of any of the emperour's proclamations or edicts, are punished with death; so is adulterie also, if it be knowne, and the parties pursued; but the devill, their master in those actions, hath taught them such cleanly conveyances, that seldom, or never, are they apprehended. They proceed both in controversies and criminal causes according to the verdict of the produced witnesses, and the sentence beinge once past, they will not revoke or mitigate the servitie of it; but if the parties attached have deserved death, they shall surely have it. And for the maner. They are eyther beheaded, or crucified. He keels down on his knees, and then comes the executioner behinde him and cuts off his head with a catan, or theyre countrie sword; and, his head beinge off, the young cavaliers trie their weapons on his limbes, and prove whether they can cut off an arme or lege at one blowe. The other have their armes and leges spread abroad on a crosse; which done, they set the crosse upright in the ground, and then comes one either with a lance, or speare, and runnes the partie through the bodie. There he hangs untill he rots of; no man being suffered to take him downe."

Captain Saris, the envoy of the East India Company, who could have known nothing of what his predecessor had written, confirms his account as follows:

"The eighth, (of July, 1613,) three Iaponians were executed, viz., two men, and one woman; the cause of this; the woman none of the honestest (her husband being trauelled from home) had appointed these two their seuerall houres to repair vnto her. The latter man not knowing of the former, and thinking the time too long, comming in before the houre appointed, found the first man with her already, and enraged thereat, he whipt out his cattan, and wounded both of them very sorely, hauing very neere hewne the chine of the mans back in two. But as well as he might hee cleared himselfe of the woman and recouering his cattan wounded the other. The street taking notice of the fray, forthwith seased vpon them, led them aside, and acquainted King Foyne therewith, and sent to know his pleasure, (for according to his will, the partie is executed,) who presently gaue order that they should cut off their heads; which done, euery man that listed (as very many did) came to trie the sharpeness of their cattans vpon the corps, so that before they left off, they had hewne them all three into peeces as small as a man's hand, and yet notwithstanding did not then giue ouer, but placing the peeces one vpon another would try how many of them they could strike through at a blow; and the peeces are left to the fowles to deuoure."

MORALS AMONG THE MORMONS.

The Mormon sect is continually adding to the developments of its corrupting influence. A writer in the Albany State Register, who is said to hold a high and responsible position in the United States army, draws a fearful picture of the state of morals among the Mormons of Salt Lake city, their chief settlement. The following extracts are enough:—

"Now that my family is out of their power, (says he,) I may venture to speak of that accursed and pestilential people. And would to God that I could make myself heard throughout the country, and impress upon my countrymen the truth in relation to Mormonism, vile, criminal, and treasonable as it insolently displays itself in the boasted security of a mountain-walled home! But no; no one would be believed were he to communicate the truth concerning the Mormons. Truly, were an angel from heaven to tell you of the wicked practices, and the base, unprovoked crimes of this people, you would discredit the report.

"Such is the enormity of their conduct, that, in a series of resolutions drawn up by a Presbyterian clergyman, and signed by the emigrants, 'the truth and the whole truth' was designedly avoided, lest it would be too shocking for belief. It is hazarding nothing in saying that never, by savage horde or lawless banditti, was there exhibited such base turpitude of heart, and such indiscriminate vindictiveness of purpose, as are to be seen in the conduct of the Mormons of Salt Lake Valley. With them human feeling has been debased to worse than beastly passion and instinct, and then all sympathy is consumed by or absorbed in lust, while sentiment there finds its lowest degree of degradation. There is no crime but has its full, free justification there, if perpetated against a Gentile, as they term those who are not Mormons. No matter how good a man's character may be before he becomes a Mormon, and makes common fellowship with them, after he is fairly inducted, he is soon made to yield the most guilty obedience to the decrees or orders of the Twelve. All are thus rendered ready and prompt instruments in the perpetration of crime.

"So far as their religion is concerned, I never felt disposed to meddle with it. But it should be known that their teachings, as they term their making known their abominable practices here, are greatly at variance with the preaching of the principles of Mormonism by their missionary knaves throughout the rest of the world.

* * * *

"In nothing do their teachings correspond with Christianity. They deny the omnipotence of God, but believe in a plurality of gods, as well as wives, and that old Brigham, part of god now, will become a perfect and powerful god after his physical death."

CASTING BREAD ON THE WATERS.

I sailed from Leith, in Scotland, 13th of April, 1794, in the good ship Providence, a name propitious, bound for New-York. Among the passengers was a lady, having with her in charge four or five young children. The father had gone before, to prepare for them a habitation, no small undertaking, when three months was a tolerable passage. Among the children was boy, seemingly of four year's growth. He was lively and playful, always on deck. His mother was in continual fear on his account. I told her, as I had nothing to do, I would take care of the boy. This to her was a great relief; so, comparatively speaking, I carried the boy in my arms over the waves of the Atlantic.

Now, this boy is Collector of the Port of New-York. In the arrangements of Providence, he is the man and I am the child; he in turn carries me in his arms. Or in plain Scotch, he gives me an office in the department, whereby I earn enough to keep soul and body together. The sovereign people need not infer from this, that I spend Uncle Sam's money for naught. The office must be filled by some one, and, though seventy-nine I can perform the duties of my department as well as when in my twenty-nineth year. I never ate the bread of idleness, nor will I, while I can grasp a hammer, or blow the bellows.

I have made these remarks without the knowledge of any of the parties referred to. It is to cancel a debt of gratitude due the Giver of all good, and to men his instruments; and to remind my neighbors, that a deed done with a good intent seldom goes unrewarded, even in this life. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, thou shalt find it after many days." In my case, the promise is fulfilled to the letter. In 1794, I cast my bread on the waters of the Atlantic Ocean; in 1851, I found it floating on the shores of the Hudson River.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

FROM BURNS' COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT.

The following lines, though often read, will never lose their charm:—

The cheerfu' supper done, wi' serious face
They, round the ingle, form a circle wide;
The sire turns o'er, wi' patriarchal grace,
The big ha' Bible, ance his father's pride;
His bonnet rev'rently is laid aside,
His lyart haffets wearing thin an' bare;
Those strains that once did sweet in Zion glide,
He wales a portion with judicious care;
And "Let us worship God!" he says, with solemn air.

They chant their artless notes in simple guise;
They tune their hearts, by far the noblest aim,
Perhaps Dundee's wild, warbling measures rise,
Or plaintive Martyr's, worthy of the name;
Or noble Elgin beats the heav'nward flame,
The sweetest far of Scotia's holy lays!
Compared with these Italian trills are tame,
The tickl'd ears, no heart-felt raptures raise,
Nae unison hae they with our Creator's praise.

The priest-like father reads the sacred page,
How Abram was the friend of God on high;
Or Moses bade eternal warfare wage,
With Amalek's ungracious progeny;
Or how the royal bard did groaning lie
Beneath the stroke of Heaven's avenging ire;
Or Job's pathetic plaint, and wailing cry;
Or rapt Isaiah's wild, seraphic fire;
Or other holy seers that tune the sacred lyre.

Perhaps the Christian Volume is the theme,
How guiltless blood for guilty man was shed;
How He, who bore in Heaven the second name,
Had not on earth whereon to lay his head;
How his first followers and servants sped;
The precepts sage, they wrote to many a land;
How he who lone in Patmos banish'd,
Saw in the sun a mighty angel stand,
And heard great Bab'lon's doom pronounced by Heav'n's command.

Then kneeling down, to Heaven's Eternal King,
The saint, the father, and the husband prays:
Hope "springs exulting on triumphant wing,"
That thus, they all shall meet in future days;
There, ever bask in uncreated rays,
No more to sigh, or shed the bitter tear,
Together hymning their Creator's praise,
In such society, yet still more dear,
While circling time moves round in an eternal sphere.

Compared with this, how poor Religion's pride,
In all the pomp of method and of art,
When men display to congregations wide,
Devotion's every grace except the heart.
The Pow'r incensed, the pageant will desert,
The pompous strain, the sacerdotal stole;
But happy in some cottage far apart,
May hear, well pleased, the language of the soul;
And in His book of life the inmates poor enroll.

From Kitto's Daily Illustrations.

FATE OF THE MOCKING CHILDREN.

"Soon after this the prophet went to Bethel. This, it will be recollected, was a seat of the worship of one of Jeroboam's golden calves—the inhabitants of which were therefore doubtless very corrupt in their religious notions and services. The reception which the prophet met with confirms the impression. He was assailed by a rabble of young blackguards with cries of 'Go up, thou bald-head! go up, thou bald-head!' And how did the prophet meet this rude assault, from what the reader takes from the narrative to have been a gang of unmannerly boys? He turned and cursed them—nothing less—cursed them in the name of the Lord; and forthwith came two shebears—perhaps robbed of their whelps—and tore forty-and-two of them. We dare say there are few young readers, or indeed old ones, of this passage in the Bible, who do not think the prophet was terribly severe; and that, although the 'children' deserved a good whipping or something of that sort for their impudence, it was going rather too far to punish them with death. But, in the first place, he did not do so. He 'cursed them'—and that not from personal resentment, but under a divine impulse, without which, we will venture to say, no prophet ever dared to pronounce a curse. He cursed, and that was all. He did not punish. He left it to the Lord to determine and inflict the measure of punishment; and that the Lord judged the crime worthy of death, requires us to look more closely into its nature.

"In the first place, we are to take the children not as mere thoughtless boys scarcely knowing what they were about, but as young men acting from a strong animus against the prophet for his works' sake, and with a full meaning to insult and discourage him at the commencement of his career. The Hebrew word here employed to describe them (naarim, singular naar,) no doubte does denot even an infant, and a mere child; but also does as frequently denote grown-up lads, youths, and young men, and is often used, irrespective of age, in application to servants and soldiers. In fact its use is more extensive than ours of the term 'boy,' though that is very wide, and more nearly correspond to the Irish use of the same word 'boy,' or 'gorsoon,' or the French of 'garcon.' We need only to point out a few passages to show this. The term is applied to Ishmael when he was about fourteen years old; to Isaac when he was grown up to a young man; Hamor of Shechem, when of marriageable age, and probably not less than twenty years old; to Joseph when he was seventeen; to Gideon's son Jether, when old enough to be ordered to slay two kings; to Solomon after he had become king; to the four hundred Amalekites who escaped on camels; to Elisha's servant, Gehazi; to the son of the prophets who anointed Jehu; to the two hundred and thirty-two attendants of the princes of the provinces who went out against Benhadad; to the soldiers of the Assyrian king; and in other places too numerous to cite. In all these cases, though differently translated according to the apparent, meaning of the sacred writer—by child, lad, young man, servant—the word is but one in the original, and is the same which is here employed to express 'children.'

"But it will be said those designated here are not only children, but 'little children.' Even so; but in one of the instances just cited, Solomon calls himself 'a little child' when certainly a young man; and we wish to point attention to the fact, which we have never seen noticed, that although those who came out against the prophet are called 'little children,' the 'little,' is dropped where the forty-two who are slain are mentioned. Even the word for 'children' is then changed to another (jeladim; singular jelad); and although that word is of nearly synonymous use and application with the other, the change with the dropping of the word 'little,' is probably intended to mark the distinction. Wherever there is a mob of idle young men, there is sure to be a number of mischeievous urchins, who shout and bawl, as they do, without knowing much of the matter. Although, therefore, there were no doubt little children among this rabble of young Bethelites there is very reason to suppose that the forty-two of them who were destroyed were the oldest ones, the ringleaders of the set, and who very well knew what they were about. It is worthy of note here, that the Jews have long considered a father responsible for the sins of his sons while they are under thirteen years of age, after which they become accountable for themselves. There is a ceremony, wherein the father publicly in the congregation transfers to his son, when he attains that age, the responsibility he has hitherto borne for him This notion is old. We trace it in John ix. 28, where the parents decline to answer for their son, on the ground that he has reached the age of personal responsibility, and can answer for himself. If this idea was as old as the time of Elisha—and it probably was, though the age may then have been later—it supplies a fresh argument to show that the youngest of those destroyed was not under the age to which personal responsibility was fixed by the Jews themselves—the Bethelites among the rest.

"Observe further, that these youths were not accidentally encountered; they did not happen to be at their sports outside the town when the prophet passed; but they 'came out' of malice prepense 'to meet' and insult him. Such a purpose against the prophet must have been the result of their ungodly training in that evil place, and must have had its root in the sneers and sarcasms which they had all their lives heard levelled at the name and acts of Elijah. Him, surrounded as he was with terrors, they would not have dared thus to insult and abuse; but from his comparatively meek and gentle successor, whom they had never hitherto seen in any position of authority, they thought there was nothing to apprehend, and that they could with impunity pour out the blackness of their hearts upon him. They had heard that Elijah had been taken up to heaven, and they believed it; but instead of being suitably impressed by it, they regarded it as a fine new subject of derision—telling the disciple to 'go up' after his master, and then they should be well rid of both. To this they added the ignominious term of 'baldhead,' which was one of great indignity with the Israelites—baldness being usually seen among them as the effect of the loathsome disease of leprosy. It was a term of contempt, equivalent to calling him a mean and unworthy fellow—a social outcast. In this sense it is still used as a term of abuse in the further East (India, etc.), and is often applied as such to men who have ample heads of hair. In western Asia, where men shave their heads, the term is not now known as one of reproach.

"The offense, involving as it did a blasphemous insult upon one of the Lord's most signal acts, made a near approach to what in the New Testament is called the sin against the Holy Ghost. It became the Lord to vindicate his own honor among a people governed by sensible dispensation of judgments and of mercy; and it became him to vindicate the character and authority of his anointed prophet at the outset of his high career."

BAD TEMPER OF INFIDELS.

The indulgence of bad passions on the whole subject of religion, shuts many up to infidelity. "Infidels," says Cecil, "are loose, fierce, overbearing men. There is nothing in them like sober and serious inquiry. They are the wildest fanatics on earth."

A poet, having read Paine's Age of Reason, wrote on a blank leaf the following just, thoug severe stanza:—

"At every page divine his rancor teems,
This hour he reasons, and the next blasphemes;
Making each text with a censorious eye,
That gives his practice or his pride the lie."

Violent contempt is very much the style in which infidels have ever treated the whole subject of religion. Mr. Jefferson, when writing on law, and liberty, and politics, is calm, serious, dignified, and very forcible; but when writing on the subject of religion, he never fails to lose his temper or display his vanity. See his works.

Infidels, feeling that the Bible makes war on their sinful lusts and practices, in self-defense wake war upon it; and being unable to conduct the conquest with manly dignity, they fall into a passion, and soon begin to rave. Indeed, malevolent passions constitute no small part of infidel character. Paine was habitually violent and ungovernable in his temper. Slight opposition enraged him. Nothing made him more your enemy than a refusal to flatter his vanity. To curry favor he professed anything. "At London he was a Free-thinker, at Versailles a Cartestan, at Nantz a Christian, at Berlin an Infidel."

THE BIBLE AMONG ROMAN CATHOLICS.—One of our colporters, (says the Bible Society's Record,) in detailing his labors at the West, makes the following encouraging statement respecting his success among Roman Catholics:—

"I have to-day been laboring much among Irish Romanists. It is pleasant to witness the breaking up of old prejudices against the Protestant Bible. I find that very many are in the habit of reading it and comparing it with the Douay translation. To one intelligent Irishmen I very recently loaned a Bible, that he might make this comparison. I was ever treated with kindness by them, and was happy in being able to leave a copy of the Scriptures in several of their families. I entered a French family from Canada, which had been without any portion of the Scriptures for years. There were seven children in the family, four of whom were able to read. The old gentlemen bought a French Testament for himself, and all the members of his family who could read, were likewise furnished with copies. They are professed Roman Catholics."

A DOG STORY.

My oldest son was crossing the field in the country, some distance from any dwelling, when he was pursued by a large and fierce dog belonging to the gentleman whose land he was crossing. The lad was alarmed, and ran for his life. He struck into a piece of woods, and the dog gained upon him, when he looked around to see how near the creature was, and stumbling over a stone, he pitched off a precipice, and broke his leg. Unable to move, and at the mercy of the beast, the poor fellow saw the dog coming down upon him, and expected to be seized and torn; when, to his surprise, the dog came near, perceived that the boy was hurt instantly wheeled about, and went off for that aid he could not render himself. There was no one within the reach of the child's voice, and he must have perished there, or have dragged his broken limb along, and destroyed it, so as to render amputation necessary, if the dog did not bring him help. He held up his leg, and it hung at a right angle, showing him plainly the nature of misfortune, and the necessity of lying still. The dog went off towards the nearest house and barked for help. Unable to arrest attention, he made another visit of sympathy to the boy, and then to the house, there making such demonstrations of anxiety, that the family followed him to the place where the child lay. Now observe that this dog was pursuing this boy as an enemy; but the moment he saw his enemy prostrate and in distress, his rage was turned to pity, and flew to his relief. Here was true feeling, and the course he pursued showed good judgment. He was a dog of heart and head. Very few men, not all Christians help their enemies when they are down. Some do not help their friends when they fall. This dog was better than many men who claim to be good men. I do not say that he reasoned in this matter, but there is something in his conduct on this occasion that looks so much like the right kind of feeling and action, that I think it deserves to be recorded to his credit. As few dogs will read the record, I commend the example to all mankind for their imitation. [Presbyterian.

PRAY FOR THE EDITOR.—Because, 1. He is a man. 2. He is a watchman. 3. He needs that wisdom which is from above, and profitable to direct. 4. His parish is very large. He in some instances, has to furnish intellectual and spiritual food to several thousands, and it is of vast importance that he "rightly divide the word of truth," and "feed them with knowledge and understanding." 5. It is with the editor at the press, as with the minister at the pulpit, "He that planteth is nothing, and he that watereth is nothing; but God who giveth the increase." 6. The more you pray for your minister, the more likely are you to be benefited by his preaching; and the more you pray for your editor, the more benefit you will doubtless receive from his publication. 7. I am afraid he is often forgotten in the closet, for I am sure he is not often remembered in the family, in the pulpit, or in the prayer-meeting; if you pray for him as you ought, you will be more likely to pay to him a just remuneration for his toil. [Religious Recorder.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.—"Thousands of men," says Chalmers, "breathe, move, and live—pass off the stage of life, and are heard of no more. Why? They do not partake of good in the world, and none were blessed by them; none could point to them as the means of their redemption; not a line they wrote, not a word they spoke, could be recalled? and so they perished; their light went out in the darkness and they were not remembered more than insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die, O man immortal? Live for something. Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue, that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love and mercy on the hearts of thousands you come into contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as bright on the earth as the stars in heaven."

THE POPE ON A TOTTERING THRONE.—The days of the "Man of Sin" are numbered. He is in his dotage. His imbecility has become more manifest in the eyes of all mankind. The latest order of His Holiness forbids persons to wear sky blue ribbons in their hats or bonnets, under pain of arrest and punishment, by fifty strokes of the bastinado! The horror of sky-blue ribbons results from the fact that such ribbons are regarded as symbols of republicanism—always startlingly terrible to the tyrant of the Vatician. In no other part of the world is there so much jealousy felt towards republican tendencies of all kinds, as Rome. Popery is the embodiment of despotism—the most absolute and unmitigated tyranny which ever scourged outraged humanity. But its end is at hand. Hence its frantic and foolish fears. And this accounts too for its alarm at the color of the ribbon worn in thh hats of men and the bonnets of women. [Western Recorder.

LOVE OF CHILDREN.—It is a false and mistaken notion altogether, that men of great mind and intense thought are easily wearied or annoyed by the presence of children. The man who is wearied with children must always be childish himself in mind, but alas! not young in heart. He must be light, superficial, though perhaps inquiring and intelligent; but neither gentle in spirit nor fresh in feeling. Such men must always soon become wearied with children; for every similarity of thought and of mind—the paradox it but seeming—is naturally wearisome in another, while, on the contrary, similarity of feeling and of heart is that bond which binds our affections together. Where both similarities are combined, we may be the most happy in the society of our counterpart; but where the links between the hearts are wanting, there will always be great tediousness in great similarity.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, September 25, 1851.

"THE CHURCH" AND THE SABBATH.

Mr. Owen is the first anti-sabbatarian writer that has come in our way, who has attempted anything like a rational solution of the question, Why was the decalogue distinguished from all the rest of the law, both as to the manner of its publication, and the disposition which was afterwards made of it, if it was not intended thereby to designate it as par excellence, the moral lew? He says:—

> The decalogue, though a noble part of the law given by Moses, is but a part. It is often called the covenant; still it is but a part of it, and called so by the rule by which a part is put for the whole. And if spoken in the first instance, audibly by God himself, and written by the finger of God on tables of stone, the reason is plain. He did so to impress the people with awe, and to sanction the whole ministry of Moses. When he had spoken them, "he added no more," evidently because the people were terrified, and about to seek the mediation of Moses, instead of direct communication with their King; and he wrote them that they might be laid up in the ark, not as being of more authority or of a different character from the subsequent laws, but as a voucher for the authority of the whole. It is common to speak of the decalogue as the moral law, and as containing the whole rule of morals; but the accuracy of this is called in question. The Sabbath precept is a positive one, or all but its observers on the Saturday are guilty of its breach, and language must be put on the rack to make it set forth all morals, or forbid the opposite vices, though it affords general principles to guide us to a great extent.

There is some show of argument in this; and the more so, because it seems to be sustained by the authority of Scripture. For the Lord said to Moses, Lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and BELIEVE THEE FOREVER. Ex. 19: 9. It would indeed seem from this, that the grand reason why God published the decalogue under such circumstances of terrible grandeur, was "to sanction the whole ministry of Moses." We beg leave to suggest, however, that as one divinely commissioned to lead the Israelites, and take the general oversight of their affairs, Moses had been confirmed to them before. The miracles wrought in the presence of Pharoah, and at the Red Sea, were his credentials. And Israel saw that great work which the Lord did upon the Egyptians; and the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, AND HIS SERVANT MOSES. Ex. 14: 31. So that it was not the ministry of Moses in general, that was sanctioned by the transaction at Sinai, but rather that particular department of it which consisted in mediation. For Moses was a mediator between Jehovah and the Israelites, (Gal. 3: 19, Deut. 5: 5,) and, as such, was a striking type of Jesus Christ the only true mediator between God and men.

Now let it not be overlooked, that God contemplated the world of mankind as standing in perishing need of a mediator, and, in his mercy, determined to give them one. But before giving him, he judges it fit to prepare the way by first making them sensible of their need. They must be made so sensible of it as to make choice of one themselves as the only way of approaching God. But this choice they never make, till by the law they see themselves guilty, ruined, and helpless. It is the law which shows them that they are dead, and cannot help themselves. It is the law which scatters all their false hopes, and destroys every vestige of self-righteousness. God therefore prepares the way for a Mediator, by first giving the law.

[illegible] what law? What law is it, which makes men feel themselves sinners, and drives them to cry out for mercy? What law is it which makes such a terrible display of divine [illegible] that the conscience-striken sinner feels he must have a mediator to stand between him and God, or perish forever? Is it the law of positive institutions, such as that system was which "served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things?" By no means. There is no law which can exert such a power but the moral law. There is no other law which creates a sense of guilt, and of unworthiness to approach God.

Now see how it was with the Israelites. As soon as the decalogue was proclaimed, they cried out for a mediator. Speak thou with us; but let not God speak with us, lest we die. Ex. 20: 19. And God intended that they should cry out in this manner. Hence he made his grand display—not in that part of the law which prescribes the sacrifices, and set forth the priesthood, but—in that which was, above all the rest, directly calculated to make the people feel their need of a daysman. We are thus driven to the conclusion, that, as the promulgation of the decalogue had the very effect upon the Israelites which the moral law ought to have, and which nothing but moral law could have—as it created a sense of guilt, and overwhelmed with a sense of unworthiness—therefore it is preëminently entitled to be called the Moral Law.

But when we speak of the decalogue as the moral law, we mean simply that it is an epitome of it. We do not mean that every duty of man, under all the various circumstances in which he may be placed, is specified in it, in so many words. It would be absurd to look for such a code in a book designed to be a vade-mecum for all mankind. But we fearlessly assert, that it embodies all the elementary principles of the law. There is no moral duty which is not fairly inferable from one or other of its precepts, and that without any necessity of "putting language on the rack." There is no breach of duty, which is not virtually embraced in some one of its prohibitions. Every form of filial duty is cognizable by the fifth commandment. Every shade of the murderous spirit is prohibited by the sixth. Every species of uncleanness is forbidden by the seventh. Every kind of robbery and dishonesty, by the eighth. Every sort of defamation of another's character, by the ninth. And even the secret wish to interfere with our neighbor's rights and interests, by the tenth. And certainly every form of departure from God is virtually forbidden by the first four commandments. What is the value of Mr. O.'s insinuation, then, that it does not present "the whole rule of morals?"

We have never considered it very wide from the truth to say, that the utterance of the ten commandments audibly by God himself, the engraving of them upon stone tablets by his own finger, and the repositing of them in the ark, together with all the other tokens of grandeur attending their publication, were so many circumstances designating them as the moral law, in contradistinction from the ceremonial system, which was spoken by Moses, written upon parchment, and never laid up in the ark. But as Mr. O.'s criticism seems to call in question the accuracy of this view, we request him to consider whether the Israelites could ever after look upon the stone tablets, or even call to mind their existence, without remembering that it was the solemn promulgation of the law written upon them, which overwhelmed them with a sense of guilt, and caused them to make choice of a Mediator. Were they not to them a standing monument of their own deliberate choice to approach God only through a Daysman? When this question is negatived, we will yield the argument.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

GLASGOW, September 5, 1851.

One of the objects of the Evangelical Alliance is the promotion of Sunday sanctification. In furtherance of this, a paper was read at their recent meeting on what they term the "Desecration" of that day in Great Britain. Assuming as they do that all the sanctions of God's Sabbath have been transferred to the day which an apostate church adopted in its stead, they are very zealous for its maintenance. They would preserve it from invasion and extend its observance. It is acknowledged in the paper read on this occasion, that when the fundamentals of the Alliance were under discussion, at the first conference in Liverpool, there was found "such variety of opinion respecting the scriptural ground and authority on which the Sabbath was to be based, that it was deemed prudent and forbearing not to introduce it amongst the various topics that form the doctrinal statement of our common faith, but to give it place instead amongst the sundry objects for common action"—and, that when the Alliance was formed in 1846, although the basis was enlarged, the Sunday question was left in the same position. When the British Organization was afterwards formed Sunday desecration was committed to the North Western Division. Among the members of this Division, however, there were such different views that they effected little—what was done in the way of collecting statistics of desecration having been almost entirely the work of one individual. The Alliance at their annual meetings urged attention to the subject, and as funds were felt to be necessary, and contributions were obtained for this among other purposes; but it confessedly does not appear that any results have yet issued.

"The most glaring causes," of Sunday desecration, says Mr. Jordan, in this paper, "are the licensed trade in spirits and other intoxicating liquors, the regular and stated railway traffic, the refinement upon this of very cheap excursion trains, and the increasing Government traffic in letters." The extent of regular and stated railway Sunday traffic in England, "may be judged from the fact, that the ordinary railway books give the times of starting of at least 1,350 long and short trains, besides that of their setting down and taking up at a very great number of intermediate stations." Besides these regular trains there are "excursion" ones which carry very large numbers. Even the books themselves are no certain proof of the extent of railway Sunday desecration by ordinary trains; "for the police reports of the metropolis, and numerous correspondents of the public press, tell us of trains started far more frequently even than they are mentioned in the tables, and at such perilous proximity that the lives of the passengers are jeoparded by the risk of collisions. So again, the books fail to tell of the vastly increasing numbers of cheap excursion trains, that run to a distance from London and back again on the Sabbath—[Sunday, he means]—as to Bath, Bristol, Brighton, and other towns. In fact, so largely has this system increased, and so utterly improbable is it that railway companies should work without profit, that it may well be feared whether the Sabbath [Sunday] traffic may not eventually prove some of the most profitable to the proprietors." "Then, again, there is the Government traffic in letters on the Sabbath, [Sunday,] which, though limited at present, yet cannot but increase."

And all this while the ink of 609,750 Sunday Prize Essays that have been printed, of different sorts, is scarcely dry, and while the watchful eyes of the various local commttees is upon the desecrators! It is hardly to be supposed that the recent efforts which have been made to influence the public conduct have not produced some effect. Even although the judgment may not have been convinced nor the conscience touched, yet men watched and their conduct ready to be reported and commented on, will often restrain themselves in that which under other circumstances they would practice and avow. We desire no Sabbath desecration; and if we look with less concern than the Alliance on the extension of the Sunday work and pleasure, it is in the hope that when men are permitted more freely and generally to make election between man's day and God's, that some at least will be found more obedient to the commandment "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." J. A. BEGG.

THE EDUCATION SOCIETY.

The Seventh-day Baptist Education Society held a brief session at Leonardsville, N. Y., during the Anniversary season. The only business transacted was to hear the Treasurer's Report, and the Annual Report of the Board, and to re-appoint the officers of last year, with instructions to take any action which they may deem expedient in relation to the objects for which the Society was organized. The Treasurer's Report stated that fifty-four dollars had been received by him for memberships. The Annual Report of the Board we copy, in order to show the circumstances connected with the formation of the Society, and the reason why it has as yet accomplished so little:—

The Seventh-day Baptist Education Society was organized at Alfred, N. Y., under the following circumstances:—

The General Conference had recommended the establishment of a College and Theological Seminary, where the youth of the denomination, and especially those young men expecting to devote themselves to the gospel ministry, might be properly educated; and in furtherance of the object, had appointed an Educational Committee to secure funds, hold annual sessions, and take such other measures for the establishment of a College and Theological Seminary as they might deem proper, with the exception of locating the Institution. The Conference had farther requested the different Associations of the denomination to appoint Committees, to act in concert with its own Committee in making inquiries relative to the most feasible location for such an Institution, but reserving to itself the right of then advising concerning its final location. When the Committees of the Associations and that of the Conference came together, it was found that they were not able to act in concert, the objects and measures contemplated by the bodies which had appointed them being, in some respects, diverse from one another. The immediate establishment of a College and Theological Seminary was considered impracticable. But in order to the ultimate accomplishment of the educational purposes expressed by the General Conference, the joint Committees of the Associations and Conference called a mass meeting, which was forthwith assembled. At this meeting a Constitution was presented and approved, upon the basis of which the Society was immediately organized. A Board of Directors was also appointed, to whom was assigned the duty of forming a temporary Theological Class, in view of our immediate wants, and of taking such steps as might be necessary to give efficiency to the operations of the Society. It was, however, understood, that the plan of the General Conference was not to be considered as abandoned, nor the plan recommended by the mass meeting as substituted in lieu of it. The whole proceeding was designed rather as the means of attaining the end contemplated by the Conference.

During the year past the Board has accomplished nothing towards the object of the Society, not having been able to secure a constitutional quorum for the transaction of its business. We cherish the hope that the present meeting will result in the adoption of such plans as will prevent the recurrence of similar embarrassment, and that the great object contemplated by the friends of education in our denomination may not fail through any oversight in your deliberations.

GERRIT SMITH ON CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

In April last, Gerrit Smith, Esq., delivered in Troy N. Y., an Address on the "True Office of Civil Government." In consequence of its having been, to some extent, both misunderstood and mis-represented, he was requested to print it—a request with which he has complied. In this pamphlet Mr. Smith maintains that the legitimate action of Civil Government is very simple—that it owes nothing to its subjects but protection, and that not a protection from competition nor from all crimes, but simply from crimes against their persons and possessions. To the morals of its subjects Government owes no protection; still less is it bound to promote them. Government instead of trying to increase the wealth of the people, or to help the progress of religion among them, should say to its subjects "You must do for yourselves; my only part is to defend your right to do for yourselves; you must do your own work; I will but protect you in that work."

Several points on which Mr. Smith supposes an explanation may be desired, he treats at large. He holds that Government should invariably and absolutely forbid slavery—that men have an equal right to the soil, as to the light and the air—that a people may repudiate their national debt—that all tariffs should be abolished, and all custom-houses removed from the face of the earth—that Government should have nothing to do with schools—that schools should be left to the voluntary principle as well as churches, and that when Government interferes with the schools it makes itself abnoxious to the charge of meddling with religion as when it interferes with the church. Neither the carrying of the mails, nor the building of asylums and light-houses, nor the improvement of harbors, is necessarily the works of Government. The abolishing of the traffic in intoxicating drinks is the duty of Government only "because it is fraught, directly, immensely, and necessarily, with wide and awful peril to person and property."

Without taking time to comment upon these positions of Mr. Smith's Address, though some of them are evidently open to criticism, we copy its concluding paragraph, to which most of our readers will heartily subscribe:—

"The work of Civil Government is not so much to take care of its subjects, as to leave them in circumstances in which they may take care of themselves; and not so much to govern its subjects, as to leave them free to govern themselves. Civil Government is to hold a shield over the heads of its subjects, beneath which they may, in safety from one another, and from all others, pursue their respective callings, and discharge their respective duties. Whilst confining itself to this employment, it is a blessing above all praise—above all price. But when it forsakes its own work to usurp that of the people, and especially when, as it has been recently known to do, it arrays itself against the great and holy God, who ordained Civil Government, and blasphemously enacts laws which are opposed to his laws, then is it a curse and a monster, which deserves to be hated with all our hatred, and resisted at every hazard."

RECENT DEATHS.

We abridge from the N. Y. Daily Times the following notice of several recent deaths:

REV. THOMAS H. GALLAUDET, LL. D., well known as the pioneer of Deaf-Mute Instruction in this country, died at his residence in Hartford, on Wednesday, the 10th inst., at the age of 64. At an early period of his life, Mr. Gallaudet became interested in the cause of the Deaf and Dumb, and an accidental circumstance decided his future career. In the autumn of the year 1807, a child of Dr. Mason F. Cogswell, then residing in the city of Hartford, became, through the effects of a malignant fever, first deaf and then dumb. Mr. Gallaudet, a young man of talents, education and benevolence, interested himself in the case of this unfortunate child, and, with a strong desire to alleviate her condition, attempted to converse with and instruct her. His efforts were rewarded with partial success; and through the exertions of Dr. Cogswell, Mr. Gallaudet was commissioned to visit Europe for the purpose of qualifying himself to become a teacher of the Deaf and Dumb in this country. Seven gentlemen of Hartford subscribed a sufficient amount of funds to defray his expenses, and on the 25th of May, 1815, Mr. Gallaudet sailed for Europe. Meanwhile, the friends of the project employed the interval of time in procuring an act of incorparation from the Legislature of Connecticut, which was accomplished in May, 1816. In May, 1819, the name of "the American Asylum at Hartford for the Education and Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb" was bestowed by the Legislature on the first Institution for the Deaf-Mutes established in the United States. After spending several months in the assiduous prosecution of his studies, Mr. Gallaudet returned to this country in August, 1816. The Asylum was opened on the 15th April, 1817, and during the first week of its existence numbered seven pupils; it now averagrs 220 annually. Mr. Gallaudet became the Principal of the Institution at its commencement, and held the office until April, 1830, when he resigned, and has since officiated as Chaplain of the Retreat for the Insane at Hartford. His interest in the course of Deaf Mute Education has always continued unabated, and his memory will be warmly cherished by that unfortunate class of our fellow beings as well as by a large circle of devoted friends. The tree which was planted under his supervision and was tended by his care, has borne good fruit.

JAMES FENNIMORE COOPER, known throughout the world as the first of American Novelists, died at his residence, at Coopertown, on the 11th inst., at the age of 62. Born in 1789, at Burlington, N. J., and graduated at Yale College in 1805, he entered the Navy as Midshipman the next year, but after six years left the service. In 1811, he was married to Miss Delancey, sister of the Episcopal Bishop of Western New York, and soon after published his first novel—Precaution, a tale of English Society. It was, however, a failure; but, The Spy, which followed it, gave him rank at once, as one of the most brilliant Novelists of the day. The public is familiar with his subsequent literary history. After having given to the world a series of truly American novels—American in scenery, character and tone, and exalted American Literature to a rank in Europern estimation which it had never before approached—he incurred the enmity of the American public, by censures of American manners. He had spent some years in Europe and returning to the United States, published two or three books in succession, in which he held up, for censure and reform, those faults of his own countrymen, to which residence abroad had called his attention. The lesson, however well meant, was not well received. His books were savagely reviewed. and he, personally, was unsparingly denounced. He carried the contest from print to courts of law, and waged active war with the whole newspaper press. The result, of course, without regard to verdicts, was injurious to him, and for the last few years he has not been a favorite in the United States.

HON. SETH E. SILL, of Buffalo, of the Supreme Court of this State, elected in the VIIIth District, died on Monday, Sept. 15, after a brief aud painful illness. Judge Sill was a native of Saratoga Co., but became a resident of Buffalo early in life, and commenced his professional career in that city, in 1836.

REV. SYLVESTER GRAHAM, the founder and untiring advocate of the Vegetarian System of dietetics, died at Northampton, Mass., on Thursday, 11th inst. Dr. Graham was chiefly known for his strict adherence to the system which, for some time, bore his name. His writings on the subject were numerous and popular, and his labors, as a lecturer, were incessant. Dr. Graham was a native of Suffield, Ct., and at the time of his death was aged about 55.

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY—SAD CASE.—On Fourth-day, the 17th inst., Rev. Wm. T. Biddle died at the house of Rev. John Dowling, in New York, where he was awaiting his departure for Burmah in a few weeks. The circumstances of his death were peculiar and affecting. Just five weeks previous he was ordained to the missionary work, and the day following he was married. Two weeks later he graduated with honor at the Madison University. On the Sixth-day previous to his death he was attacked with a complaint in the throat which assumed a malignant type, and he closed his eyes in peace and hope.

THE DAIRYMAN'S MANUAL.—We are indebted to the author, Gurdon Evans, A. M., for a copy of "The Dairyman's Manual," an octavo volume of some two hundred and fifty pages, with numerous illustrations. It contains chapters on the History and Importance of the Dairy, the Wild Ox, the Different Breeds of Cows, the composition of Milk, the circumstances by which the quality and quantity of the Milk are affected, Dairy Buildings, Management of the Dairy, the Butter Dairy, the anatomical structure and diseases of cattle, &c. Practically we know but little of these subjects, and of course are not qualified to judge of the merits of Mr. Evans' work. Experienced dairymen, however, speak well of it.

PREMIUM ESSAY ON MISSIONS.—The Southern Baptist Board of Missions, at the instance of some unknown friend, have offered the sum of $50 as a premium for the best Essay on Missions. Rev. Messrs. Dr. Ryland, and J. B. Taylor, and B. Manly, Jr., Committe of Adjudication. The precise topic is left undefined, the Committee only suggesting the following as some among many subjects which might be suitable; "The Reflex Influence of Missions: The Claims of Missions on Young Men; The Duty of Pastors to the Missionary Cause; The Heathen Lost without the Gospel; Modern and Apostolic Missions Identical in Character; The Spirit of Missions; The Spirit of Christ; Christian Stewardship; What Missions have Accomplished; Liberal and Systematic Beneficence on Principle; Objections of Missions Considered; The Voice of Prophecy and Providence on Missions; Christians Debtors to the World; The Harvest Plenteous and Promising."

NEW YORK STATE FAIR.—The Fair of the New York State Agricultural Society was held at Rochester last week, and was the finest of the always good Fairs of the Empire State. The display of horses and cattle was very large, covering several acres. The horses were brought out, and made to perform to the delight of the spectators. One large ring, enclosed by a rope, was devoted to the exhibition of matched horses; another to horses of all-work; and a third to young horses. The training and exercising occupied several hours.

Poultry formed a grand feature in the show this year, and the display was a very fine one. There appears to be a growing interest in this kind of stock.

The halls devoted to mechanics and manufactures were very extensive, and very full. The show was rich, and endless in its variety, running through every department of the arts.

Floral Hall was the gem of the ground. The inclosure was 80 by 180 feet, and was crowded with the most beautiful flowers and the choicest fruits.

NEW YORK STATE NOMINATIONS.—Each of the great political parties of the State of New York held a Convention at Syracuse week before last, and nominated their candidates for the election in November next. The following are the nominations:—

WHIG.	DEMOCRATIC.
For Judge of the Court of Appeals.
SAM'L A. FOOTE.	A. S. JOHNSON.
For Secretary of State.
JAS. C. FORSYTH.	H. S. RANDALL.
For Comptroller.
G. W. PATTERSON.	JOHN C. WRIGHT.
For Treasurer.
JAMES M. COOK.	BENJ. WELCH., Jr.
For Attorney General.
DAN'L ULLMANN	L. S. CHATFIELD.
For State Engineer and Surveyor.
H. C. SEYMOUR.	WM. J. McALPINE.
For Canal Commissioner.
H. FITZHUGH.	H. WHEATON.
For State Prison Inspector.
ALEX. H. WELLS.	HENRY STORMS.

A CONVERT FROM POPERY.—A distinguished French priest, by the name of Massiot, has recently published a powerful document, in which he renounces Romanism, and avows all of Protestantism, but the name. The work is done in a bold and yet Christian spirit. Perhaps his standing aloof from Protestants for the time being may subserve his usefulness. But he cannot and will not stand there long, of he is in truth what his document shows him to be. He says: "I have ceased to be a Roman; I have become again a Catholic." In the sense in which he claims to be Catholic, all true Christians are Catholics.

During the last twenty years the First Baptist Church of Newark, N. J., has contributed for objects of beneficence, abroad, $15,000; expended on its own church, and that built for the South congregation $13,000, and for the support of the gospel at home $12,000; in all about $40,000. During this time the number of members has been on a rapid increase, having received by baptism, 311 individuals, being an average of over fifteen a year.

A new Old School Presbyterian Church is about to be formed in Jersey City, by a colony from the First Church. The services of Rev. Charles Hoover, editor of The Temperance Organ, and a member of the New School Presbytery of Newark, have been temporarily engaged for the new enterprise. A liberal offer of the land has been made to it by Hon. D. S. Gregory.

The German Methodists of Cincinnati have completed a large, new church-edifice, costing over $4,000. The church numbers 180 members, and is a strong body, under the care of Rev. Wm. Nast, an eloquent German. The church is composed mainly, not entirely, of converted Roman Catholics, and is the second one of the kind establised in that city.

Miss Hunt, of St. Louis has given a lot worth $30,000 to the Archbishop, for the erection of a Cathedral, and another lot for the establishment of a community of Sisters of the Good Shepherd.

Dr. Kalley, whose unostentatious but devoted labors were so successful among the Portuguese of Madeira, is now laboring as a missionary at Beirut.

General Intelligence.

European News.

By the Royal mail Steamer Europa which arrived at Boston Sept. 17, Liverpool dates to Sept. 6 were received.

In England, political affairs are quiet. The Humboldt arrived at Southampton on the 4th, with the news of the execution at Havana of the fifty men under Col. Crittenden's command. The details of the news are given at length in the London papers.

The Queen was on her visit to Scotland where she had been very enthusiastically received.

The performances of the American yacht continue to attract attention. Several writers in The Times and other papers are drawing attention to the peculiarities of her construction and recommending the imitation of her to English builders.

According to the official statistics, the number of visitors to the Crystal Palace from May 1 to Aug. 30, was 4,205,509. The fullest day was July 15; then there were 74,122 persons in the building.

The Freeman's Journal announces the death of one of the celebrities of the memorable year 1843, namely, the Rev. Thomas Tierney, one of the clergymen inlcuded in the monster indictment of the then Attorney General, Mr. A. B. C. Smith. Up to 1843 he was one of the most active supporters of the Repeal movement headed by O'Connell.

In France attention is chiefly absorbed with speculations on the approaching Presidential election. The Prince de Joinville is clearly to be a candidate, and will doubtless be a more formidable opponent of Louis Napoleon than any other that could be selected. Another "Conspiracy" has been discovered in Paris; forty-seven arrests have been made by the Police.

In Austria hostiliy to the Government still smoulders under the surface with occasional outbreaks. An affray took place near Gross-Waradin, between a rustic wedding party and several gendarmes, of the most brutal character.

In Portugal attention is absorbed by an accusation of a Cabinet Minister of bribery. He has resigned and come before the courts of law.

The news of Kossuth's release is confirmed, but the time is now said to have been the 13th of September. It is said that he proposes to go to England and provide there for the education of his children and then proceed to the United States.

According to letters from Berne of the 29th ult, the damages caused in the canton by recent inundations are valued at 1,400,000 fr., or about £96,000. Subcriptions are open all over Switzerland to cover the losses of the inundation. The city of Berne has already subscribed 12,000 fr.

The Tuscan Monitore publishes a series of regulations issued by the minister of worships, Florence, on the 28th ult., concerning the right of censorship reserved to the bishops by the new concordat. By these regulations every bishop has the right of censorship over ecclesiastical works to be published within his diocese; a work rejected by one bishop cannot be approved by another, and there is no appeal from the decision of a bishop in such matters.

Latest from California.

The following items we find among the latest advices from California:—

Business of every kind is reviving. Confidence is gradually assuming sway; and there is every reason to believe that the prospect of an extremely rainy winter will produce a very large fall trade.

Throughout the State a comparative peace and quiet reigns. The constituted authorities are in the full performance of their functions, aided by the respective Vigilance Committees, and a feeling of security is quite general.

The latest intelligence from the Indian country is of a favorable character, and little trouble is to be apprehended from that quarter.

The mining interest was never in better condition, and the yield of gold never larger.

The agricultural resources of the State have been largely and profitably developed during the past season.

The price of labor is rapidly advancing throughout the mining districts, and there is a great demand even for "green hands."

The Express companies are already beginning to feel the beneficial effects of the great removal of auriferous deposits from the river beds, and well filled bags are pouring in upon them, dedicated to the rustic damsels of "Pike County," and venerable matrons of "the old Granite State."

A mass meeting of the miners of Nevada County was held at the Pick and Shovel House, in Coyoteville, on the 29th ult., for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of adjusting all their difficuliids arising out of mining interests, without recourse to courts of law.

REVOLTING INHUMANITY.—We find the following in the Boonville (Mo.) Observer of the 26th ult.: The following details of one of the most skocking barbarities committed in a community of civilized people, has seldom been equalled in the annals of crime. In Morgan County, not long ago, a citizen died, leaving a widow and two small children, the oldest a girl, about seven years of age. Not long after the death of her husband, the woman married again. Soon the girl died, and the boy was reported missing. The sudden and mysterious disappearance of the child, together with the fact that upon the death of the woman's first husband the property he possessed was left to the two children, aroused suspicion in the neighborhood, when a search was made for the boy. He was found, in the woods adjacent, with both legs broken and his mouth sewed up. Being still alive, however, he was properly cared for, when he reported that his mother and step-father had been the perpetrators of the deed, and, in addition, that his sister's skull had been broken by them, which caused her death. The boy's statement further tended to develop the fact, that the girl was known before her death to have had a bandage around her head; and upon the body being exhumed, it was found as the boy had stated, that the skull was fractured. The parents were arrested and imprisoned at Versailles.

Latest from Salt Lake.

The Kanesville Guardian, (Iowa,) 22d August, says, that on Tuesday, the 19th, seven men, from California, Oregon, and other regions West, visited the office. They left Salt Lake on the 15th July, and made the journey in 34 days. It proceeds:

The gentlemen from California say that they were nine days in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in snow, during which time they fed their horses on one pint of flour per day to each horse.

Mr. Langley says that the inhabitants of the Valley lost, by Indian depredations, cattle, horses and mules, to the amount of $12,000. These Indians infest Little Salt Lake; also Brown's Settlement. At both places, it is stated that they stole considerable, to the serious inconvenience and loss of some of of the residents of those places.

They report the crops in the Valley, more especially Wheat, to be superabundant and very heavy this season, The health of the citizens there is very good, while peace, union and harmony, are the promoinet features of their social circles.

Mr. L. says that they met President Hyde and his company 33 miles on the other side of Fort Laramie, getting along very remarkably well, enjoying good health and buoyant spirits.

Met a company of Oregon and California emigrants 26 miles on the other side of said Fort, enjoying the same blessings as the former, and progressing on their journey without any trouble.

Capt. Smith and his company were met on the 1st inst., four miles on the other side of Laramie; Steven's company, five miles east of the Fort; Capt. Day's in sight, and Capt. Cumming's company, of 100 wagons, ten miles on the other side of Asha Hollow. Shirtliff's company, of 50 wagons, were met five miles in the rear of Cumming's train; and Capt. John Brown, with the emigrating poor, 22 miles this side of Asha Hollow. Wilkin's merchandise train, consisting of 10 wagons, with Scotch company in the rear, were met at or near the same place; they met Mr. Brown's company, also Gordon's. Next day they met Father Alfred's company the other side Cold Springs, and Elder Orson Pratt's company at the Springs, proceeding on their journey finely.

Mr. Shelton, one of the company from Oregon, met 607 wagons between Williamette Valley and this, for Oregon; also, 72 wagons from the junction of the roads; the latter were bound for California.

The Cholera was, acccording to the latest news, making great ravages at Jefferson City.

Fatal Railroad Accident.—The Pittsburgh Gazette gives the following account of the recent railroad accident near Allegheny City, on the 12th instant. In consequence of running over a cow, three passenger cars were thrown from the track, one of which was literally broken to pieces. The other two were likewise very much shattered. The car which sustained the most injury was nearly full of passengers, and we wonder how any escaped with their lives. Mrs. Lindram, the wife of Mr. James Lindram, a carpenter, residing in Allegheny City, was very seriously wounded. Her little child, a boy of about six months old, who was in his mother's arms, was instantly killed his skull being fractured. Mrs. Lindram, when we last heard from her, was suffering great pain, her body being cut and bruised in several places, but it is thought that she will recover. Mr. William Cooper, a brakeman, is, we fear, mortally wounded. One arm is broken, as is his back, and he is very much cut and disfigured. Michael Malony, who took passage at Rochester, had his collar bone broken, and was severely bruised. Mr. Mowrey, of Mercer, was slightly injured, having received cuts on the knee and arms. William Stoffer, from Wilmington, Lawrence County, was dangerously wounded. His head was very much cut, and his face disfigured. He is laboring under a concussion of the brain. A number of other persons were somewhat injured, but fortunately sustained no serious damage. When we arrived on the ground, the forward car was lying across the track, with one end in the air, and the other in a pool of water at the bottom of the bank. The second car was lying on the other side of the road, completely wrecked. The third car had been thrown down the bank.

Shipwreck.—The Mobile Tribune of Sept. 9, says that the Spanish brig Fernando Septimo, from Porto Rico, bound to Havana, when within about thirty miles of the latter place, was overtaken by a gale on the 19th ult., which carried her to Cape San Blas, Florida, where she was totally wrecked. There were some fifty-seven Spanish subjects on board—sailors, laborers, &c. Of these, a woman and child and seven men were lost. The survivors made their way to Pensacola a few days since, all in a most destitute condition. But there being no opportunity to provide for them at that place, or to ship them to the city of Havana, they were sent to the Spanish Consul, Mr. Cruzat, at this port. On their arrival here yesterday morning, their folorn situation excited the sympathy of many of our citizens. But we regret to say that others, supposing them to be Spanish soldiers, had it in contemplation to take possession of them and retaliate in some way for the barbarities committed by the authorities of Havana on the followers of Lopez. Reason, however, soon convinced them of the error of such a course, and, after thronging the vicinity of the Consul's office for a few hours, they quietly dispersed. Mr. Cruzat will soon provide means for sending these people to Havana.

Important Trial.—The Supreme Court is sitting at Greenfield this week, and an important case, or rather double case has been tried, in which such eminent counsel as Rufus Choate and George Ashmun were engaged on opposing sides. The cases were Dr. Amos Taylor, and Dr. Taylor and wife, against the Vermont and Massachusetts Railroad Company, for damages sustained by the wife in alighting from a car at Wendell depot, in the fall of 1850. The turning facts were thus: notice was given of the station, the cars almost or quite stopped; she had got on the platform to alight, and the cars started with a jerk, and she was thrown to the ground and badly hurt. The point was; whether she was in a place of safety when she attempted to alight; if so, the company were not liable—if not they were. The verdict was $1,000 for the plaintiff in the first case, and $2,000 in the last—$3,000 in all. Choate, Davis, Allen, and Mattoon for plaintiff, and Ashmun and Aiken for defendants. [Springfield Repub.

Indiana.—The Christian Herald gives the proceedings of the Convention of Colored Freemen, organized at Pendleton, Ind, 18th of last month. It seems about sixty colored persons, from different parts of the State, assembled in the Methodist church, and discussed the policy of removing, because of the unjust feature of the Constitution recently adopted, which prohibits colored persons from coming in or settling in the State. Some were for removing to Canada, others for colonizing in Jamaica, and but a very few for Liberia. The feeling was decidedly against the latter country. Resolutions were adopted declaratory of the intention to remain in their native land, and one for the holding of a National Convention in this city "about the 18th of August, 1852." A committee to draft an address to the legal voters of the State of Indiana, being appointed, after a session of four days, during which the business of the Convention was transacted in the most orderly manner, an adjournment thereof took place.

For Liberia.—Nineteen colored persons, says the Hartford Courant, comprising 5 families of respectability and worth, left this city on Tuesday evening last for New York, where they will join another company of emigrants as large or larger, and soon embark for Liberia in the brig Zeno. A more intelligent and enterprising company of colored persons is seldom seen. All he parents save one are professors of religion in the Methodist Episcopal Church. On Monday evening an interesting meeting was held in one of the churches with reference to their departure. One of the party (Jacob Williams) has been employed in our office for the last five years, and we are sorry to lose his services. He is tolerably intelligent is possessed of good common sense, is honest, industrious, faithful, and exemplary in his conduct; and such men must prove valuable additions to Liberia.

Robbery.—On Sunday last a most daring robbery was attempted at the Commercial Bank, Cleveland, (O.) The burglars had effected an entrance in the room immediately above the Bank, cut a hole in the floor, and descended by means of a desk and strap. Here they attempted to excavate another opening to the vaults below, and had, in fact, made an aperture four feet in width and depth, when they were disturbed by the appearance of one of the Clerks at the front door. They left a note on the excavation, on which was scrawled, "'Tis hard to kick against these bricks."

SUMMARY.

A little girl, about three years of age, residing in Cincinnati, lately clambered up the roof of her mother's house, and was quietly seated on a glass sky-light, when first discovered by the occupants of the store below. A lad was immediately dispatched to the roof, to bring her down safely, while a Mr. Gibson remained below, fearing the glass might give way and precipitate her into the store. Meantime the sky-light gave way, when she came down a distance of forty feet, at a fearful rate, and alighted in the arms of Mr. G., who stood ready to catch her. Fortunately she was not injured.

The Sussex (N. J.) Herald states that a man in the employ of Mr. Wm. Morris, in Newton township, killed a rattle snake, having eight rattles, in the loft of his barn, a few days ago. He was in the act of lifting some sheaves of grain, when he discovered the dangerous reptile. He immediately sounded his rattle, and placed himself in a position for a deadly contest. On opening the body, it was found to contain a full grown rat, which had apparently just been caught and swallowed whole.

Mrs. Bradstreet, widow of Moses Bradstreet, aged nearly 98 years, recently died at her late residence in Rowley, Mass. Her remains were followed to the grave by a large concourse of relatives. She was a daughter of Capt. Thos. Myell, who commanded a company at the battle of Bunker Hill. She raised up eleven children, only three of whom are now living—the eldest, the widow of Richard Cressy, being but a little short of 75 years of age, and now enjoying quite good health.

Mr. Chancellor S. Barber petitioned the Superior Court of New London county, Conn., at the August term, for divorce from his wife, on the ground that she is guilty of habitual intemperance, and the excessive use of morphine, which, under the Connecticut statute of 1849, furnishes good cause of divorce. Judge Church has denied the petition, for the reason that the practices complained of were encouraged by the petitioner himself, and the result of his own fault and negligence.

The Louisville Journal gives an account of a child in that city, aged three or four years, the offspring of a black woman. The Journal says it is not a mulatto, but spotted. The face is black, with a white spot on the forehead, and one on the chin. The legs and part of the body are white, with black spots. The white is not like that of an Albino, but like that of the white race, with the blue veins showing themselves through it.

We find in The Cincinnati Gazette of the 4th, the report of a Joint Committee of gentlemen and ladies—among the latter Mrs. Judge McLean and Mrs. S. P. Chase—appointed to investiagte thd mystery of the rappings, as exhibited through two members of the Fox family. The Committee, after being present at two or three sittings, and watching the whole operations as closely as possible, state "that they never heard a sound when all the feet of the mediums were in sight, with their soles on the surface of the floor."

The Orleanian says that on Saturday last the greatest excitement was caused in New Orleans by a report that the disbanded Cuban Volunteers who had been allured from their homes and were dismissed without the means of returning, were about to attack the persons and office of the Cuban Committee. Some slight damage was done to the office, but by timely persuasion and promises further violence was prevented.

The editor of the Boston Times saw an old gentleman sifting the dust and dirt of the street in Court Square, full an hour of his precious time, to find a lost three cent piece. The income of this ancient miser is said to be not short of twenty dollars a day, and he possesses a fortune of nearly $200,000.

Peter Price, the oldest inhabitant of the village of Niagara, N. Y., died recently at the age of ninety-nine years and six months. He had been a soldier both in this country and in Europe, and was a walking history of interesting past events.

It is said that an association of English capitalists, comprising Messrs. Baring and Messrs. Rothschild, with several of the largest English railway contractors, has been formed, for the purpose of purchasing land in Ireland, and reselling or letting in farms, thoroughly drained, fenced and otherwise fitted for cultivation on the English model.

The Picayune says that the Cuban party in New Orleans, numbering about 2,000 in all, disbanded on the 7th. A considerable number took passage immediately for Alabama; others went up the river, but the remainder, being without means of getting off, were disposed to have a row, but except a few arrests for petty breaches of the peace, which were effected without difficulty, nothing serious occurred.

The creditors of Texas held a meeting on Monday, at Washington city, to agree upon a plan for the distribution of the ten millions given to Texas by the United States, at the celebrated "compromise." But no plan was agreed on, and the question will have to be settled by Congress, how much of the money Texas shall allow to her creditors, and how much to be scuffled for by her politicians.

On Saturday, Sept. 7, the City Marshal of Boston employed men to ascertain the number of persons visiting the city during a single day; and made the total 41,729; of these 13,575 came in 800 cars by 116 railroad trains; 13,310 on foot, and the remainder in 5,626 vehicles. The foot passengers who passed Joy's Building, in Washington street, were 20,400 down and 20,550 up.

St. John's, Porto Rico, was visited by a severe hurricane on the 10th of August. A large quantity of sugar in the store houses was destroyed, and the sugar-cane in the fields was blown down. The tide in the harbor rose twenty-six feet higher than usual, and carried away a number of houses. At Arecibo, the gale drove five British vessels ashore, and they became total wrecks. Considerable damage was done elsewhere.

Another Mexican Foray is currently talked of at at New Orleans, and rumor is so far explicit as to indicate Tamaulipas, Leon and Coahuila, as the Provinces to be dismembered; and that forces for the expedition are rallying in that city and at several points in Texas. There is nothing intrinsically improbable in the story.

We see it stated that the first train of cars passed over the railroad from Elmira to Canandaigua on the evening of the 15th. This road has a broad guage, and is only an extension of the New-York and Erie Road to Canandaigua. Active measures are in progress to continue it directly to Niagara Falls.

Artesian wells are favorites in Wisconsin. At Fond-du-Lac and Oshkosh, they have been sunk to the depth of 150 feet, and supply pure water. The water rises to the surface of the ground, and runs off like a spring. Similar wells have been opened with success at Hudson, Ohio, and Charleston, S. C.

In Mobile, a few days since, a white man, called William Carroll, was arrested, in company with several negroes, for gambling. Carroll kept the house in which he was found, playing with his sable patrons. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $50, but the poor colored individuals were condemned to receive thirty-nine lashes each.

Last week, a gentleman in Nautucket, while driving to Siasconset, found his horse suddenly attacked by an owl. The horse ran away, the carriage was demolished, and the gentleman was compelled to finish his journey, on horseback. A hawk measuring 5 feet 11 inches from tip to tip of his outspread wings, was shot near the place about the same time.

The Warsaw Signal says, that a young man who had a difference with a lady, to whom he was paying his addresses, went to try and effect a reconciliation, and on failing, stabbed her to the heart. The scene of the tragedy was on the borders of McDougal County, Mo.

One of the hammermen in the Louisville Rolling-mill, named W. H. Perry, earned $50 70 last week, having shingled 50 tons and 1,400 pounds of iron of 2,240 pounds to the ton, the wages for phich is $1 per ton. He worked by the piece, and without an assistant.

The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce thinks it "not improbable that at the next session of Congress a resolution will be offered and adopted, authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to open a special negotiation with the Spanish Government for the purchase of Cuba."

The new Constitution of Virgina requires a registry of the births and deaths of the colored population, and of the births deaths and marriages of the whites—showing that the marriage of colored persons is not regarded or recognized.

Quite an interest has recently been excited in Camden and Gloucester, N. J. among the families of the Lippincotts, Prices, Flanagans, and Boroughs, in consequence of the discovery, as they suppose, that they are the legal heirs of the celebrated Jenning's estate.

Before the end of this year three great lines of electric telegraph will be completed in Hungery, one from Pesth to Szolroik, the other from Cvezold to Szegedin, and the third from Czongrad to Arad. These lines will connect twenty large manufacturing towns and several smaller places.

Foreign papers mention the death, at Copenhagen, on the 10th of August last, of Peter Pederson, for many years Minister from the Government of Denmark to that of the United States. He must have been 80 years of age at the time of his death.

The honorable South Carolinians have refused to allow poor Bolding to return, according to the solemn agreement of his master, the exhorbitant demand of $2,000 for his freedom having been fully complied with by our benevolent citizens.

It is stated in the Journal of Commerce that goods are now sent from this city to Canada and Lake Michigan by Lake Champlain and the Ogdensburg railroad at cheaper rates than by Buffalo.

A State Convention of Mechanics will meet in Atlanta, Georgia, on the 29th of October next. The principal business seems to be to prevent the teaching of of mechanical trades to the slaves.

The reports from the grain-growing scetions of the West generally concur in representing the wheat crop of this year to be the heaviest ever gathered.

The Albany Journal, of the 19th inst., says, A body of Norwegians, numbering about 220, came up last night in the steamboats, on their way westward. This morning they were gathered around the Passenger Depot of the Albany and Schenectady Railroad, seeing to their property, and having it properly placed on the cars. The party was composed of men, women, and children; and a finer, healthier looking company we have seldom met with from Europe.

In the University at Albany, there is to be a department of Scientific Agriculture. Prof. John P. Norton, of Yale College, will deliver a course of Lectures in the early part of winter; Prof. James Hall will lecture on Geology; Dr. Goadley on Entomology; and Prof. Cook on Elementary Chemistry.

Jesse Benjamin died at Clayton, Jefferson County, N. Y., on the 6th inst., aged 93. He was in a number of battles, among them Princeton, Trenton, Monmouth, Germantown, Red Bank, Frog's Point and sevesal other. He was one of those that went into winter quarters at valley Forge.

A dispatch from Philadelphia of Wednesday, Sept. 17, says quite a large meeting was held in Independence-square to-night, to vindicate the laws and condemn the recent outrage in Christiana. Gen. Robert Patterson presided, and speeches were made by Col. Page, Charles Brown, John Campbell, and others.

Walter Forward, of Pa., the American Charge at Denmark, having tendered his resignation some weeks since, and requested from Government permission to return home, the President, last week, accepted his resignation, and directed letters of recall to be transmitted him.

The society of the Dutch Church, of Catskill, have commenced the construction of a new church edifice, in place of the old one destroyed by the disastrous fire of last Spring. The contract was completed on the 10th inst., with Messrs. Colgrove and Purdy, of Troy, for the sum of $9,675.

The wife and child of Charles Crandall of Genesee, N. Y., were thrown from a wagon on the 11th inst. The child, which was about five months old, was so seriously injured that it died in half an hour. Mrs. C., though considerably injured, will probably recover.

The New York Mirrro anounces the decease of Ellen Frances Osgood, the last daughter of the late Frances Sargent Osgood, aged 15 years. Ellen and Mary have survived their mother only fifteen months.

Lead ore of a very fine quality has been discovered in Deleware county, N. Y., on the line of Erie railroad. It is found at the base of a mountain 500 feet high, which is said to contain also coal and iron.

The Cincinnati Inquirer states on reliable authority, that the stock of barreled pork on hand at present, it is not more than one fifth the amount that was on hand last season at the same time of the year.

The London Times propounds a scheme of communication between London and Calcutta in seven days, without stoppages. The plan is by railway across Europe, and through the valley of the Euphrates.

From the 1st of January to 1st of September, 1851, there were built at Pittsburgh, Pa., thirty-two steamboats, the aggregate tonnage amounting to over 5,000 tons. Twenty-four steamers of large class are now on the stocks.

Mr. Seagrave, an old man, was killed with a spade at Town Poor Earm in West Woodstock, Vt., on the 1st inst., by one of the paupers named Bartholomew. They were working together in a field at the time. The murderer is under arrest.

On Friday morning, Mr. Jonathan Reynolds, of North Kingston, was killed while attempting to cross the track at the Davis crossing on the Stonington Railroad. Mr. Reynolds was aged about seventy-five.

Eighteen of the Cuban rioters were tried in New Orleans on the 5th inst. Some were fined in the sum of thirty dollars, others held to bail to keep the peace, and others remanded to the District Courts.

In a small village in Cleveland, England, the clergyman is blessed with sixteen children; the clerk nineteen; and the sexton fourteen—in all a "small tea-party" of fifty-five souls, the parents included.

Prof. Bache suggests that the name of Hell Gate should be called "Coaster's Gate,"—making the Narrows "Commerce Gate," and the Hudson Narrows, "Gate of the West."

New Orleans paper state that a report was in circulation to the effect that Gen. Quitman would shortly place himself at the head of another Cuban Expedition. The report was not generally credited.

A dispatch from Albany, Friday, Sept. 19, says Hon. Frederick Whittelsey, Judge of the Court of Appeals, died at Rochester this afternoon, at twenty minutes past 2 o'clock, of typhus fever.

A tailor of Gotha, Germany, has invented, with the assistance of a chemist, a new process by which clothes are made without sewing, the pieces being joined by a species of glue or paste.

In the month of July Paris was visited by 8,380 foreigners, besides those who came for a short time by pleasure trains. Of this number 828 were Americans.

Washington L. Underwood, one of the editors of the Helena (Ark.) Shield, put an end to his existence on the 20th ult., by shooting himself through the heart.

The average number of persons visiting the Chrystal Palace is now about 49,000 daily—chiefly persons from the rural districts of Britain.

The Whiteney Mills in Orange, Franklin county, on the east side of the river, and owned by Messrs Davis & Kilburn, were burned on Tuesday last—loss $10,000, insurance $7,000.

We see it mentioned that Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, is about to apply for retrocession to Maryland.

The 14 annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Anti-Slavery Society will be held at Westchester, Oct. 7—9.

The flax crop in Ireland this year is described as luxuriant. One hundred and forty thousand acres are under crop.

Rev. John Kennedy, pastor of the O. S. Presbyterian Church in Chester, Ill., died Aug. 21, aged 65 years.

According to a census taken by themselves, there are 18,000 Mornons at the settlement on Salt Lake. They are engaged in constructing a line of Railroad to the mountains, 8 miles long, for the purpose of transferring materials for their great temple.

The Utica Democrat says that 3,000 citizens of that town took the pledge from Father Mathew, during his recent visit there. He left on Friday for Albany.

The Calais Advertiser says that a Mr. Crangle, an industrious man, having a large family, while in a state of insanity from drink, committed suicide—one fearful warning more to the drunkard.

Mr. Corcoran, of Washington, has agreed to pay the expenses of 128 Hungarian exiles from this city to New Baden, Gen. Ujhazy's settlement in Iowa.

The corporation of Montreal have adopted a suggestion made by the Rechabites—to open a fountain near the wharf, to supply immigrants and strangers with pure water free of charge.

In 1824, the mail was taken to New Orleans from Washington city in 24 days. That is just about the time now required in taking it from New York to San Francisco.

The Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, President of Oakland college, Mississippi, was murdered by George A Briscoe, a student, who then committed suicide.

The Canadians complain that while passengers reach Montreal in 24 hours from New York, the mail requires 71 hours.

There will be a great Temperance Meeting in Crawfordsville, (Ind.) on the 23. Mr. Gough, and several other distinguished speakers, will attend.

The New-Hampshire Journal announces the death of Dudley Leavitt, of Meredith village, the famous self-taught mathematician, at the age of seventy-nine.

The Detroit Tribune says, the Conspiracy Trials have cost every daily paper in that city, for reporters and type setting, over $800 each.

A State Convention of Mechanics will meet for the transaction of business in Atlanta, Georgia, on the 29th of October next.

The Pension Office has issued in all since January last, about 40,000 land warrants, under the Act of Sept. 1850.

It is proposed to throw a wire suspension bridge across the Genesee river just below the Lower Falls at Rochester.

Paine's gas apparatus is on exhibition at the Providence, R. I., Fair, and gives out brilliant flame.

Twenty-seven valuable sheep, belonging to N. Hallock, of Milton, Ulster Co., were killed by dogs, during the night of the 15th.

Mr. Thackeray, the novelist and lecturer, is about to visit the United States on a professional tour.

New York Market—September 22, 1851.

Ashes—Pots, $5 06; Pearls, 5 56.

Flour and Meal—3 62 a 3 89 for old Michigan and Indiana; 3 94 a 4 12 for new do.; 3 81 for State; 3 81 a 4 00 for Ohio, and 4 18 a 4 25 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 25. Jersey Corn Meal 3 12.

Grain—Small sales cf Wheat at 90c. for Canada and 85 for Red Southern. Rye 71c. Oats, new State, 35 a 36c.; 31 a 32 for Jersey. Barley 72c. Corn, 55 a 59c. for Western mixed, and 63 for Jersey Yellow.

Provisions—Pork, 15 75 for new Mess, 13 25 for Prime; Mess Beef 8 75 a 11 00, and 5 00 a 6 00 for Prime. No material change in Butter and Cheese.

MARRIED.

In Hopkinton, R. I., September 11, 1851, by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. Clark Langworthy and Miss Ann Almira Allen, both of North Stonington, Ct.

In Genesee, N. Y., on the 13th inst., by Eld. James Bailey, Mr. Joel B. Crandall to Miss Eliza Ann Coon.

DIED.

At Bridgeton, N. J., September 12, Mary T. Sheppard, daughter of William T. and Abigail Sheppard, aged 21 years and 6 months. She was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Shiloh. She bore an excellent character, and died in the faith of Jesus and in the possession of a hope that maketh not ashamed.

In Rodman, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the morning of the 15th inst., Ida Adell, daughter of Silas and Margaret E. Maxson, aged 1 year, 4 months, and 4 days.

At Nile, Allegany Co., N. Y., Sept. 11, 1851, Emory D., only son of Nathan P. and Susan Lanphear, aged 2 years, 4 months, and 3 days.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Oliver Maxson,	New London, Ct.,	$2 00	to vol. 8	No. 52
John Darrow,	"	2 00	8	52
E. R. Brooks,	"	2 00	8	52
Thos. Avery,	"	2 00	8	52
J. K. Rogers,	"	2 00	8	52
Geo. C. Stillman,	"	2 00	8	52
Richard Jerome,	"	1 00	8	52
Anderson Lester,	"	2 00	9	19
C. T. Rogers,	"	2 00	9	19
C. P. Saunders,	"	2 00	9	13
E. G. Beebe,	"	1 00	8	52
Elisha Crandall	"	1 00	8	52
Lester T. Rogers	"	2 00	8	52
Benjamin Edwards,	Leonardsville,	2 00	8	52
Ethan Clarke,	"	2 00	8	52
Lois Burch,	"	2 00	8	52
Geo. R. Babcock,	"	2 00	8	52
Catharine Sisson,	"	2 00	8	52
Jesse Burdick,	"	2 00	8	52
Wells Crumb,	"	2 00	8	7
David Whitford,	"	2 00	8	13
Clarke Saunders,	"	2 00	8	13
Jared B. Crandall,	Brookfield,	2 00	8	52
Newton & Moon,	"	2 00	8	52
David P. Curtis,	"	2 00	8	52
Andrew Babcock,	"	2 00	8	52
Chauncy V Hibbard,	"	2 00	8	52
Jonathan Babcock;	"	2 00	8	52
B. F. Burdick,	"	2 00	8	52
Nathan Burch,	South Brookfield,	2 00	8	52
John H. Burch,	"	2 00	8	52
John Maxson,	"	2 00	8	52
Roswell P. Dowse,	"	2 00	8	52
David Maxson,	West Edmeston,	2 00	8	52
Joshua Maxson,	"	2 00	8	52
Ezra Coon,	"	2 00	8	52
John S. Coon,	"	2 00	8	52
J. B. Stillman,	Unadilla Forks,	4 00	7	52
Bassett & Crandall,	"	2 00	8	52
Charles West,	Bridgewater,	4 00	8	52
Geo. Maxson,	Alfred Center,	2 00	8	52
Luke Maxson,	"	2 00	8	52
Philip S. Green,	"	2 00	8	26
Roxana Coon,	"	2 00	8	52
Elijah Lewis,	Alfred,	2 00	8	52
Silas Stillman,	"	2 00	8	52
Josiah Witter,	Almond,	2 00	8	52
Matthew Wells, Jr.,	DeRuyter,	2 00	8	52
James Muncy,	"	2 00	8	52
Ethan Rogers,	Oxford,	2 00	8	52
Mrs. A. Buten,	Berlin,	1 00	8	52
Betsey Saunders,	"	2 00	8	52
Mrs. E. M. Osgood,	Lairdsville,	2 00	8	52
Peleg S. Clarke,	Scott,	2 00	8	52
Palermo Lackey,	"	2 00	8	52
Jer. W. Brown,	Mystic Bridge, Ct.	2 00	8	52
Susan A. Bonham,	Shiloh, N. J.,	2 00	8	52
Oscar A. Babcock,	Homer, for Visitor,			25c.
Joshua Clarke,	Brookfield, "			50
Betsey Crumb,	DeRuyter, for Membership,			$5 00
Abel Stillman,	Poland, "			5 00

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

Executive Committee of the Western Association.

THE Executive Committee of the Western Association will hold a quarterly session at Alfred Center, Wednesday evening, October 1st. Missionaries employed by the Committee are expected to make their reports at that time, and the churches are requested to send in the amount apportioned them for last year's labors and additional aid for the present operations of the Committee. J. BAILEY, Sec'y of Com.

Little Genesee, Sept. 15, 1851.

North-Western Association.

THE North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association will hold its Fifth Anniversary with the Church in Christiana, Dane County, Wisconsin, commencing on the fourth day of the week before the first Sabbath in October, 1851. A. W. Coon, Cor. Sec.

The Ohio Association.

THE Seventh-day Baptist Ohio Association will hold its first Anniversary with the church in Jackson township, commencing on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October, 1851.

J. G. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Morning Line for Albany.

THE new and elegant steamer REINDEER, Capt. Albert Degroot, will leave New York from pier foot of Murray-st. every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday morning, at 7 o'clock, and returning, leave Albany every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at the same hour, making the usual landings each way. ☞ Meals served on board. For further information apply to JAMES BISHOP & CO., 3 Beaver-st.

Daguerrean Gallery.

GURNEY'S Daguerreau Gallery, No. 189 Broadway, has been known for years as one of the first establishments of the kind in the United States, and the oldest in the city of New York. He has recently greatly enlarged his Gallery by the addition of more rooms and large skylights, and other improvements, rendering it one of the most extensive establishments in this country. Mr. G. attends personally to his sitters, and from his great experience in the art he is enabled, at all times, to give perfect satisfaction. The large-sized pictures recently taken by his new process are universally acknowledged superior to any heretofore taken in this country. A large collection can be seen at all hours of the day. Ladies and gentlemen are respectfully invited to examine them.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH,
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 will commence the first Wednesday in September, and continue forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.

Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall and middle of the Winter Terms, and continue seven weeks. Those intending to teach District Schools are solicited to become members of this department. Especial attention will be given to the common English branches, and to familiar lectures and discussions on School-Teaching.

During the Winter Term the Agricultural Department will be under the instruction of Prof. Gurdon Evans, A. M., and will embrace the study of the best authors, and daily recitations. Two hours each day will be spent in the Laboratory well furnished with apparatus and chemicals, where students will be instructed in the Elementary Analysis of Soils, Minerals, Ashes of Plants, &c., and the various modes of testing for their constituent elements. Also, a course of Public Lectures will be delivered on the application of Science to Agriculture, and illustrated by a great variety of philosophical and chemical experiments. The object of this course of instruction is to afford ample facilities for farmers to become scientific, as well as practical; and enable them to render waste and worn-out lands productive, and retain them constantly improving under a high state of cultivation.

In connection with classes, Courses of Lectures will be delivered, during the Fall Term, on Natural Philosophy and Elementary Chemistry; during the Winter Term on Astronomy and Physiology; during the Spring Term on Geology and Intellectual Science.

Tuition—from $3 50 to $5 00 per term, to be settled in advance, or by satisfactory arrangement. Extras—Drawing, $1 00; Oil Painting, $6 00; Monochromatic, $3 00; Agricultural Chemistry, including chemicals, (breakage extra,) $10 00.

Board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense.

Every care will be taken to render the school of [illegible] highest advantage to the student. The regulations [illegible] be few, but strictly and steadily enforced. Our [illegible] is at the same time we cultivate the intellect[illegible] moral powers to develop also the practical.

Nothing sectarian will be taught or countena[illegible] the school. The exercises of the Institution [illegible] suspended on the first and seventh days of each [illegible]

LEWIS HOWELL, Pres. of the Board [illegible]

Election Notice.

State of New York, Secretary's Office,
Albany, August 27, 1851.

TO the Sheriff of the City and County of New York:

Sir,—Notice is hereby given that at the General Election, to be held in this State, on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Samuel A. Foot.

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan.

A Comptroller, in the place of Philo C. Fuller.

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt.

An Attorney-General, in the place of Levi S. Chatfield.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Hezekiah C. Seymour.

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Charles Cook.

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Alexander H. Wells.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court, for the First Judicial District, in the place of James G. King, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Senator for the IIId, IVth, Vth, and VIth Senate Districts, in the place of Richard S. Williams, Clarkson Crolius, James W. Beekman, and Edwin D. Morgan, whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

County officers to be elected for said County:

Sixteen Members of Assembly.

A Register, in the place of Cornelius V. Anderson.

A Recorder, in the place of Frederick A. Tallmadge.

Two Judges of the Superior Court, in the place of Thomas J. Oakley and John L. Mason.

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Daniel P. Ingraham.

A Surrogate, in the place of Alexander W. Bradford.

A Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, in the place of Jacob L. Dodge.

Two Governors of the Alms-House, in the place of Simeon Draper and Francis R. Tillou.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, there is to be elected a Justice for each of the six Judicial Districts, into which the City of New York is districted, pursuant to Chapter 514, Laws of 1851. Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary of [illegible]

Sheriff's Office, August 28, 1851.—I hereby [illegible] that the above is a correct copy of the notice of the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, received this day, from the Hon. Christopher Morgan, Secretary of State. THOMAS CARNLEY,

Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

N. B.—All the public newspapers within this County will please publish this notice once in each week, until the Election, and send in their bills for advertising the same as soon as the Election is over; so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors and passed for payment. Sept. 4.

Miscellaneous.

Capital Punishment in Morocco.

A late letter from Tangier has the following account of a case of capital punishment:—In my last I believe I gave you an account of a Moorish execution. Another instance of capital punishment here was attended with the following singular circumstances. A Moor of the village of Sharf had shot with a pistol, in the market of Tangier, a fellow-villager whom he suspected of intimacy with his wife. The brother of the murdered man started immediately for Meyuinez, where the Sultan was then residing, and claimed the life of the murderer. The Sultan heard the complaint, and acknowledged the justice of the demand, and summoning the plaintiff into his presence, delivered the following decision:—

"We grant you our permission to take the life of the murderer of your brother, with the same instrument of death with which he was assassinated, and on the same spot, and at the same hour of the day. But," added the Sultan, "why seekest thou also to be a manslayer? Accept the price of blood, which is lawful unto true believers, and we will guarantee you its payment from our Sherefian hands, and two hundred mitzakel shall be the sum."

To this, the plaintiff replied: "Can that sum purchase me a brother?"

"Go thy way," said the Sultan; "we have heard and understood, a letter will be given you by the vizier, in which our mandate shall be written."

Furnished with the sentence of death, the man returned to Tangier, and presented it to the Governor. On the same day of the week, and the same hour, the murderer was brought out of prison and seated on the very spot where he had taken his fellow-villager's life, while crowds of people attended to witness his death. The pistol was now given to the brother of the murdered man, who loaded it, went up to the criminal, walked slowly around him, and said—"In the presence of God and man, I call upon you to answer me truly:—Didst thou slay my brother?" To this the criminal replied, "I did." One of the multitude now stepping forward, addressed the brother of the murdered man: "Accept the price of blood," said he, "and I promise you one hundred ducats in addition, which those here assembled will gladly give."

"Worthless words," said the villager and again he walked round his victim. Again he asked him the same question, and again the same reply was given. A second offer was now made of two hundred ducats; and again the villager walking around the criminal, repeated his question, adding, "Say what thou believest; I am about to take thy life."

"That God is God, and Mahomed is the prophet of God," responded the criminal.

Scarcely were the words uttered, when the pistol was discharged. The muzzle had been placed at the small of the back, being the same spot where he had shot the man for whom he was now about to die; but the wretched criminal, although mortally wounded, did not expire for some hours.

Trial at the Old Bailey in London.

George Hammond, a portrait painter, was placed at the bar, to be tried on an indictment found against him by the grand jury for wilful murder, malice aforethought, of George Baldwin, a rope dancer and mountebank. The prisoner was a man of middle height, but slender form. His eyes were blue and mild. His whole bearing gave evidence of subdued sadness and melancholy resignation. He was forty years of age, had a soft voice, and his appearance and manner bore testimony to his being a man of distinguished education, in spite of the poverty of his dress.

On being called on to plead, the prisinor admitted that he did kill Baldwin, and he deplored the act, adding however that on his soul and conscience he did not believe himself guilty. Thereupon a jury was empannelled to try the prisoner. The indictment was then read to the jury, and the act of killing being admitted, the government rested their case, and the prisoner was called upon for his defense.

The prisoner then addressed himself to the court and jury.

"My lord," said he, "my justification is to [illegible]nd in a recital of the facts. Three [illegible]ago, I lost a daughter, then four years of [illegible] sole memorial left of my beloved [illegible]hom it had pleased God to recall to [illegible] I lost her; but I did not not see her [illegible]had seen her mother die. She disap[illegible]she was stolen from me. She was a [illegible]g child, and but for her I had nobody in [illegible]orld to love me. Gentlemen, what I [illegible] suffered cannot be described, you cannot comprehend it. I have expended in advertising and fruitless searches everything I possessed—furniture, even to my clothes. All have been sold. For three years, on foot, I have sought for my child in all the cities and all the villages in the three kingdoms. As soon as by painting portraits I had succeeded in gaining a little money, returned to London to recommence my advertisements in the newspapers. At length, on Friday, the 14th of April last, I crossed Smithfield cattle market. In the center of the market a troupe of mountebanks were performing their feats. Among them a child was turning on its head, its legs in the air, and its head supported by a halberd. A ray from the soul of its mother must at that moment have penetrated my own, for me to have recognized my child in that condition. It was my poor child. Her mother would perhaps have precipitated herself towards her, and locked herself in her arms. As for me, a veil passed over my eyes. I knew how it was; I, habitually gentle, even to weakness, seized him by the clothes—I raised him in the air, then dashed him to the ground—then again. He was dead. Afterwards I repented what I had done. At the moment I regretted that I was only able to to kill but one."

Lord Chief Justice Tindal.—"These are not Christian sentiments. How can you expect the court and jury to look with favor on your defense, or God to pardon you, if you cannot forgive."

Prisoner.—"I know, my lord, what will be your judgment, and that of the jury, but God [illegible] already pardoned me; I feel it in my [illegible] I knew not then the whole extent of [illegible]l that man had done me. When some [illegible]passionate people brought me my daughter in my prison. She was no longer pure and angelic as formerly; she was corrupted, body and soul—her manner, her language, infamous, like those of the people with whom she had been living, she did not recognize me, and I no longer recognized her myself. Do you comprehend now? That man had robbed me of the body and soul of my child. And I—I have killed him but once."

Foreman.—"My lord, we have agreed in our verdict."

Chief Justice.—"I understand you, gentlemen, but the law must take its course. I must sum up the case and then you will retire to deliberate."

The chief justice having summed up the case, the jury retired, and in an instant after returned into the court with a verdict, "Not guilty."

On the discharge of Hammond, the sheriff, was obliged to surround him with an escort The crowd of women and men was immense. The women were determined to carry him off in triumph. The crowd followed him all the way to his lodgings with deafening shouts of huzzas.

The Old Family Horse.

But where is the deacon's horse? Last year, and for the past twenty years preceding, you could hardly pass the house of a summer evening, without noticing an old gray, quietly feeding by the roadside, lazily brushing off with his long switch tail the hungry flies that fastened on his flanks. The landscape is nothing without the old horse. The deacon reared him on the homestead. When a yearling, he used to come regularly to the back door and there receive crusts of bread, crumbs of cake, and other delicacies, the free gifts of the children to their pet. He was the most wonderful colt that ever was—as docile as the house dog. When stray poultry trespassed on the grounds, he would lay his little ears back, and putting his nose close to the ground, curling up his lips and showing his white teeth, drive the marauders from the premises with such a "scarce," that they would refrain from their incursions for a week to come. But he was incapable of injuring a living thing.

When old enough for use, he submitted to the discipline of bit and bridle without a single opposing effort. And what a fine figure he made in harness! How smartly he trotted off to church, carrying the whole family behind him in a Dearborn wagon! How proud was his carriage when he bore the deacon on his back!

The old man once made a long journey on horseback, to visit a brother who lived in the northern part of New-England. A great portion of the way there was only a bridle path to follow through the woods, and this was frequently obstructed by fallen trees. When the impediment was merely a bare trunk, the gallant gray cleared it gayly at a flying leap; when the tree was encumbered with branches, he clambered over it like a wild cat. Once the deacon was obliged to dismount, and crawl on his hands and knees through the dense branches; the sagacious horse imitated his example, and worked his way through like a panther.

But age came upon the good gray. His sight began to fail, his knees to falter. His teeth were entirely worn away.

After a bitter stuggle, the deacon concluded to replace him by a younger horse. Life had become a burthen to the old family servant, of which it was a mercy to relieve him. Yet, even then, the deacon was reluctant to give a positive order for his execution.

One day he called his eldest son to him.

"Abijah," said he, "I'm going over to W., to get that colt I was speaking about. While I am gone, I want you to dispose of the poor old gray. I shouldn't like to sell him to any body that would abuse him."

He could say no more—but Abijah understood him. When his father had gone, he went into the meadow, and dug a deep pit, beside which he placed the sods at first removed by the spade. He then carefully loaded his rifle, and called to the gray. The poor animal, who was accustomed to obey the voice of every member of the family, feebly neighed and tottered to the brink of the pit. The young man threw a handkerchief over the horse's eyes, and placing the muzzle of the rifle to his ear, fired. The poor old horse fell, without a groan, into the grave which had been prepared for him. With streaming eyes, Abijah threw the earth over the remains of his playmate, and then carefully replaced the sod.

When the deacon returned with his fine new horse, he manifested no elation at his purchase, nor, though he percieved that the stall was empty, did he trust himself to make any inquiries respecting the old gray. Only the family noticed, that in the course of the afternoon, in wandering through the meadow, he came upon the new-made grave, and though the sods had been carefully replaced, he evidently noticed traces of the spade, and suspected the cause, for he tried the soil with his foot, and was also observed to pass the back of his hand across his eyes. But he never alluded to his old servant.

If there be men who can smile at the grief of a family for the loss of an animal who had been long endeared to them by service and association, be assured that their hearts are not in the right place; and that they are individual who would exhibit a like callousness to the loss of human friends. [Olive Branch.

"Tools of Trade."

A sreies of articles is now running through Frazer's London Magazine, entitled "Sketches of American Society," written, as we understand, by a wealthy New York gentleman. In the last number we find a singular anecdote relative to Archbishop Hughes, the head of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, the truth of which is vouched for by the writer, but which we find it very difficult to believe. If it is not true, the collector of the port of New York should publicly contradict it. The story is as follows:—

"As you say, Hughes generally has his wits about him, no donbt. He played our Custom house a trick they will not forget in a hurry. Soon after Gen. Harrison and the Whigs came in, and Curtis was made Collector of our port, there arrived a great lot of what the French call articles de religion, robes, crucifixes, and various ornaments, for Hughes' cathedral. Now these were all French goods, and subject to duty, and a notification to that effect was sent to the proper quarter. Down comes Hughes in a great rage. 'Mr. Curtis, Mr. Curtis, we never had to do this before. Your predecessor, Mr. Hoyt, always let our articles of religion in free of duty.' 'Can't help what my predecessor, Mr. Hoyt, used to do,' says Curtis; 'the law is so and so, as I understand it, and these articles are subject to duty. If you like, you may pay the duties under protest, and bring a suit against Uncle Sam to recover the money.' After Hughes had blusted awhile, and found it did no good, he tried the other tack, and began to expostulate. 'Is there no way at all, Mr. Curtis,' says he, 'by which these articles may be passed, free of duty?' 'None at all,' says the other, 'unless'—and he paused, hardly knowing whether it would do to hint at such a thing, even in jest—'unless, bishop, you are willing to swear that these are tools of your trade.' 'And sure they are that!' quoth Hughes, snapping him up, 'bring on your book;' and he had the goods sworn through in less than no time, before Curtis could recover himself."

A Short Story.

When Mary and I were married (says Grant Thorburn) we were young and foolish, for we had nothing to be married with; but Mary was delicate, and I thought I could take care of her best. I knowed I had a strong arm and a brave heart to depend upon.

We rented a chamber and went to housekeeping. We got together a little furniture—a table, bedstead, dishes, but our money failed us before we bought the chairs. I told Mary she must turn up a tub; for I could not run in debt. No, no. It was not long before our rich neighbor, Mrs. M., found us out, and kindly enough she supplied us half a dozen chairs added to our store. They were old ones to be sure, but answered just as well for us. I shall never forget the new face those chairs put upon our snug quarters—they never looked just right before. The tables have turned with Mrs. M. and me. Now she has become a poor widow; "but she shall never want while I have anything, never!" cried the old man, with a beaming face, "I shall never forget those old chairs."

Ah, now the secret was out! It was the interest of the old chairs which maintained the poor widow. She was living on the interest and compound interest of a little friendly act done years before, and it sufficed for herself and her daughter.

How beautiful it is to see how God blesses the operation of his great moral law, "Love thy neighbor;" and we should oftener see it, could we look into the hidden paths of life, and find that it is not self-interest, nor riches, nor fame, that bind heart to heart. The simple power of a friendly act can do far more than they. It is these, the friendly acts, the neighborly kindness, the Christian sympathy of one towards another, which rob wealth of its power to curse, extract the bitter from sorrow; and open wells of gladness in desolate homes. We do not always see the golden links shining in the chain of humane events; but they are there, and happy is he who feels their gentle but irresistible influence.

Summer Prunning of Grapes.

The New England Farmer says:—As very erroneous notions generally prevail as to the summer management of grapes, frequently hints to cultivators are necessary. We have noticed in many cases already the main shoots have been cut back to the fruit, thus depriving the fruit of the nourishment and support, which without the mutilation would be given by a vigorous shoot, in the foilage, of which the sap, with other matter taken up from the atmosphere, would be elaborated into suitable food for the growth and maturing of the fruit. By cutting off these shoots the fruit is robbed of its support which nature has provided.

We have noticed in a garden, kept by a professional gardener, where there were a large quantity of grapes, that all the new shoots had been cut back to the fruit, so as to leave it exposed to the sun, excepting on one trellis, where they, fortunately, had been neglected. The grapes on that trellis were well grown, and ripening well, while all the others were imperfectly grown and remained green.

When grapes are improperly pruned as we have named in July, they will often send out new shoots and recover, in some measure, from the evil, but when this prunning is done rather late, it often destroys the crop.

There is generally a great error in not prunning grapes thoroughly in the fall, or in the spring, so that there is a great mass of vines, which often leads to the erroneous mode of prunning which we have named. When the vines become too thick from a very luxurient growth, and previous scanty prunning, the best remedy is to cut off lateral branches, and all feeble shoots, and cut out whole small vines on which there is little or no fruit, and allow the main shoots to run twenty or thirty feet if they will.

Be Gentlemen at Home.

There are few families we imagine, any where, in which love is not abused as furnishing a license for impoliteness. A husband, father, or brother, will speak harsh words to those whom he loves best, and to those who love him the best, simply because the security of love and family pride keep him from getting his head broken. It is a shame that a man will speak more impolitely, at times, to his wife or sister, than he would dare to any other female except a low and vicious one. It is thus that the holiest affections of man's nature prove to be a weaker protection to woman in the family circle than the restraints of society, and that a woman usually is indebted for the kindest politeness of life to those not belonging to her own household. Things ought not so to be. The man who, because it will not be resented, inflicts his spleen and bad temper upon those of his hearthstone, is a small coward, and a very mean man. Kind words are the circulating medium, between true gentlemen and true ladies at home, and no polish exhibited in society can atone for the harsh language and disrespectful treatment too often indulged in between those bound together by God's ties of blood, and the still more sacred bonds of conjugal love. [Springfield Rep.

Size and Price of a Paper.

People are beginning to learn that a few inches more in the size of a paper, and a few cents less in the whole year's subscription price, make rather a poor substitute for quality. The largest and cheapest is not always the best. In our observation during the past few years, we have been surprised to notice how great a difference ten, twenty, or thirty cents in a year would make in the circulation of a family newspaper; the mere saving of a cent, or half a cent per week, being inducement enough for a man to decide in favor of one every way inferior to another that relied on excellence rather than cheapness.

But, as we have said, people are beginning to get tired of these poor bargains, and to understand that, in newspapers as in other things, the best is really the cheapest. Size and price are not now matters of the first consideration, but excellence. When a man subscribes for a paper, he expects to get one that he and his family can read with interest and profit. The evil of mere puffing and pretensions, from which so much has been suffered, is thus gradually curing itself. And it is well for the public that this is so. [T. S. Arthur.

My Mother's Voice.

My mother's voice, how oft doth creep
Its cadence on my lonely hours,
Like healing sent on wings of sleep,
Or dew on the unconscious flowers.
I might forget her melting prayer
While pleasure's pulses madly fly;
But in the still, unbroken air,
Her gentle tones come stealing by—
And years of sin and manhood flee,
And leave me at my mother's knee.

A Financial Operation.

We lately heard a story illustrative of the early days of York county—those good old times when every body was "honest as the days were long." The parties were two of the early settlers in the Western part of York (now Adams county,) both were of the honest old German stock—and as one of them is still living, we suppress the name. Peter, it appears, had increased the size of his farm, by annexing thereto a small tract adjoining, and lacked about a hundred dollars of the sum necessary to pay for the new acquisition. He called upon his neighbor, George, to borrow the amount. George brought out an old bread basket, and counted down the desired number of "thalers"—and then, of course, the two sat down to two large earthen mugs of cider and as many pipes of tobacco. After smoking over the matter for a while, it occured to Peter that in similar transactions he had seen or heard of something like a note passing between the borrower and lender, and he suggested as much to George. The lender assented to the propriety of the thing—paper, pen and ink were produced—and between the two a document was concocted, stating that George had loaned Peter one hundred dollars, which Peter would repay to George in "dree monts," (three months.) This Peter signed and thus far our two financiers had made the thing all regular and ship shape.

But at this point a difficulty presented itself. They both knew that notes were made in the operations of borrowing and lending which they had witnessed—but neither of them had observed what disposition was made of the document—neither could tell whether it was en regle for the borrower or lender to take charge of the paper! Here was a dilemma! At length a bright idea struck George. "You hab de money to pay, Peter—so to be sure you must take dis paper, so as you can see as you haf to pay it!" This was conclusive—the common sense of the thing was unanswerable, and Peter pocketed the money and his own note, "so as he could see as he haf to pay it!" Three months passed over; and punctually to the day appeared our friend Peter, and paid over the promised sum to George. This being done, the mugs and pipes were again paraded. After puffing a while, Peter produced the note, and handed it to George, with the remark. "Now you must take de note, so as you can see as de money has been paid!" [Herald.

Improving.

An important evidence, and certainly a very encouraging one, of the elevation of the public taste, is to be found in the superior class of publications which issue from the great publishing houses. We do not mean to say that the times are prolific in those great works which mark an age, and stand out as landmarks for the future, but we are certain that the average standard of the class of publications designed for intellectual readers has greatly risen; and, generally, the best books of this class have been the most read. Histories, biographies, voyages and travels, have taken, to a considerabie extent, the place of idle works of fiction; and the works of fiction which have enjoyed the widest circulation, have been, generally, pure in style, and tolerably so in sentiment, and true to nature in their descriptions of life.

The class of publications designed for the lower intellectual appetites has been driven into what is called "yellow-covered literature," with which the shelves of the repositories of cheap publications are loaded, and the railroad stations and steamboat landings are infested. If the good accomplished by the better class of publications of which we have spoken is great, the evil inflicted by the other is not less marked. The remedy is doubtless to be found in the inculcation of purer taste, and in providing better reading at the same price. There are many ways in which the encouragement of a better taste can be urged and made effectual, and it is an important duty for all who have any influence or control over public opinion, to give this encouragement. Especially should the young be guarded against the pernicious consequences of forming a false taste for reading, and every precaution should be taken to direct them early in the paths of sound and judicious intellectual culture. [Prov. Jour.

SHADRACH, THE FUGITIVE.—A correspondent of the Essex Freeman, Salem, Mass., lately visited this refugee from our republican "institutions," at Montreal, and found him well and happy, engaged in keeping a restaurant in Notre Dame-street. He had seen hard times, and met with some losses through the rascality of others, but was now in a hopeful way, and feels as he had never felt before, since he is now safe from the American manhunter.

"He says that worlds would not induce him to again set foot on American soil until slavery is abolished. His friends in the States have held out various inducements for him to come back, promising him safety, but he too wisely estimates our vain pretentions to a regard for the slave. It is well known that Shadrach is a member of the Methodist Church, and is an exemplary Christian. He has committed no crime against society. He is naturally bright, and considering his means of improvement in life, very intelligent. And when I heard such a man sincerely say that he was safe and free, and happy in the British realm, but had told his friends to shoot him dead the moment they should see him about to cross the river, all the boasted freedom of our country came painfully to my mind. It was too humiliating to contemplate."

THE CAFFRES.—These people, with whom the British are at war, differ very materially from the negro race. In stature they approach the European, and their high foreheads and and acquiline noses, and copper-complexion, assimilate them to the Asiatics and the controlling class in Madagascar. In agriculture and commerce they have shown themselves quite skillful, and they furnish great promise of future elevation with proper moral and intellectual culture. But the war now carried on—which is supposed to have originated from an exhibition of cupidity sadly pertaining to the Anglo-Saxon race—is any thing but promising of future good in its results. The missionary operations which have been carried on among them for a long period with success, have been seriously embarrassed by this unhappy war, which does not seem likely very speedily to close. Unless some merciful providence should interpose, according to the Macedonian, the missions here may be extinguished.

Interments in Paris.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune.

The privilege of undertaking all funerals in Paris is rented by the Government to a company called the Societé des Pompes Fuvèbres. The prices for the various ranks and degrees of funeral services are regulated by a law passed in 1832. Under this law there are nine classes; the lowest costing fifteen francs, including the religious ceremonies, and and the first class 4,000 francs, or as much higher as the relatives or survivers choose to go. The lease or charter granted to this company expires in January, 1852, and before reviving it, it is the intention of the City Government to insist upon these charges being all considerably diminished. The tax of inhumation is also to be lessened. In the cemeteries of Paris there were formerly three kinds of graves; common graves, where the poor are buried, graves conceded for a certain time, and perpetual graves. These latter have lately been done away with, as they threatened to monopolize the whole disposable space. The ground is now hired for a certain period, usually five years, subject to renewal. This plan is expected to obviate this inconvenience, as it is highly probable that the lease will not be renewed after so considerable a lapse of time, in a city where the past and its dead are so notoriously soon forgotton. Up to seven years of age, a space one metre, or 39 inches long must be purchased; beyond that age, two metres are required. In the vast enclosure appropriated to common graves, the coffins are placed close to each other, at the depth of four and a half feet. Decomposition goes on so fast in this clayey soil, that the ground is ready again for service after a delay of five years. There are three cemetries in Paris—Pere Lachaise, Mont Martre, and Mont Parnesse. These are all on the outskirts of the city, though not without the walls. No interments have been made in burial places attached to churches since 1790. With the cemetery of Mont Parnasse, is connected a smaller one for the use of the hospitals, and another for the reception of such executed criminals as escape the dissection room.

The Weasel and the Rat.

A gentleman of veracity relates the following singular tale of a weasel and a rat:—

Weasels have courage to attack, and strength to master, a much larger animal than a mouse. While seated with a friend on a stile at Northbrook, a large rat came bustling down the hedge before us, bringing with him a lot of loose earth; my friend was just on the point of jumping down for a stone to whirl at him, when a little weasel followed the rat down the bank, holding his head well up, like a fox-hound, running breast high. The rat had crossed the path, and got into a little low bank on the other side, over which he scrambled, and came out among some Swede turnips in the adjoining field, at the very moment the weasel went into the low bank hunting for him. The turnips were so small and so far apart, that we did not once lose sight of the rat. He ran in and out among them, continually crossing his own track; and then making a little circle, he came to the bank, a good way from where we sat, and climbing over it, got into the footpath, about a hundred yards from us; he then ran towards us with all his might, straight along the middle of the path, and under the stile on which we sat motionless and smiling, and about ten yards behind us he went into the thick bank, and was lost to view. The weasel hunted well in the little low bank, and seemed a good deal puzzled, staying there much longer than the rat. At last he seemed to find out that the game had taken to the turnips; here he hunted with great eagerness, and finding the trick had been played, he made a cast like a well trained fox-hound, going completely outside all the trail; by this device he hit off the scent. In a few moments he was in the footpath, gallopping towards us in fine style, his back arched, his tail in a straight line behind him. He passed under us, and in his eagerness overshot the spot where the rat went into the bank; it was but for a moment; he came back, quartered the ground, found the trail, and was up the the bank in no time. A black thorn overhung the path; something moved in it; the rat dropped—the weasel dropped too; we heard a long squeal—then a shorter squeal—then all was still. We went to the spot; the weasel left his prey spitting like a cat; the rat's brain was laid bare, but his heart beat for near a minute as I held him in my hand.

Donations and legacies have been made to the East Windsor Theological Institute the last year, sufficient in amount to endow a new Professorship. A Professor of Ecclesiastical History has been elected, and was inaugurated at the late Anniversary. This Institution, it will be remembered, represents the Old School element of Connecticut theology.

The American Baptist Publication Society is publishing Bunyan's complete works, in 12mo. size. It is clearly high time, says The Watchman and Reflector, that these rich treasures of long-hidden gold were brought forth and put into general circulation. Christians of the genuine Bunyan stamp are too rare. The series has reached its fourth volume.

Rev. Dr. J. T. Peck, President of Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Penn., has been presented by the friends of the Troy Conference Academy, with a silver pitcher, as a token of their appreciation of his services while Principal of that Institution, several years since.

There were 8,452 bounty land cases reported upon in the Third Auditor's office during the month of August. The Pension Office has issued in all since January last about 40,000 land warrants, under the Act of Sept., 1850.

The Wesleyan or Anti-Slavery Methodists of Michigan have started a new paper, entitled The Western Evangelist. It is edited by J. K. Wellman, formerly a bookseller in this City.

Samuel Martin, aged 70 years, an old resident of New-Hampshire, committed suicide at Hooksett, on the 29th ult. He leaves a large family.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Summer Arrangements, commencing Monday, March 31, 1851.

THIS Road extends from ELIZABETHPORT, 35 miles, to WHITE HOUSE, N J, reducing the staging between the terminus of the Road and EASTON to 25 miles.

This line leaves New York by steamboat Red Jacket from pier No 1 North River, and connects with trains on the New Jersey Railroad, which leaves New York from foot of Cortland-st.

TRINS [illegible] Leave New York by steamboat Red Jacket, p[illegible] 1 North River, at 9 A M, passenger; 1 P M, freight; and 5 P M, passenger; and by N J Railroad, foot of Cortland-st, at 9 A M, and 2 and 5½ P M.

Trains leave White House and following places for New York as follows:

White House at 3½ A M, freight; 5 40 A M, passenger, at 1 40 P M.

Somerville at 4 30 A M, freight; at 6 05 A M, passenger, at 2 05 P M.

Bound Brook at 4 50 A M, freight; at 6 15 A M, passenger, at 2 15 P M.

Plainfield at 5 20 A M, freight; at 6 35 A M, passenger, at 2 35 P M.

Westfield at 5 50 A M, freight; at 6 50 A M, passenger, at 2 50 P M.

Elizabethtown at 7 15 A M; freight at 10 30 A M; passenger at 3 15 P M.

Elizabethport at 7 30 A M; freight at 10 45 A M; passenger at 3 30 P M.

On Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, trains leave Somerville for Pespack, Lesser Cross-Roads, and Pluckamin.

STAGES will be in readiness on the arrival of the 9 A M train from New York at the White House to convey passengers to Easton, Wilkesbarre, Bethlehem, Allentown, and Mauch Chunk, Penn, and to Clinton, Flemington, Lebanon, Milford, and Belvidere, N J.

N B—All BAGGAGE at the risk of the owners until delivered into the actual possession of the Agents of the Company and checks or receipts given therefor.

Milton Academy.

A. C. SPICER, Principal.
Mrs. S. M. SPICER, Preceptress.

Terms.

The Fall Term of 1851 of this Institution will commence Tuesday, August 19th, and close Thursday, November 20th, continuing thirteen weeks and three days.

The Winter Term of 1851–52 will commence Tuesday, December 2d, and close Thursday, March 4th.

The Summer Term of 1852 will commence Tuesday, March 23d, and close Thursday, June 24th.

Expenses.

Tuition per Term, from $3 00 to $5 00, settled invariably at the commencement of each Term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Oil Painting,	$7 00
Monochromatic Painting,	2 00
Water-Color Painting,	3 00
Drawing,	1 00

Board can be obtained in private families from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained, by those wishing to board themselves, at a reasonable expense.

Remarks.

All the English branches usually taught in our Eastern Academies, together with the Classics, and the Modern Languages, (French, German, and Italian,) will be taught in this Institution. The mode of instruction will be in accordance with the latest and most popular method adopted in our best Eastern Institutions, aiming, primarily, at a thorough and practical qualification of School Teachers, and preparing students for an advanced standing in a College course.

Weekly meetings are held in the village by three different evangelical denominations, either of which students can attend.

The plan of instruction and government of this Institution will aim at a harmonious development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of students, in a manner to render them thorough scholars, and practical, useful citizens; and the public may feel assured that no exertion shall be wanting on the part of the teachers and proprietors of the school to render it worthy of patronage and confidence. au14 4t

MILTON, Rock Co., Wis, July 11th, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:

No. 1 Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2 Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3 Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4 The Sabbath and Lord's Day. A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5 A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6 Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7 Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8 The Sabbath Controversy The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9 The Fourth Commandment False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10 The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11 Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12 Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
No. 13 The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell,
Portville.Albert B. Crandall.
Persia..Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth,
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged, when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to

GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 16. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 2, 1851. WHOLE NO. 380.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

☞ In the Recorder of February 8, 1849, we suspended the pub[illegible]n of a series of articles on the subject [illegible] Sabbath from the pen of James A. Begg, of Glasgow, Scotland, because at that stage of the discussion, (while examining the authority for a change of the Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ,) Mr. Begg desired time for a more thorough investigation of some points connected with our Saviour's resurrection, which are not commonly treated of by writers on the subject. Subsequently, he published his conclusions in a pamphlet of 156 pages, entitled "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ, proving that the practice of the church in substituting the first day of the week for the appointed seventh day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures." As we have already published a considerable part of this pamphlet, and as the remainder treats the subject in a manner altogether new, we propose to finish it. When this is completed, Mr. Begg informs us, he will take up "the Lord's Day" of the Apocalypse, upon which he is prepared to enter fully; this to be followed by farther investigations of Apostolic Practice and Precept—the prophetic prospects of the Sabbath—and eventually the history of the change which has been made.

In the articles already published on the Change of the Sabbath, Mr. Begg had shown—That the Sabbatic Institution and repromulgation being distinctly stated in Scripture, any designed abrogation, alteration, or modification, would require to be distinctly revealed—That the alledged change is really rested chiefly on supposed traditionary evidence—That if the Sabbath of Paradise and of the Fourth Commandment be not obligatory as to the Day, and if the Scripture has not appointed another, a choice is not left with the Church—That the Evangelists do not speak of a change of the Sabbath at the resurrection of Christ, either enjoined or observed, nor do they, (according to the original Greek,) say that he rose on the first day—That the ordinary view concerning Christ's death and resurrection does not admit of his having been "three days and three nights" in the tomb, which was the sign given by himself to his enemies of his Messiahship. He now comes to consider the prophecies and symbols of Christ's resurrection, and to show from these and other considerations the improbability of a change of the Sabbath at that time. Ed. Rec.

It has been very much overlooked, when considering the narratives of the evangelists, that not only our Lord's death, but also his resurrection, and the relation of both to each other, were the fulfillment of inspired predictions, and in accordance with special types. However unwilling the Jews were, even after the event, to believe that Christ had risen from the dead; yea, however forgetful for a time his disciples themselves proved in regard to this, their incredulity or unbelief is not to be attributed to a want of evidence.

Various causes may have contributed to produce this sad result; but we know that the Saviour himself, in his personal intercourse with the disciples, had, in the plainest terms, repeatedly intimated, and by all the evangelists are these intimations recorded, both that he should be killed, and that he should rise again from the dead. It is a remarkable illustration of the blinding power of unbelief, that, when Jesus declared these all-important truths on one occasion, it was so unpalatable that the Apostle Peter so far transgressed as even to rebuke his divine Master; (Matt. xvi. 21, 22; Mark viii. 31—33;) and on three other occasions, when he had spoken not less explicitly of his resurrection, "they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him." "And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another, What the rising from the dead should mean?" "And they understood none of these things; and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken." (Mark ix. 9, 10, 31, 32; Luke xviii. 32—34.)*

And, if thus with multiplied testimony, immediately addressed to themselves, even the disciples were unprepared for the glorious truths of their Lord's death and resurrection, we may the more easily understand how they were ignorant, also, of the meaning of symbol and prophecy, by which, in the earlier ages, both were revealed to the faith of the church. For the Saviour, be it observed, not only foretold, personally, his own death and resurrection, but he also directed back the attention of his people to the writings of the prophets, testifying of both. He said unto the twelve, "Behold we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished. For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on; and they shall scourge him, and put him to death; and THE THIRD DAY he shall rise again." Luke xviii. 31—33. The truth and the time of the resurrection, therefore, as well as that of the [illegible] Christ, must be contained in the [illegible] prophets, thus appealed to, as abo[illegible] in the approaching events.

So also, after the Saviour was risen from the dead, on the road to Emmaus, he said to the two bewildered disciples, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken. Ought not Christ to ha[illegible]fered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himself." Luke xxiv. 25—27. And in the evening, when the assembled, and hitherto-doubting disciples, had been convinced of the reality of his resurrection, he said unto them, "These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me. Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day." Luke xxiv. 44—46.

With such repeated declarations by the Saviour, surely the testimony of Moses and the prophets, concerning the fact and the time of his resurrection—as well as of his death—deserves to engage our serious attention. We may be assured, that if our understandings be opened, we also shall find in "the Scriptures," (in "the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms,") evidence and illustration pertinent to our inquiry—since, from these, it behoved Christ not only to suffer, but also to "rise from the dead the third day."

The resurrection forms an essential part of the scheme of redemption; and it was in accordance with a stipulation in "the everlasting covenant," that the God of peace "brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep," (Heb. xiii. 20.) The apostles, therefore, in subsequent fulfillment of the commission with which they were entrusted, not merely gave, to Jews and to Gentiles, their own testimony to the certainty of Christ's having risen from the dead; but, their understandings having been now opened to understand the Scriptures, they likewise constantly affirmed this fact to be in perfect harmony with previous revelation on the subject. At the very beginning of their ministry, they appealed to the word of prophecy as fulfilled in the resurrection of their Lord. They reminded the Jews that David, "being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption." Acts ii. 30, 31.

The Apostle Peter here quotes from the 16th Psalm, which, being constantly used in public worship by the Jews, must have been well known to them all, and doubtless by many in more faithful times, had been sung in lively faith, resting on full knowledge of its meaning. For if, as here certified, David spake in knowledge and with faith of the resurrection of his promised Son and Lord; we cannot suppose that this knowledge of so important and glorious a doctrine was confined to him alone, or concealed by him. Even if the people of God had been ignorant previously, now that the Royal Psalmist was inspired to set it forth in triumphant song, the knowledge so communicated to him must have been imparted unto others. And by whomsoever, in after time, the true meaning of this psalm was apprehended and believed, the resurrection of Christ from the dead would be anticipated, and relied on—even that his flesh should not see corruption.

In perfect harmony with this apostolic exposition, Paul, in the synagogue at Antioch, reasoning concerning the death and resurrection of Christ, says, "We declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was MADE UNTO THE FATHERS, God hath FULFILLED THE SAME UNTO US, their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again, ... he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption." Acts xiii. 32—34. And again, this all-important truth, the Messiah's resurrection, as having been revealed to Israel, this Apostle also proceeds to confirm by reference to, and quotations from "the second Psalm," and another Psalm." Ver. 33, 35.

It will be easily observed that our object in quoting these texts, is not to furnish evidence of the truth of Christ's resurrection, but rather to point attention to the fact, that that event, through prophetic utterance, in promise "unto the fathers," really had been divinely made known long prior to its fulfillment. So again, at Thessalonica, in the synagogue of the Jews, "Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alledging that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead." Acts xvii. 2, 3. His appeal, therefore, in proof of the resurrection of Christ, is contained in "the Scriptures" of the Old Testament, confirmed, as he could show, by living witnesses of the fact now fulfilled.

Difficulty of finding Old Testament testimony to the certainty of Christ's resurrection, neither Peter nor Paul seem, therefore, to have experienced. The testimony of the Saviour himself we have quoted, which shows that not only his death and resurrection, but that even the period of the Redeemer's continuance in the tomb, was also foretold. The statements of the apostles are not less explicit on this important point; for they assure us that it is not merely a glorious truth that "him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly," (Acts x. 40,) but that it is equally true, and often repeated, that "he rose again the third day ACCORDING TO THE SCRIPTURES." 1 Cor. xv. 3.

It is scarcely necessary for us to remark that it is the Old Testament "Scriptures" to which Paul thus makes appeal, as testifying to the resurrection of the Saviour on the third day; but it is proper to observe, that these repeated declarations of the precise period of the resurrection having been so foreshown, prove that even the time of the Saviour's continuance in the tomb was designed of God to be attended to. That which was deemed of such importance as to be made prominently the subject of preintimation to the Israelitish church, was also of such importance in the estimation of the Apostle (as in that of his Lord,) as to lead him, after the event, thus often and emphatically to insist upon it.

Not less distinctly was it repeated by this same Apostle to Agrippa, when, reasoning concerning "the hope of the promises made of God unto our fathers," he says, pointing again to the sources of evidence, "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which THE PROPHETS AND MOSES did say should come, that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first to rise from the dead." Acts xxvi. 6—22, 23. As Christ himself had done, so the Apostle also, therefore, avers that the prophets and Moses have borne testimony not only to the death, but also to the resurrection of Christ; yea, even to the fact, "that he should be the first to rise from the dead."

We have seen how the royal psalmist prophet gives evidence on these points; and we would now inquire, In what manner does Moses also certify the same? The question requires a lengthened answer; but, as the issue has an important bearing upon our present investigation, we address ourselves to it. We know of no direct statement of Moses on this point, in words. But Moses utters much in the language of symbol; and thus he does speak of the resurrection, as he speaks of the death of Christ. In expressive ordinance, visible to the eye, addressed to faith, and therefore understood by the faithful, does he declare both truths. The allusion by Paul, in the quotation last made, to the precedence of the resurrection of Christ—"that he should be the first to rise from the dead,"—this same Apostle elsewhere more fully explains. Speaking to the church of Corinth expressly of the resurrection, he exhibits Christ as "the first-fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. xv. 20. And again, in the same chapter, and in farther illustration of the same subject, he says, "Every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits; afterwards, they that are Christ's, at his coming." Verse 23.

In these allusions to an important ordinance given to Israel, we are furnished with a comment, illustrative of the manner in which Moses bore testimony to the resurrection of Christ, and this on the third day. The ordinance of "first-fruits," was a divine appointment given through Moses. It was not an ordinance standing alone, but was intimately related to the Passover—upon which even the period of its observance wholly depended. Thus, as we shall see, the time and circumstances of the Passover, Passover Sabbath, and First-Fruits, under the law, prefigured corresponding parts of the Messiah's work of redemption. A careful consideration of these, therefore, may aid our inquiry into the import of statements made by the evangelists and apostles. Let us then review in order, the Mosaic institution of these types, as recorded together, that we may be the better enabled to make the proper application of the whole.

On the fourteenth day of the month Abib, latterly named Nisan, and corresponding with our March and April, was Passover, followed as it was immediately by a feast of seven days, beginning and ending with Sabbaths. The first of these seven days, being the fifteenth day of the month, on whichever day of the week it might fall, was a Holy Convocation, or Sabbath, on which no work was to be done. The sixteenth day of the month, immediately following, therefore, this festival Sabbath, was the day on which the first-fruits of the harvest were presented in solemn and joyous offering unto the Lord, in presence of a select assembly in the Temple.

The appointment of this great solemnity, in all its parts, is thus recorded by Moses: "In the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, is the Lord's Passover. And, on the fifteenth day of the same month, is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord; seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. In the first day ye shall have an Holy Convocation, ye shall do no servile work therein. But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, seven days; in the seventh day is an Holy Convocation; ye shall do no work therein. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf ['omer, or handful,' marg.] of the first fruits of your harvest unto the priest, and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord to be accepted for you; on the morrow after the Sabbath, the priest shall wave it. And ye shall offer that day, when ye wave the sheaf, an he-lamb without blemish, of the first year, for a burnt-offering unto the Lord. And the meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth deals of fine flour, mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord, for a sweet savor, and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin. And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought an offering unto your God; it shall be a statute for ever, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings." Lev. xxiii. 5—14.

The Passover, Passover Sabbath, and First-Fruits, are thus conjoint ordinances. They stand in close and significant relation to each other. In the events which form their fulfillment, therefore, we may expect a corresponding relation. Prefiguring to faith the death of Christ and his resurrection, from these typical observances, his disciples and the Jews generally, ought to have known the nature and circumstances of the work he had come to perform. For ages, Israel and Judah in the Temple of the Lord, through the slain lamb and the wave-sheaf, had been the heralds of a coming redemption, which already, by faith, the people of God then and in previous ages enjoyed—for, when in the wilderness, we are assured that the faithful of Israel "did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them [or 'went with them,' marg.] and that Rock was Christ." 1 Cor. x. 3, 4. And the Saviour himself testifies that Abraham rejoiced to see his day; "and he saw it, and was glad." John viii. 56. Thus we can understand how the entire circumstances of the Redeemer's death, burial, and resurrection, were, that all things "which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms," concerning him, might be fulfilled; "and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day." Luke xxiv. 44—46.

[To be continued.

---

* In farther confirmation of the above remark of this rejection of Christ's plain and oft-repeated intimations, we may refer to Matt. xii. 40; xvi. 21; xvii. 9, 10, 22, 23; xx. 17—19; xxvi. 31, 32; Mark x. 32—34; xiv. 27, 28; Luke ix. 22; John ii. 19—21.

From Graham's Magazine.

CONSOLATION.

BY ALICE B. NEAL.

There are moments when the spirit
  Sinks, too faint for human aid;
When all hopes we may inherit,
  Are in dust and ashes laid.
Voices dear to which we hearkened
  Into utter silence fall;
And the very sunshine darkened,
  Streams more faintly on the wall.

Happy they who then can borrow
  Comfort from a higher life,
And from some diviner sorrow
  Call a calmness to their strife;
Who can hear a voice from heaven,
  Bidding all their anguish flee,
"Since no earthly help is given—
  Heavy-laden, lean on me.

Ye who labor, I have loved you
  As you toil for other's good;
By their baseness I have proved you,
  By ingratitude withstood;
Once for man my tears fell faster,
  Reaping scorn for my reward;
Asks disciple more than Master,
  Or the servant than his Lord?"

From the Christian Chronicle.

PROVIDENTIAL DISPENSATIONS.

In an article in the Congregationalist, headed "Sabbath Desecration," the opposition which the Michigan Central Railroad has encountered, and the fires, etc., by which it has suffered, are explained by the fact that they run the cars on the Sabbath. It is on account of their desecrating the Sabbath, says the editor, that "God employs their pupils to vindicate his authority by robbing them of their ill-gotten gains."

Such language is very common among a certain class of religionists. They seem to have been admitted into the councils of Heaven, and they can always tell the precise reason for every dispensation of Providence. One would think that they never read Christ's rebuke to those who esteemed the Galileans such great sinners; or His rebuke to the same spirit in His disciples, when they asked Him for whose sin the blind man was born blind. Such statements as the above excite the contempt of thinking men. How does the editor know, what he so confidently asserts, that these villains were "employed by God to vindicate His authority, and compel the observance of the fourth commandment?" What connection is there between their nefarious transaction and the observance of the Sabbath? To common minds, a reason for the alledged conspiracy presents itself in the motives of revenge and self-interest arrayed against a Company notorious for its selfishness and disregard of the rights and comforts of all others. But it seems that the desecration of the Sabbath is the great sin of the Railroad, and that to "vindicate His authority" in this respect, "God employed these villains."

We have heard remarks made at the funerals of persons who have been cut off in a moment by some terrible accident, which made the congregation shudder, and we have wondered that mortals could speak so confidently of God's ways—as though they had advanced far beyond the inspired writers, and to them God's throne was never enveloped in clouds and thick darkness.

We have heard on a Fast-day, appointed on account of the cholera, that that epidemic was a judgment upon us, for the sins of Sabbath-breaking, intemperance, and slavery; and after the services, men have asked us If these things are so, why is it that the men who have died of the cholera among us, have been leading abolitionists, temperance men, and observers of the Sabbath; and why is it that the greatest severity of the epidemic is visited upon the recently arrived Germans in the free States, who are in no respect answerable for our national sins, and not upon Charleston, the head quarters of the intensity of Southern slave-holding. Chicago, the city of abolitionists, more than all others in the North-West, is severely afflicted, while Mobile escapes, though no breeze blows upon her which does not pass over the head of a slave. Why do men love to shut their eyes upon everything they might see, and, like the Pharisee of old, award the calamities of life to the publican sinfulness of their neighbors?

If Edwards' Sabbath Manual were not written by a Doctor of Divinity, and endorsed by the Committee of the Tract Society, we should be tempted to regard a great part of it as founded upon false premises, and leading to false conclusions. Great stress is laid upon instances that are adduced of farmers harvesting their grain on Sunday, and afterwards losing the crop so gathered; nay, so sure is Sabbath desecration to be followed by pecuniary loss, that some persons who harvested their crops on Sunday, and so saved them, were visited the next year by a hail-storm, which destroyed the then growing crops. What could not be proved in this way? Is it not notorious that the great mass of our richest men disobey God, and yet continually prosper? Was it not so in David's time?—yea, in Job's? Has God ever compelled men to serve him, by causing disobedience to be followed by poverty and temporal want? Of how much value would such obedience be?

A few Sabbaths since, an infidel was splitting wood in his yard, and at the same time a Christian congregation had assembled for worship. A thunder-storm arose; the lightning struck the meeting-house and killed some of the worshipers; but no bolt of Heaven fell on the infidel. Had the case been reversed, Dr. Edwards would have seen a most evident judgment of God; but why is it not equally legitimate to infer that God approved of the Sabbath-breaking, and was displeased with the attempt to worship him?

It is the veriest trifling to adduce these isolated calamities as proofs of the desirableness of observing the fourth commandment. Let whole classes be examined, and the operation of a general law shown. Let it be shown that the Seventh-day Baptists and Jews continually meet with crosses in the prosecution of their business on the Lord's day; that wicked men do not amass riches while disobeying God's law, and there will be force in the argument. But by the other course of proceeding we can prove any thing. The writer of this lives on the banks of a river, whose bosom is agitated by the passage of steamboats every day of the week. We have had explosions upon its waters; but never one upon the Sabbath. Does this prove that the first day of the week is the only day on which steamboats should run?

We gain nothing, and we lose much, by departing from the spirit of the New Testament in this matter. A good cause is weakened by such poor arguments, and men of the world look with suspicion and incredulity upon all the statements of him who so palpably departs from what their go[illegible]se tells them is true. [illegible]W.

DEATH OF A MISSIONA[illegible]

The Sabbath Recorder of last week chronicled the death of Rev. W. T. Biddle, who was on the eve of sailing as a missionary to Burmah. The following memoranda of Mr. Biddle's last moments we copy from the N. Y. Recorder:

A short time before he died, he said, "What does the doctor think of me?" Having been told, he said, "Well, I cast myself upon God. If ever a poor creature did so, I have done it. Whatever I have done that is good, I cast it all away, and depend entirely on free grace to save me. I have no anxiety for the future. I leave it all with God. You remember [turning to Mrs. Biddle] the motto, 'Ready for either.' I am ready for the yoke or the altar." He remarked, "You remember Thomas, [referring to Rev. Jacob Thomas, who died on his way to the missionary station to which he had been appointed,] who died as he was within sight of his field of labor. It may be so with me. I leave it all with God."

After requesting his wife to pray that his mind might be collected and clear, he asked her to sing "some good old hymn," that he might have something to fix his mind upon. She sung, "Rock of ages, cleft for me," which had just before been repeated in his hearing. He joined as well as he was able in singing the last stanza, "While I draw this fleeting breath," &c. He afterwards said, "If I could only feel certain that all was well, I could sleep sweetly. But the adversary stands in the way. Is there not some passage of Scripture with which I can meet him?" Some were mentioned; he said they were not appropriate. "It is a conflict!" he remarked. "There," said he, "I have one. 'When the enemy comes in like a flood,' &c. That is it." After repeating it several times, with other verses and lines of hymns, he exclaimed: "There! I can see the way clear; now I can sleep sweetly;" and he drew the bed-clothes over him, and slept. Just before he breathed his last, he was asked if he could put his whole trust in Christ, and rest there. He answered, "Yes!"

PROBABLE DESTRUCTION OF ROME.

Many authors have asserted, as their interpretation of some parts of the Apocalypse, that Rome will be destroyed by fire from heaven, or swallowed up by earthquakes, or overwhelmed with destruction by volcanos, as the visible punishment of the Almighty for its Popery and its crimes. I am unwilling, having read so many books on the interpretation of prophecy, to deduce any argument of this kind from the prophecies which are unfulfilled; but I beheld everywhere—in Rome, near Rome, and through the whole region from Rome to Naples—the most astounding proofs, not merely of the possibility, but the probability, that the whole region of central Italy will one day be destroyed by such a catastrophe. The soil of Rome is tufa, with a volcanic subterranean action still going on. At Naples the boiling sulphur is to be seen bubbling near the surface of the earth. When I drew a stick along the ground, the sulphurous smoke followed the indentation; and it would never surprise me to hear of the utter destruction of the southern peninsula of Italy. The entire country and district is volcanic. It is saturated with beds of sulphur and the substrata of destruction. It seems as certainly prepared for the flames as the wood and coal on the hearth are prepared for the taper which shall kindle the fire to consume them. I again read the remarks of Dr. Cumming: Rome, he believes, is to be overthrown by judgment, not to be converted by the agency of the Gospel, nor to be exhausted by political assaults. It is literally to be consumed by fire. Whether he is correct in regarding such an event as the fulfillment of the prophecies and the demonstration of the anger of the Creator against the incorrigible assumption of an erring and influential Church, I know not; but the divine hand alone seems to me to hold the element of fire in check by a miracle as great as that which protected the cities of the plain, till the righteous Lot had made his escape to the mountains. [Tour in Italy.

An Instructive Fact.—In the year 1542, while Henry VIII. was upon the English throne, Parliament passed an act declaring it to be lawful for all to read the Scriptures in their native language. Against the passing of this act the cardinals and the bishops strove with all the energy of fury and despair, but strove in vain. The effect was instantaneous and great. Copies of the Sacred Volume, which had been most carefully concealed, and perused with secrecy and fear, were now to be seen, as Knox informs us, lying on every gentleman's table, and the New Testament, especially, was borne about in almost every person's hands.

What one Book did.—A colporteur in Western Pennsylvania says:—"I heard that Baxter's Call was given by a colporteur to an irreligious family, who did not wish to receive it. It had been in the house more than a year, when the lady took it up with the hope of passing away time. As she read, she became interested, and continued till she had finished the book. But now she found no peace, and could not rest, until she had given herself to God. She now attests her conversion by a consistent life, and traces her first religious impressions to reading that book."

THE LOST BANK-NOTE.

Mr A—— was an irreligious man, nearly sixty years of age. He had long neglected the house of God, and indulged in the use of profane language. One day last winter he lost a bank-note in his barn. He sought for it several times, but did not find it. At length he said to himself, "That note is in the barn, and I will search for it till I find it." Accordingly he went to the barn, and carefully moved straw and hay, hour after hour, till he found the note.

He had told me two months before, that he knew that his soul was not right with God, and he intended to live a better life, and seek salvation. His anxiety increased. A few weeks after he lost the note, he sat by the fire, musing on the state of his soul, when he turned to his wife and asked, "What must one do to become a Christian?" "You must seek for it," she replied, "as you sought for the bank-note." She said no more. It was "a word fitly spoken." He tried to follow the direction, and thinks that, through the grace and mercy of Christ, he found the "pearl of great price," and rejoices in hope of the glory of God.

There is a treasure for you, reader, precious beyond the power of words or figures to express. There is salvation and heaven for you, and eternal glory, if you will seek it with all your heart, believing that it can be found, and resolved to find it. If you have not sought it thus, you have disparaged it, treating it as if it were not worth such earnest regard.

American Messenger.

ONE SOURCE OF "CONSOLATION."

We have before referred to the character and fate of Count de Bocarme, lately executed in Belgium for one of the most heartless and atrocious murders to be found in the annals of crime. When arrested, he endeavored to evade justice by the most bare-faced falsehoods, and remained hardened and impenitent, under the expectation that he would eventually escape through the influence used by the nobility, who wished to avert the disgrace which his ignominious death would bring on the privileged classes. When he found that all efforts to save him had proved abortive, he still showed no signs of relenting. When exhorted to turn his attention to the salvation of his soul, he unconcernedly replied, "That is the business of a priest!" Abandoned in wickedness as he had been all his life, he was, nevertheless, a coward, and as the hour of his doom approached, his hardihood forsook him, and he expressed his willingness to see a priest. Bishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, being present, was honored with the interview. He put him to confession, probably administered the sacrament of extreme unction, as well as that of mass, gave him absolution, and thus in a trice fitted him for heaven! The Bishop, perfectly satisfied with his work, thus remarks:

"I saw then the guillotine for the first time, and I pray God it may be the last. To undergo this terrible trial, I have had need of all the consolation I have felt in seeing the sincere and complete return to God of this unfortunate young man, and in hearing him say with warmth, that if he went to heaven, he would do all that he could do there for me."

Singular Incident.—The Winchester (O.) Unionist says: "Yesterday week, Mrs. Watt, Mrs. Evans, and Mrs. Davis, three pious and estimable widow ladies of this town, all in usual health, called upon Mrs. Judd, a pious Methodist lady, the wife of one of our citizens, who is lying at the point of death with the dropsy, hourly expecting the messenger for whose summons she has been long prepared. After spending an hour, in which the tenderest sympathies of Christian he[illegible] were freely commingled, they rose to [illegible] and taking the dying woman by [illegible] they spoke words of encouragement [illegible] leave-taking, saying to her, "that sh[illegible] near her end, but perhaps some of [illegible] be in heaven beforeher." Yester[illegible] friends again assembled around [illegible] the dying woman; but those fri[illegible] there. They had all three bee[illegible] down with the cholera during the past [illegible] and were all "in heaven beforeher!" [illegible] inscrutable are the ways of God!

Sleeping in Church.—In St. Phillip's Chapel, Winchester, are ancient stall seats, affixed to the wall of the ante-chapel. These have their seats so affixed upon hinges that those who sit on them can only maintain their position by balancing themselves with care, and resting their elbows on the seat arms, so that if the monks who used them dropped asleep during divine service, the seat came forward and pitched them headlong on the floor; nay, if they only dosed and nodded the least in the world, the hard oaken seat clapped against the old oaken back and made noise enough to attract the attention of the whole audience. Nothing was ever more cleverly contrived to keep people awake in church.

The Two Books.—There are two books from which I collect my divinity; the one written of God, the other of his servant Nature, that universal manuscript which he has expanded to the eyes of all. But I never so forget God, as to adore the name of Nature. The effects of Nature are the works of God, whose hand and instrument only she is; and therefore, to ascribe his actions unto her, is to devolve the honour of the principal agent upon the instrument. If we may do this with reason, then let our hammers rise up and boast that they built our houses; and let our pens receive the honor of our writers. [Browne.

"Jesus Wept."—It is the shortest sente[illegible] in the Bible. But sooner than have [illegible] that little sentence, should we have [illegible] that all books but the Bible should h[illegible] ished—that the entire glories of an [illegible] literature had sunk into the grave of fo[illegible] fulness. For the tears of the divine ma[illegible] links binding us immediately to the throne of God, and the rainbow which is around it. [Bards of the Bible.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 2, 1851.

"ABANDONING THE SABBATH."

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

I was much interested in the perusal of an article in the Recorder of September 4, headed, "Abandoning the Sabbath." I have heard people talk just in the way there mentioned, but have never yet found the person that had abandoned the Sabbath from principle. There is another thing which I have often felt grieved to see. When a Sabbatarian is absent from his own home for a season, and for the time being situated among First-day people, he will perhaps pretend to keep the Sabbath by laying aside work. Nevertheless he spends the day in an idle and careless manner. The time seems to hang so heavy on him, that he contrives every way to get rid of its tediousness. He lies in bed till nine or ten o'clock, then amuses himself with some trifle for a while, and perhaps spends the afternoon in vain, light company, or in some other form finds his own worldly pleasure on God's holy day, which I consider is expressly forbidden. On First-day he will not go to meeting because it is not the Sabbath; and his own Sabbath he has kept already. Strangely infatuated are those who consider themselves Sabbath-keepers, because they have passed the day in idleness and vain conversation.

I have often thought that if Sabbath-keepers were more consistent, they would make a much better impression on First-day people. If a single Sabbath-keeper is situated where he cannot meet with any of his friends on that day, is there not enjoyment enough to be found in retirement and in devotional exercises, without going to the world and its vanities to get rid of its sacred hours? And if he has a family with him, I am sure some religious exercises may be attended to on that day with the children. And then, as public worship is a duty enjoined on all Christians, I think every one bearing the name ought to feel it a privilege to attend it whenever he can. If he cannot get to a place of worship on the Sabbath, why not make arrangements to go on First-day? And if members are situated as you mention with regard to those families in the West, where there is no Sabbath-keeping church, are they obliged to abandon the Sabbath to partake of the ordinance of the Lord's Supper? Could there be any thing wrong and unscriptural in their keeping the Sabbath religiously at home, and then meeting with Christians in the house of God, on the First-day, to commemorate the dying love of Jesus? I am not aware that there is any command fixing the time when that ordinance is to be observed. I do not think there is any proof in the Scriptures that it was observed on the Sabbath day. Our Saviour said, Do this in remembrance of me, but gave no command as to the time when we are to do it, (though many churches attend to it at noon instead of evening.) I have often thought that I should like to see the opinion of some of you 'wise men of the East' on this subject. Which is the greatest sin in the sight of God—to commune with First-day Christians, or to live in the neglect of a command of the Saviour, "Do this," &c.? I do not mean, join a First-day Baptist church, but only worship with them, and commune with them. Would not this be better than to do as those families in the West did—abandon the Sabbath for the sake of church privileges?

Remarks.

The foregoing communication, from a worthy correspondent, embodies some valuable thoughts, which we could wish were seriously pondered by those who are guilty. The idea, however, of a Sabbatarian uniting with the observers of the first day of the week in commemorating the dying love of Christ, is one which will not pass current with our people generally. Experience has shown, that our churches cannot prosper upon the plan of open or mixed communion. The experiment has been made, both in England and in this country, and the result has uniformly been unfavorable. Whether this is [illegible]ing to the fact that mixed communion is an [illegible]tual practice, and therefore the Head [illegible]urch frowns upon it, or whether it is [illegible] causes of an entirely different charac[illegible]ill not pretend to say. It is never[illegible] matter of history, and our people [illegible]en slow to avail themselves of it [illegible]pting to defend their restricted [illegible]e.

[illegible] let us not misunderstand our correspondent. She does not propose that our churches, as such, should change their practice, but only that those individuals, who are so situated that they cannot enjoy the privilege of uniting with those of their own persuasion in celebrating the Lords' Supper, should avail themselves of the opportunity of doing so in churches of another order. We are willing to admit, that it would be much better to do so, than to abandon the Sabbath for the sake of church privileges. To do the latter, is "doing evil that good many come." It is committing a sin directly against God, inasmuch as his law says of the seventh day, "In it thou shalt not do any work." And we fear that, in nine cases out of ten, the sin is wilfully and dedeliberatiy committed; for it is done in spite of the fullest conviction, that there is not one word of Bible authority for the observance of the first day of the week. A well instructed Sabbatarian cannot feel that his conscience fully acquits him, when he ceases to observe the day of the Fourth Commandment. What business has he, then, to purchase church privileges at such a price?

As to the former, we can very well conceive how a brother or sister can embrace the opportunity of occasional communion with a [illegible]day church, and yet not feel conscious [illegible]. There is certainly no direct prohibi[illegible]e practice in the New Testament. [illegible] not feel that he is deliberately trans[illegible]ng a command of God. And if there [illegible] sin in the act, it is made manifest after [illegible] intellectual investigation. Propositions must be laid together, and inferences drawn according to the rules of logic; and perhaps at last it is found to be a question of expediency, more than of morals. We can conceive that, in the yearnings of pious feeling, he can sit down in communion with those of a different persuasion, and enjoy it as a sweet [illegible] refreshing opportunity. But we can entertain no such charity towards those who deliberately cast away a divine institution.

Nevertheless, we must not be understood as commending the practice of even occasional communion with First-day churches. The relation which every Seventh-day Baptist holds to a church which repudiates the practice, should render him cautious of doing any thing which disturbs the general order, or which may disquiet his brethren. Besides, if one may indulge the practice, why not another?—and another?—and still another?—and so on, till the whole church is involved? And then what less can consistency demand, than that the church, as such, change its practice, and throw the doors wide open, according to the be[illegible] ideal of those who advocate unrestric[illegible]mmunion?

S[illegible]s the lure is held out by First-day church[illegible] that Sabbatarians can be received into their fellowship without being required to forsake the observance of the Sabbath; and not very unfrequently a stray sheep is caught with this guile. We do not know that the formation of such a connection involves any greater inconsistency than occasional communion; but we fear that it is attended with more danger. One thus connected feels himself in a measure restrained from advocating the claims of the Sabbath. He does not talk much about it, lest it should create disturbance among those with whom he has entered into covenant. Indeed, the very obligation of his covenant imposes a sort of silence upon him in this respect. At length, the silence which he has been compelled to observe is succeeded by a benumbed sense of obligation. His sense of obligation has not been strenghtened by his own preaching. As a natural consequence—a legitimate effect from a sufficient cause—it is benumbed; and finally he comes to the conclusion, that it is useless to maintain the struggle alone any longer. He abandons the Sabbath; he identifies himself in all respects with his Sunday-keeping brethren.

But we have no objection, that our brethren should avail themselves of the opportunity of worshiping with other persuasions on the first day of the week; none whatever. As far as they can, consistently with a due attention to other duties, we think it well for them to do so; and if shut out from all opportunity of assembling with Sabbath-keeping congregations, we think it not only well for them to meet with others, but quite important to their spiritual welfare. We are well persuaded, that in first-day congregations are to be found many of "the excellent of the earth;" and God forbid that we should ever be guilty of the bigotry of refusing to enter their places of worship. Were we living in some region remote from a church of our own order, with our family of children around us, we should consider it our duty to take them to some evangelical place of worship, on the first day of the week, notwithstanding the repeated singing of and the continued reiteration of, "We bless thee, O Lord, for the privilege of assembling on this thy holy day." But we confess that we should think twice, before making up our mind to live in such a region. Were we sojourning there for a short season only, we would by no means forego the opportunity of being refreshed with gospel truth because of some errors that might be commingled with it.

> "This is the day the Lord hath made,"

Revival on Missionary Ground.—We learn from the Macedonian, that it has pleased God to manifest his presence in a school for girls, which has within the past year been commenced at Sibsagon by Mrs. Brown, of the Baptist mission. About the first of January two of the oldest pupils were under serious impressions, which soon issued in their hopeful conversion. The four next younger were aroused to seek the salvation of their souls, and the school began to be very irregular in its ordinary exercises. The pupils often suspended their studies to pray. Even the little ones, six years old and under, began also first to wonder and then to pray for themselves. Mrs. B. says :—

"Thus for two or three weeks our house was literally made a house of prayer. At all hours of the day might be heard either the song of praise, the low, faltering voice of prayer, or the sob of distress for the burden of sin. Much of the feeling during this time I have no doubt was sympathetic on the part of some, but I can not suppress the hope that there is some genuine fruit that will ripen for the great harvest."

Baptism of Mr. and Mrs. Morton.—We learn that Rev. J. W. Morton and his wife, late missionaries to Hayti from the Reformed Presbyterian Church of the United States, were baptized at DeRuyter, N. Y., on Sabbath day, Sept. 20th. In the morning of that day, Mr. Morton preached on the subject of Civil Government; and in the afternoon he discoursed on the points of doctrine and discipline relative to which he differs from Sabbath-keepers generally. At the conclusion of the afternoon service, the large congregation resorted to the baptismal waters, where, after appropriate remarks, Mr. Morton was immersed by Eld. Wm. Jones, and Mrs. Morton received the ordinance at the hands of her husband.

Conference of Converted Jews.—The Rev. Dr. Herschell, of London, has issued a call for a meeting of converted Jews in that city, to confer on the best measures for spreading Christianity among their "brethren according to the flesh."

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

The Evangelical Alliance—Sunday in France.

Glasgow, September 12, 1851.

Besides the paper by the Rev. Mr. Jordan, on Sunday Observance in Great Britain, there was read at the Evangelical Alliance, another paper, by Dr. J. H. Grandpierre of Paris, on Sunday Observance in France, especially at Paris. He acknowledged that in the eyes of Roman Catholics in general Sunday has not the same meaning that Protestants give to it. This he accounts for by the ignorance of the Romish population of "the gospel in general, and the law of God in particular"—without, however, attempting to show what "law of God" enjoins the sanctification of Sunday, or permits the Alliance to trample on the Sabbath. The young, he says, learn "a meagre catechism, in which the commandments of the church occupy a far larger place than the commandments of God." The self-complacency with which such a remark is made on the subject of the Sabbath by and to the members of churches so obviously chargeable with the very sin lamented, does seem remarkable. But the Romish Church, he adds, having instituted a multiplicity of festivals, the Sunday is forgotten; "it is a festival of the church, like any other, and leaves all free to take it seriously, or not to consider it, according to their caprice or interest." Now this is true; and the Church of Rome having handed over her festivals in cumulo, it behoves the Protestant Church to be able to show why she attaches so much importance to Rome's traditionary gift in one case, and so much less in others! The priests of Rome, he states, are satisfied with the attendance at one mass on Sunday, and they commence these observances so early as 6 o'clock on Sunday morning—leaving to such as then attend a long day for profit or pleasure. The natural levity of French character, together with the love of excitement and the example long set, go to complete the enumeration of reasons for Sunday profanation in France.

Let us now glance at the statement of the actual condition, in regard to Sunday observance, of this Christian country—which holds its place in the "universal observance" argument in favor of Sunday, when such members of the Alliance are required to produce the authority on which they justify their change of the Sabbath. "On that day, in Paris, and almost universally on French territory," says Dr. Grandpierre, "the shops are open, buying and selling are carried on. The restaurants and coffee-houses are more than usually splendid—numbers eat and drink there. The theaters invite the crowd, and the crowd press there more numerously and more eagerly than during the other days of the week. Almost all the artisans work on Sunday and rest on Monday; thus proving that they need a day of rest in seven, and that in this the law of God perfectly understood the requirements of human nature; but at the same time," continues this Sunday observer—himself in a transgression precisely similar—"they rebel against this same law, in refusing to rest on the day that God has commanded, in commemoration of the work of creation, and of the day of the resurrection, and to glorify his thrice holy name."

"The great reviews of the army and national guards, the inauguration of public buildings or railways, and public festivals, take place on the Sunday, by preference. Government allows works of public usefulness to proceed on the Sabbath; and, a few years ago, the works necessary in the building of a Protestant church were allowed to continue as on other days, the Consistory being unable to obtain permission for the cessation of these labors. On Sunday, the public conveyances of the environs of Paris are laden with passengers, the trains on the railways are multiplied, and always public balls, promenades, and festivities of all kinds, abound in Paris and the suburbs. The famous concerts of the 'Conservatoire,' where is played the music of the great masters—Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, &c.—are invariably given on a Sunday, and never on any other day. The same is the case as to horse races for the highest prizes, which take place in the Champ de Mars, Versailles, and elsewhere, and the same as to the ascent of balloons, and all public rejoicings.

"In a word, for the Parisians, and the French in general, Sunday is the day of pleasure above all others. It is only distinguished from other days of the week by more levity and gaiety, more luxury, dissipation and folly. The Boulevards are covered with strollers; the public promenades overflow with people in holiday clothes; the places of recreation are crowded to excess. It is the day when all the keepers of coffee-houses, restaurants, and places of amusement, have the most success."

Of the French Protestants, he says, "the greatest number are lukewarm, indifferent, and lax, in those pious customs which they had adopted in their youth." "They retain a sort of outward respect for the Sunday. But they have no scruple in neglecting public worship on the most frivolous pretexts. There are some who are never seen at church but during the great festivals of Easter, Whitsuntide, and Christmas." This seems to be showing greater contempt of Sunday than is done even by the Romanists. They put it on a level with their other festivals, and give to Sunday a festival observance. "During the time of harvest and vintage," and even during six consecutive weeks that the silk worms require peculiar care, "the churches are deserted, or nearly so," in the departments, and especially those of the South. On these occasions, there are Protestant localities "where the churches are closed on the Sunday, and where no public service is celebrated." He is eager to declare even concerning those Protestants whom he approves, that they are "without regarding it from a strictly legal, and, so to say, Jewish points of view, by which the Sabbath of the Christian is made like that of the Jew." He regrets, however, that Sunday evening services are not more common, and that those which exist are so thinly attended. Afraid of the influence of the Romish priests, if Government were to interfere for the maintenance of Sunday, Dr. Grandpierre deprecates any appeal to them for legislative aid.

J. A. BEGG.

THE VIRGINIA ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Virginia Association met in the meeting-house at New Salem, Harrison Co., Va., on the 4th day of September, 1851, at 10 o'clock A. M. Eld. A. Estee preached the opening discourse from Gal. 6 : 9.

After sermon, the Association organized by appointing Samuel D. Davis, Moderator; Jacob Davis and J. F. Randolph, Secretaries; and George J. Davis, Treasurer. Visiting brethren were invited to participate in the deliberations of the meeting. The letters from the churches were called for, handed in and read, from which the following statistics were taken :—

Lost Creek—A. Estee and S. D. Davis, elders; J. S. Davis, licentiate; Abel Bond, Sen., Wm. Kennedy, deacons; Levi Bond, Jr., clerk. Added 7, deceased 1; total 79. Constituted 1805. Communion second Sabbath in March, and once in three months. Messengers, S. D. Davis, J. S. Davis, Wm. Kennedy, Levi Bond, Wm. Battan, Wm. F. Randolph, Jacob Davis.

New Salem—P. Davis, elder; L. H. Davis, deacon; Wm. B. Davis, clerk. Added 16, excluded 1, dismissed 2, deceased 1; total 95. Communion third Sabbath in February, and once in three months. Messengers, P. Davis, Jonathan F. Randolph, L. H. Davis, Wm. B. Davis, James Ford, George Ford, S.C. Davis, Joel H. Davis, C. G Davis, R. Ford, E. Davis, A. Davis, Jesse J. Davis, G. Maxson, Isaac F. Randolph, J. F. Randolph, G. J. Davis.

Middle Island—Ezekiel Bee, elder; Josiah Bee, deacon; J. Jeffrey, clerk. Total 23. Constituted in 1832. Communion first Sabbath in May, and once in three months. Messengers, S. T. Davis, Josiah Bee, E. Bee, Joshua J. Davis.

Hughes River—Asa Bee, elder; Jesse M. Lowther, deacon and clerk, Total 21. Constituted in 1834. Communion fourth Sabbath in September, and once in three months. Institutions, Sabbath-School and Bible Class. Messengers, A. Bee, J. Meredith, O. P. Zinn, Z. Davis.

Adjourned for half an hour.

Met agreeable to adjournment; prayer by Eld. P. Davis. The following committees were appointed :—

On Preaching—O. P. Zinn, Jepthah F. Randolph.
On the State of Religion—Asa Bee.
To confer with Eld. Estee with regard to his support the present year—G. J. Davis, A. Bee, J. Bee, J. Davis.

Eld. A. Estee presented a report of his labors the present year, which was read and an expression of satisfaction given by vote. Adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Sept. 5—Met agreeable to adjournment; prayer by Eld. Estee.

On application, the church at Woodbridgetown, Pa., was received as a member of this body.

Wm. F. Randolph was appointed Corresponding Secretary.

The following topics were presented and agreed to be discussed :—

1st. Is the Word of God, with the promised aid of the Holy Spirit, sufficient to guide the disciples in the way of truth, so that there may be general uniformity in practice and unity of faith with respect to the doctrines of the Gospel?

2d. Is it expedient for the disciples of Christ to interchange thoughts and discuss subjects in relation to which they cherish conflicting sentiments?

3d. What is our duty towards Christian professors of other denominations?

4th. Is it Christian duty to hold any office whatever under the political government?

5th. What is our duty as Christians with respect to the subject of war?

6th. What is our duty with respect to using and trafficing in intoxtcating drinks?

7th. What is our duty as Christians with respect to American slavery?

8th. What is our view of the doctrine of Christian equality?

9th. Is it consistent with our Christian profession to unite with secret societies?

The first and second topics were discussed and decided in the affirmative. Adjourned for 30 minutes.

Met agreeable to adjournment; prayer by J. S. Davis. The third topic was taken up, partially discussed, and continued.

Adjourned to meet to-morrow evening at the call of the Moderator.

The evening session having been waved, the delegates convened at the house of Isaac F. Randolph, First-day morning, at 9 o'clock.

The Committee appointed to confer with Eld. Estee handed in their report, which showed that according to the information obtained, the Elder had received—

Of friends at W. Union	$12 00
Salem church, received	42 30	prom'd & unp'd	23 00
Lost Creek ch. "	68 50	" "	15 00
MiddleIsland ch. "	4 50	" "	7 50
Hughes River ch. "	3 56	" "	6 44
Woodbridgetown "	4 50	" "
Total received	$135 36	Total unpaid	$51 94

Resolved, That we approve of the enterprise now in progress of establishing a High School at West Union, and recommend its support and patronage to all the members of our denomination.

Whereas, it appears that business transacted by the South Western Association still remains unsettled, Resolved, therefore, That we recommend to the churches of our body that formerly belonged to the South Western Association each to appoint an agent to confer with the Executive Committee of that body in order to effect a satisfactory settlement of such business, and that our Secretary notify those churches of this recommendation by furnishing each of them with a copy of this resolution.

Adjourned for one hour, to meet at the meeting-house.

Met pursuant to adjournment; prayer by G. J. Davis.

The Corresponding Secretary was instructed to write to the Ohio Association, requesting them to correspond with us by delegation at our next annual meeting.

Levi Bond, Jr., was appointed a Committee to settle with Eld. Estee with regard to his labors among us the present year.

The Report on the State of Religion was handed in, read and received.

Ezekiel Bee was appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse at our next Anniversary; Joshua S. Davis alternate.

The minutes having been read and approved, the Secretaries were instructed to revise and forward them to the editors of the Sabbath Recorder, requesting their publication in that paper.

The Association then adjourned to meet with the church at Lost Creek on the fifth day of the week before the first Sabbath in September, 1852, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Report on the State of Religion.

The Committee on the State of Religion within the limits of this Association, report, that from the communications received from the different churches, we have occasion to rejoice in the evidence presented that God has not utterly forsaken us. We have had some tokens of Divine favor. Some mercy drops have descended upon us, and we have had some accessions to our numbers of those whom we trust have had their names written in the Lamb's book of life, and may prove a blessing to the church by their steadfastness in the faith and their unwavering perseverance and unwearied diligence in the way of well-doing. It appears, as a general thing, that union and harmony exist among the brethren in the different churches. Although this statement we feel authorized to make, yet we do not wish it to be inferred that the brotherly love existing among us is by any means as fervent as it ought to be, or as it is our privilege to enjoy. Indeed, we are deeply sensible that the grace of brotherly kindness should be cultivated with great care and diligence among us, in order that we may co-operate and become as efficient in the work of the Lord as our Divine Master requires. We believe it becomes us to humble ourselves before God, and endeavor to cultivate all the graces of the Holy Spirit, in order that God may bless us as a people, and in order that our light may properly shine before men.

SAMUEL D. DAVIS, Moderator.

Jepthah F. Randolph, } Secretaries.
Jacob Davis, }

The Evangelical Alliance.—The British organization of the Evanglical Alliance recently held its fifth annual conference in London. A glance at the newspaper reports of its proceedings, shows but little of general interest. The question why the attempt to keep up an American organization has so signally failed, was considerably discussed. The following answer is given by a correspondent of the Independent, who participated in the deliberations of the London meeting :—

"What has impeded the working of the Evangelical Alliance in America is, that the brethren in Great Britain have pertinaciously insisted on introducing into the basis—not merely opposition to slavery—not merely an assertion of the right of every human being to be free from subjection to any arbitrary power—but the proposition that every slaveholder, every master of a servant whom the State refuses to acknowledge as anything but a slave, must be excluded from Christian fellowship, without any consideration of his circumstances, his conduct, or his motives. This proposition millions of American Christians regard as unchristian. To stig-matize and reproach as supporters and friends of slavery all who do not consent to that proposition, has no better effect than to offend the common sense and the conscience of multitudes of enlightened and Christian men, who understand at least the facts of the subject better than they are likely to be understood by Englishmen."

America at the World's Fair.—The tone of the London press relative to the American part of the Great Exhibition, has materially changed during the last month. A recent number of the London Times makes the following frank concession :—

"It is beyond all denial, that every practical success of the season belongs to the Americans. Their consignments showed poorly at first, but came out well upon trial. Their reaping machine has carried conviction to the heart of the British agriculturist. Their revolvers threaten to revolutionize military tactics as completely as the original discovery of gunpowder. Their yacht takes a class to itself. Of all the victories ever won none has been so transcendant as that of the New York schooner. The accounts given of her performances suggest the inapproachable excellence attributed to Jupiter by the ancient poets, who describe the King of the gods as being not only supreme, but having none other next to him. 'What's first?'—'The America.' 'What's second?'—'Nothing.' Besides this, the Baltic, one of Collins' line of steamers, has 'made the fastest passage yet known across the Atlantic,' and, according to the American journals, has been purchased by the British agents 'for the purpose of towing the Cunard vessels from one shore of the ocean to the other.' Finally, as if to crown the triumphs of the year, Americans have actually sailed through the isthmus connecting the two continents of the New World; and, while Englishmen have been doubting and grudging, Yankees have stepped in and won the day. So we think, on the whole, that we may afford to shake hands and exchange congratulations, after which we must learn as much from each other as we can."

Changes.—The editor of the Ohio Observer, Professor Barrows, has recently visited the place of his nativity in Mansfield, Conn., which he left thirty-three years ago to take up his residence in Maryland. He says—

"At that time the tide of emigration to the Western Reserve was at its height; and to accomplish the journey was a month's hard labor. What would the emigrants have thought had some prophet accosted them, while plowing their wearisome path through the mud of the primitive forests, with the prediction that they should themselves live to see the whole journey accomplish in two days!—and that upon their arrival in 'New Connecticut,' the event should be announced in Old Connecticut in the space of a few minutes!!"

Board Meetings.—By reference to the notices in another column, it will be seen that the Boards of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary and Publishing Societies meet in New York on the 8th inst.

Education in Canada.—The report of the Superintendent of Education in Canada, states that during the last year, the number of pupils educated in the public schools of Canada West, was 151,891; the amount paid to teache[illegible]38,478, and £14,189 for the erection [illegible] pair of school-houses. There are 8,059 [illegible]; in 2,097 habitual use is made of the Bible, and in 3,059 religious instruction is given, of an unsectarian character. The religious sympathies of the teachers, 3,476 in number, are thus stated :—858 are Presbyterian; 904 Methodist; 796 Episcopal; 390 Catholic; 238 Baptists, and 73 Congregationalists. The average of their remuneration was from £30 to £60 for males, and from £20 to £40 fo[illegible]les.

Premium Ess[illegible]on Prophetic Symbols.—The publishers of the "Theological and Literary Journal," New York, have in their possession three premiums, which have been contributed to be given for three Essays on the "Characteristics and Laws of Prophetic Symbolization." Certain articles on the subject of prophecy have appeared in that Journal, which have excited considerable attention, and have induced the wish that the views there presented should be more fully discussed, and, if correct, more widely disseminated. Hence a fund has been subscribed, out of which $400, $200, and $100 will be paid for the first, second, and third best Essays on the subject just mentioned.

The Pope for Despotism.—The following is an extract from a private letter dated London, Sept. 5, from a distinguished source :—

"The great fact here to-day is the abandonment by the Duke of Norfolk of the Roman Church, on the ground that it is leaguing itself with despotism. In fact, the conduct of the Pope has been most surprising. By returning to the early traditions of the Church, he might have secured popular rights, and the universality of the one Church; but by leaguing himself with the authors of all the atrocities which, during the past three years, have been perpetrated in Europe, he has inflicted a fatal blow on the cause. I say he, but it is the whole body of Cardinals who have been parties to, or who rather have been the authors of, this complicity."

Stephen Girard's Remains.—Quite an excitement was got up in Philadelphia last week about the remains of Stephen Girard. It appears that Mr. Girard directed that his remains should be buried in the grounds of the Holy Trinity Catholic Church, near the remains of his relatives. It is alledged that the city authorities, desirous of placing them in a sarcophagus to be deposited at Girard College, forcibly disinterred the remains from their resting place in the Trinity Church grounds, and placed them in the custody of an undertaker, who took them to his place of business, where he has kept them ever since. An injunction was asked from the Court of Common Pleas, by the executors of Mr. Girard, to restrain the authorities from carrying out their purpose. The injunction was refused.

The Methodist Book Concern.—A report made at the late session of the Genesee Annual Conference, shows that the sales of the Concern for the last twelve months exceeded $200,000, being an increase of $65,000 over the previous year, and exceeding all former years. During that time the new hymn-book has made an immense sale. The profits were $47,561. The Christian Advocate and Journal has a circulation of from 25,000 to 29,000; the Missionary Advocate 20,000; the Sunday-School Advocate 65,000, with a yearly sale of Sunday-school books amounting to $5000. The Quarterly Review has 3000 subscribers.

Provisional Bishop Elect.—A Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of New York was held in this city last week. The most important business was to elect a Provisional Bishop in the place of the suspended Bishop B. T. Onderdonk. After a great deal of talk and balloting, the Convention succeeded in electing Rev. Dr. Creighton, of Tarrytown, Westchester Co. His acceptance of the appointment is expected, although he has not yet signified it.

The Father Mathew Fund.—An effort is making in New York to raise a fund for Father Mathew, to enable him, on returning home, to pay his debts incurred during the famine in Ireland, and to continue his labors in the temperance cause. An appeal, signed by twenty distinguished citizens, has been issued, inviting all who are willing to contribute to the fund to send their contributions to Henry Grinnell, Esq., of New York, who will act as Treasurer.

Converts from Popery.—At a late anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Bishop of Chasel is represented as having said, "I believe I do not overstate the fact, when I say that there have been ten thousand converts from the Church of Rome in the sister Island. I can state, too, that these changes have uniformly been effected through the medium of God's blessed book."

Baptist Convention.—The Anniversary of the Bapti[illegible]y Convention of the State of N[illegible] held at Elmira, Chemung [illegible] on the 8th inst. Arrangem[illegible] made with the Erie Railroad to go and return for one fare, and it is expected that the delegation will be unusually large, and the season one of uncommon [illegible].

Brown University.—This institution is said to be in a very flourishing condition. The enterances this year have been greater than in any previous year. Of the ninety persons who have entered since Commencement, about one half take the classical course.

General Intelligence.

European News.

The steamer Africa, with thr[illegible] days later news from Europe, arrived at [illegible] York on the 26th Sept.

A fatal collision had occurred on the Buckinghamshire railroad. Seven persons were killed, and eight or ten other persons were wounded.

On the 8th of Sept. a dreadful accident occured at Ballyclare, Ireland, resulting in the death of twenty-six persons, and the wounding of forty others. It seems that some five-hundred persons had assembled in the loft of an old paper mill to hear a lecture on electro-biology. They climbed up by means of a couple of steep ladders; the lecture began at 8 o'clock, and occupied an hour and a half. After which the lecturer proceeded to mesmerize, or entrance, some seven or eight young persons, who, at his request, came forward for the purpose. He succeeded with a few of these, and was about to exhibit his influence over them, having removed them towards the back part of the loft, when the curiosity of the spectators in the more distant parts of the room became so much excited that they rushed from all sides in a body to the central space to obtain a better view. A sudden and ominous crack beneath their feet gave but a momentary warning of the penalty of their rashness. The greatly increased weight on the middle of the flooring proved too much for its utterly inadequate support to bear, and it gave way beneath their feet, opening downwards in a fearful chasm, in which upward of 300 persons, men, women and children, were precipitated. The scene which ensued may be more easily imagined than described. Those who were fortunate enough to secure seats on the back portion of the loft, of which the flooring had not given way, were comparatively injured; but nearly all who stood, at the moment of the accident, on that portion which occupied the angle between the two wings, a square of 30 feet, were engulfed in the horrible abyss, and thrown, with the planks of the flooring, and the dislodged stonework of the dilapidated walls to the area beneath—a fall of no less than 16 feet, among the hard, projecting, and scattered pieces of machinery, which were stored below. The shrieks of the suffering multitude, the noise of the falling timbers, the clouds of choking dust which instantly arose, the rush and frantic struggle for escape, produced a scene which will be indelibly impressed on the memories of all who survive it. The accident was occasioned by the breaking of the beam exactly in the center, and, when it gave way, the flooring shelved downwards from both sides, sliding, as it were, those who stood upon it into the store below. In some places the planks pried up the masonry into which they were inserted, and in one spot a considerable mass of stone and brick work was detached, which falling upon the living heap below, caused the most fatal injuries we have to record. It has since been discovered that if only two feet more of the wall at this part of the building had been displaced, the whole of the wing would have fallen in, and the calamity would have been a hundredfold more disastrous than it was.

A Perisan Ambassador has arrived in England. The following account of him is from The Daily News: "As an accredited Ambassador direct from the Court of Teheran has never been known in this country, some considerable interest was excited in Southampton by the arrival of his excellency. He is a fine, handsome man, about forty years of age. He was dressed in the costly and picturesque costume worn by the highest ranks in Persia. The sleeves and collar of his cloak were ornamented with gold embroidery, the clasp of his girdle was studded with diamonds, and a brilliant star was suspended on his breast. He wore the high conical cap of the Persian country. He was accompanied by a dragoman and a servant. An extensive suit accompanied him from Persia to Turkey, nearly the whole of which he took leave of at Constantinople."

The Morning Chronicle, in an article on Photography at the Exhibition, says: The exhibition of Daguerreotypes in the United States departement is of a very superior character. In the arrangement of the groups, and in the general tone of the pictures, there will be found an artistic excellence which we do not meet with in many others. This has been attributed to peculiar atmospheric conditions, but we believe it to be due to a great extent also to superior manipulation. This extra care is, we are inclined to think, to be traced to the general dislike of artificially-colored photographs in the United States.

The steamer Mississippi got aground near Smyrna on her way to Constantinople to receive Kossuth, but was got off undamaged by taking out her guns and other lading; she would be able to get to Constantinople in season to accomplish the purpose of her mission.

The Collins steamer Baltic, with Liverpool dates to Sept. 17, (four days later) arrived at New York on Sunday last.

The Catholic "Lord Bishop of Shrewsbury," celebrated divine worship at Birkenhead, on Sunday, the 14th, and the "Lord Bishop of Troy" was announced to preach in the evening. This was publi[illegible]vertised, and was in direct contravention [illegible] recent restrictive law regulating the [illegible]umption of ecclesiastical titles.

A company has been formed at Liverpool for the purpose of establishing a line of steamers from that port to Rio in the first instance. Three screw steamships, of from 1,500 to 1,700 tuns, and 300 horse-power each, and with an average speed of ten knots per hour, are to be built as a beginn[illegible]

The Royal M[illegible] Company is having co[illegible] steamers to run between So[illegible] Isthmus of Panama. The A[illegible] them, it is expected will be put [illegible] route in November.

The preparations for laying down the [illegible] marine telegraph between England [illegible] France are rapidly advancing. It [illegible] that the great difficulty, the preventi[illegible] wires against being broken or ground[illegible] the bottom, will now be overcome. Th[illegible] of communication consists of four copp[illegible] of the thickness of an ordinary bell-wi[illegible] ed in gutta percha, and twined with a co[illegible] ponding number of hempen strands ste[illegible] in a mixture of tar and tallow into a rope of about an inch diameter. Another strand similarly prepared is wound tarnsversely round this, and finally ten wires of galvanized iron, about a third of an inch thick, are twined round this central cord, and form a solid, and at the same time flexible casing. The whole, when thus completed, has the appearance of an ordinary 4 1-4-in. metallic cable. The machinery by which this is effectec is extreme-simple, and the work proceeds, night and day, with the utmost regularity. A huge coil is thus being formed in one continuous piece, at the rate of about 1½ miles a day, and will finally attain the length of 24 miles.

* * *

Wholesale Church Discipline. — In South-Carolina, recently, among the Baptist known as Hard Shells, from their anti-mission and anti-temperance views, three ministers were expelled from the Church by vote, for joining the Sons of Temperance. The vote of exclusion stood seventy in favor to twenty-nine against. Then the difficulty arose what to do with those who voted in the minority. "They believe," says the paper giving an account of it, "we ought not to turn a man out of Church for joining the Sons of Temperance, and living sober lives, thereby believing that we have done wrong. This is a grievous and wicked offense, and its perpetrators must be punished. But this difficulty was soon answered by Br. Elial Pennell, who moved that all those who voted in the minority be expelled from this Church! And, this motion being seconded, the Moderator made the announcement, that, if any one objected to this motion, let him rise; but, none being disposed to rise, he announced the fact that John W. Jones, Rev. J. J. Watts, and Rev. Robt. N. Steele, with twenty-nine other members, were expelled from the Baptist Church." [N. Y. Obs.

Utah.—A letter from Utah, dated Pawan, June 31, states: Our town contains about seventy houses, about four more in progress, a saw-mill in operation, and a flouring-mill in progress, to be completed by harvest. This place is situated two hundred and sixty miles from Great Salt Lake Valley, five hundred from the Calhoun Pass, on the route to Southern California. Our nearest white neighbors are two hundred miles off. Red men are nearer and more plenty then we like, as they make too free with our cattle and horses to suit our convenience. Our country has rare facilities, such as great deserts, mountains of magnetic iron ore and native loadstone; salt of a fine quality; veins of stone-coal, alum, salpetre, gray marble, limestone, plaster, large bodies of pine timber on the top of high and rugged mountains, a few pure mountain streams, which will serve only to irrigate one two-thousandth part of the land, which is all that can be cultivated. The soil is very productive, much of the land bearing grass, short and very nutricious.

"Fire on the Mountains."—Letters from Cherryfield, Maine, give additional particulars of the fires in that vicinity, and on the borders of Maine and New-Brnuswick. One letter says the whole country is burning up; scarcely a green acre of land remains along the whole seaboard of the country. Fifteen large fires were counted around Cherryfield, and all the inhabitants were engaged in protecting their homes or assisting their neighbors. The fire has swept over Mount Descot, and destroyed several houses. The forests in Franklin are in flames, and the whole of Hancock is suffering severely. To the east of Hancock the destruction is still greater. The roads have been rendered almost impassable on account of the smoke and flames. The timber of the Cutler Company is damaged to the amount of $150,000.

SUMMARY.

The friends of Popular Education in New-Jersey will hold a 'Teachers' Institute' or Convention, of a week's duration, at Somerville, during the first week in November, commencing Monday, the 3d. They have reason to expect Lectures or Addresses on various educational topics, by Hon. Theo. Frelinghuysen, Henry Bannard of Conn., Rev. Dr. Davidson, H. Greeley, and they hope to secure the aid of other well-known speakers.

A very serious accident occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad west of Cumberland, on Thursday morning, Sept. 18, at 10 o'clock. As a train of cars was proceeding westward, the engine being behind, a wheel of the forward car was suddenly broken, and the car thorwn down an embankment, with 12 or 15 persons upon it, three of whom were instantly killed, three were seriously injured, and six injured slightly.

Ch. J. Holder, one of the oldest piano makers in New York, has applied the flute attachment to the piano, and claims that it is much superior to the Eolian, in producing a more soft, full and perfect tone, and continuing in tune for many years. The public will have an opportunity of examining this new application at the Fair of the American Institute, where it will be attached to a splendid 7½ octave piano.

The Drouth now prevaliing over a large area of this country has rarely been equaled. The Delaware River, along the Erie Railroad, looks like a small mill-brook, and the Nashua (N. H.) Telgraph says that the Merrimac opposite that place was never known so low before. Many usually large streams, as also wells, are completely dry, and much inconvenience by men and suffering by animals is experienced daily.

Lambert Norton, late President of the State Bank at Morris, and charged with being concerned in defrauding it, was acquitted by the jury on Saturday evening. With this trial ends all matters connected with the unfortunate failure of that institution, the Receivers having finished their labors some months ago.

A poor man, at Havant, England, while removing a cork from a large stone beer bottle by means of his teeth, got it suddenly propelled down his throat, owing to the fixed air the bottle contained. He was only relieved by having his windpipe opened.

The New Testament is about to be introduced [illegible] all the common schools of Kentucky as a [illegible]ding book. Dr. Breckenridge, [illegible] State Superintendent of instruction, goes [illegible]ngly for it, and there is every reason to [illegible] it will be done.

[illegible] brought to the Fitchburg Rail[illegible], Mass, on Wednesd[illegible] a man who [illegible]aining of exhaust[illegible] After he was removed from the car, he vomited, and died in five minutes.

A dispatch dated Baltimore, Sept. 26, says: The Vigilance Committee of Grayson County, Va., on the 13th inst. arrested John Cornutt, a friend of Bacon's (the Ohio Abolitionist). They required him to renounce his abolition sentiments, which he refused to do. They then stripped him, tied him to a tree, and after receiving a dozen lashes he agreed to renounce Abolitionism, sell his land and negroes, and leave the State. Great excitement prevailed, and the Committee were in pursuit of others.

The Maine Anti-Liquor Law works well. A gentlemen from Portland says that the usual commitments to the City Prison have been about 16 per month. From June 1 to Sept. 1, the first three months of the operation of the new law, the whole number of commitments was only eight. The County Jail, which usually has about thirty convicts within its walls, is now nearly empty.

In 1841 the actual cost of the percussion muskets made at the Springfield Armory was $18 34, of which $8 27 was for labor alone. During the year ending June 30, 1851, there were 21,000 made, being more than is any preceding year; and the actual cost in but $8 75, being but 48 cents more than the cost of labor in 1841—the effect of improved machinery and economy in the use of material.

The Daily Times is the name of a new penny paper just started in New York, edited by Mr. Raymond, late of the Courier and Enquirer. It is a well printed and well filled sheet, and may be recommended without reserve as a good family paper, giving the news of the day, containing a pleasing variety of articles original and selected, with nothing to offend good taste or good morals.

At the last term of the Circuit Court, Ky., Taylor Murphy was found guilty of the murder of his wife, and was sentenced to be hung on the 10th of October. After killing his wife, he burned her body on piles of wood and brush in the field, and two small pieces of her bones which were found, were the principal means of his conviction. Since his sentence he has made a full confession of the crime.

The Washington correspondent ofthe Journal of Commerce thinks it "not improbable that at the next session of Congress a resolution will be offered and adopted, authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to open a special negotiation with the Spanish Government for the purchase of Cuba."

The number of Conformists to the Established Church of England is ten millions, one hundred and sixty thousand: the number of Non-conformists is seventeen millions, and one hundred thousand; and the last, beside bearing their own burdens, are obliged to contribute equally as the rest, to the support of the religion "by law established!"

A young man living in Sheffield, Conn, lately undertook to dive with his hat on, the result of which was, that as he plunged into the water, the elasticity of the air contained in his hat was such as to force his head suddenly and unexpectedly to one side, with such force as to break his neck.

An insurrection is said to have broken out in the Central American States of San Salvador and Guatemala. General Carrera, with a force of 1,500 men, had attacked the enemy in San Salvador, who mustered 4,000 strong, and defeated them, with a loss of four men killed. He then evacuated the country.

Two miles north of Morristown, N. J., there is a vein of granular plumbago and feldspar, in primitive rocks, running north-east and south-west to the extent of three miles, and the soil in the neighborhood of the vein is mingled with the plumbago feldspar, resulting from the decomposition of the rock.

The accounts received by way of England of the discovery of gold in South Australia are fully confirmed by the intelligence from San Francisco. A placer has been opened in the County of Bathurst, New South Wales, and gold-washing operations have commenced on a large scale.

An immence procession of Free Masons, Odd Fellows, Firemen, Horse, Foot and Artillery, paraded the streets of Chicago, Ill., on Friday, the 12th inst., on the occasion of laying the first stone of the public buildings in that city. It was a gala day.

The experiment made by the New-York and New-Haven Railroad Company, to obviate the annoyance of dust upon their roads, promises to be successful. They have given several miles of their road a top-dressing of oyster shells, and already the grass grows among them quite smartly.

In Boston an unbridled and unsaddled horse, with a man on his back, took fright, and set off at full speed. The race was a fearful one, but the rider, by an effort of courage and skill, bent forward, and catching him by the nostrils, arrested his wild career.

The Dubuque Express says that during the prevalence of the cholera this season, several members of one family had died of the disease. After the death of the last, the straw pallet on which he lay was thrown out, and a number of hogs bedded therein. Every one of them died.

Benjamin Buffington, County Commissioner, of Warren, Pa., was killed recently by falling from a beam in his barn to the floor. He was standing on the beam, stowing away oats, when his feet slipped and he fell, causing his death instantly.

The trial at Detroit of the persons charged with conspiring to burn the stations, &c., of the Michigan Central Railroad, was brought to a close last Thursday evening. Twelve persons were fou[illegible] guilty, and the remainder were acquitted.

Mount Washington, which is the highest peak of the White mountains, is 6284 feet above the level of the sea. Black mountain, in Yancy county, is 6,476 feet—thus beating Mount Washington by 242 feet.

Money is very tight in New York, and there h[illegible] been some failures; the heaviest that of Th[illegible] & Co., carpet dealers and manufac[illegible] connected with the Tariffville and Thom[illegible]ville works, Conn.

Last Friday morning a fire broke out in Buffalo, which was not checked until an area of 30 acres had been burnt over. Several lives were lost. The property destroyed is estimated at 300 thousand dollars.

Young Clements, who was convicted of murder on the high seas, was unconditionally pardoned by the President on the 12th of this month, and ordered to be released from prison.

Dr. J. H. Davis, of Pine Plains, died on the 26th ult., from the effects of a small-wound inflicted while performing a post mortem examination some two or three years since. After suffering about a year with a severe pain in the hand which received a cut, to all appearance the disease left it, and he appeared in usual health until about six weeks before his decease, when the pain reappeared and spread through the whole system, causing great suffering, which was unconquerable till relieved by death.

John B. Livingston, brother of the Chancellor and of Ex-Mayor Edward Livingston, died on Thursday last at the advanced age of 98. He was formerly a prominent and successful merchant in New-York and was distinguished for the munificence with which he dispensed the hospitality of his princely residence in Broadway, now the site of the Broadway House. About fifteen years since, he retired to a delightful country seat at Red Hook, on the banks of the Hudson.

A fearful accident occured on the Vermont Central Railroad Wednesday, Sept. 24, by which a "down" passenger train of three cars came in collision with an "up" freight train. The former was going at the time down a grade, at the rate of 50 miles an hour, near West Hartford, Vermont, and 6 miles beyond the White River Junction. The entire passenger train was demolished, and 17 passengers injured—four of them fatally. Nine limbs are reported broken.

The beautiful steamboat New World, Capt. Acker, left this city, foot of Chambers-st., at 2 minutes past 7, on Tuesday morning, and arrived at Albany at 36 minutes past 2, P. M. She made six landings, occupying 36 minutes, deducting which, we have only six hours and fifty-eight minutes running time. That is one of the quickest passages ever made.

On Thursday night last Trinity Church edifice in New York was entered by a burglar, who gained access to the interior of the building by breaking one of the glasses in a rear window, and the contribution boxes placed there for the benefit of the poor, were broken open and their contents carried off. The amount stolen was about $10.

The steamer Central America, built under the superintendence of Commodore C. Vanderbilt, to run in connection with the steamer Director on Lake Nicaragua, was launched in New York last Sabbath. Her dimensions are 160 feet long, 24 feet beam, and 7 feet depth of hold; 250 tuns register. She was built in the unprecedented short time of 27 days from the time of receiving the contract.

At Oswego Center a fearful riot took place on Wednesday, 17th. There was a ball at a public house, and seven or eight drunken rowdies got in among the dancers. A row ensued and the rowdies were ejected. They returned to the charge; largely reenforced, and stormed the house. The ladies fled through a window 10 feet high, and the gentlemen followed.

The Atalanta (Ga.) Republican says that there is a hog in that city with solid hoofs like a mule. The upper portion of the feet are just like those of any other hog, and seem as if two distinct toes were fitted into one solid hoof. It is said that this is no casual trick of nature, but that the animal is one of a distinct breed, which was brought from Arkansas.

The ice crop, hereafter, need not depend upon the frigidity of the weather during freezing-time, as an enterprising individual of this city has invented a machine not larger than a small "refrigerator," with which a person in the tropics, or any other habitable region, can freeze a gallon of ice in a minute of time.

Two females who bought goods in a store in Boston the other day refused to pay. The seller refused to let them out until they paid. They were detained two hours, and on paying were released. They have commenced an action for false imprisonment, and the party is arrested.

Twenty-five baskets of Morris white peaches were sold on the steamer John Neilson, last week, at ten dollars per basket. They were very large, and bought by a confectioner, who will put them up in brandy and retail them at twenty-five cents each.

Lord Bacon beautifully said—"If a man be gracious to strangers, it shows he is a citizen of the world, and that his heart is no island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins them."

Sward which is ploughed early in September, will rot so as to become mellow in spring. If ploughed late in the fall, it will remain tough, and the grass will grow the next season.

A Convention from Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, will assemble at Burlington, Indiana, for the purpose of making some effort towards improving the rapids in the upper Mississippi.

Benjamin Rand Curtis, an eminent lawyer of Boston, has been nominated by President Fillmore to the seat on the Bench of the Supreme Court left vacant by the death of Hon. Levi Woodbury.

A workman who was smoking at a Rope-walk near Laurenceville, Pa., let a spark fall which ignited the flax around his waist, whereby he was badly burned. Several bales of flax, value $500 were also burned.

Mr. Isaiah Toy of Spring Grove, Burlington Co.. raised upon his farm, and exhibited last week, a melon weighing upwards of one hundred pounds! believed to be the largest one ever raised in New-Jersey.

Rev. J. C. Phelps, late a graduate of Covington Institute, Ky., has received an appointment from the Foreign Mission Board at Richmond, to go to Shanghai as a Missionary.

The Frank Manufacturing Co., at Rockville, Conn., has assigned its property for the benefit of its creditors. Its factory has recently been destroyed by fire, and its loss was uncovered by insurance.

The Howard District Court last week discharged the witnesses from Baltimore against General Chaplin,—the $19,000 having been forfeited and paid to the State of Maryland.

The people of Alabama are apprehensive of a famine. A meeting has been held in Pickens Co. to petition the Legislature for a loan with which to purchase corn.

Displays of the Aurora Borealis have been frequent during this month. The occurence of the phenomena is noticed simultaneously in St. Lawrence Co. in this State, at Boston, and in Vermont.

London in 1800 had a population of 883,193 inhabitants, and in 1850 had 2,200,000—[illegible] three times as great. In 1800, N. Y. City [illegible] 60,489, and in 1850, 517,849—more than eight times as many. From 1840 to 1850, London increased by 326,374 inhabitants; and in the same time New-York increased 240,679 inhabitants.

Judgment has been given in favor of Green County in the action brought by it against New-York State for the recovery of its proportion of the School Fund. The County refused to pay the taxes in accordance with the repealed school law, and the judgment is grounded on the unconstitutionality of said law. An appeal is lodged.

John K. Crozier was tried and convicted at the late Court of Sessions held in Sandy Hill, for the seduction of Emeline Odekirk and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the Clinton State Prison. The trial, being the first in this section under this statute, naturally excited considerable interest.

The Post-Office Department [illegible] awarded the contract for supplying [illegible] for all the way mails to Henry C. Jone[illegible] wark, N. J., and the contract for locks [illegible] great through-mails to McGregor & Lee of Cincinnati.

A College has been incorporated as "the California Wesleyan College," to be located at Santa Clare. The college will be under the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal denomination.

The reports from the grain-growing sections of the West generally concur in representing the wheat crop of this year to be the heaviest ever gathered.

In Vermont, the deaths the year before the census were 1 out of 90 persons; Rhode Island, 1 out of 66; in South-Corolina, 1 out of 48.

They have a zinc mineral in Rockbridge county, Va., which, being ground and mixed with oil, makes a paint both fire-proof and impervious to water.

Within a few weeks Rev. Dr. Humphrey, three sons, and two sons-in-law, have supplied the pulpit of the South-street church, in Pittsfield.

The President of the United States spent the Saturday night at Baltimore, and reached the White House on Sunday morning.

Judge Jones, of Louisiana, being on a visit at Detroit, went over to Sandwich, C. W., where he was attacked by some negroes.

The notes of the new bank at Bridgeport have a portrait of Jenny Lind on one end, and one of Barnum on the other.

Elmira, the "Central City" of Southern New-York, is talked of as a suitable place for holding the next State Fair.

Hon. Lucius Lyon, formerly United States Senator from Michigan, died in Detroit on Thursday morning.

A company of Californias arrived at St. Joseph in sixty-two days from Sacramento, having had five skirmishes with Indians.

The water in the river, at Albany, is lower than it has been for years. Steamboats have difficulty in crossing the bar.

In Waterbury, Vermont, the births during the past year have been three times the number of deaths.

8,000,000 lbs. of wool have been sent to the Eastern markets from Ohio.

The whole of the Ohio railroads, it is said, average ten per cent. profit.

Bituminous Coal has been found in the town of Empire in Wisconsin.

The receipts at the Rochester Fair are said to exceed $15,000.

A new coal mine has been discovered in Fountain County, Ind.

New York Market—September 29, 1851.

Ashes—Pots, $5 00 a 5 06; Pearls, 5 50.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 81 a 3 87 for State, 3 87 a 4 00 for Ohio, 3 84 a 4 12 for new Michigan and Indiana, 4 18 a 4 25 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 31. Corn Meal, 3 25 a 3 37 for Jersey, 3 37 a 3 46 for Brandywine.

Grain—Wheat, 89 a 90c. for white Michigan, 1 00 for prime Genesee. Rye 70c. Barley 70 a 75c. Corn 60 a 61c. for Western mixed. Oats 32 a 33c. for Jersey, 36 a 37c. for new State.

Provisions—Pork, 15 25 for old and 15 75 for new mess, 12 37 a 12 50 for prime. Beef, 5 00 a 6 00 for prime, 8 75 a 11 00 for mess. Lard 9 a 9½c. Butter, 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 10 a 15c. for State. Cheese 5 a 6½c.

Hay—In demand at 50 a 54c.

Lime—1 00 for common, 1 25 for lump.

Wool—Domestic Fleece 32 a 43c., country pulled 36 a 40c.

DIED.

In New London, Ct., Sept. 19, of consumption, Mrs. Emeline M. Avery, wife of Thomas Avery, aged 36 years. Sister Avery experienced religion in early life, and united with the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., where she remained a worthy member until called to join the church above. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

At Westerly, R. I., Sept. 22, Morton S., son of Stanton and Antoinette Clark, aged 8 months and 18 days.

LETTERS.

James Bailey, I. D. Titsworth, W. C. Kenyon, K. C. Barker, G. A. Campbell, W. C. Lanphear, P. L. Berry, W. M. Fahnestock, H. B. Lewis, J. Whitford, A. Babcock, C. D. Langworthy, E. O. Langworthy, D. R. Stillman, E. Maxson, H. B. Clarke, E. K. Crandall, D. Coon, R. Titsworth, D. E. Maxsen, R. S. Green, C. R. Burdick, H. S. Berry, G. P. Maxson, H. Clarke, E. Lanphear, N. V. Brand, C. Stevens, L. Babcock, J. Parmalee, G. R. Wheeler, W. C. Tanner, W. S. Brundage, G. P. Burdick, C. M. Lewis, Wm. F. Randolph, Jepthah F. Randolph (not received.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Joseph S. Cottrell, Newport, R. I.	$2 00	to vol. 9	No. 13
Chas. C. Burdick,	2 00	9	13
Mrs. K. C. Barker, "	2 00	8	52
D. M. Crandall, Rockville, R. I.	2 00	8	52
Geo. Irish, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	8	52
Paul Babcock, Westerly, R. I.	2 00	8	52
W. C. Lanphear, Carolina Mills, R. I.	1 00	8	26
Green Rogers, Waterford, Ct.	1 00	8	26
Joseph Swinney, Shiloh, N. J.	2 00	8	52
John Bowen,	2 00	8	37
Caleb Sheppard, Greenwich, N. J.	2 00	8	52
R. Dunham 2d, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	8	52
R. Titsworth, New Brunswick, N. J.	2 00	7	52
G. Tomlinson, Roadstown, N. J.	2 00	8	52
Geo. R. Wheeler, Salem, N. J.	2 00	8	52
Cyprian Stevens, Paris, Me.	1 00	8	40
A. G. Burdick, State Bridge,	2 00	8	52
John Parmalee, "	1 00	6	52
L. Babcock, Brookfield,	2 00	8	16
Hosea B. Clarke,	2 00	9	5
Avery Coon, Little Genesee,	2 00	8	52
Geo. P. Burdick, Stowell's Corners,	2 00	8	52
Robert S. Meekins, New York,	2 00	8	52
E. K. Crandall, West Edmeston,	6 00	8	52
R. S. Geer, Pitcairn,	2 00	8	52
Ezra Potter, Alfred,	2 00	8	52
Enos W. Peck, Unadilla Forks,	2 00	9	13
John Maxson, DeRuyter,	2 00	8	52
Of Sarah Lewis, Hampton, Ct., for Pub. Soc.			50c.

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

Missionary Society—Board Meeting.

THE Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society will hold a quarterly meeting at New York, on Fourth-day, October 8, at 2 o'clock P. M. Geo. B. Utt[illegible] Rec. Sec.

Publishing Society—Board Meeting.

THE Board of Managers of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will hold a quarterly meeting at New York, on the evening of Fourth-day, October 8, at 7 o'clock.

The Ohio Association.

T[illegible] Seventh-day Baptist Ohio Association will hold its first Anniversary with the church in Jackson township, commencing on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October, 1851.

J. G. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Morning Line for Albany.

THE new and elegant steamer REINDEER, Capt. Albert Degroot, will leave New York from pier foot of Murray-st. every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday morning, at 7 o'clock, and returning, leave Albany every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at the same hour, making the usual landings each way. ☞ Meals served on board. For further information apply to JAMES BISHOP & CO., 3 Beaver-st.

Daguerrean Gallery.

GURNEY'S Daguerrean Gallery, No. 189 Broadway, has been known for years as one of the first establishments of the kind in the United States, and the oldest in the city of New York. He has recently greatly enlarged his Gallery by the addition of more rooms and large skylights, and other improvements, rendering it one of the most extensive establishments in this country. Mr. G. attends personally to his sitters, and from his great experience in the art he is enabled, at all times, to give perfect satisfaction. The large-sized pictures recently taken by his new process are universally acknowledged superior to any heretofore taken in this country. A large collection can be seen at all hours of the day. Ladies and gentlemen are respectfully invited to examine them.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City [illegible] New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH,
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWO[illegible]

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution ([illegible] Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 will com[illegible] first Wednesday in September, and continu[illegible] weeks, including two vacations, of one week [illegible] tween terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.

Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall and middle of the Winter Terms, and continue seven weeks. Those intending to teach District Schools are solicited to become members of this department. Especial attention will be given to the common English branches, and to familiar lectures and discussions on School-Teaching.

During the Winter Term the Agricultural Department will be under the instruction of Prof. Gurdon Evans, A. M., and will embrace the study of the best authors, and daily recitations. Two hours each day will be spent in the Laboratory well furnished with apparatus and chemicals, where students will be instructed in the Elementary Analysis of Soils, Minerals, Ashes of Plants, &c., and the various modes of testing for their constituent elements. Also, a course of Public Lectures will be delivered on the application of Science to Agriculture, and illustrated by a great variety of philosophical and chemical experiments. The object of this course of instruction is to afford ample facilities for farmers to become scientific, as well as practical; and enable them to render waste and worn-out lands productive, and retain them constantly improving under a high state of cultivation.

In connection with classes, Courses of Lectures will be delivered, during the Fall Term, on Natural Philosophy and Elementary Chemistry; during the Winter Term on Astronomy and Physiology; during the Spring Term on Geology and Intellectual Science.

Tuition—from $3 50 to $5 00 per term, to be settled in advance, or by satisfactory arrangement. Extras.—Drawing, $1 00; Oil Painting, $6 00; Monochromatic, $3 00; Agricultural Chemistry, including chemicals, (breakage extra,) $10 00.

Board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense.

Every care will be taken to render the school [illegible] highest advantage to the student. The regu[illegible] be few, but strictly and steadily enforced[illegible] is at the same time we cultivate the in[illegible] moral powers to develop also the practical [illegible]

Nothing sectarian will be taught or co[illegible] the school. The exercises of the Instit[illegible] suspended on the first and seventh days o[illegible]

LEWIS HOWELL, Pres. of the B[illegible]

Election Notice.

State of New York, Secret[illegible]
Albany, August 27, 1851.

TO the Sheriff of the City and County of New [illegible]

SIR,—Notice is hereby given that at the General Election, to be held in this State, on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Samuel A. Foot.

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan.

A Comptroller, in the place of Philo C. Fuller.

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt.

An Attorney-General, in the place of Levi S. Chatfield.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Hezekiah C. Seymour.

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Charles Cook.

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Alexander H. Wells.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court, for the First Judicial District, in the place of James G. King, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Senator for the IIId, IVth, Vth, and VIth Senate Districts, in the place of Richard S. Williams, Clarkson Crolius, James W. Beekman, and Edwin D. Morgan, whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

County officers to be elected for said County:

Sixteen Members of Assembly.

A Register, in the place of Cornelius V. Anderson.

A Recorder, in the place of Frederick A. Tallmadge.

Two Judges of the Superior Court, in the place of Thomas J. Oakley and John L. Mason.

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Daniel P. Ingraham.

A Surrogate, in the place of Alexander W. Bradford.

A Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, in the place of Jacob L. Dodge.

Two Governors of the Alms-House, in the place of Simeon Draper and Francis R. Tillou.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, there is to be elected a Justice for each of the six Judicial Districts, into which the City of New York is districted, pursuant to Chapter 514, Laws [illegible] 1851.

Yours respectfully,
CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary [illegible]

Sheriff's Office, August 28, 1851.—I hereby [illegible] that the above is a correct copy of the notice [illegible] General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succ[illegible] ing the first Monday of November next, received [illegible] day, from the Hon. Christopher Morgan, Secretary [illegible] State.

THOMAS CARNLEY,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

N. B.—All the public newspapers within this County will please publish this notice once in each week, until the Election, and send in their bills for advertising the same as soon as the Election is over; so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors and passed for payment. Sept. 4.

Miscellaneous.

Grammar in Rhyme.

We advise little grammarian just entering on Murray, Brown, or any of the thousand grammars in use, to commit to memory the following easy lines, and then they never need to mistake a part of speech:—

1 Three little words you often see
Are Articles—a, an, and the.

2 A Noun's the name of any thing,
As school or garden, hoop or swing.

3 Adjectives tell the kind of noun,
As great, small, pretty, white, or brown.

4 Instead of Nouns the Pronouns stand—
Her head, his face, your arm, my hand.

5 Verbs tell of something being done—
To read, write, count, sing, jump, or run.

6 How things are done the Adverbs tell;
As slowly, quickly, ill, or well.

7 Conjunctions join the words together;
As men and women, wind or weather.

8 The Preposition stands before
A Noun, as in or through a door.

9 The Interjection shows surprise;
As oh! how pretty; ah! how wise.

The whole are called Nine Parts of Speech,
Which Reading, Writing, Speaking, teach.

To Destroy Under-Brush.

"What is the best time to cut under-brush, &c.?" In the June number of The Farmer the above question is propounded by "A Subscriber," to which I propose to give an answer, combining both a little experience and a little theory. Having been brought up on a farm, I used to hear much said by farmers in regard to the "best time" for cutting bushes, &c., and remember well the many uncertainties that existed, and the various opinions given on the subject. Some recommend to cut them at one season, some at another. Some regard the "moon," others the "signs," &c. I also remember that the same kind of underbrush, if cut at one season, would start again and grow luxuriantly; but, if cut at another, would be completely "used up." I have also, within the last few years, had opportunity to notice the same facts; and the conclusion to which I have arrived is, that different shrubs or bushes, trees, &c., may be cut at different seasons of the year. Some are killed by cutting as early as the first of July; others by the first of August; and so on till October, or even [illegible]ember. The rule is this: "Cut any plant or shrub about the time that it has done growing for the season, and its destruction is most certain." If cut before this time, it [illegible]nerally start again the next year. The [illegible]ons are few. So much for the facts; [illegible] the theory:—

1st. In the spring of the year all roots are vigorous. Hence, if a tree or shrub be cut at this time, or while in full growth, the root will send forth a new set of shoots. The exceptions are—First, Evergreens generally, as pine, hemlock, spruce, &c. Second, Those that have a copious flow of sap in the spring, as the maple, birch, &c. Yet even some of these will start again if cut soon after the buds have opened; i. e., after the spring flow of sap has ceased; except in the case of old or large trees, in which the root appears out sufficiently vigorous, or the evaporation from the new stump too rapid to allow of the formation of new shoots.

2d. In autumn, when a shrub or tree has done growing for the season, the active energies of the root cease, being perhaps somewhat exhausted by its summer action. If, then, the bush or tree be cut after it has done growing, but while the stem and leaves are fresh and full of sap, the vital force of the root will rarely be sufficient to cause a new growth; but if left till the foliage is dead or dying, the energies of the root are restored by the return of the sap, and are ready for action again as soon as the season of growth shall return. Hence, too early or too late cutting will be found equally unsuccessful.

Cut your under-brush, then, at the time above specified, and it will rarely start again. If it does, the growth will appear stinted or sickly, and soon die of its own accord, or a second cutting at the proper time will insure success. The same rule applies to all other plants, as Canada thistles, milk-weeds, &c. &c., with greater or less certainty, according to the greater or less vital force or tenacity of life, peculiar to the root of each kind of vegetable.

The "proper time" can easily be determin[illegible] by observing whether new leaves continue [illegible]ear at the end of the prominent branch[illegible]en the end leaves are of full size, and [illegible]seen at the end of the branch, then [illegible]after) is your time to cut. If defer[illegible] beyond this time, or till the leaves be[illegible]m yellow, or fall, cutting will be of [illegible]s the root will be "strong" for [illegible] the opening of a new spring.
[Genesee Farmer.

A Large Book Concern.

Messrs. Harpers' book concern, already one of the largest in the world, is being still further enlarged by the addition of another building on Pearl street, connecting in the rear with the principal establishments in Cliff street, 45 by 100 feet, and five stories high. Among improvements to be introduced will be an apparatus for dying paper by steam—a process hitherto used, we believe, in but one establishment, in Edinburgh, Scotland. There are already employed in this establishment about 400 hands, whose wages exceed $10,000 per month.

In the composing rooms are 40 hands, who are frequently engaged upon eighteen or twenty works at one time. In the stereotype foundry 19 hands are employed, turning out more than 700 plates per week. Between 50,000 and 60,000 lbs. of metal are consumed yearly in this establishment. In the copper and steel-plate printing room there are 9 hands and 8 presses, each of the latter averaging 700 impressions per day. The press-room contains 20 Adams' power-presses and 2 hand-presses, which are constantly running. Each power-press averages 5000 impressions per day; 45 hands are employed in working them. Eight new power-presses are to be put in the new building. The motive power is supplied by a 50 horse-power engine, driven by a powerful boiler. In the sewing-rooms 50 girls are employed, and 100 in folding, pressing, and drying the sheets.

There are in the bindery 45 hands. Some of the principal expenditures in this department are: for gold leaf, $4000 per year; leather, $6000; muslin, $4500; pasteboard, $[illegible]00; eggs, (used in sizing,) $200. The cuttings from the edges of books in the process of binding amount to 18 tons per annum, which are sold to the paper-makers.

The vaults for stereotype plates (subterranean, to insure the safety of their contents in case of fire) are very extensive, comprising 4305 feet of shelving.

Eight large rooms are required for the sale, storing and delivering of books, in which 13 clerks, salesmen, &c., are employed. Of this number, 4 are sons of members of the firm. Annual sales have been estimated at over 2,000,000 volumes, including pamphlets. The annual cost of paper consumed is about $150,000. There are kept constantly on hand about 7,000 reams.

Louis Napoleon.

Louis Napoleon is a little under size—say five feet eight inches high—with rather broad and square shoulders, a somewhat thick neck, and a German rather than French head. His complexion and expression, his wide face, his ample brain, expanded at the sides and rather lowered at the forehead, all would have led me, had I seen him without knowing him, to say he was a German. His hair is dark brown, his moustache very massy, and reddish brown; eyes dark greyish blue, almost covered by thick and folded eyelids, and shaded by heavy, fleshy eyebrows. His movements are simple, natural and moderate, with a touch of dignity, which is the more effective, as it seems suggestive of something more behind. On the whole, Louis Napoleon might pass in th[illegible]d as an ordinary man, unambitious at he[illegible]und to no fame by fortune, consecrated to no high purpose or achievement by Providence. I looked intent at his countenance for some traces of Josephine, whose blood beat in his heart, but in vain. I looked again for the semblance of great Napoleon, of whose lineage he is, whose name he bears, whose sceptre he all but wields. It may be fancy yet I thought I could perceive something of the sadness so impenetrable, so fathomless, so mystical, which was characteristic of the Emperor. It is, however, slight, and has not the repulsive Asiatic gloom which blackened and rendered terrible the clouded countenance of the Corsican. On the contrary, Louis Napoleon's face is decidedly benevolent, his smile is pleasing, and the play of his features rather social and genial; yet there is a sadness and a tinge of mystery about him like that of a man trained to disappointment, and little accustomed to hope; one who has walked the world by himself, not refusing sympathy, nor yet deigning to ask it; one who is accustomed to be looked on as a riddle, which he would not, or could not, solve. He does not look discontented, nor the contrary; neither happy nor unhappy; neither exalted nor depressed. His general expression is that of steadiness, self-possession, modesty, with an air of melancholy which irresistibly invites sympathy and begets favor—the more, perhaps, because of the blaze of pomp and power with which he is surrounded, and which he seems to command. I can very easily comprehend, now, the power which Louis Napoleon exercises over a considerable part of the people of France, in spite of the difficulties of his situation, and the many things, good or ill, which he has done, and which of necessity have often fallen with annoying emphasis upon the clashing interests of parties, cliques and cabals. [Home Journal.

Absence of Mind in Mr. Macaulay, the Historian.

There is a common pedestrian of London streets, (says Mr. Reoch, the London correspondent of the Inverness Courier,) well known to all who are acquainted with their notabilities. He is a short, stout, sturdy, energetic man. He has a big round face, and large, staring, and very bright hazel eyes. His hair is cut short, and his hat flung back on the crown of his head. His gait is firm and decided, with a little touch of pomposity. He is ever provided with an umbrella, which he swings and flourishes, and batters on the pavement with mighty thumps. He seems generally absorbed in exciting and impulsive thought, the traces of which he takes no pains to conceal. His face works, his lips move and mutter, his eyes gleam and flash. Squat as is the figure, and not particularly fine the features, there is an unmistakable air of mental power and energy, approaching to grandeur, about the man. He is evidently under the influence of the strong excitement of fiery thought. People gaze curiously at him, and stop to stare when he has passed. But he heeds no one—seems, indeed, to have utterly forgotten that he is not alone in his privacy, and pushes on, unwitting of the many who stare and smile, or of the few who step respectfully aside, and look with curiosity and regard upon Thomas Babington Macaulay. Occasionally, however, the historian and the poet gives still freer vent to the mental impulses which appear to be continually working within him. A friend of mine lately recognized him dining in the coffee-room of the Trafalgar Hotel, at Greenwich—a fashionable whitebait house, which, it appears, he frequently patronizes. He was alone, as he generally is, and the attention of more than one of the company was attracted by his peculiar muttering and fidgetiness, and by the mute gestures with which he ever and anon illustrated his mental dreamings. All at once—it must have been towards the climax of the prose or verse which he was working up in his mind—Mr. Macaulay seized a massive decanter, held it a moment suspended in the air, and then dashed it down upon the table with such hearty good-will that the solid crystal flew about in fragments, whilst the numerous parties dining around instinctively started up and stared at the curious iconoclast. Not a whit put out, however, Mr. Macaulay, who was well known to the waiters, called loudly for his bill to be made out at the bar, and then pulling, with a couple of jerks, his hat and his umbrella from the stand, clapped the one carelessly on his head, and strode out flourishing the other.

Business of the Times Newspaper.

There has been a careful and lengthened investigation by a committee of the House of Commons respecting the stamp duty on newspapers. In the evidence taken on this interesting subject there appears to have been some curious information furnished by the manager of the Times. He mentioned that the Times proprietary had paid £66,000 last year, the average circulation of the paper per day being 39,000 copies; and that the supplement attached to this large number was actually too great to pay. He goes on to say: "The value of the supplement consists of advertisments, which pay a certain sum, of course, to the proprietors; that sum is fixed; it is the same on a small impression as it would be on 100,000. As the sum which is paid for paper, printing, and so on, fluctuates and is increased by the amount of circulation, of course there is a certain point at which the two sums balance each other. Suppose that the value of the advertisments in the supplement was £200 you would know that you could publish as many papers as would cost £200 to manufacture in papers, stamps and printing, and that if you go beyond that, you publish at a loss; that is, of course, obvious. The greater the circulation, the greater the loss." It was asked, "Do you not mean that the profit is less?" To which the manager replied, "No; the greater the absolute loss from a circulation beyond a point at which the expenditure and the receipts balance each other." He repeated, "An absolute loss;" and he made the point clear, beyond all possibility of mistake, by taking the instance of the very day before he gave his evidence, namely, May 27, when the value of the advertisements in the supplement precisely balanced the expenditure on the paper, and the printing of further copies was stopped. The Goverment charges paid that day by the Times in the shape of direct taxation, for that one publication, amounted to £395! Again he says, "I have no doubt in the world that if there were no considerations beyond a mere desire to circulate the paper, it would double itself within a couple of years;" and at present from ten to twelve columns of advertisements are excluded daily from the Times for want of room, notwithstanding the supplement."

Massacre of American Seamen.

Alta California, of the 19th July, gives the folowing narration of incidents which transpired at the Ladrone Islands on 17th of January last:—

The sperm Whaler Boy, of Warren, R. I., arrived off the Island of McCoskell, and was boarded by two men in a canoe, who in reply to a demand for provisions, informed Capt. Luce, master of the ship, that the Island only afforded green turtle, and that the natives were hostile to strangers, advising him not to land. Capt. L., however, ordered a boat to be got in readiness, and calling for volunteers, was joined by four of his crew, and accompanied by one of the strangers, who were sailors, and had been stopping on the island for two years. He gave orders to the first officer to send a boat for him in the morning, and pulled ashore. The ship lay off and on, and the next morning a boat was sent for the Captain, in which was the other stranger, and also two natives who had paddled off to the ship. On nearing the shore, the natives assembled on the beach, refusing to allow the boat to land. They were all armed with spears, and beckoned their comrades to join them from the boat, which they did. The sailor resident was then about to follow, when one of the natives warned him to remain in the boat. They refused to hold any communication whatever with the crew; and Mr. Dawson, who went in command of the boat, rejoined the ship and related his adventures. Mr. Merry, first officer, then provided the ship's crew with arms, and the boat was again sent ashore under a white flag. The men lay on their oars within a cable's length of the beach, where the natives continued to assemble, armed with spears, and threatening an attack if an attempt was made to land. Joseph Percy, the companion of the sailor who accompanied the captain ashore the previous evening, endeavored to gain some perticulars from the natives concerning the fate of the captain and party, but was refused all information; and having stated his belief to the second officer that they had been killed by the natives, a fire was opened upon the from them boat. The relief party continued outside the reef until a signal from the ship recalled them. Mr. Merry waited until dark off the island, when, receiving no tidings from the unfortunate party, he bore for Ascension.

The names of the seamen who landed with Capt. Luce, were James Mackay, James Sweeny, William Taylor, and Edward Rion. There is no doubt that the whole party were massacred by the natives, who perhaps suspected, from the absence of their two comrades on board the vessel during the night, that they had been killed or detained as prisoners.

Emigration of Colored Americans to Jamaica.

Rev. J. Weston, of Lowell, Mass., who has been several years a missionary in Jamaica, sends to the N. Y. Tribune, the following statement of the reasons which he thinks should induce the free colored people of the United States to emigrant to that part of the West Indies:—

1. Distinction of color does not exist in Jamaica. The black man is there on a footing of perfect social and political equality with the white man. Hence, the great benefit, socially and politically, to those of our colored population who should emigrate to Jamaica. A worthy black man can there mingle in the best society, without any of those disagreeable feelings sometimes experienced here, and he is eligible to any office of trust and emolument.

2. The moral condition of the black or colored population of Jamaica, so far as my observation extended, I found (comparatively speaking) to be good; very little crime is known among them. Therefore, our colored population, in removing to Jamaica, would find a moral atmosphere equal to, if not superior to that in this country.

3. The pecuniary condition of all who should emigrate would be materially benefited. According to the best of my recollection, only about half of the area of the island is under cultivation. The virgin soil can be purchased low, and when cultivated produces abundantly. For raising fruits and vegetables, a man can probably realize more net profit from one acre in Jamaica than from twenty in this country. There is an abundance of unemployed water-power, which could be more profitably employed in the manufactories and the arts than the same could be employed in the United States, peculiar advantages attending the colonial trade.

4. Though I esteem my own country and its laws, in some respects, as preferable to others, yet I can say that the Administrative and Executive of Jamaica, as a whole, are good.

5. Those of our colored population who should emigrate to Jamaica, would indirectly be conferring an unappreciable blessing on Africa and the world.

Caution on European Railways.—On all the European Railroads men are employed at each principal way station, whose especial duty it is to examined the soundness and security of every car wheel and axle of every train. They also examine and fill up the oil or grease boxes. These duties are thoroughly performed, and undoubtedly they save a great number of accidents, which would be likely to accure from the neglect of this precaution. Another means taken to afford immunity from accident is the employment of gates and gate-keepers at every place where a public wagon-road crosses the track. These gates are closed on both sides of the track before the train comes along, and only opened after it has passed. Besides these arrangments, there is yet another deserving of attention. At every curve, tunnel and bridge, men are stationed with signals to indicate whether trains are or are not on the curve, in the tunnel or upon the bridge.

The Oakland College Tragedy.

A dreadful murder, committed some time ago at Oakland College, Miss., excited the greatest indignaiton throughout the country. The deceased was a Professor of the College. The following are the principal facts elicted by the Coroner's Jury, which induced their verdict:—

On the afternoon of Friday, the 15th Sept. about 4½ o'clock, Mr. Briscoe, on his way home from Rodney, called at the gate of Dr. Chamberlain's residence: The Doctor being informed of the fact, went to the gate, Mr. B. still retaining his seat in his cab. The conversation between them commenced while the Doctor was yet in the yard. In the continuance of it, he leaned on the top of the gate. Soon his two daughters, who were eyewitnesses of the scene, heard Mr. B. exclaim, in a very angry tone, "You lie! politician," &c. It is supposed that he referred to a printed card, in which the Doctor publicly denied the expulsion or suspension of a student because of his political views and opinions. To the repeated declaration "you lie," the Doctor was heard to say, "You must prove that;" when Mr. B. at once leaped from his vehicle, and with his loaded whip felled the Doctor to the ground, and as he attempted to rise, other blows again prostrated him; and as he was about to rise the second time, Mr. B. drew forth a bowie-knife of eight inch blade, and plunged it into the Doctor's heart. He rose, notwithstanding, and started toward the house, about fifteen or twenty paces distant. His son-in-law coming up just at the time, saw Mr. B. wipe the blade of his knife, and then drive off. The Doctor, leaning on his son-in-law, entered the door, remarking, "I am killed." He fell on the floor of the passage, and in a few moments closed his eyes in death. On examination, five severe wounds, inflicted with the loaded whip, were found on the forehead, crown, and back part of the head, and in addition the fatal wound in the breast. Verdict of the Coroner's Jury, unanimously, "Murder."

But this is not the end of the tragic scene. Mr. B., on his way home from the fatal deed, called upon two of his friends and told them that he had stabbed Dr. Chamberlain in self-defense; that he handed his loaded whip to the Doctor, and he beat him with it to such a degree that he was compelled to kill him. He than showed them his hat, which was torned and said the Doctor tore it; but he show, no wounds or bruises. When search was made for him that night by legal authorities he could not be found. The next day afternoon he was discovered by a negro. He was lying on the ground in a very dense part of the woods in a dying state. A physician was immediately called to him, but could give no relief. He had become almost black in the face, very much swollen, and the blood was oozing from various parts of his body. He lived a few hours. Next morning a Coroner's inquest was held and the body identified. Verdict—"Death from causes unknown."

"Higher Law" in Ireland.

The Tablet, the leading Romanist journal in Ireland, gives the following view of the obligation of Catholics to obey the new law referring to ecclesiastical titles:—

"Lord Truro, indeed, pathetically asks, 'Is it to be said that the Roman Catholics of Ireland would not obey the law?' We answer, with the most perfect frankness, that it both has been said, and is to be said, and that it will be done. Neither in England nor in Ireland will the Roman Catholics obey the law, that is, the law of the Imperial Parliament. They have, or are likely to have, before them two things called laws, which unhappily (or happily) contradict each other. Both cannot be obeyed, and both cannot be disobeyed. One of them is the law of God, the other is no law at all; it pretends to be an act of Parliament, but in the ethics of legislation it has no more force or value than a solemn enactment that the moon is made of green cheese. It is not a law, but a lie; a Parliamentary lie, which its very utterers know to be false, and which they deliberately put forward as a falsehood, careless of contempt and ignominy, so that they can retain their hold of office. Of these two things we need hardly say which will be obeyed and which disobeyed. The law of God, that is, the Pope's command, will be, or rather has been and is being carried into effect; the Parliamentary lie will be spit upon and trampled under foot, and treated as all honest men treat a lie, that is, rigorously disobeyed."

The Nightingale.—The following is among the most recent of the kindly offices of Jenny Lind. The servant-maid, who had charge of the rooms she occupied at the Clifton House, Niagara Falls, attracted her attention by her beauty, affability and fidelity. It so happened that this young lady, by name Margaret Atkinson, was about to be married, and the news reached the good vocalist's ears. She immediately purchased for her a becoming and beautiful trousseau—ear-rings, gloves, bonnet, &c., and with her own hands attended to her toilet on the morning of the ceremony. This done, she took her in her own carriage, having first read to her and her future husband the beautiful and affecting passages applicable to the occasion, conveyed her to Lewiston, entered the Episcopal Church [illegible] officiated as Margaret's bride[illegible].

An Imme[illegible] the splendid marble dry goods establi[illegible] of A. T. Stewart & Co., in New-York, [illegible] was opened recently in its full extent, is probably the most beautiful and costly building ever e[illegible] such a purpose. It is five stories high, [illegible] tends from Reade to Chambers-st. [illegible] length in Reade-st. is one hundred [illegible] seven feet. There are also [illegible] beneath the street, two hundred [illegible]enty-eight feet in length, well lighted by numerous gratings, and so we[illegible] that it is difficult for a visitor to realize that he is under ground. Below these, and extending under the whole building, are vast cellars, stored with goods not required for immediate sale. The average value of stock in the store is upward of two millions of dollars.

Hurricane at Porto Rico.

A letter to a New York paper, dated Aug. 25, says that abont 10 o'clock A. M., of the 18th Sept., the Island of Porto Rico was visited by a severe N. E. gale, coming in occasional heavy gusts, and carrying with it clouds of dust. Toward evening it blew stronger, accompanied with heavy showers, and finally ended in a regular hurricane, which lasted until the hour of midnight. The last severe charge was weakened by the constant and heavy torrents of rain which fell. Some idea can be formed of the extent of this rain, when it is known that one little rivulet was swelled to such prodigious size and strength as to carry away houses that were located on its banks hundreds of feet from the original bed of the stream. The dead bodies of whole families were found scattered in the morning; and also many cattle. In one of these unfortunate habitations, long after the family had gone to rest, a little boy awoke, crying, "Father, I feel water in my bed." It was the rapid rise of the river, which soon swallowed in its dark rage all that were helpless. The father, alone, saved himself by climbing a prickly palm, where he clung, his flesh pierced and torn, till daybreak.

"Victoria Regia."—A new plant, called the Victoria Regia, is now attracting a great many persons to the gardens of the country seat of Caleb Cope, Esq., in Burlington Co., N. J. The flowers of this singular plant often present most grotesque configurations, sometimes likened to heads and bodies of animals; and the stems sometimes presenting the graceful forms of tall grasses and at others constructed into the most clumsy figure. It is a native of British Guiana, and was recently introduced into England, the first having flowered in the garden of the Duke of Devonshire, in 1849. Mr. Cope procured the seed from England, planted it on the 10th of March last, and on the 24th of May it was transplanted, when the leaf measured 4½ inches. The wonderful progress it has since made in beauty and luxuriance, is said to be remarkable. Up to the 3d inst., it had produced 30 leaves, the largest measuring six feet six inches in diameter; the stem of the leaf is from ten to twelve feet long, thickly set with strong spines. Mr. Cope has erected a building purposely for this plant, 25 feet high and 34 feet each way, forming a square, with a double roof. In the center is an octagon tank 24 feet in diameter, in the middle containing a basin 4½ feet deep, in which is deposited the lily for its growth.

U. S. Sloop in Danger.—A letter dated Canton, China, June 21, says that the U. S. sloop of war Marion, while on her return from Shanghae, bound to Macao, ran ashore on the northwest part of the Island of Formosa. The accident occurred at 3 A. M., at which time it was very dark. The ship was steering by the wind, going at the rate of 6 knots and hour. She was in the act of tacking, the helm had just been put down, and hard-a-lee called out by the officer of the deck, when she struck. A soon as it became daylight the ship was discovered to be on shore, close to a sand beach, within 400 yards. As soon as it began to grow light, the natives could be seen running down the beach from across the hills by hundreds. About 6 o'clock in the morning there were full 3,000 on the beach. They brought down their wagons, drawn by mules, all ready to carry off the plunder, thinking the case was hopeless. The work immediately commenced to lighten the ship. Twelve tuns of water were started, 750 thirty-two pound shots were thrown overboard; at the same time kedges were got out, stream anchor, and finally the lower anchor; and after a deal of anxiety and hard work, the ship gradually slid off into deep water, and the old black box, as we heard the sailors call her, was herself again.

Double Fruitage.—The Pittsfield (Mass.) Culturist notices a grafted pear tree on the premises of Mr. Gideon Beals, of Windsor, which produces two crops of pears each year. For three years in succession, says the Culturist, the tree has blossomed at the ordinary time in the spring, and perfected in due time (1st to 10th Sept.) a fair yield of large and beautiful pears. For the same three years it has blossomed a second time in the early part of July, and started a second crop of pears, which go on towards maturity until the season closes and stops their progress. They are now one and a half inches long and three quarters of an inch in diameter, and thrifty in appearance. Of the first crop there is said to be more than a bushel on the tree, and that in numbers the two crops are about equal, and that there is not a limb on the tree but has both kinds upon it.

Another New State.—By the late treaty with the See-see-tran and Wah-pay-toan bands of Sioux Indians, the United States obtain over 21,000,000 of acres, lying east of a line drawn from the head-waters of the Red River on the North to intersect the north-western corner of the State of Iowa. The purchase includes part of the magnificent Blue Earth River country, and that around the head-waters of the Des Moines and St. Peters Rivers. The Indians are to remain on the land two years. For this cession they are to receive $1,665,000. The Galena papers propose that the name Dacota be given to the new Territory, and such may yet be the name of one of the States of the Union.

Railroad Responsibilities.—A passenger in the N. Y. and Erie cars, who took his passage in New-York for Cuba, and received a ticket with the words "To Cuba—Night Express" thereon, delivered the ticket to the Conductor before the train arrived at Cuba, [illegible] desired to be let down there; but the Conductor refused, and carried him to a station 14 miles distant. Upon his complaint, and an affidavit corroborating the above facts, being lodged with Mr. Stevens, that gentleman issued a warrant for the Conductor's arrest. He was accordingly arrested for false imprisonement, and had to enter into the usual securities to defend the action.

Somebody accounts for Western hospitality by saying that where houses are as far apart as in that part of the country, a stranger is as welcome as a newspaper, and is commonly used as one. The moment he arrives, he is "put to press," and, what is more, kept there till all the news that has happened for the [illegible] six months is thoroughly squeezed out of h[illegible] and bottled up for future use. A man [illegible] tells a good murder story, could tra[illegible] one end of Indiana to the other witho[illegible]pense.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Summer Arrangements, commencing Monday, March 31, 1851.

THIS Road extends from ELIZABETHPORT, 35 miles, to WHITE HOUSE, N J, reducing the staging between the terminus of the Road and EASTON to 25 miles.

This line leaves New York by steamboat Red Jacket from pier No 1 North River, and connects with trains on the New Jersey Railroad, which leaves New York from foot of Cortland-st.

TRIN[illegible] Leave New York by steamboat Red Jacket [illegible] 1 North River, at 9 A M, passenger; 1 P M[illegible]; and 5 P M, passenger; and by N J Railro[illegible]t of Cortland-st, at 9 A M, and 2 and 5¼ P M.

Trains leave White House and following places for New York as follows:

White House at 3½ A M, freight; 5 40 A M, passenger, at 1 40 P M.

Somerville at 4 30 A M, freight; at 6 05 A M, passenger, at 2 05 P M.

Bound Brook at 4 50 A M, freight; at 6 15 A M, passenger, at 2 15 P M.

Plainfield at 5 20 A M, freight; at 6 35 A M, passenger, at 2 35 P M.

Westfield at 5 50 A M, freight; at 6 50 A M, passenger, at 2 50 P M.

Elizabethtown at 7 15 A M; freight at 10 30 A M; passenger at 3 15 P M.

Elizabethport at 7 30 A M; freight at 10 45 A M; passenger at 3 30 P M.

On Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, trains leave Somerville for Pespack, Lesser Cross-Roads, and Pluckamin.

STAGES will be in readiness on the arrival of the 9 A M train from New York at the White House to convey passengers to Easton, Wilkesbarre, Bethlehem, Allentown, and Mauch Chunk, Penn. and to Clinton, Flemington, Lebanon, Milford, and Belvidere, N J.

N B—All BAGGAGE at the risk of the owners until delivered into the actual possession of the Agents of the Company and checks or receipts given therefor.

Milton Academy.

A. C. SPICER, Principal.
Mrs. S. M. SPICER, Preceptress.

Terms.

The Fall Term of 1851 of this Institution will commence Tuesday, August 19th, and close Thursday, November 20th, continuing thirteen weeks and three days.

The Winter Term of 1851–52 will commence Tuesday, December 2d, and close Thursday, March 4th.

The Summer Term of 1852 will commence Tuesday, March 23d, and close Thursday, June 24th.

Expenses.

Tuition per Term, from $3 00 to $5 00, settled invariably at the commencement of each Term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Oil Painting,	$7 00
Monochromatic Painting,	2 00
Water-Color Painting,	3 00
Drawing,	1 00

Board can be obtained in private families from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained, by those wishing to board themselves, at a reasonable expense.

Remarks.

All the English branches usually taught in our Eastern Academies, together with the Classics, and the Modern Languages, (French, German, and Italian,) will be taught in this Institution. The mode of instruction will be in accordance with the latest and most popular method adopted in our best Eastern Institutions, aiming, primarily, at a thorough and practical qualification of School Teachers, and preparing students for an advanced standing in a College course.

Weekly meetings are held in the village by three different evangelical denominations, either of which students can attend.

The plan of instruction and government of this Institution will aim at a harmonious development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of students, in a manner to render them thorough scholars, and practical, useful citizens; and the public may feel assured that no exertion shall be wanting on the part of the teachers and proprietors of the school to render it worthy of patronage and confidence. au14 4t

Milton, Rock Co., Wis, July 11th, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:

No. 1 Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2 Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3 Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4 The Sabbath and Lord's Day. A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5 A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6 Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7 Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8 The Sabbath Controversy The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9 The Fourth Commandment False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10 The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11 Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12 Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
No. 13 The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
No. 14 Delaying Obedience. 14 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to George B. Utter, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..A[illegible].
Petersburg[illegible] Crandall.
[illegible] Summerbell.
Portville[illegible] Crandall.
Pitcairn—[illegible] Burdich.
Preston—J. C. [illegible]on.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The [illegible] Recorder,

By the S[illegible] Publishing Society

AT NO. [illegible]ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

[illegible] payments received will be acknowledged in the paper [illegible] indicate the times to which they reach.

[illegible] paper discontinued until arrearages are paid [illegible] at the discretion of the publisher.

[illegible] Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to [illegible] B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 17. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 9, 1851. WHOLE NO. 381.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c."

The value of many of the Mosaic appointments, as prefiguring and illustrative of the work of our redemption, is acknowledged by most Christians. We cannot, however, doubt, that the church generally exclude themselves from much precious instruction, through neglect of the import and significance of these. To us, as to Israel, the Mosaic exhibition of the atonement is most valuable. Let us not forget "that Christ died for OUR sins according to the Scriptures, and that He was buried, and that He rose again, the third day, according to the Scriptures" of the Old Testament. (1 Cor. xv. 3, 4.)

Although we cannot participate in those sacrifices which formed so expressive an exhibition and illustration of what Jesus did and suffered; still, from the record of these, our judgment may be improved, and our faith enlarged. "Christ, our Passover, is sacrificed for us," is the instructive exclamation of the Apostle Paul. Not only so; in the same Epistle in which the Saviour's fulfillment of the paschal sacrifice is thus taught, we are farther assured, as already noticed, that "now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. v. 7; xv. 20. Thus the two great conjoint types of the paschal solemnity both meet in Jesus—the great Antitype. Not merely are the facts of His death and resurrection brought before us, as the accomplishment of symbolical ordinances by which both events were prefigured, but we are also led to consider these events in the work of our redemption, as standing in the same relation to each other as did those sacrifices by which they had previously for ages been symbolized. Studied in this relation, the symbols foreshadowing the death and resurrection of Christ are, indeed, most interesting. The more prominent and obvious of these, we shall now notice separately, in their order, as exhibited in the quotation already adduced from the Mosaic appointment.

The paschal sacrifice was a lamb or kid; and it was imperative that it should be a male without blemish. As the divine injunctions relative to it were given in Egypt, (commemorative, as the whole was, of Israel's deliverance from bondage, while also prefiguring man's redemption from sin and woe,) the lamb was, in the first instance, slain in Egypt; but it was commanded that this should henceforth be done only "in the place which the Lord should choose, to place His Name there." Deut. xvi. 2, 5, 6. During their progress through the wilderness, this limited the sacrifice to the place where the Shekinah glory indicated locally the presence of the God of Israel—which, therefore, ultimately, when the tabernacle was superseded by the erection of the temple, limited it to Jerusalem, as the only acceptable place.

The lamb was to be kept until the 14th day of the month Abib, when it was to be slain "in the evening." In the Hebrew, and, accordingly, in the margin, this reads, "between the two evenings." Commentators are far from being agreed as to the precise period which this Hebrew phrase is intended to indicate. It might seem to be defined in the injunction, "At the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place His Name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the Passover, at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt." Deut. xvi. 6. But the diversity of opinion extends to what even this last expression implies—whether the whole period of the sun's decline, from noon, or only the time of twilight, after the sun has gone beneath the horizon, till dark.

The Karaite Jews and the Samaritans are stated to understand "between the two evenings," as the time of twilight, or that which intervenes between the setting of the sun and its becoming quite dark. Goodwin (in his Moses and Aaron, Book iii.,) seems to cite the eminent Jewish authority, Aben Ezra, (on Exodus xii.,) as also giving this interpretation, saying, there is the evening of the sun, when the body of the sun setteth, and the evening of the light, when the beams and shining of the sun is also gone from off the earth.

But the more usual interpretation of these words—and it is in accordance both with the opinion of the modern and the alledged practice of the ancient Jews generally—is, that they embrace the whole period of the declining sun from noon till night. Michaelis remarks, that "in Palestine, the sun, in the shortest days of winter, never sets before 5 in the afternoon. In their longest days, again, this takes place before 7 at latest." (Commentaries on the Laws of Moses, vol. iii. p. 166.) Accordingly Josephus, (Wars of the Jews, book vi. chap. 9,) states, that the practice then was, to kill the lamb between the 9th and 11th hours, or nearly, according to the reckoning at present adopted among ourselves, between the hours of 3 and 5 in the afternoon. The number of lambs to be killed was necessarily very great; and the twilight, in Palestine, being of very short duration, renders it the more probable that this is in accordance with the meaning of the phrase, "between the two evenings." Robinson, in his Researches in Palestine, (vol. i. p. 264,) speaking of a place upon the shore of the Mediterranean, an hour and a half north of Tyre, says, "In these latitudes, darkness almost immediately succeeds to the decline of day." We are, therefore, on this account, as also on other grounds, led to believe the time indicated by "between the two evenings," to be from noon till evening.

"The whole assemby of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening." (Exod. xii. 6.) All were required to concur in putting the victim to death; the act, however, was performed by representatives. Josephus says, "There is concerned in each sacrifice a sort of fraternity, of at the least ten in number, and sometimes twenty;" and we are informed that "every particular person, (or rather a delegate from every paschal society,) slew his own victim." "The victim being killed, one of the priests received the blood into a vessel; which was handed from one priest to another, until it came to him who stood next the altar, and by whom it was sprinkled at the bottom of the altar." Horne's Introduction, vol. iii. p. 307.

It was farther enjoined, "Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof;" (Exod. xii. 9;) and it is quoted by Justin Martyr, and in Kitto's Biblical Cyclopedia, (Art. "Passover,") that it was the practice to roast it in an oven, whole, "with two spits made of pomegranate wood thrust through it, the one lengthwise, the other transversely, (crossing the longitudinal one near the forelegs,) thus forming a cross. (Pesachim, c. 3.") This mode of roasting, it is added, is expressed in Arabic, by a verb signifying "to crucify."

It was commanded that not a bone of the lamb should be broken. (Exod. xii. 46; Numb. ix. 12.) An expression of faith in the fulfillment of this, was put also into Israel's song, God thus teaching them to rejoice in His care, even of the body of the Righteous One, that "He keepeth all His bones; not one of them is broken." Psa. xxxiv. 20.

The lamb was to be eaten "with unleavened bread, ["the bread of affliction," Deut. xvi. 3,] and with bitter herbs they shall eat it." Exod. xii. 8. And the practice was that, "roasted with fire, as an emblem of purification, it was served up with bitter salad unpickled, indicative of the bitterness of their bondage in Egypt." Kitto's Biblical Cyclopedia. Ibid.

Being a sacrifice of which all were to partake, one lamb was to be taken for each family; and, where it was too much for their eating, others were to join them, so that none of it should remain until the morning. The practice accordingly was, that parties or brotherhoods, (already alluded to,) of at least ten, were formed, so that the whole might be eaten.

"And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth of it until the morning, ye shall burn with fire." Exod. xii. 10; Deut. xvi. 4. It was thus prevented from passing into corruption.

Numerous and minute though the particulars noted be, the Paschal solemnity finds accurately its antitype in the circumstances of Christ's death, as these are related by the several Evangelists. As typified by the lamb without blemish, Christ, whom it prefigured, was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." As the Paschal lamb was killed in the place which the Lord chose to put His Name there; so, also, the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, was put to death at Jerusalem.

As the lamb was slain by those for whom its blood was typically to be an atonement, so also, Jew and Gentile—people, priests, and rulers—united in putting to death the Prince of Life.

In practice, we have seen, the lamb was roasted whole, in cruciform fashion; and the cursed death of the cross is, obviously, of this the antitype.

The lamb was to be killed "between the two evenings;" and this we have seen reason to believe signifies the period between noon and night; and while Christ hung upon the accursed tree, "from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour," after which He gave up the ghost. (Matt. xxvii. 45—50; Mark xv. 34; Luke xxiii. 44.) His death, therefore, about our three in the afternoon, seems to have been the exact fulfillment, in this respect also, of the appointed type.

As not a bone of the lamb was to be broken, so, although the Jews, eager to prevent the bodies from remaining on the cross during the Passover Sabbath, entreated that the legs of all the crucified should be broken, yet, in accordance with the type and prophecy, this was obviated in the Saviour's case, while it was complied with in regard to the bodies of both the malefactors crucified with Him.

As we have seen, the victim was slain by deputies, representative of those for whom it was to be offered; so also, the thousands of Israel, congregated in Jerusalem to take part in the annual typical solemnity, were, with the Roman soldiers and authorities, at once the witnesses and the actors in putting to death the Lamb of God.

By attention to even this brief review of the circumstantial relation of the sacrifice of the Passover to the death of Christ, we shall afterwards be better prepared to enter upon a consideration of the place which His resurrection holds in the economy of God. For the death and resurrection of the Redeemer stand in connection, as the fulfillment of a corresponding relation between the types which prefigured these two events. [To be continued.

THE BIBLE PRIZED.

"Some time in the winter," says a colporteur in Western New York, "I met a German in the road, who said he had been in the country two years, but had not a Bible. He wanted one very much, and when I told him that I had given away the last one I had, he looked as if he would weep. I promised him, that as soon as I could, I would bring him one. It was in a back place, where there was no road, and the traveling was so bad that it was some time before I could get there. When I went to the place where he told me he lived, and looked at the cabin, I thought no one could live in it. On going in, however, I found him lying on some boards put up like a bedstead, very sick with a fever. His wife lay sick on another like it. As I took him by the hand he appeared much rejoiced to see me; but when I held out the Bible to him, he seemed in an ecstasy as he took it and held it up to his wife. The three children, almost without any clothing, hopped about for joy. One of them got the last money they had and offered it to me for the Bible, but when I saw that they had neither bed nor table nor chair in their log cabin, I could not take it. The man said I must take it, for he must pay for the Bible. He wept and would not let me go without the money. I could not but weep when I found one that loved God and his Word so much. I gave them a book, and when I prayed with them I felt that God was there." [American Messenger.

SABBATH IN THE COUNTRY.

BY THOMAS MILLER.

The creaking wagon's in the shed,
The busy flail is heard no more,
The horse is littered down and fed,
The harness hangs above his head,
The whip beyond the door.

His leathern gloves and hooked bill
To-day the woodman throws aside;
The blacksmith's fiery forge is still,
The woollen wheel of the old mill
Sleeps in the mill-dam wide.

The miller's boat is anchored, where,
Far out the water-lillies sleep;
You see their shadows mirrored there,
The broad white flowers reflected clear,
Within the mill-pool deep.

The barrow's in the garden shed,
Hoe, rake, and spade are put away,
Unweeded stands the onion bed,
The gardener from his work hath fled,
'Tis holy Sabbath day.

Upon the wall the white cat sleeps,
By which the churns and milk pans lie;
A drowsy watch the house-dog keeps,
And scarcely from his dull eye peeps
Upon the passer-by.

And sweetly over hill and dale
The silvery sounding church bells ring;
Across the manor and down the dale
They come and go and on the gale
Their Sabbath tidings fling.

From where the white-washed Sabbath-school
Peeps out between the poplars dim,
Which ever throw their shadows cool
Far out upon the rushy pool,
You hear the Sabbath hymn.

From farm and field and grange grown grey,
From wood and walks and winding way,
The old and young, the grave and gay,
Unto the old church come to pray,
And sing God's holy praise.

From the Methodist Protestant.

OLD MOSES.

Mr. B. was a merchant in Baltimore, and did a very heavy business, especially in grain. One morning, as he was passing over the vessels that lay at the wharf with their various commodities for sale, he stepped upon the deck of one, at the stern of which he saw a negro man sitting, whose dejected countenance gave sure indication of distress; and he accosted him with—

"Hey! my man, what is the matter with you this morning?"

The negro lifted his eyes, and looking at Mr. B., replied—

"Ah, massa, I'se in great trouble."

"What about?"

"Kase I'se fotcht up here to be sold."

"What for? What have you been doing? Have you been stealing? or did you run away? or what?"

"No, no, massa, none o' dat; it's becase I didn't mind de audes."

"What kind of orders?"

"Well, massa stranger, I tell you. Massa Willum werry strick man, and werry nice man too, and ebrebody on de place got to mine him; and I break trew de rule; but I didn't tend to break de rule, doe; I forgot mesef, an I got too high."

"It is for getting drunk, then, is it?"

"O no, sah, not dat nother."

"You are the strangest negro I have seen for a week. I can get no satisfaction from you. If you would not like to be pitched overboard, you had better tell me what you did."

"Please, massa, dont frow de poor flicted nigga in de wata."

"Then tell me what you are to be sold for."

"For prayin, sah."

"For praying! that is a strange tale, indeed. Will your master not permit you to pray?"

"O yes, sah, he let me pray easy; but I hollers too loud."

"And why did you halloo so in your prayer?"

"Kase de Sperit comes on me, an I gits happy fore I knows it; den I gone; can't trol mesef den; den I knows nuthin bout massa's rule; den I holler if ole Sattin hissef come, wid all de rules of de quisition."

"And do you suppose your master will really sell you for that?"

"O yes; no help for me now; all de men in de world couldn't help me now; kase wen Mass Willum say one ting, he no do anoder."

"What is your name?"

"Moses, sah."

"What is your master's name?"

"Massa name Colonel Willum C——."

"Where does he live?"

"Down on de Easin Shoah."

"Is he a good master? Does he treat you well?"

"O yes; Massa Willum good; no better massa in de world."

"Stand up and let me look at you." And Moses stood up and presented a robust frame; and as Mr. B. stripped up his sleeve, his arm gave evidence of unusual muscular strength.

"Where is your master?"

"Yander he is, jis comin to de warf."

"As Mr. B. started for the shore, he heard Moses give a heavy sigh, followed by a deep groan. Moses was not at all pleased with the present phase of affairs. He was strongly impressed with the idea that B. was a trader and intended to buy him, and it was this that made him so unwilling to communicate to Mr. B. the desired information. Mr. B. reached the wharf just as Colonel C. did. He introduced himself, and said—

"I understand you wish to sell that negro man yonder on board the schooner."

Colonel C. replied that he did.

"What do you ask for him?"

"I expect to get seven hundred dollars."

"How old is he?"

"About thirty."

"Is he healthy?"

"Very; he never had any sickness in his life, except one or two spells of the ague."

"Is he hearty?"

"Yes, sir; he will eat as much as any man ought, and it will do him as much good."

"Is he a good hand?"

"Yes, sir, he is the best hand on my place. He is steady, honest and industrious. He has been my foreman for the last ten years, and a more trusty negro I never knew."

"Why do you wish to sell him?"

"Because he disobeyed my orders. As I said, he is my foreman; and that he might be available at any moment I might want him, I built his quarter within a hundred yards of my own house; and I have never rung the bell at any time in the night or morning, that his horn did not answer in five minutes after. But two years ago he got religion, and commenced what he terms family prayer—that is prayer in his quarter every night and morning; and when he begun his prayer, it was impossible to tell when he would stop, especially if (as he termed it) he got happy. Then he would sing and pray and halloo for an hour or two together, that you might hear him a mile off. And he would pray for me and my wife and children, and all my brothers and sisters and their children, and our whole family connection to the third generation; and sometimes, when we would have visitors, Moses' prayers would interrupt the conversation and destroy the enjoyment of the whole company. The women would cry, and the children would cry, and it would set me almost frantic; and even after I had retired, it would sometimes be nearly daylight before I could go to sleep; for it appeared to me that I could hear Moses pray for three hours after he had finished. I bore it as long as I could, and then forbid his praying so loud any more. Moses promised obedience, but he soon transgressed; and my rule is never to whip, but whenever a negro proves incorrigible, I sell him. This keeps them in better subjection, and is less trouble than whipping. I pardoned Moses twice for disobedience in praying so loud, but the third time I knew I must sell him, or every negro on the farm would soon be perfectly regardless of all my orders."

"You spoke of Moses' quarter; I suppose from that he has a family."

"Yes, he has a woman and three children —or wife, I suppose he calls her now, for soon after he got religion, he asked me if they might be married, and I presume they were."

"What will you take for her and the children?"

"If you want them for your own use, I will take seven hundred dollars; but I shall not sell Moses nor them to go out of the State."

"I wish them all for my own use, and will give you the fourteen hundred dollars."

Mr. B. and Colonel C. then went to B.'s store, drew up the writings, and closed the sale, after which they returned to the vessel; and Mr. B., approaching the negro, who sat with his eyes fixed upon the deck, seemingly wrapt in meditation and the most awful forebodings, said—

"Well, Moses, I have bought you."

Moses made a very low bow, and every muscle of his face worked with emotion as he replied—

"Is you, massa? Where is I gwine, massa? Is I gwine to Georgy?"

"No," said Mr. B., "I am a merchant here in the city; yonder is my store. I want you to attend in my store; and have purchased your wife and children too, that you may not be separated."

"Bress God fer dat! And Massa, kin I go to meetin sometimes?"

"Yes, Moses, you can go to church three times on Sunday, and every night in the week; and you can pray as often as you choose, and as loud as you choose; and every time you pray, whether it be at home or in church, I want you to pray for me, my wife, and all my children, and single-handed too; for if you are a good man, your prayers will do us no harm, and we need them very much; and if you wish to, you may pray for every body of the name of B. in the State of Maryland. It will not injure them."

While Mr. B. was dealing out these privileges to Moses, the negro's eyes danced in their sockets, and his full heart laughed outright for gladness, exposing two rows of as even, clean ivories as any African can boast; and his heart's response was, "Bress God! bress God all de time, and bress you too, massa! Moses neber tinks bout he gwine to have all dese commodations; dis make me tink bout Joseph in de Egypt." And after Moses had poured a few blessings upon Col. C., and bidding him a warm adieu, and requesting him to give his love and farewell to his mistress, the children and all the servants, he followed B. to the store, to enter upon the functions of his new office.

The return of the schooner brought to Moses his wife and children.

Early the next spring, as Mr. B. was one day standing at the store door, he saw a man leap upon the wharf from the deck of a vessel and walk hurriedly towards the store. He soon recognized him as Colonel C. They exchanged salutations, and, to the Colonel's inquiry after Moses, Mr. B. replied that he was up stairs measuring grain, and invited him to walk up and see him. Soon Mr. B.'s attention was arrested by a very confused noise above. He listened, and heard an unusual shuffling of feet, some one sobbing violently, and some one talking very hurriedly; and when he reflected upon Colonel C.'s singular movements and the peculiar expression of his countenance he became alarmed, and determined to go up and see what was transpiring.

When he reached the head of the stairs, he was startled by seeing Moses in the middle of the floor, down upon one knee, with his arms around the Colonel's waist, and talking most rapidly, while the Colonel stood weeping audibly. So soon as the Colonel could sufficiently control his feelings, he told Mr. B. that he had never been able to free himself from the influence of Moses' prayers, and that during the past year he and his wife and all his children had been converted to God.

Moses responded: "Bress God, Massa C., doe I way up hea, I neber fergit you in my prayers; I ollers put de ole massa side de new one. Bress God! dis make Moses tink bout Joseph in de Egypt agin."

The Colonel then stated to Mr. B. that his object in coming to Baltimore was to buy Moses and his family back again. But Mr. B. assured him that that was out of the question, for he could not part with him; and he intended to manumit Moses and his wife at forty and his children at thirty-five years of age.

Moses was not far wrong in reference to Joseph. For when Joseph was sold into Egypt, God overruled it to his good, and he obtained blessings that were far beyond his expectations; so with Moses. Joseph eventually proved the instrument of saving the lives of those who sold him. Moses proved the instrument in God's hands of saving the man's soul who sold him.

Old Moses is still living and doing well. He long since obtained his freedom, and at present occupies a comfortable house of his own; and I suppose sings and prays and shouts to his heart's content.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

The following sketch of some of the prominent individuals who attended the recent meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, is given by a London correspondent of the Christian Advocate and Journal, under date of August 28, 1851:—

"The Evangelical Alliance is now in full session. It began its sittings more than a week ago, and is to continue them for some days longer, so as to extend altogether over a fortnight. The present conference is scarcely so numerous as the great Constituent Assembly of 1846. Many who were present and active then are absent now. You will well remember Edward Bickersteth, R. W. Kyle, and Dr. Byrth; all these have gone to a world where union is unbroken. Dr. Bunting, too, who was so prominent then, is disabled by failing strength from attending. His accomplished and able son, Mr. Wm. Bunting, is just emerging from a very dangerous illness; so that he also is away. Dr. Wardlaw and Dr. Liefchild are both there; but upon both, especially the former, five years have told with affecting power. Baptist Noel is no longer the same man. That placid grace which animated his fine visage so equably, has given place to deeper lines, and a less sunny expression; altogether he looks older and more like a man who had felt the wear and waste of life. J. A. James and Thomas Binney are much what they were. So also is Dr. Cox, and J. H. Hinton. The youthful air of Dr. King is merging into gray hairs. The dark locks of Dr. Buchanan have grown bright gray. James Hamilton is neither older looking, nor less simple and lovable. Thomas Farmer is stooping. Sir Culling Eardley is growing older. John Henderson is just as white of hair and as fresh of complexion. Adolphe Monod, Tholuck, Fisch, Baup, and Oncken, are little changed. Krumacher, the celebrated author of Elijah, is there, with a large German frame surmounted by a great head, which is luxuriantly overhung with light locks. A persecuted Baptist brother from Sweden, and another from Denmark; a fine Chinese youth, a young Brahmin, just going out to labor among his countrymen, after a residence of some years at Basle, in Switzerland; a Syrian gentleman in full oriental attire, and always wearing on his head the fez, or red close cap, and who has completed his cirriculum of medical studies, and is about to go out to his countrymen as a medical missionary; these all add to the interest of the assembly. The muster of French brethren, of Swiss, and of Germans, is greater than that at the first conference. The other nations of Europe also are represented as they were not then."

THE FOUNDER OF RAGGED SCHOOLS.

John Pounds, the cripple and the cobbler, yet at the same time one of nature's true nobility, was born in Portsmouth, in 1766. His father was a sawyer, employed in the Royal Dock Yard. At fifteen, young Pounds met with an accident which disabled him for life. During the greater part of his benevolent career he lived in a small weather-boarded tenement in St. Mary's Street, Portsmouth, where he might be seen every day, seated on his stool, mending shoes in the midst of his busy little school. One of his amusements was that of rearing singing birds, jays and parrots, which he so perfectly domesticated that they lived harmoniously with his cats and guinea-pigs. Often, it is said, might a canary bird be seen purched upon one shoulder, and a cat upon the other. During the latter part of his life, however, when his scholars became so numerous, he was able to keep fewer of these domestic creatures. Poor as he was, and entirely dependent upon the hard labor of his hands, he nevertheless adopted a little crippled nephew, whom he educated and cared for with truly paternal love, and in the end established comfortably in life. It was out of this connection that his attempts and success in the work of education arose. He thought, in the first instance, that the boy would learn better with a companion. He obtained one, the son of a wretchedly poor mother; then another and another were added; and he found so much pleasure in his employment, and was the means thereby of effecting so much good, that in the end the number of his scholars amounted to forty, including about a dozen little girls. His humble workshop was about six feet by eighteen, in the midst of which he would sit engaged in that labor by which he won his bread, and attending at the same time to the studies of the little crowd around him. So efficient was John Pounds' mode of education, to say nothing about its being perfectly gratuitous, that the candidates were always numerous; he, however, invariably gave the preference to the poorest children—to the 'little blackguards,' as he called them. He has been known to follow such to the Town Quay, and offer them the bribe of a roasted potato if they would come to his school. His influence on these degraded children was extraordinary. As a teacher, his manners were pleasant and facetious. Many hundred persons, now living usefully and creditably in life, owe the whole formation of their character to him. He gave them 'book learning' and taught them also to cook their own victuals and mend their shoes. He was not only frequently their doctor and nurse, but their play-fellow; no wonder was it, therefore, that when, on New-Year's Day, 1839, he suddenly died, at the age of seventy-two, the children wept, and even fainted, on hearing of their loss, and for a long time were overwhelmed with sorrow and consternation. They, indeed, had lost a friend and a benefactor. Such was the noble founder of the first ragged school.

THE SECRET OF GROWING IN GRACE.

In "Richmond's Domestic Portraiture," we find the following language, which is said to have been used by the late Rev. Leigh Richmond's son, Wilberforce, near the close of his life:—

"For the last three months, the Bible has been my sole instructor. It has gradually led me on to clear light and real experience, till every promise is my own. I have read the greater part of it through several times during my illness, and often on a Sunday, when I have spent the day alone, I have read the whole of the New Testament, unable to leave off till I had grasped all the mind of the Spirit at once. Perhaps my father has thought I read too few religious books. He has looked anxious at my neglect of many he put in my way. I do not give myself in this respect as an example; but I have found little benefit from books, sermons, or conversations. The Bible—the Bible alone has taught me every thing. If I read books on religion, however excellent, the thought always haunts me, this book is human, it may be wrong. I could not rest till I went to the Bible. Here I felt all was divine and infallible; and I found such comfort in the simple truth of God's Word, that I set aside every other book dissatisfied."

ARAB HOSPITALITY.—A well-known Arabian horse-stealer once related as follows what had befallen him in the desert:

"I once, as I was astray in the desert, came to a tribe of Bedouins. They received me with great hospitality, and killed a camel every day on my account. I prayed them not to put themselves to such inconvenience, but to let me depart. Still they would not suffer me to go, and every day they killed a camel. At length, one day I got an opportunity, drove off a fleet camel, mounted it and went away with all speed. The owner, who saw me going off with his camel, mounted and pursued me. When he had brought me back, he pointed to a snake that was lying in the sand.

'Seest thou,' said he, 'the tail of that snake there? I will hit it with this arrow.' He shot, and the arrow pierced the tail.

'And with this arrow,' said he, as he drew forth a second, 'I will hit his head.' He shot the snake's head in two.

'Thou seest now,' said he, 'with the third arrow, I should not miss thy breast, and thou dost deserve it for rewarding our hospitality with flight and robbery; but since thou art our guest, go hence in God's name, and choose twenty camels more to take with thee.'"

CALL TO THE MINISTRY.—The Christian Advocate tells a story of a Baptist preacher by the name of Hutchinson, who, on being asked to relate his call to the ministry preparatory to ordination, replied, "I wanted to preach and went at it." But had you no trials? "No; I was happy in the privilege." After he had retired, some objected to his ordination because he had no trials. A venerable elder replied, "The difference between the call of the candidate and yours and mine, is this: He heard the call, and like an obedient son immediately obeyed. We heard, but were disobedient. Like Jonah, we fled; but we were followed and chastened and whipped into the traces with much difficulty. Now shall we object because the candidate was not as stubborn as we were?" He was ordained.

PATIENCE UNDER INJURIES.—Ha[illegible]one permitted himself to make use [illegible] expressions respecting you? B[illegible] by blessings. Does he treat [illegible] patient. Does he reproach you[illegible] proach just? If it be, condemn[illegible] not, it is but breath of air. Flat[illegible] really impart a merit to you[illegible] not; nor calumny give you fa[illegible] not actually possess. Does he tax [illegible] ignorance? In showing yourself an[illegible] justify the charge. Does he persecute [illegible] Think of Jesus Christ. Can you ever suff[illegible] as he has suffered? [St. Basil the Grea[illegible]

A FATHER'S PRAYER.—A pious young man told a clergyman that he had once disobeyed his father, on which the good man retired into his room and shut the door. Curiosity led the boy to look through the keyhole, and he saw his father on his knees at prayer. The boy listened and heard his father praying for him. This struck the youth to the heart; he went away and prayed for himself; his prayer, and the prayer of his parent, were heard; the young man sought mercy through the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world; and became a Christian indeed.

THE REAL CULPRIT.—A noble lady of Florence lost a valuable pearl necklace, and a young girl who waited upon her was accused of theft. As she solemnly denied the charge, she was put to the torture. Unable to support the terrible infliction, she acknowledged that she was guilty, and without further trial was hung. Shortly afterwards, Florence was visited by a tremendous storm, and a thunderbolt fell upon a figure of Justice on a lofty column, and split the scales, one of which fell to the earth, and with it the ruins of a magpie's nest containing the pearl necklace.

PICKING UP THOUGHTS.—Boys, you have heard of blacksmiths who became mayors and magistrates of towns and cities, and men of great wealth and influence. What was the secret of their success? Why they [illegible] up nails and pins in the streets, and [illegible] them home in the pockets of their w[illegible]. Now, you must pick up thoughts in the same way, and fill your mind with them; and they will grow into other thoughts, almost while you are asleep. The world is full of thoughts, and you will find them strewed everywhere in your path. [Burritt.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 9, 1851.

BIBLE TRANSLATION.

The American Bible Union, an institution having for its object "the procuring and circulation of the most faithful versions of the sacred Scriptures in all languages throughout the world," held its Second Anniversary in this city on Thursday last, a brief account of which is given in another column. The occasion has been suggestive of a few thoughts, which we feel disposed to work into the form of an editorial for the benefit of our readers.

We cannot resist the conviction, that the American and Foreign Bible Society has lost sight of the great principle which led to its formation. If that principle was not the faithful translation of the Bible in all languages, the English not excepted, then we had the amazing spectacle of some four hundred men, many of them highly intelligent, learned and influential, and all of them (we trust) imbued with the liberal spirit of the Christian religion, coming together in this nineteenth century from all parts of the Union, and deliberately organizing an institution which was of no manner of use. That the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions was competent to sustain the work of translating and diffusing the Scriptures, in connection with all their missionary stations, and that it had always faithfully performed this work, could not be denied. We are not aware that the most earnest advocates of a separate organization pretended to deny it. And if the intention was never to put into circulation any English version but that of King James, what necessity was there to withdraw from the American Bible Society? If Baptists, in the organization of their new Society, were not contending for a great and glorious principle, and were not willing to apply that principle universally, the only inference left is, that they were actuated by sectarian animosity; which, to be sure, had been provoked by the injustice of the old Society, but which it had been better to have subdued for the sake of peace.

No doubt, larger contributions for the Bible cause have been made by the Baptist denomination since the rupture with the old Society than before. But if the stimulus to such liberality was an appeal to their sectarian feelings merely, in our opinion it had better not been employed. If, however, they were prompted to their liberality by a regard to the great principle of translation, justice to them demanded that this principle should pervade and animate all the councils of their new organization, and stand out in bold relief from first to last.

But is a revision of King James' translation called for? We do most seriously believe it is. And though at first we doubted the expediency of coming at it in the mode proposed by the Bible Union, more mature reflection convinces us that to wait for the united movement of all Christendom in the matter, is to wait forever.

Some talk as if it were impossible to command general regard for a version got up under the auspices of any one denomination, or class of people. But under what circumstances did the common version originate? Was it not got up exclusively under the auspices of Episcopalians? Has it not commanded general favor notwithstanding? But this, say the objectors, was owing to the authority by which it was "appointed to be read in churches"—an authority which cannot be brought to bear in behalf of any new translation. We do not believe it. We have no doubt, that King James' translation has commanded the univer- [illegible]vor that it has, solely because of its supe- [illegible]rinsic excellence on the whole. The [illegible]y of the King may have been all-suf- [illegible] for the English Church, as he was the [illegible] that establishment. But with the nu- [illegible]dissenting churches it availed nothing. [illegible] community never received the trans- [illegible]; and had it been as obnoxious to Protest- [illegible] dissenters as to Catholics, it would have been confined to the church which originated it. But Protestant dissenters adopted it, and have continued to cherish it—not because they considered it perfect, but—because, taken as a whole, it seemed to them superior to any other.

The idea that a translation, in order to gain favor, must be prepared under the auspices of some renowned body—some conclave, which can at once command the respect of all the world—some convention summoned by regal authority, which will afterwards take the work, and push it into circulation—is a very foolish one. The translation, no matter by whom prepared, nor under what circumstances of eclat, must at last stand upon its own merits. It must undergo the ordeal of stern criticism, and its faults must and will become manifest. And if, notwithstanding faults, it is found to be, upon the whole, a better translation than all others, it will be generally adopted. But should it be found to be inferior, not all the authority of councils, nor patronage of kings, could give it currency. The truth of God has always wrought its own way in the world by its own intrinsic power; and all that is now needed, is to have that truth fairly and faithfully expressed. The Author of it will take care of the rest.

With these views, we are not careful about the authority from which a translation emanates. It will have to stand upon its own merits, whoever may prepare it. What though it were prepared by the humble writer of this article? His own name would do nothing towards putting it into circulation, it is true. But if it were a good one, if it stood the test of learned criticism, if it were found after examination to be superior to every other, the source whence it originated would be no bar to its adoption. But if it were a worthless production, it would soon sink into obscurity with its author. We do not know that the Bible Union expect any thing more in regard to any version of the scriptures which they may procure. If they do, they will be disappointed.

LETTER FROM REV. W. H. BLACK.

Mill-Yard, London, 9th mo. 16th, 1851.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Dear Brethren,—My transatlantic friends must not infer, from my silence in the columns of our weekly paper, that I am either inactive or indifferent in the cause of the Scriptural Sabbath. Three years of great suffering from chronic ophthalmia left me, upon the recovery of my ability to read and write in the summer of last year, so vast an accumulation of letters, papers, accounts, business of my public office as an Assistant Keeper of the Records, and that of various Societies and Trusts, that I am still laboring to overcome those arrears. Throughout that dark period, I constantly performed my duties at Mill-Yard, though for months together, preaching with my eyes shut; and excepting when on public business in Ireland, I was but one Sabbath absent from my own pulpit, and then it was to preach to the Sabbath-keeping congregation at Natton near Tewkesbury.

Notwithstanding my manifold and incessant occupations, I can assure you that I labor at all times, and in all companies, to make known the perpetual obligation of the seventh-day Sabbath; and, if I had more time to spare, I trust that it would be proportionately devoted to the duties of an advocate of holy time. However little success may yet have attended my labors for the last twelve or thirteen years, the true Sabbath has been made known by me to ministers and theologians of almost every denomination, to lawyers, antiquaries, and historians, men of literature and science, legislators, both peers and commoners, to the government and to the public at large, by my feeble instrumentality, to an extent unknown in England since the Protectorate and three following reigns, or since the times of those zealous and enlightened advocates of the truth, Edward Elwall and Robert Cornthwaite, whose bones have rested in this place from the years 1744 and 1755. These endeavors I look upon but as so much seed time; the harvest may be confidently expected, though I may not live to see it. Such are the conventional difficulties which prevent the adoption of a right practice in this country, that hundreds have admitted the force of our arguments, and even acknowledged that we are certainly in the right, who still wander in the bye-paths of tradition, when the straight and plain way of God's commandment has been laid open to their views. Such also is the force of prejudice, that many who cannot venture to disprove our position, and who confessedly feel the weakness of their own, continue to call the first day by the name of "Sabbath," and observe it accordingly. I must remark, however, that this last mentioned description of persons consists of the lowest class of theologians, and of persons most scantily versed in biblical science.

I rejoice in the candor which has been manifested by the editors of a small but highly spirited and intelligent Baptist organ, "The Church," which has a monthly circulation of about 30,000 copies. The discussion of the Sabbath question last year and this, in its pages, is the best (I believe) that has ever taken place in the periodical literature of this country. Though I sent it to you, and was much interested by it, I took no part whatever in the discussion. My daughter's query, in which it originated, was published without my knowledge; and the article signed "A Seventh-day Baptist," though written in my house, was both written and published without my knowledge. I was surprised by hearing it read in print, and would have corrected one paragraph of it, had it been first submitted to me. I rejoice, however, in being able boldly to say, that I had nothing to do with the discussion; because it is commonly supposed, that I am the only advocate that the seventh-day Sabbath can boast of here. The thing has been done, and well done, without me; and again I rejoice that you have reprinted the whole, the last article having come to hand this morning.

The passage which I would have corrected consists of a quotation from your Society's Tract No. 3, wherein it is supposed that the Pentecost was reckoned from the Passover. This was not the case until long after our Lord's time, for the law of Moses directs that it should be reckoned from the offering of the first fruits, the time of which depended upon the season of the year, and ripeness of the crops, not on the age of the moon.

This leads me to observe, that I have found much more success in convincing men of the truth holden and practiced by us, when discussing the question on historical, chronological or legal grounds, than when treating it as a matter of conscience. Hence I have inferred that, if a sound opinion could be established among enlightened and influential persons, the force of public prejudice might be much diminished, and at length destroyed. Perceiving that a vast amount of ingorance prevails respecting chronological science, (which is altogether in our favor,) I have for two or three years endeavored to form a society for promoting the study of Chronology, and advancing that science. This (after one failure) I have at length succeeded in doing, by the establishment of "The Chronological Institute of London," which I and Dr. Lee of Hartwell founded on First-day afternoon, the day of the last winter solstice. Its organization was delayed by the retirement and unexpected death of Lord Langdale, who, as Master of the Rolls and Keeper of the Public Records, was at the head of my office. He took a deep interest in Chronology, shewed an uncommon respect for my "conscientious peculiarity," and always read my Scriptural Calendar. This enlightened and distinguished Judge retired from the Bench on 25th third month, in ill health, and died on 18th fourth month, of paralysis, to my great loss and grief. He was to have been our first President. With the exception of a President, our Officers and Council are now organized, and we are about to issue diplomas of honorary membership to learned and studious persons of all nations, who take an interest in Chronology. Some such I trust will be found among the Sabbath-keepers of America, and I shall be happy, as Secretary, to receive their names. We unite, in this Institute, mathematical studies with historical and theological pursuits; and already one of the most distinguished European astronomers, Mr. Hind, the discoverer of the planets Iris, Flora, Victoria, and (the planet of peace) Irene, is one of our Council.

I have collected a large and valuable Library of Chronology, and make occasional additions to the Bibliotheca Sabbatica at Mill-Yard. The latest accession consists of three interesting works by George Carlow on his favorite subject, which have been hitherto quite unknown; of these I will give you some account in a future letter.

Your paper is often quite refreshing; it is delightful to perceive the communications of brethren Davison, Fahnestock, Hull, also our beloved missionaries, and others, to whom must now be added brother Cottrell of (not Mill-Yard, but) Mill-Grove; his last communication is ingenious and interesting, though not infallible in its argument. Our zealous brother Begg of Glasgow writes letters which are equally acceptable to us as to you.

While I dictate this letter, you are, I suppose, either concluding our Anniversaries, or returning from their celebration. You have had our well-wishes and our prayers. May the blessing of Heaven rest on all your institutions. My object is to convince you that I am not neglecting my share of duty, but persevere through many difficulties and discouragements. If, therefore, you should think proper to print this for the information of the brethren, I must entreat you to reprint, in small capitals, that golden sentence, which has been read to me from your leading article received this morning, and which I adopt as emphatically expressing my own sentiments: "A Christian is a reformer. His calling makes him such. All are not Luthers, it is true; and there is but here and there one, whose name is destined to be sounded through the world as an overturner of abuses. Nevertheless, the disciple who does not regard himself as sent into the world to bear some part towards rectifying the errors of mankind, would better pause, and consider why he was called into the service of Christ at all." (Sabbath Recorder, No. 376.)

With the continuance of my most friendly regard toward all the brethren, I declare myself, dear brethren,

Your faithful and affectionate fellow-laborer in the Lord,

W. H. BLACK.

MISSIONARIES BAPTIZED.

Rev. J. W. Morton and lady, late missionaries of the Reformed Presbyterian Church to Hayti, were baptized in De Ruyter, on Sabbath, Sept. 20. The day was auspicious, and a large congregation assembled. Eld. Morton occupied about four hours in bearing his testimony to doctrines, principles, and practices, which he deems requisite to Christian character. It added to the interest of the occasion, that three other missionaries from the same island were present, to rejoice with them in the Lord. Eld. Wm. M. Jones officiated on the occasion. Eld. Morton was first baptized, and then baptized his lady. The scene was solemn, and witnessed impressively for divine truth.

On First-day Eld. Jones and Miss Howard spoke in the First-day Baptist church in relation to Hayti and the Haytien Mission. Miss Howard related an incident of thrilling interest, which I have never seen in print. It speaks for the simplicity of God's truth, and though I cannot give the names, I will narrate the facts.

A traveler, in passing through the island, was taken sick, and was cared for by the hospitable natives, who would take no money for their kind offices. He presented them a Bible as a token of his gratitude; and though heathens, they had learned to read. They read the Bible, and were melted by its precious truths. They learned their duty, and set off in quest of some one to baptize them. They chanced to fall upon a pedobaptist missionary, who by their preaching was convicted of his error and with them sought an administrator. "The foolish things of this world shall confound the wise."

After Miss Howard had concluded her very interesting account of the state of the island and its missions, Elder Jones gave an account of the progress of truth in changing his sentiments in relation to the Sabbath. His address appealed to the consciences of those living in the error which he had abandoned, and it is no mistakable evidence of its effect, that his truly kind appeal excited the pettishness of some who had thought themselves in strong holds on this subject. Some find themselves under the necessity of striving to brace each other up in order to hold on their course, and when other means fail, such subterfuges as "judaizing," and the like, are a convenient shield against the arrows of truth.

The Providence of God in opening the minds of brethren Jones and Morton to the law of the Sabbath, is full of meaning, and I trust will not stop where it is. The day of decision is at hand, and we are called upon to gird ourselves for the race, and harness for the battle.

J. R. IRISH.

DeRuyter, Sept. 23, 1851.

Abstract of Mr. Morton's Discourses.

Mr. Morton's first discourse was from the text Romans 13: 1—7. The doctrine was stated to be, that human government has nothing to do but to administer the written law of God. "He is the minister of God."

1. Proof from reason. (1.) God only can have a right to make laws. (2.) Human legislation affords no safeguard to human liberty. (3.) The family of man can never be united into one brotherhood except under the divine law.

2. Proof from Scripture. (1.) The text—"a minister," not a legislator but an executor. (2.) Exodus 20: 2—"Thou shalt have no other gods;" God is our lawgiver. (3.) Civil rulers are commanded to confine themselves to the administration of the divine law. Deut. 4: 1, 2; 5: 32, 33; 17: 14; Josh. 1: 7, 8; Dan. 4: 24, 27, 31, 35.

These positions he advocated with ingenuity, and answered many supposed objections.

Mr. Morton's second discourse pertained to the six following themes:—1. Church Government; 2. Covenantings; 3. Doctrines of Grace; 4. Psalmody; 5. The Sabbath; 6. Baptism.

1. Of Church Government he maintained that it is essentially Presbyterian. The officers of the church, elders or bishops, and deacons. Of the elders, some rule only; others, beside ruling, "labor in word and doctrine." Texts in proof, 1 Tim. 5: 17; Titus 1: 5; 1 Peter 5: 1—5; Heb. 13: 17; 7: 24; 1 Tim. 3: 5; Rom. 12: 4—8; 1 Cor. 10: 16, 17, &c.

2. In regard to covenanting, he said, It is the duty of the Church as well as the State to enter into covenant with God in Christ.

3. The doctrines of grace, he stated briefly.

4. Psalmody. (1.) God by his Spirit gave the Psalms to be used in worship. (2.) These Psalms are better than anything that man can compose. (3.) The singing of human poetry prevents, in whole or in part, the singing of the Psalms. (4.) It opens a wide door for the introduction of error. (5.) It perpetuates divisions in the church. (6.) It prevents the growth of piety.

5. The Sabbath. He referred to his published work, "Vindication of the Sabbath."

6. Baptism. (1.) The subjects—believers; baptism is an outward profession of faith and repentance. (2.) It is a sign of regeneration, which always precedes faith and repentence. (3.) It is a sign of the believer's solemn covenant with God. (4.) There is no warrant for the baptism of infants. (5.) The mode—immersion.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE UNION.

The Second Anniversary of the American Bible Union was held in the meeting-house of the 1st Baptist Church in New York on Fifth-day last—morning, afternoon, and evening.

In the morning session, the officers and managers for the ensuing year were elected, the Reports of the Treasurer and the Corresponding Secretary were read, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Spencer H. Cone and Rev. A. Maclay.

In the afternoon, the Committee on the Plan of Revision made a report, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Adlam of Newport, R. I., and Rev. D. E. Thomas of Ohio.

In the evening, Rev. Mr. Inglis of Detroit, Mich., and Rev. J. Challen of Ohio, delivered addresses; after which the President made a few closing remarks, and the congregation was dismissed with the benediction.

Some of the above-named addresses were read from print, and all of them appear in an extra of the New York Chronicle of last Sabbath. We have not room for even an abstract of them this week, but shall look them over at our leisure, and if any parts of them appear to us particularly note-worthy, may make extracts. Meanwhile we copy from the N. Y. Tribune an abstract of the Treasurer's Report, and a summary of the operations of the Union during the year.

Abstract of Treasurer's Report.

Balance on hand last year	$4,061 69
Received	10,433 98
Paid for printing reports, &c	$1,001 45
Room rent, &c	419 77
Salaries and agencies	4,384 15
Cor. Secretary and assistant.	1,800 00
For Karen Scriptures	1,000 00
To Eng. Bap. Miss. Union for India	1,000 00
For operations in France	496 27
Revision of the English Bible	168 61
Contingent expenses	164 05
Leaving a balance on hand of	$4,071 77

Summary of Operations.

The American Bible Union has been in existence a little less than sixteen months. During this time it has raised in cash over $15,000, and obtained, in subscriptions for life-memberships and directorships, over and above all that has been paid in, nearly $30,000.

During the last year, it has appropriated $1,000 for printing and circulating the Karen Scriptures through the American Baptist Missionary Union, 1,000 for the versions in India through the English Missionary Society, $1,000 for the correction of the French Scriptures, and various smaller sums for that of the English Scriptures.

The attention of the Board has been more particularly devoted through the year to the three languages most extensively spoken throughout the world—the Spanish, French, and English.

In the Spanish language the Union is cooperating with the Trustees of the Spanish Bible Fund in Great Britain in procuring a faithful revised version of the New Testament. This is expected to be completed and stereotyped, and copies to be ready for distribution within the coming year. Every possible precaution is being taken to insure accuracy, while the revision is strictly conducted on the principles of the Union. The most gratifying intelligence of the progress of the work is contained in the Annual Report.

The correction of the French Testament is being conducted in France itself. Negotiations have been prosecuted with two most dtstinguished scholars, natives and residents of the country, and authority has been given to consummate the contracts for the prosecution of the work.

Special care and attention have been devoted to maturing and prosecuting a plan for the correction of the English New Testament. This has so far advanced that the coöperation of a considerable number of distinguished scholars in Great Britain and this country has been secured, and the Board are now prepared to close the contracts with many of them. Upon this subject a Committee appointed from different States, having, with great care, examined the plan and proceedings of the Board and of the Committee on Versions, will present a full report to the Union at the present session. From the arrangements made and the progress of the work, it is reasonably concluded, that the revision of the New Testament will be completed, and the book be in the hands of the printers within the lapse of two years from the present time.

The following is the principle adopted by the Board and strictly applied in the three languages to which reference has been made, and it is designed to be universally applied to versions made or patronized by the Union: The exact meaning of the inspired text, as that text expressed it to those who understood the original Scriptures at the time they were first written, must be translated by corresponding words and phrases, so far as they can be found in the vernacular tongue of those for whom the version is designed, with the least possible obscurity or indefiniteness.

LETTERS FROM OUR MISSIONARIES.

Two ships from Shanghai, the Carrington and the Horatio, arrived at New York last week, bringing letters from brethren Carpenter and Wardner, written about the last of April. They were then in good health, and prosecuting their work with vigor and hope. The chapel was in process of erection, and would be completed in about two months. Connected with it are apartments for the accommodation of one family. The following paragraph from a letter of Mrs. Carpenter to Paul Stillman, will be read with interest:

"Ne-may was delighted with her presents. I feel an increasing interest in her, and also in Ah-nah. I had feared much that the long season of inactivity, almost of slumber, which the old lady has endured since the commencement of cold weather, would so affect her, that she would awake from it only to distress us with her apathy or indifference to religion. But a few days since I found her seated upon her bed, 'clothed and in her right mind.' I asked her if she felt pain in her eyes; she said 'slightly, but it is of no consequence.' I then inquired after her other sufferings; she mentioned all as slight. 'And how is it in your heart?' 'Peace—all is right,' she said. She then spoke with much feeling of her religious peace, her love to God, and faith in Jesus; and truly my heart burned within me while we conversed. Her bodily vigor seems decreasing, but her soul seems really renewed day by day. I can but believe her, in deed and in truth, 'a brand plucked from the burning.' As she is confined to her room, and almost to her bed, it is impossible to say what would be her testimony to the world were she able to go in and out; but from what we now perceive, she is a child of God, fast ripening for admittance into her Father's house above. Other members of the family seem confirmed in idolatry. Death has visited them once and again since our acquaintance, until eight within the past four years have died; but the living are still blinded."

Temperance in Massachusetts.—The friends of temperance in Massachusetts held a State Convention at Worcester last week, which was attended by nearly 800 delegates, including many distinguished advocates of the cause. Among the resolutions adopted was one urging, as the one thing now desirable and practicable for the temperance men of Massachusetts, an immediate agitation for the enactment of a law as nearly as possible identical with the Maine law. Another commended the President for abstaining from all intoxicating drinks during his late visit to Boston. Another appointed a Central Executive Board of nine persons, to carry out the will of the Convention. The early adoption by Massachusetts of a law similar to the Maine Liquor Law, is considered almost a certainty.

Scotch Presbyterians and Slavery.—A difference has occurred in the Associate Reformed Church, which is composed of Scotch Presbyterian emigrants, on the subject of Slavery, that threatens a disruption of the body. The Philadelphia Synod, at its Spring Session, issued a strong testimony against slaveholding, in which they called on the sister Synods to concur. The New York Synod, recently held, refused to comply with the request, on the ground that there is no slavery within their bounds, and also, that slavery is a civil institution.

Sailing of Missionaries.—The brig Lowder sailed from New York last week for Western Africa, taking out as missionaries of the American Board, Rev. Wm. Walker and Rev. Ira M. Preston and lady, for the station on Gaboon River. A lady, to be connected with the mission of the General Assembly's Board, near Gaboon, went out in the same vessel.

Death of a Missionary.—The brig Louisa, which arrived at Boston last week, from Gambia, reports the death of Rev. James Moore, M. D., of the Monrovia Mission, which occurred Aug. 26th, from an accident on board the Louisa.

Montreal Churches.—The French Catholic Cathedral, "Notre Dame," in Montreal, is said to be the largest and most imposing building in America. It is capable of seating 10,000 persons, is 300 feet high, and is flanked by two towers, each 250 feet high. "The Wesleyan Church in Montreal," says a correspondent, "is the largest Protestant church in Canada, and the most commodious Methodist Church in America, and will seat 3,000 persons."

Slave-catching in Buffalo.—On the 31st ult., Deputy Marshal Geo. B. Yates, of the Northern District, arrested an alledged fugitive slave named Harrison, near Jamestown, Chautauque Co., N. Y. The following morning he brought him to Buffalo, via Dunkirk, handcuffed and strongly guarded. After an examination before Commissioner Smith, it was decided that the boy was a fugitive slave, and an order was issued for returning him to his master, Dr. Parsons, of Hardy Co., Virginia. The negro was a mulatto, and about 19 years of age. When about being removed from the court-room, he said, "I would rather die than return to slavery." Harrison left Virginia with seven other fugitives in January last. Two of the party returned about six weeks ago for their wives, and were arrested, and then exposed the whereabout of their companions. This resulted in Harrison's arrest. The officers had warrants for three other fugitives who were in Jamestown, but they escaped into Canada.

Slave-catching in Syracuse.—At Syracuse, N. Y., on the 1st inst., about noon, a Fugitive Slave was arrested and brought before U. S. Commissioner Sabine for examination. Thereupon the bells of the different churches commenced tolling, and handbills were distributed, calling on the citizens to congregate and see a negro kidnapper. The Commissioner's office was soon crowded, and a rescue was successfully carried out. Two hours afterward the fugitive was recaptured, and his examination was resumed with closed doors. About dusk a crowd gathered around the police office, and threw stones into the windows so as to induce the court to adjourn over till the next morning. Meanwhile the crowd increased, and they could not be dispersed until they had made an entrance into the building, released the slave, and sent him on his way to Canada. Several arrests were made of persons charged with assisting the negro's escape. The agent of the claimant was also arrested for an attempt to kidnap.

National Anti-Slavery Convention.—A National Anti-Slavery Convention was held in Cleveland, Ohio, week before last, over which Dr. F. J. Lemoyne presided, and among the active members of which were J. R. Giddings and Cassius M. Clay. The object of the Convention was to concentrate more perfectly the anti-slavery sentiment of the country. Resolutions and an Address were adopted. The resolutions, besides reaffirming the Free-Soil Principles, take decided ground in favor of Land Reform, River and Harbor Improvements, and the disbanding of the Army and reduction of the Navy.

Indicted for Treason.—In Philadelphia, on Sixth-day last, the Grand Jury in the United States District Court found true bills against Elijah Lewis, Joseph Scarlet, Caspar Hannaway, and James Jackson, white men; and 27 colored men, being all of those in custody except one, for treason, in participating in the Christiana affair. The bill against George Wise, one of the colored men in custody, was ignored.

Father Mathew.—E. K. Collins, Esq., agent of the New York and Liverpool U. S. Mail Steamship Company, has tendered to Father Mathew and his Secretary a free passage home by either of the ships of that Company. They have accepted the offer, and signified their intention to take the steamer of Oct. 25th.

Memoir of Dr. Judson.—Messrs. Derby & Miller, of Auburn, N. Y., have published a "Memoir of Adoniram Judson," prepared by J. Clement. It is a large duodecimo volume, and gives a faithful and interesting account of the life and missionary labors of that noble man. The editor has made free use of Mr. Judson's own narrative, in which he has shown good taste, and added to the value of his work. It is understood, we believe, that a more elaborate biography, from the pen of Mrs. Judson, will soon be issued. Meanwhile this will be a most acceptable work to the many admirers of Dr. Judson. Sold by E. H. Fletcher, New York.

Healy's Union Picture.—Healy's great Picture of Daniel Webster replying to General Hayne in the United States Senate in 1830, is now on exhibition at the rooms of the National Academy of Design, No. 663 Broadway, N. Y. The appearance of Mr. Webster and the Senate, at the enunciation, "Liberty and Union—now and forever," is very vividly represented in the picture. The artist has been some six years studying the subject, and has produced a work of great and permanent value.

Fair of the American Institute.—The great Fair of the American Institute opened at Castle Garden, New York, last week, and will continue open for some two weeks to come. The display of machinery, manufactured articles, and agricultural products, is said to be very large and attractive.

"Better late than never."—Mr. J. H. W. Hawkins writes as follows to Mr. Marsh, of the Temperance Union, from Waterville, Me.:—

"The authorities here have poured out 120 gallons of rum which had been deposited for safe keeping in the cellar of the Almshouse. They took it out in front of the building, and, as soon as it began to run, a woman, an inmate of the Almshouse, cried with a loud voice: 'If that had been done thirty years ago, my husband would not have died a drunkard, and I, with my six children, would not now have been here.'"

New-Year Celebration.—The year 5612 of the Jewish Era commenced on Saturday Sept. 27, being the 1st day of the month Tisri. The Feast for the New Year, which is one of the strict festivals of the Hebrews, was duly observed in all the Synagogues in New York. This Levitical ordinance is based upon the command in Levit. xxiii. 23:

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a Sabbath, a memorial of the blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation. Ye shall do no servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord."

Within a short period a number of Feasts and Fasts of the Mosaic Ritual are to be observed:

Fast of Gedaliah	Tisri 4	Sept. 30
Fast of Expiation	Tisri 10	Oct. 6
Feast of Tabernacles	Tisri 15	Oct. 11
Sec. Feast of Tabernacles	Tisri 16	Oct. 12
Feast of Palms	Tisri 21	Oct. 17
End of the Hut Feast	Tisri 22	Oct. 18
Rejoicing for the Law	Tisri 23	Oct. 19
Consecration of Temple	Chisleu 25	Nov. 29

Missions among the Indians.—It is said that in thirteen of the tribes of Indians in the West missionaries of the various denominations are residing and laboring. The Sacs and Foxes are as yet without them—the latter tribe having repeatedly repelled all attempts to establish a mission among them. The Shawnees have three Missions—one by the Baptists, one by the Methodists, and one by the Friends; the Wyandots have a Methodist Missionary; the Delawares, a Methodist and a Baptist; the Muncies, one Moravian; the Stockbridges, one Methodist; the Pottawatamies, one Baptist and one Roman Catholic; the Kanzas, (or Caws,) one Methodist; the Peroias and Kaskaskias, one Baptist; the Weas and Piankashaws, one Baptist.

Free Presbyterian Synod.—This body, composed of seceders from the two branches of the Presbyterian Church, on the ground of Slavery, held its meeting in Ripley, Ohio, recently. The Synod was formed about four years ago, and consisted of eleven ministers. It now numbers between thirty and forty ministers and from forty to fifty churches. Among the business of the meeting, a declaration and testimony were adopted against the Fugitive Slave law, in the form of a covenant, pledging all who subscribe it "to disobey the unjust and tyrannical mandates of the Fugitive bill, and, if need be, to suffer its penalties."

A Petition to the Pope.—Rev. Dr. Durbin, the eloquent Methodist divine, in a vigorous article in the Christian Advocate and Journal, recommends that a petition be presented, by Christians of all denominations, to the Pope, to allow within his dominions "the true principles of religious freedom," as a simple equivalent to the freedom granted to Catholics throughout the Christian world.

Baptist Missions in Europe.—Rev. Dr. J. M. Peck, Foreign Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, now on a tour of observation in Europe, has recently written home an interesting letter. He had visited all the missionary stations in France, and represents the cause of evangelization in that country as quite encouraging.

First Chinese Church.—The first Baptist Church organized in China was the Tie Chin Church at Hong-Kong, by the Rev. W. Dean, in 1843. It originally consisted of three members, converted Chinese, two of whom were the first Christian converts on that island. Twenty-nine have been baptized since the organization of the church.

Methodist Conference in California.—The Methodist journals propose that after the close of the year 1851, California shall cease to be regarded as missionary ground; that thirteen missionaries be sent out, who, with those on the ground, will be sufficient to organize a Conference, which shall become an integral part of the General Conference.

Free-Will Baptist College.—The enterprise formerly commenced by the Free-Will Baptists, to found a college at Elgin, Ill., and discontinued for want of funds, is about to be resumed under the joint auspices of the Close-Communion and Free-Will Baptists.

Presbyterianism in Missouri.—The New School Presbyterian Synod of Missouri, at its late meeting, resolved, in view of the great need for more ministers, and the difficulty of obtaining them from the East, to establish a College, either at St. Louis or St. Charles, and appointed a Committee to secure the funds.

Mission in Siam.—The Old School Presbyterian Mission in Siam has recently communicated the death of the King of Siam, which it is thought will remove a great hindrance to missionary labor in that country. The new king is a man of more liberal views, inclined to modify but not to give up Budhism.

Baptist W. Noel.—It is rumored that Rev. Baptist W. Noel, the distinguished seceder from the Established Church of England, will visit the United States next spring.

Remarkable Memory.—The Yew York correspondent of the Burlington Courier relates the following:—

A friend of mine recently offered to wager that his daughter, a girl fifteen years old, would repeat from memory the entire contents of any page of any single copy of the New York Sun, within twenty-four hours after its publication. You know, of course, that this paper is almost wholly filled with advertisements. Considering the want of connection between the paragraphs, and the number and variety of the advertisements, I thought I might safely venture a V; so I selected the third page of that day's issue.

Imagine my astonishment, however, when the next day the talented young lady, accompanied by her father, called upon me, and repeated the contents of the entire seven columns, verbatim et literatim. I regard this as a most remarkable instance of the magic power of memory.

General Intelligence.

European News.

The steamer Canada, with three days later news from Europe, arrived at Boston on the 2d inst.

The English news is devoid of interest.

The attractions of the Crystal Palace are as great as ever, and the actual profits of the exhibition exceed all possible anticipation. It was undoubtedly the greatest speculation ever yet engaged in.

The gold fever in England in reference to the discovery of the precious metal in its colonies, is likely to rival that of America.

In France, great satisfaction was manifested at the manner in which the laying of the corner-stone of the Central Market, by the President, passed off. The market-women were received the next morning by the President at the Elysée.

A most frightful accident happened at the Chateau de Laroche Guyon. The Dowager Duchess de Mailly, who was there on a visit to her friend, the Duchess de Rochefoucault, was accidentally burnt to death.

In China, rebellion was gaining ground in all quarters. The Imperial troops could make no impression on the rebels.

A conspiracy to effect the escape of Moolray had been discovered in Calcutta. It was reported that the arsenal had been set on fire and the prisoners liberated in the confusion.

Twenty villages around Goolburgale had been plundered and burnt by the Rehillos. It was also rumored that Golab Singh's troops had been beaten by the people, at a place some four days' journey from Cashmere.

Twenty-one Days later from California.

The steamship Prometheus, from San Juan de Nicaragua, arrived at New York on the 4th inst., bringing 465 passengers, and San Francisco dates to Sept. 6. The passage from San Francisco to New York was made in 28 days.

In San Francisco the Vigilance Committee still continue their operations. On Sunday afternoon, Aug. 24, they hung two men, named Lemuel Whitaker and Robert Mackenzie. These men were first arrested by the Committee—then rescued by the authorities—and subsequently recaptured and hung by the Committtee.

In Sacramento City also a similar excitement took place, growing out of the reprieve, by Gov. McDougal, of Robinson, one of the highway robbers condemned with two others to be executed. The people took charge of the prisoner, and after the officers of the law had fulfilled their duties upon the two others, proceeded to execute him. Gov. McDougal was burnt in effigy, and in public resolutions requested to resign.

There was a large fire at Marysville on the 30th of August, the loss by which is estimated at half a million of dollars.

The steamer Fawn burst her boiler, on the Sacramento River, near Sacramento City, killing and wounding a large number of persons.

The news from the mines confirms the favorable accounts received by the last advices.

The steamship La Fayette was entirely destroyed by fire, while lying at Chagres, on the 11th of September. The passengers and crew were all saved; part of the freight was lost. She had arrived there a few days previous, and had taken on board a few passengers to return, some of whom—such was the rapidity with which the flames spread—saved nothing but the clothes on their backs. The fire is said to have occurred from a quantity of camphene shipped by Palmer's Express. The La Fayette was under the command of Capt. Stoddard, and was a new ship. She had only ly made a voyage to previous to going to Chagres.

The clipper ship Flying Cloud, Capt. Creesey has made the qutckest trip on record to San Francisco. She left New York on the 2d of June, at 6 P. M., and arrived at San Francisco on the 31st of Aug., thus making the passage in the unprecedented short period of eighty-nine days. She made Cape Horn in 50 days, and the line (Pacific side) in 71 days. Her run from Cape Horn to San Francisco was made in 39 days Her best run in 24 hours was 374 miles—the greatest run ever made by a sea-going vessel—averaging 15¾ miles per hour. While making this run, she was carrying top-gallant sails with the wind one point forward of the beam. She run in three days 992 miles. On one occasion, during a squall, 17 knots of line were found insufficient to measure her speed; 40 miles was her shortest run in 24 hours. When ten days out, she sprung her mainmast head, rendering the mast very tender the rest of the voyage. The Flying Cloud was built by Mr. Donald McKay, of East-Boston, and owned by Messrs. Grinnell, Minturn & Co., of this city.

The War in Central America.—A New-Orleans paper of Sept. 26, says: By accounts in the Mexican papers, we learn that hostilities have actually commenced between Salvador and Guatemala. It appears that General Carrera, at the head of 1,500 men, invaded Salvador, and encountered the Salvadorian army, 4,500 strong, under President Varasconcelos, at a place called San Jose. An engagement took place, in which, according to the Guatemalean accounts, Carrera was completely successful, routing the allied army, which lost 228 killed, 150 or 200 prisoners, 1,000 muskets, and a large amount of ammunition, &c. Carrera's loss, according to these reports, was about fifty. In the pursuit which followed, the Salvadorian army sustained still further losses. Carrera has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the forces of Guatemala, and medals have been voted by the Congress to the soldiers engaged in the battle of San Jose. At the City of Guatemala 7,000 persons were under arms. It appears that, after this brilliant victory, Carrera took up a position at the town of Santa Anna, but, on the approach of General Cabanas, he retired into the Guatemalean territory. The reasons for this singular movement are not known.

At Cleveland, the other day, officer McKimtry arrested a man from Cincinnati for selling counterfeit Land Warrants; found several in his possession, of the best and newest plate of warrants issued to Mexican soldiers. He passed several in Cincinnati.

Trouble among the Banks.—The stringency in the money market, which has been felt for some time past in all our importing cities, has produced several failures among the banks. The following list embraces all that were broken on the 5th inst.—probably all that will break at present:—

James Bank, Saratoga Co., N. Y.
Bank of New-Rochelle, Allegany Co.
Farmers' Bank, of Mina, Chautauque Co.
Western Bank, White Creek.
People's Bank, Patterson, N. J.
Commercial Bank, Perth Amboy, N. J.
Band of Salisbury, Maryland.

The notes of the broken State Banks are bought by the Brokers at the following rates:

James Bank	25 per ct. dis.
Bank of New-Rochelle	25 per ct. dis.
Farmers' Bank, Mina.	10 per ct. dis.
Western Bank, White Creek.	10 per ct. dis.

Liberty Party Nominations.—The Liberty Party of the State of New York held a Convention at Syracuse last week, and nominated the following candidates for State officers:—

Judge Court Appeals	Wm. Goodell, Ontario.
Controller	Lindley M. Moore, Monroe.
Secretary of State	John Thomas, Onondaga.
State Treasurer	Charles D. Miller, Madison.
Attorney-General	George W. Johnson, Erie.
State Engineer	M. D. Pinney, Tioga.
Canal Commissioner	J. C. Harrington, Oswego.
State Prison Inspector	Hugh Smith, Jefferson.

Four Slaves Remanded.—At Harrisburg, Pa., on the 26th ult., the four fugitives, John Stoucher, John Bell, Edward Michael, and Finton Mercer, charged by Michael Lentz, on suspicion, of having participated in the Christiana riots, were brought before Judge Pearson, on a writ of habeas corpus. The Judge decided that the Magistrate committed a gross dereliction of duty in issuing a commitment without evidence. The prisoners were, therefore, discharged for want of evidence.

Immediately after their discharge, Commissioner McAllister pointed to them, and declared they were in charge of his officers. The negroes were then handcuffed in open Court, and conveyed to the Commissioner's office where an examination was held with closed doors. The examination resulted in the slaves being handed over to their claimants.

Hudson River Railroad.—The Hudson River Railroad is to be opened through to Albany in the course of this week. It is intended to run upon it three through trains each way daily, with a sufficient number of way trains between New York and Peekskill to accommodate the local travel. This road will complete the rail communication from New-York to Buffalo, and render the commercial metropolis as accessible in Winter as in Summer from the central districts and the Capital of the State. In its unfinished state, during the past year, it has been traveled by over one million of passengers. It is estimated that passengers will be taken to Albany by this route in half the time required by the fastest steamers, and at prices as cheap as are demanded by any road in the Union. Its completion is an even of importance in the history of the State. [Tribune.

Factories at the South.—There are in full operation at Columbus, Geo., four Cotton Mills, with a capital of $360,000, and employing 560 hands. In these mills are 14,636 spindles and nearly 400 looms. Another cotton mill has recently been completed, intended to be worked by slaves, and which is said to be much larger than either of the other four; but it has not yet gone into operation. There are also in Columbus and its immediate vincinity, a Cotton Gin manufactory, which turns out 1,200 gins annually, a very extensive Flouring Mill, and two Foundries and Machine Shops. The editor of The Clinton (La.) Floridian has an interesting sketch of the Woodville, Miss., Cotton Factory, which is said to be turning out 38,000 yards Cotton Cloth per week. Four thousand spindles are constantly employed. The capital invested is $65,000; profits about fifty per cent., and the number of operatives is generally one hundred and twenty-five, at a cost of $4 25 per week.

SUMMARY.

The wild pigeons made their nests this yerr on Rand Hill, Beekmantown, N. Y., in a line about six miles long and one to two miles wide. It is said that 150,000 dozen were sent to market, and 700 bushels of grain used in baiting them. One man, Charles Brown, of Mass., took 1200 at one haul. They flew about several days preparing for their departure, and took leave on the 17th of July, darkening the sky by their numbers.

The oldest resident of Oregon is M. Revit, a Canadian Frenchman, who went to that country in 1805, in the company of Lewis and Clarke. He is in his 93d year, and the newspapers of Oregon say he is healthy, robust and active, bidding fair to outlive the hundred. He is the next oldest man in the Territory, there being one other old inhabitant who approximates more nearly a centenarian.

Of 8,000,000 yards of carpeting annually consumed in the United States, 6,889,190 yards are of American manufacture, requiring 13,000,000 lbs. of wool. The Courier and Enquirer affirms, "without fear of contradiction, that there are a greater number and richer carpets in the city of New York than can be collected from the floors of the entire European continent, Turkey excepted."

Gilmore's Model Apiary, at Brooklyn, is a curiosity well worth seeing. It is a house of one story, surrounding an open area, the sides of which are glazed and fitted up with little glass boxes, in which bushels of bees are at work depositing honey. They are also fed with a trough full of some mixture, costing 3½ cents per lb., which the bees change into fine honey, with a loss of only 25 per cent. in weight.

The estate of the famous Jemima Wilkinson, in Yates county, N. Y., is now in litigation. Those adherents to whom Jemima bequeathed her property, in turn bequeathed it to relations of their own; the niece of one of them married a man named Clark, who, becoming intemperate and embarrassed, conveyed the land away, and professes to have been cheated.

Three persons, a man and two women, were drowned in the North River near Kingston on Sunday afternoon by the upsetting of a small boat.

A dispatch dated Utica, N. Y. Oct. 1, says:—Orcutt, who is to be hung for incendiarism, attempted to break out of jail last night. When the Jailor went in to secure him for the night, Orcutt knocked him down with a piece of chain. The Jailor, assisted by his wife, struggled with the prisoner until help came, and he was secured. During the scuffle Orcutt said, "If I am to be hung, I will be hung for something." The Jailor is badly bruised.

Recent accounts say that the revolution in Mexico is thus far successful. It commenced at Camargo, where the patriots attacked the Mexicans. The patriots came off victorious, having taken the town by storm, with a loss on the side of the Mexicans of sixty. The Government troops were intrenched in a church with artillery.

The New-Orleans Picayune of the 19th ult. gives the following account of a honey-moon and its results: "Dorothea Walker was yesterday charged by her husband, A. Walker, with having, during a four-weeks marriage, quarreled with him, threatened his life, burnt him with a hot iron, stabbed him in the cheek, and beat and kicked him. A warrant was issued."

The Corporation of Washington, D. C., have passed a law that any person applying for a license to sell intoxicating drinks, must bring a petition, signed by a majority of the housekeepers on the block on which the rum-shop is proposed to be established, which petition must state that said rum-hole is needed for the public good and convenience, and that the applicant is a suitable person to keep it.

Mr Samuel Chappel, Deacon of the Berean Baptist Church, New York, died suddenly just before the commencement of public service, on Sunday morning. He had taken his seat, when he laid back his head, and being carried into an ante-room, in a few moments breathed his last. The disease was apoplexy, of which he had had a previous attack some six months ago, in church.

The Montreal Courier is very indignant because steamboats are advertised to sail from that city on Sunday, on a excursion to Longuell, where there is to be a show of fireworks. The Courier says the Colony is British, and therefore ought to be Protestant, and that this desecration of sacred time is an insult to those whose fleets and bayonets conquered the country and have kept it in subjection.

In the Court of Oyer and Terminer, in New York, a week ago last Sabbath, the sentence of death was passed upon three murderers—Joseph Clarke, Michael Mulvey, and James Sullivan. Friday, November 21st, was fixed for the execution.

Young Gorsuch, who was wounded in the Christiana riot, is recovering. Several of the persons arrested for participation in the riot are to be tried at Philadelphia for treason against the United States.

The Miner's Express of Dubuque says the divorce law of Iowa affords so many facilities for sundering the nuptial knot, that parties are constantly flocking to that State for the purpose of availing themselves of its provisions.

The receipts of the Erie Railroad for the month of September, 1851, were as follows: From Passengers and Mail, $192,255 60. From Freight, 114,633 36. Total, $306,888 96.

Hiram Wheeler, Esq., of Lexington, Greene County, lately found a stalk of buckwheat on his farm, in a field of six acres, containing three thousand and two hundred kernels!

A great sale of Ohio Canal lands will take place at Defiance on the 22d of October, in tracts not exceeding half quarter sections, the money to be paid on the day of sale.

A man in Georgia subscribes for a copy of The Southern Christian Advocate, to be placed on the Railroad cars between Macon and Oglethorpe, for the use of passengers.

The N. Y. and Erie Railroad Company last week gave free passage from New York to Detroit for 81 Hungarian exiles who recently arrived from Europe.

Late advices from the City of Mexico state that the Cabinet resigned in a body on the 2d inst., and much disaffection prevailed throughout the country, which was in the most deplorable and abject condition.

On the 29th ult. there met at Boston ten sisters, whose united ages amount to 702 years. Their mother lived to near one hundred, and they are themselves hale, straight, and hearty. They belong to the Puritanical school.

The White Mountains were covered with snow on Wednesday, Sept. 24. Snow fell in sufficient quantities to whiten the ground in other places in New-Hampshire.

Commissioner H. K. Smith at Buffalo issued warrants for the arrest of five fugitive Slaves, on Saturday before last. The men got safe across to Canada the same morning.

A plot of ground 9 feet by 45, in Exeter, N. H., yielded, this Summer, 1,016 lbs. of Squashes, which sold for one cent per lb. An acre at the same rate would yield $1,092 76.

In the list of Patents issued in the week ending Sept. 23, is oneto "Geo. B. Clarke, of Leonardsville, N. Y., for Improvement in Churns, dated Sept. 23, 1851."

Incendiarism is prevailing at Troy to a fearful extent. The Church of the Holy Cross was set on fire at midnight on Monday, and totally destroyed.

Ezra Robbins was accidentally shot dead with a rifle, by his son-in-law, John Roberts, in Claremont N. H., on Sunday. The parties were in the woods gunning.

The population of Rhode Island, according to the official statement, is 147,544, and that of Georgia is 524,318 free, and 386,681 slaves.

The population of Connecticut, as officially published, is 370,791: of Alabama, free, 428,779; slaves, 345,892.

Apprehensions are entertained in Minnesota that the long and heavy rains will seriously injure the oat crop.

Two chimpanzees, two boa-constrictors, and one ostrich, arrived at Salem on Friday from Rio Pongos, Africa, in brig Allen.

The thousandth anniversary of the foundation of the Russian empire is to be celebrated in 1852, with commemorative fetes.

A man was fined $40 and costs at Jamaica, Long Island, a few days since, for killing four cat-birds, in violation of the game-laws.

New York Market—October 6, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $5 00; Pearls 5 50.

Flour and Meal—Flour is in better demand at 3 68 a 3 75 for State, 3 75 a 4 00 for Ohio, Michigan, and Indiana, 4 12 a 4 25 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 25 a 3 31. Corn Meal 3 25 a 3 50.

Grain—Wheat 61c. for Chicago, 87c. for white Michigan, 89c. for Southern white. Rye 67c. Barley scarce at 77 a 78c. for fair two-rowed. Corn 58½ a 59½c. for good to prime Western mixed, 63c. for round yellow. Oats in demand at 34 a 36c. for Jersey, 38 a 40c. for State.

Provisions—Pork, 12 00 a 13 50 for prime, 15 00 a 15 37 for mess. Beef, 5 00 a 6 00 for prime, 8 75 a 11 00 for mess. Dressed hogs 7 a 7½c. Lard 8½ a 9½c. Butter 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 10 a 15c. for State. Cheese 6 a 6¾c.

Feathers—40c for prime western live geese.
Hops—20 a 22c. for western.
Hay—50 a 56c. for River.
Lime—90c. for common, 1 25 for lump.
Lnmber—12 00 a 13 00 for Spruce and Pine.
Seeds—Clover 9 a 9½c. Timothy 15 a 23c. Flax 1 30 a 1 33.

MARRIED.

In Hebron, Pa, Sept. 28, 1851, by Eld. H. P. Burdick, Mr. Albert White to Miss Electa Lynch, all of Hebron, Pa.

In Brookfield, N. Y., September 23, by Eld. E. S. Bailey, Mr. John W. Mathewson, of New Berlin, to Miss Sophronia A. Babcock, of Brookfield.

In Hopkinton, R. I., Sept. 28, by Eld. D. Coon, Mr. Cortland West to Miss Ann M. Murphy, all of Westerly, R. I.

DIED.

In Sangerfield, Oneida Co., N. Y., Sept. 22d, of disease of the heart, Hiul Williams, aged 46 years. Bro. Williams was a worthy member of the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, and a devoted Christian. By this stroke of Providence, his family have been bereft of an affectionate and attentive husband and father, the church of a faithful and useful member, and the world of the influence of a consistent Christian. He endured with patience his sufferings, and died as he had lived, in full hope of a glorious immortality. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." J. C.

In Brookfield, N. Y., August 25th, of paralysis, Ruhama Lewis, aged 66 years. Sister Lewis made a profession of religion in early life and united with the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., of which she remained an acceptable member until she united with the second Seventh-day Baptist Church of Brookfield, of which she continued a worthy member until death removed her to join the church triumphant in heaven. E. S. B.

In Otselic, N. Y., Sept. 9th, William Henry, son of Dudley Tallett, aged ten years and five months.

In West Genesee, N. Y., on the 24th Sept., David M. Coon, infant son of Charles D. and Cynthia M. Coon, aged one year, five months, and nine days.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 6th of August, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Phelps, Preceptress of Binghamton Academy, and wife of Prof. A. Phelps of the same place, aged 29 years; and on the 13th of the same month, the daughter of the deceased, Elizabeth Arlouine Phelps, aged six years. Mrs. Phelps was one of the pupils of DeRuyter Institute in 1840, when the Institution was under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter. She was remarked for her unusually brilliant intellectual gifts, and became greatly endeared to her preceptors and associates on account of her amiable and exalted traits of character. Since the completion of her education, she has been engaged with much success, jointly with her husband, in teaching in the higher institutions of learning, and has filled the responsible and arduous place of preceptress, successively in the Academy at New Berlin, Cherry Valley, and lastly at Binghamton, where she had been employed for the last two years; and was at the period of her death at the head of the female department in that flourishing school. Her death occurred at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Asenith Cheesebrough, in Brookfield, whither she had gone to enjoy her respite from school duties during vacation, at the home and amid the familiar scenes of her childhood. Though naturally of a delicate constitution, she was, to within a few days of her decease, in the enjoyment of an unusual degree of health and spirits, with an unclouded prospect of future happiness and usefulness [Banner of the Times.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Edon Blake, Hopkinton, R I	$2 00	to vol. 9	No. 15
Horace Maxson "	2 00	8	52
Thomas Lewis "	2 00	8	52
Weldome Prosser "	68	8	11
Milton Saunders "	68	8	11
G T Spicer, Providence, R I	2 00	8	52
David Rogers 2d, New London, Ct	2 00	8	52
Albert Utter "	2 00	8	40
Daniel Potter, Alfred	2 00	8	52
Pardon Cottrell, Almond	2 00	8	52
Lee Brown, Independence	2 00	8	26
Brayton Babcock, Friendship	2 00	7	52
Abel Burdick Jr, Olean	5 50	7	52
Wm Lawton, West Winfield	2 00	8	52
O B Arnold, West Edmeston	2 00	8	52
Wm Hardiker, New York	2 00	8	17
Nathan Rogers, "	2 00	8	52
Nicholas Rogers "	2 00	8	52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS. Treasurer.

Receipts for the Missionary Society.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums since his last report in the Recorder:—

A friend, signature *	$10 00
D A Babcock, King's Ferry N Y	5 00
Pawcatuck Fem Benev Soc to constitute Mrs A B Burdick L M	25 00
Friend of Foreign Missions	2 00
Ann S Davis, Philadelphia	5 00
Collection in Church at New Market N J	3 95
New Market N J—Barzilla D Randolph 50c, Mrs E Randolph 50c, I S Dunn 1 00, Mrs C M Dunn 50c, Miss E S Dunn 25c, Miss Harriet M Dunn 25c, Henry Coon 1 00, Mrs S A Dunham 5 00, Isaac S Dunham 2 00, Mrs J Dunham 1 00, Randolph Dunham 1 00, Mrs R Dunham 1 00, Mrs Susan R Titsworth 1 00, David Dunn 10 00, Abram Dunham 1 00, Eld W B Gillett 1 00, Mrs S A Gillett 1 00, Jacob R Titsworth 3 00, Miss S A Dunham 50c, Mrs P Blackford 50c, Isaac H Dunn 2 00, Mrs H A Dunn 1 00, James C Ayers 2 00, Mrs H A Ayers 1 00, John Pope 1 00, Wm Dunham 1 00, Reuben Randolph 1 00, Mrs S R Randolph 50c, Miss Ann Randolph 25c, Mrs K Titsworth 50c, Runa F Randolph 1 00, Mrs A F Randolph 1 00, Catharine Randolph 1 00, Elizabeth Randolph 50c, Catharine Stelle 2 00, E M Stelle 50c, Joel A Dunn 2 00, Mrs J A Dunn 1 00, John Smalley 50c, Austin F Ross 50c, Mrs Phebe D Ross 50c, Isaac Clawson 2 00, Mrs A E Clawson 1 00, Jacob Titsworth 1 00, Miss H Titsworth 50c, Miss A Titsworth 50c, L Elmira Stillman 2 00, Manning Dunn 1 00, Mary Dunn 50c, Andrew Drake 50c, Mrs H Drake 50c, D W F Randolph 1 00, Mrs M Randolph 25c, Samuel Dunham 1 00, Mrs H Dunham 1 00, Randolph Dunn 1 00, Mrs E Dunn 50c, Ann Skillman 50c, Daniel V Dunham 1 00, Geo W Dunham 5 00, Jeremiah Dunham 1 00, Mrs Elizabeth Dunham 50c, Mrs E Clawson 50c, Miss Caroline Clawson 50c, Rachael Clawson 50c, Randolph Clawson 50c, Hannah Manning 1 00. Total	78 00
Plainfield N J—J D Titsworth 3 00, Mrs J D Titsworth 2 00, R M Titsworth 3 00, Mrs E Dunn 2 00, Mrs Mary F Randolph 50c, Mrs Sarah F Randolph 1 00, Alex Dunham h m 3 00, Mrs E Dunham 2 00, Ann Morse 50c, Barzilla J Randolph 50c, T S Alberti 1 00, I L Titsworth 1 00, Peter Wooden 1 00, Richard Wooden 50c, Alex Wooden 50c, Mrs E Dunham 50c, Randolph Dunham 2 00, J C Smith 50c, E B Titsworth 1 00, Mary Davis 50c, Voorhees Randolph 50c, Sarah E Randolph 25c, Phineas F Randolph 1 00, Wm F Randolph 25c, Randolph Drake 50c, Margarett A Drake 25c, Thos F Randolph 50c, Mrs Nancy Dunn 1 00, Miss Grace A Dunn 1 00, Miss A Burt 25c, Gideon Wooden 1 00, Mrs Mary Wooden 50c, Miss Susan M Wooden 50c, Asa F Randolph 2 00, Lewis C F Randolph 50c, Runa F Randolph 50c, Elkana F Randolph 2 00, Miss E A Randolph 50c, Sophia F Randolph 2 00, Peter F Randolph 50c, Wm Dunn 1 00, A M Dunham 50c, John Cornell 50c, Widow Rachael Randolph 50c, Miss E Pickens 50c, Jepthah F Randolph 50c, Lewis T Randolph 50c, H B Lewis 1 00, Mrs S A Lewis 1 00, Mrs Charles Moore 1 00, Elston Dunn 50c, Joel Tappan 75c, Rhoda Drake 50c, Simeon F Randolph 1 00, Doct C H Stillman 2 00. Total	53 22
A D Titsworth, New Brunswick N J	5 00
Collection at Monthly Concert, Plainfield N J	30 00

[More next week.] A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co. have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call. that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 will commence the first Wednesday in September, and continue forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.

Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall and middle of the Winter Terms, and continue seven weeks. Those intending to teach District Schools are solicited to become members of this department. Especial attention will be given to the common English branches, and to familiar lectures and discussions on School-Teaching.

During the Winter Term the Agricultural Department will be under the instruction of Prof. Gurdon Evans, A. M., and will embrace the study of the best authors, and daily recitations. Two hours each day will be spent in the Laboratory well furnished with apparatus and chemicals, where students will be instructed in the Elementary Analysis of Soils, Minerals, Ashes of Plants, &c., and the various modes of testing for their constituent elements. Also, a course of Public Lectures will be delivered on the application of Science to Agriculture, and illustrated by a great variety of philosophical and chemical experiments. The object of this course of instruction is to afford ample facilities for farmers to become scientific, as well as practical; and enable them to render waste and worn-out lands productive, and retain them constantly improving under a high state of cultivation

In connection with classes, Courses of Lectures will be delivered, during the Fall Term, on Natural Philosophy and Elementary Chemistry; during the Winter Term on Astronomy and Physiology; during the Spring Term on Geology and Intellectual Science.

Tuition—from $3 50 to $5 00 per term, to be settled in advance, or by satisfactory arrangement. Extras—Drawing, $1 00; Oil Painting, $6 00; Monochromatic, $3 00; Agricultural Chemistry, including chemicals, (breakage extra,) $10 00

Board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense.

Every care will be taken to render the school of the highest advantage to the student. The regulations will be few, but strictly and steadily enforced. Our object is at the same time we cultivate the intellectual and moral powers to develop also the practical.

Nothing sectarian will be taught or countenanced in the school. The exercises of the Institution will be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

LEWIS HOWELL, Pres. of the Board of Trus

New York Weekly Times.

A very Large Newspaper for the Country.

EDITED BY HENRY J. RAYMOND.

Price $2 a year; 10 Copies for $1[illegible]; 20 Copies $20.

On SATURDAY, September 27, the subscribers issued the first number of a NEW WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, in the city of New York, called the NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES, printed upon a very large quarto sheet of eight pages and FORTY-EIGHT COLUMNS, in close, clear type, and in the handsomest possible style.

The NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES will be printed on THURSDAY of each week, and will present THE NEWS OF THE DAY, in all departments and from all quarters; CORRESPONDENCE from all parts of Europe, from California, Mexico, and South America, and from all sections of the United States, written expressly for The Times by intelligent gentlemen permanently enlisted in its support. FULL REPORTS of Congressional and Legislative Proceedings; of Public Meetings, Political and Religious; Transactions of Agricultural, Scientific, and Mechanical Associations; and generally of whatever may have interest or importance for any considerable portion of the community: LITERARY REVIEWS AND INTELLIGENCE, prepared by competent persons, and giving a clear, impartial, and satisfactory view of the Current Literature of the day: CRITICISMS of Music, the Drama, Painting, and of whatever in any department of Art may merit or engage attention: and EDITORIAL ARTICLES upon everything of interest or importance that may occur in any department—Political, Social, Religious, Literary, Scientific or Personal, written with all the ability, care and knowledge which the abundant means at the disposal of the subscribers will enable them to command.

THE WEEKLY TIMES will be under the Editorial management and control of HENRY J. RAYMOND; and while it will maintain firmly and zealously those principles which he may deem essential to the public good, and which are held by the great Whig party of the United States more nearly than by any other political organization, its columns will [illegible] free from bigoted devotion to narrow intere[illegible] will be open within necessary limitations, to [illegible] nications upon every subject of public impor[illegible]

In its Political and Social discussion, Th[illegible] will seek to be Conservative, in such a way [illegible] best promote needful Reform. It will ende[illegible] perpetuate the good, and to avoid the evil, wh[illegible] past has developed. While it will strive to [illegible] all rash innovation, and to defeat all schemes fo[illegible] stroying established and beneficent institutions, [illegible] best sympathies and co-operation will be given to every just effort to reform society, to infuse higher elements of well-being into our political and social organizations, and to improve the condition and the character of our fellow-men. Its main reliance for all improvement, personal, social, and political, will be upon Christianity and Republicanism—it will seek, therefore, at all times, the advancement of the one and the preservation of the other. It will inculcate devotion to the Union and the Constitution, obedience to Law, and a jealous love of that personal and civil Liberty which constitutions and laws are made to preserve. While it will assert and exercise the right freely to discuss every subject of public interest, it will not countenance any improper interference, on the part of the people of one locality, with the institutions or even the prejudices of any other. It will seek to allay, rather than excite agitation:—to extend industry, temperance, and virtue:—to encourage and advance Education:—to promote economy, concord and justice in every section of our country:—to elevate and enlighten public sentiment: and to substitute reason for prejudice, a cool and intelligent judgment for passion, in all public action and in all discussions of public affairs.

The subscribers intend to make The Times at once the best and the cheapest Weekly Family Newspaper in the United States. They have abundant means at their command, and are disposed to use them for the attainment of that end. The degree of success which may attend their efforts, will be left to the public judgment.

VOLUNTARY CORRESPONDENCE, communicating news, is respectfully solicited from all parts of the world. THE WEEKLY TIMES will be mailed to subscribers at the following rates:

Single Copies	$2.
Ten copies to one address	$15.
Twenty copies to one address	$20.

Postmasters throughout the United States are authorized and invited to act as agents for the NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES.

THE NEW YORK DAILY TIMES

Will be published at the same office EVERY MORNING and EVENING, and will be sent to subscribers in any part of the United States, at the low price of FOUR DOLLARS a year. All payments for subscription or advertising must be made in advance; and postage on all letters must be prepaid. Communications for the editorial department must be addressed to HENRY J. RAYMOND, Editor of The New York Times: letters upon business or inclosing money, to RAYMOND, JONES & CO., Publishers.

Subscriptions and Advertisements left at the office, No. 118 Nassau st. or sent by mail, are respectfully solicited. RAYMOND, JONES & CO.

New York, October, 1851. o9t4.

Miscellaneous.

Bridging the Nile.

The editor of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, now on a visit to Egypt and Nubia, gives the following account of the bridge in progress of construction across the Nile, near Cairo:—

"A French engineer is constructing a strong, beautiful bridge across the river, where the water is both deep and swift. The arches are of large brick. Another appears to be building over the Damietta branch, as seen in the distance. Mud machines, all iron, worked by steam; pile drivers, and machinery of all kinds suitable for carrying on a heavy business; besides immense piles of stone, brick, timber and other materials, independently of laborers, soldiers, carts, horses, boats, and mules, give the spot, for six miles around, an active and bustling appearance. Six years, we are informed, have elapsed since the piers were commenced. This is the first bridge, it is believed, ever built over the Nile. It was commenced by Mohammed Ali some years since, and a fear is entertained that it will never be finished. The diving bell is an extraordinary machine, with which sixty men are at once sunk to the river bed to drive piles, lay the foundation stones, &c. The water at the lowest point is thirty feet deep, and the mud thirty more below that, down through which the foundation of the pillar is sunk, in iron boxes, till its weight lodges on the firm bottom. The whole length of piers, ready for receiving the arches, is 90 feet—30 above high water. Last season 25,000 men were employed, at present only 2,000, the Pacha having used up his funds in building and furnishing costly palaces in all directions. Every three months the governor of a district is called upon for a certain number of villagers for this public work."

The Livingston Family.

The death of John R. Livingston, Esq., is announced at Red Hook, at the remarkable age of 98—almost a century old.

John R. Livingston has been the survivor of a very remarkable and distinguished family. The most eminent of the family were Chancellor Livingston, of New-York, and the celebrated Edward Livingston, of Louisiana. Chancellor Livingston was for years a name of renown in New-York, and yet sheds luster over all of the family. His influence and power, coöperating with the indefatigable and eloquent Alexander Hamilton, backed almost alone by the City of New-York, with about the whole interior against them, carried the Federal Constitution through at Poughkeepsie, but only by a small vote. Subsequently, he had the honor of administering the first oath of inauguration to George Washington, under that Constitution, on the spot where the Custom-House now is, in Wall-st., New York. He afterward became the patron of Robert Fulton, and of steam generally; and to such patronage and money as he contributed to steam enterprise, the country is now in a good degree indebted for its astonishing advancement. Edward Livingston, the other eminent brother, was Mayor of the city, Senator in Congress from the State, Minister Plenipotentiary to France, subsequently Senator in Congress from Louisiana, also the renowned codifier of its laws; then Secretary of State under Gen. Jackson, and, no doubt, the writer of his celebrated Proclamation against the Nullifiers of South Carolina in 1832. Another brother was Peter R. Livingston, well known in the political annals of the State.

The sisters of this family were in their alliances remarkable, and hence the family was one not only of renown, but of real power in the State and country. One of them was Mrs. Montgomery, the wife of Major-General Montgomery, who fell under the walls of Quebec, covered with glory. Another was Mrs. Morgan Lewis, wife of the Governor of the State, Major-General in the U. S. Army, appointed by Mr. Madison, Quarter-Master in the Army during the Revolution, and present at the surrender of Burgoyne. Another was the wife of John Armstrong, Secretary at War under Mr. Madison, when Washington was captured by the British, and the reputed author of the celebrated Newburg Letters. The other sisters were Mrs. Tillotson, wife of Col. Tillotson, a distinguished writer and politician, and Mrs. Garretson, wife of Rev. Mr. Garretson, of Rhinebeck, a divine of some note.

The Livingston family had in their day great estates on the North River—such as are now on James River, Va., and in other Southern States—and some of these estates yet remain in the family. John R. Livingston, some fifteen years ago, retired to one of them at Red Hook, where he has lived as a country gentleman, in a style quite unknown to the hundred-acre farmer. He was, more than half a century ago, one of our principal merchants, and he lived in Broadway in great style, and entertained with princely hospitality. [N. Y. Express.

Fruit-Drying Apparatus.

The best means of preserving the surplus of the vast fruit crops which will in a few years be raised in all parts of the country, can not fail to become a matter of general interest. We copy from the last number of the Michigan Farmer, the following description of a fruit-drying house, which appears to be a good one; but we would suggest the use of fine netting, made of hard-twisted twine, instead of lath screens; and a good ventilator at the top of the building for the free egress of the heated air as it becomes continually loaded with the moisture of the fruit. The free circulation of the air, so essential to rapid drying, would doubtless be facilitated by allowing a space between the screens and the outer wall.

Having a large orchard, consisting of 500 apple trees and 150 peach trees, which have just commenced bearing, I found it necessary to adopt some method to secure my fruit, and drying presented itself as the safest and most profitable way. I built an upright of 9 by 11, 8 feet in height, on a good stone foundation, placing a common 12 light window in one end, and in the other, fronting the house, a door. In the end where the window is I have a chimney. The walls are 8 inches in thickness, arched and plastered inside. The inside work consists of screens, 25 in number, 2 feet 3 inches wide, 12 on each side, and one overhead. These are supported by 2 inch square posts in each corner, in which mortices 3-4 by 1 1-4 inch are made to receive a railing to support the screens. The rails are received at the other end in a gane mortice, and may be taken out at pleasure. The screens are made of wood in the following manner: 3 strips of 3-4 by 1 1-4 to fit the inside, (the one in the middle rendering it stiff.) Across these are nailed small slats, near enough together to retain the fruit when dry, thus making a light, stout and durable screen. These are sufficiently large to hold from 1 to 1 1-2 bushels each, which enables me to put up 30 or 35 bushels at a filling. By means of a large box stove these may be thoroughly dried in 36 hours, and then refilled. The fruit dried in this manner is of superior quality, being much better in flavor, and presenting a cleaner and neater appearance than when dried in the ordinary way. [Cultivator.

A New-York Clipper Ship.

"The Comet," a new clipper ship now loading and nearly ready to sail for San Francisco, is a most beautiful craft. She is described as having a model somewhat similar to that of the clipper Celestial, but very much sharper at the ends, and having a hollow bowline, like the yacht America, which has been sailing around the crack craft of the English yacht squadron. The Comet looks so small that a visitor is surprised to learn that her burden is 1,836 tuns, by Custom-House measurement. Her length on the keel is 217 feet 8 inches; on deck, between perpendiculars, 229 feet; over all, 251 feet; extreme breadth of beam, 41 feet 4 inches; breadth at the gunwales, 40 feet 2 inches; depth of hold, 22 feet 2 inches; dead rise, 27 inches. She is iron-braced throughout her whole frame diagonally from stern to stem, like the Collins steamers, and is constructed chiefly of live oak. The poop-deck is 60 feet in length, and the compass-box, steering apparatus, gangways, &c., are all mounted with polished brass, and highly ornamental. The main cabin is large, and elegantly finished in every respect, with costly furniture, rich carpeting, book-case and library, mirrors, drawers, and every practicable convenience. There is also a ladies' cabin aft, equally admirable in construction. Between the two is a sliding partition, faced with looking-glass, which can be removed on occasion, and the two apartments thrown into one. The state-rooms are especially commodious; they are luxuriously equipped, and rival the best apartments in a first-class hôtel. In addition to these elegancies, there are a bath-room, a smoking-room, &c., contiguous to the cabin. The forecastle is among the best lighted, best ventilated, and most comfortably arranged of any we have seen. Every part of the ship is thoroughly ventilated, and the atmosphere is fresh and pure even to the bottom of the hold. There is one iron tank under deck containing 4,900 gallons of water; on deck are four smaller ones, holding 708 gallons each. There is also a force pump, capable of throwing water to either end of the ship, and attached to it are 100 feet of hose, so that, in case of fire, the means are at hand for its prompt suppression. Her commander is Capt. E. C. Gardner, the same gentleman who took the Celestial from this port to San Francisco in 101 days. With the Comet he hopes to do better. From San Francisco, the Comet will go to Canton, and thence take a cargo to London, at the high rates which the American vessels command.

Slovenly Farming.

Farmers generally possess too much land to be well cultivated. Fifty acres well tilled, will ever produce more than one hundred acres poorly tilled. The net profit, that is to say, on fifty acres well tilled, will be more than on one hundred acres badly managed. Now, all know, or should know, what good cultivation is; but do all cultivate well? Do you take time by the forelock in preparing your grounds, and at a proper season? Do you plough right? Do you plow deep? Do you use the subsoil plow where the lands want renovating? Do you obtain the fairest, best seed you can find? Do you use the best farming implements? Do you keep them in order, or do you leave them about the fields to rust? Do you hoe your crops well, and at the proper time? and do you harvest at the proper time?

Gentlemen, these are questions which you should all answer in the affirmative; and there are many more, of a like nature, for your serious consideration. A thing well done gives pleasure to the doer. To go into one's fields, and behold the fences buried in brambles and bushes—to see the grass and weeds peering over the tops of corn and potatoes—to view fields that have lain for ages uncultivated—to behold a stinted growth of swardbound grass on such fields, where clover ought to grow three feet high—to view an old rickety sled here, and a faded, patched up sleigh there—a pair of old wheels in one corner a rusty plow in another, all exposed to the elements, gives pain to the beholder, unless he is proof against feeling.

When we travel along the highway, and see the want of taste, arrangment, symmetry and proportion in buildings and fences, ungraveled walks, broken down door-yard fences, with an old gate, perchance, hanging on one hinge and half prostrate upon the ground, we can hardly believe that this man recognizes Order as "Heaven's first law." We are rather inclined to think that if human beings do well in such places, they cannot possess those noble traits of reason, judgment, skill, perseverance and energy, that characterize the human family generally. It is not because poverty weighs down their energies, that we behold a lack of order and neatness around, but it is caused by sheer neglect and slovenliness—a lack of ambition to appear in neatness and order—a lack of energy to put things in their right places to begin with, and then to keep them there—a lack of taste in executing, and a lack of spirit to learn how to give the best and most pleasing effect and shape to things pertaining to the tenement in which they dwell. [Jour. of Agriculture.

Sea-Sickness.

At the late meeting of the British Association, a paper was read by Mr. Atkinson, "On sea-sickness, and a new remedy for its prevention," from which we make the following extract:—

"Let a person on shipboard, when a vessel is bounding over the waves, seat himself, and take hold of a tumbler nearly filled with water or other liquid, and at the same time make an effort to prevent the liquid from running over, by keeping the mouth of the glass horizontal, or nearly so. When doing this, from the motion of the vessel, his hand and arm will seem to be drawn into different positions, as if the glass were attracted by a powerful magnet. Continuing his efforts to keep the mouth of the glass horizontal, let him allow his hand, arm and body to go through the various motions—as those observed in sawing, planing, pumping, throwing a quoit, &c.—which they will be impelled, without fatigue, almost irresistibly to perform; and he will find that this has the effect of preventing the giddiness and nausea that the rolling and tossing of the vessel have a tendency to produce in inexperienced voyagers.

"If the person is suffering from sickness at the commencement of his experiment, as soon as he grasps the glass of liquid in his hand, and suffers his arm to take its course and go through the movements alluded to, he feels as if he were performing them of his own freewill; and the nausea abates immediately, and very soon ceases entirely, and does not return so long as he suffers his arm and body to assume the postures into which they seem to be drawn. Should he, however, resist the free course of his hand, he instantly feels a thrill of pain of a peculiarly stunning kind shoot through his head, and experiences a sense of dizziness and returning nausea." From this last circumstance the author of the paper infers it as probable, that the stomach is primarily affected through the cerebral mass, rather than through a disturbance of the thoractic and abdominal viscera; and he is of opinion that the method of preventing sea-sickness just described (which he has found by experience to be effectual) depends on the curious taht fact the involuntary motion communicated to the body by the rolling and tossing of the vessel, is, by the means he adopts, apparently converted into voluntary motion.

Natural Bridge in Alabama.

Prof. Toumy and an associate have lately been traversing the State of Alabama, investigating its geological character. Their attention has been attracted to the many natural wonders in the more mountainous regions; the most conspucous among which is the natural bridge, which they describe as rivaling the celebrated one in Virginia:—

"It is situated in Walker County, about a mile from the road, and on the property of a man by the name of West, but yet would well repay a traveler by the beauty of the scenery for deviating a little from his regular route. It occurs in that geological deposit termed the millstone grit—the lowest one in the coal measures—the only rock which, in Alabama, exhibits the truly wild and romantic grandeur of Nature. Before reaching it, our imaginations had been considerably elevated by the descriptions given by our guide; but, notwithstanding, when the reality broke upon us in its full magnificence, we found that our expectations fell very far short of the truth. This grand structure of the great Architect spans about one hundred and twenty feet, while its height is about seventy. A smaller bridge connects it with the bluff beyond.

"The symmetry of the main arch will make it almost indestructible, though of course its regularity has only been produced by the undermining and breaking down of the rocks which, at some by-gone time, existed below it. The cleavage marks of the massive sandstone of which it is formed cause it, even in the more minute construction, to resemble an artificial bridge, as these lines make it appear as if built with regularly-worked blocks. Beneath it are many pieces of broken and partially water-worn rocks—materials, as it were, left by the builders; and these, together with the mighty escarpments round about, would impart a most grand aspect, even if that were not produced by the bridge itself. A little spring trickling from between these broken masses makes it a frequent resort of the deer, which abound in that part of the country, and whose numerous footprints on the soft soil indicate a favorite lick. Lofty hemlocks and beech trees growing on the bridge, and near by, shade it from the rays of the sun."

Singular Catastrophe.

Translated from a German paper.

Above the District of Magyarokarek, in the south-western portion of Transylvania, there are two mountains, Venyikes and Gelesztas. The district lies on a sloap of the two mountains, which are from 800 to 1,000 feet high, opposite a kettle-shaped hollow. On the 13th of August, the Gelesztas began to move, and forced the Venyikes, which is about four miles from Magyarokarek, so near to that District that it is now scarcely 20 paces distant, and threatens to destroy the whole village. The motion of the mountain continued from midnight on the 13th to noon on the 15th of August, and during this time it occasioned great damage through a space of about one-third of a mile in length and nearly a quarter of a mile in breadth. The fields beneath and around the mountain, which in this place were covered with a harvest of uncommon beauty, were precipitated into the depths, and instead of them huge rocks now rise against the sky. No one would know the place. No one knows where was his own field—the two parts of a plowed field, which were torn asunder, are often found at the distance of two miles from each other, with a bottomless abyss between them. The population of the place, numbering about 380 souls, are encamped with their little property on a mountain lying within the District, and expect the next calamity in a state of great depression. Beneath the torn-up mountain, and even on the very spot, water gushes up on every side, and the ground in the vicinity is so cracked that no living creature can approach it.

The Utility of Leaves.

Every person conversant with vegetable philosophy is aware that the all-important requisite in the growth of fine fruit is a good supply of big, vigorous, healthy leaves. A tree which is kept defoliated for a single season must die; and fruit growing upon branches which are deprived of their leaves cannot ripen—examples of which are furnished by the incessant cessation of growth and ripening of fruit upon trees which become stripped by leaf-blight. In one instance a dense mass of plums remained half grown and flavorless for several weeks, in consequence of the premature dropping of the foliage; a second crop of leaves, three weeks afterwards, effected the completion of their growth and their ripening to honeyed sweetness. The editor of the Michigan Farmer mentions the following interesting case, illustrating the same principle: Mr. Moore, of Detroit, has a magnificent grape-vine, spreading itself over one side of his house, which was, in September, richly laden with fruit. After the clusters were formed, a cow entered the enclosure, ate the leaves entirely, but left the fruit untouched. The consequence was, that upon that portion of the vine which was beyond the reach of the animal, there never were finer clusters, while upon the portion from which the leaves were removed, the clusters dwindled away, and have come to nothing, and that, too, up to the very line of separation between the mutilated and unmutilated portions. [Western Ag.

Propagation of the Raspberry.

The usual mode of propagating the raspberry is by suckers. As, however, but few of these are sent up annually to supply the place of the old canes, which always perish after having matured the fruit, it must necessarily take a considerable time to multiply the variety to any extent.

It may also be readily propagated by layering. Cuttings strike with much difficulty.

But the best and most expeditious mode of multiplying the raspberry is by division of the roots. In this way it may be propagated with as much facility as the Morus multicaulis, or Paullinia imperialis. By pursuing this plan, I have, in one year, from a small plant, raised forty or fifty; and if I mistake not Mr. Robert Buist and Mr. James D. Fulton have been still more successful. Admitting however that only twenty plants can be raised in this way in a season; than in the same ratio in two years the produce from a single plant will be 400—in three years 8000—in four years 160,000—and in five years 3,200,000.

The root of the raspberry is replete with eyes, visible or dormant. It may be divided therefore into very small portions. The best time to make the division is at the commencement of the winter or early in the Spring. The pieces should be planted in small pots and placed in a cold frame—in a green house at a low temperature—or in a room in the house without fire, but with a southern exposure. During the past winter, I have raised several hundred plants from root cuttings in rooms with a northern aspect, without fire, and where the thermometer sometimes was as as low 32° Fahrenheit. This plan, however, of propagating the raspberry, in a room where the sun never enters, cannot be recommended, as the solar rays are essential to a healthy and vigorous growth. [Far. Jour.

Diseases and Digestion of Horses.

Some years ago, the French Minister of War instituted a commission for the purpose of investigating everything in any way connected with the health of horses generally, and especially those belonging to the army. Several members of the Academy of Sciences belong to this body. The commission has just terminated the first series of its investigations. One of the questions decided is that relative to the use of salt, obtained from sea-water, in the daily rations of the horses of the army. Trials were made during ten years, and upon over 3,000 horses, and the result is that sea-salt is of no advantage whatever; it neither preserves them from sickness, nor does it assist them in regaining flesh when worn down by fatigue. But on the other hand, it is productive of no harm. These results are believed by the commission to be beyond doubt. It was likewise settled by the committee that a horse, while trotting or galloping, digests faster and better than when standing still. It is also invited veterinary surgeons to communicate to it any important facts they might have learned in the course of their practice. Many have already done so. The committee offered a prize to all surgeons in the army for the best treatises on the following subject: The horse-kind in France considered in reference to the mounting of the army."

How they preserve Order in Austria.

The Vienna correspondent of the London News describes the following shocking affair as having taken place lately at Szent Maria, near Gross-Waradein:—

"At a peasant's wedding, when the procession of the betrothed was moving towards the church, a gend'arme approached the bride, and summoned her immediately to divest herself of the red, white, and green ribbons which she had in her dress, according to the custom of the country girls, saying that these colors were revolutionary. The bridegroom objected, saying that after the ceremony the bride would comply with the desire of the gend'arme, but that now they would not keep the priest waiting at the altar. The gend'arme retired, the procession proceeded to the church, but at the moment the bride was kneeling at the steps of the altar to receive the benediction, the gend'arme rushed forward and cut her tresses and ribbons with scissors from her head. In Hungary it is considered a great insult to a female to cut her hair; it conveys the notion of infamy. Naturally an affray took place; the gend'arme was assailed by the bridegroom, other gend'armes arrived in aid of their fellow-official, the people, though without arms, rushed upon them, and the result was the slaughter of seven men, three gend'armes and four peasants, among them the bridegroom and the brutal assailant of the bride.

The Book Trade in the United States.

Wilson's monthly Book Trade paper says that in the year ending July 1, 1851, there were 1176 distinct works published in this country, making 1298 volumes, and containing 218,049 pages, an average of 164 per volume. Of the volumes, 817 were published in New York, 228 in Philadelphia, and 203 in Boston. The works of fiction were 249, religious 170, history and travels 121, biographical 96, scientific 50, metaphysics 8. We then have of mathematical works, 17; classical books, 7; dictionaries and treatises (not grammars) on language, 13; school books, 50; legal works, 43; medical works, 47; agricultural, 20; practical mechanics, 18; artistic, 6; architectural, 8; political, 16; commercial, 12; orations, 8; works entitled essays, in general, 11; manners and morals, strictly so called, 18; social economy, comprising cook books and works for housekeepers, 15; natural history, 8; miscellaneous, embracing works not within the scope of either of the above divisions, and often possessing considerable literary merit, 48.

The Orange Culture in Florida.—It was with gratification that we saw it announced that the Orange Trees of Forida were fast recovering from the deadly blight which had afflicted them for the last sixteen years. Should this announcement prove true, it will be a source of immense wealth.

Previous to 1835, when the orange groves were killed by the unprecedented frost of that year, not less than 10,000,000 of oranges were shipped from the St. John's River and the port of St. Augustine, and sold at the average price of $1 per hundred. It was a heavy blow to the citizens of Florida to have the source of so much wealth cut off in one night.

And this was the produce of a comparatively small portion of ground and trifling labor. The average produce of an acre of full-grown orange trees is about $1,000 per annum, and one hand could tend two or three acres with ease. Their culture is no more difficult than any other fruit tree. The principal mode of producing them is from the seed. They may be produced also from the layer or cutting. There are some groves on the St. John's river which had been budded upon the native sour orange, which is found in almost every swamp and hammock in the State. [Charleston Mer.

Courtship by Advertisement.

Some time ago a shoemaker in Harris, being in want of a wife, advertised for one; and at the time and place appointed was met by a female. Both were in earnest. The shoemaker, however, unluckily seemed to be of the same opinion that King Pedro was with regard to his wife Mary of Arragon, that she was not so handsome as she might be good; so their meeting ended in mutual disappointment. The man advertised a second time, appointing a different place for the meeting, and varying the words of the advertisement. He met the same lady, they recognized each other, could not choose but smile at the recognition, and, perhaps, neither of them could choose but sigh. The persevering bachelor tried his lot a third time, and at the third place of appointment he met the equally persevering spinster. At this meeting neither could help laughing. They began to converse in good humor; and the conversation became so agreeable on both sides, and the circumstance so remarkable, that this third interview led to a marriage. [Courier.

The New Sweet Potato.—We made reference the other day, says the Mobile Herald, to a new variety of the sweet potato, believed to have been brought from some part of South America. Superiority as to size, flavor, &c., was claimed for it over all other kinds. We suggested that it was probably the West India yam, which grows in most tropical countries, and is frequently met with in the vegetable market here. This has brought a note from an esteemed correspondent who knows something of this new variety, and he intimates that we shall soon have an opportunity ourselves of judging of its merits. "The fact is," he says, "the root is different in growth and every quality from every one we have here, and I, as well as many who have tasted them, view them as entirely superior. They grow either in the shape of a thick yam potato or like a turnip—great proportion of the large size in that form. For my own part, I consider them the most elegant root on a table that I know of when prepared as the Irish potato; and to me they seem a connecting link between a fine mealy Irish and a sweet potato."

Sensitive Plate.—M. Fox Talbot, the author of the Talbotype, has discovered a method of making a plate so sensitive that he has been able to obtain an instantaneous picture. He took a piece of paper covered with printed characters, and placed it on a rotary disc. Into the camera he put his sensitive plate in a position suitable to receive the image of the paper on the disc, which he placed near a powerful battery. Having closed the blinds of the camera, he turned the disc with a great velocity, then opened the camera and discharged the battery. The discharge spread a bright instantaneous light on the disc, and when the plate was withdrawn, the printed characters, the same as those on the revolving wheel, were fairly represented, the same as if the disc had stood still. The process for making the plate so sensitive has not yet been made public, but soon will be.

Variety.

If men gave three times as much attention as they now do to ventilation, ablution, and exercise in the open air, and only one third as much to eating, furnishing, and late hours, the number of doctors, dentists, and apothecaries, and the amount of neuralgia, dyspepsia, gout, fever, and consumption, would be changed in a corresponding ratio. Mankind would rapidly present the aspect, not only of a far healthier and thriftier, but a far more beautiful and more virtuous race.

During the French Revolution, Jean Bon St. Andre, the Vendean Revolutionist, said to a peasant, "I will have all your steeples pulled down, that you may no longer have any objects by which you may be reminded of your old superstitions." "You cannot help leaving us the stars," replied the peasant; "and we can see them further off than our steeples."

The following calculation of the respective numbers engaged in the different principal occupaiions in life in the United States we take from The Quincy Patriot:

No. engaged in internal navigation	33,076
No. engaged on the ocean	56,022
No. engaged in the professions	65,255
No. engaged in commerce	11,967
No. engaged in manufactures	291,749
No. engaged in agriculture	3,719,951

Chinese in California are greater wizards than Prof. Anderson. Linen sheets, which were sent to their laundry in San Francisco, when returned to their owners, were found to be cotton, with the same marks precisely.

The clergyman of the floating episcopal chapel, Liverpool, was asked whether his was to be considered a high or low church? The answer of his reverence was: "It depends entirely upon the tide."

Horne Tooke returned his income at 60l. a year; the commissioners said that they were not satisfied. Horne Tooke, in reply, stated that he had much more reason to be dissatisfied with the smallness of his income than they.

An Iowa paper says the village where it is printed has recently been visited by a "Bloomer freshet." On being asked as to what he meant, the editor says: "The water was knee high in the streets."

Speaking of the new styles of dresses, a gentlemen the other day remarked, that he wished some of the ladies would adopt it, in order to keep his wife company, as she had been wearing the "pants" these five years.

It is easy to exclude the noon-tide light, by closing the eyes; and it is easy to resist the clearest truth, by hardening the heart against it.

Forty-two returning Californians, have arrived at Weston, Missouri, by the overland route. Only one death occurred among the party.

The potato rot is said to be very general and fatal in many parts of Connecticut.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH,

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First commences Aug. 27 and closes Dec. 2.
" Second " Dec. 3 " " March 16.
" Third " March 17 " " June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting,	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

Board, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. Clarke, Sec. } of Trustees.

DeRuyter, July 18, 1851.

Election Notice.

State of New York, Secretary's Office,
Albany, August 27, 1851.

TO the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: Sir,—Notice is hereby given that at the General Election, to be held in this State, on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Samuel A. Foot.

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan.

A Comptroller, in the place of Philo C. Fuller.

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt.

An Attorney-General, in the place of Levi S. Chatfield.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Hezekiah C. Seymour.

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Charles Cook.

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Alexander H. Wells.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court, for the First Judicial District, in the place of James G. King, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Senator for the IIId, IVth, Vth, and VIth Senate Districts, in the place of Richard S. Williams, Clarkson Crolius, James W. Beekman, and Edwin D. Morgan, whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

County officers to be elected for said County:

Sixteen Members of Assembly.

A Register, in the place of Cornelius V. Anderson.

A Recorder, in the place of Frederick A. Tallmadge.

Two Judges of the Superior Court, in the place of Thomas J. Oakley and John L. Mason.

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Daniel P. Ingraham.

A Surrogate, in the place of Alexander W. Bradford.

A Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, in the place of Jacob L. Dodge.

Two Governors of the Alms-House, in the place of Simeon Draper and Francis R. Tillou.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, there is to be elected a Justice for each of the six Judicial Districts, into which the City of New York is districted, pursuant to Chapter 514, Laws of 1851. Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary of State.

Sheriff's Office, August 28, 1851.—I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of the notice of the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, received this day, from the Hon. Christopher Morgan, Secretary of State.

THOMAS CARNLEY,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

N. B.—All the public newspapers within this County will please publish this notice once in each week, until the Election, and send in their bills for advertising the same as soon as the Election is over; so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors and passed for payment. Sept. 4.

People's Line of New York and Albany Steamers

THE steamers ISAAC NEWTON, Capt. Wm. H. Peck, and HENDRIK HUDSON, Capt. A. P. St. John, forming the People's Line between New York and Albany, leaving foot of Cortland-st., New York, every evening at 6 o'clock, and Albany evening on the arrival of the Express Train from Buffalo.

The steamer NEW WORLD, Capt. Acker, leaves foot of Chambers-st., New York, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning, at 7 o'clock, and Albany on alternate days.

For passage or freight apply on board, or to A. P. Schultz at the office foot of Cortland-st.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
James Summerbell.
Portville. Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per [illegible] will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to

Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

VOL. VIII.—NO. 18.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 16, 1851.

WHOLE NO. 382.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c." [Continued.

Let us now examine more particularly the statements of the Evangelists as to the time of the Saviour's death. We read, that having delivered to His disciples a long discourse relative to his coming again in glory, and of the condition in which, at His advent, He shall find the world and the church—"It came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, He said unto His disciples, Ye know that after two days is the Feast of the Passover, and the Son of Man is betrayed to be crucified." Matt. xxvi. 1. In this intimation, from the connection in which they are placed, the Saviour seems contemplating the relation of type and antitype—the death of the Passover lamb, and His own death, as that which it prefigured. The proper time arrived. "Now, the first day of the Feast of unleavened bread, the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto Him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the Passover? And He said, Go into the city, to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the Passover at thy house with my disciples. And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the Passover. Now, when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve." Matt. xxvi. 17—20. In Mark xiv. 16—18, this reads, "And they made ready the Passover. And in the evening, He cometh with the twelve. And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said," etc. Made as he was under the Law, whom, therefore, it behoved to fulfill all righteousness, He yielded perfect obedience. We are, accordingly, here informed, that the Passover having been made ready as commanded by Moses, the Saviour, with the twelve, sat down together as a Paschal company, to partake of it. The time is carefully noted; it was "when the even was come," the beginning, therefore, of the day.

The fact of Christ's having eaten the Passover, and that at the usual time, is so evidently presented in these statements, that we should have considered it unnecessary to adduce farther proof, but for the circumstance that even this has been often denied. It has, farther, been much disputed whether Jesus did or did not keep this solemnity on the same night as the Jews did. A correct knowledge of the truth here, is necessary to our understanding the varied statements of the Evangelists. Such an understanding, would, we apprehend, remove all ground of doubt, and show that no discrepancy existed between the Law and the practice even of the Jews on this occasion. Indeed, we cannot but express surprise that it should ever have been questioned; for the statements in the several narratives seem to us so clear as to render it unquestionable that, in this respect, the appointment of the Law was observed by both.

It has been asserted by one class, that either perversion or erroneous calculation, had led the Jews to observe the Passover a day later than the appointed evening. By another class, and these even professed Christians, it is affirmed that that was not the Passover, which was observed by Christ, or that, if so, it was not observed by Him on the appointed day. Both assertions are refuted by the same argument. The Passover was a public ordinance, and could not be duly observed by any, without the concurrence and participation of the priesthood,—by whom, as we have seen, the blood was received, and sprinkled at the bottom of the altar. If, therefore, any mistake had led the priests, and people generally of the Jews, to depart from the night appointed by the Law, this error must have operated also in the way of preventing them from officiating as required. To suppose that they would lend aid to others on a different day, desecrating, as they must have conceived, a divine ordinance, would too obviously have been to seal their own condemnation, in refusing to concur with such in observing it. If Christ and His apostles were right, when they required the blood to be sprinkled, the priesthood clearly would be wrong if they accepted and offered it, unless they themselves also concurred in observing the Passover at the same time. The power, in this case, was in the hands of the Pharisees, (who were not lax in enforcing their opinions, whatever these were,) and we cannot doubt that they would have refused to allow the lamb to be killed within the precincts of the temple, and the blood to be presented in the authorized manner, on what must, in such a case, have been deemed by them the wrong day.

In the full sense of the word, the Apostles were Jews, and knew, therefore, the day on which the Passover was to be observed by their people. Had the day fixed by the Jews for the celebration of this great national solemnity been wrong, the Apostles themselves, in order to their correction, would have required to be informed of the error or perversion. But there is no indication of this. On the contrary, in the text we have just quoted, the Saviour appeals to them that the day which He was about to observe, they were fully aware was the day appointed. "Ye know that after two days is the Passover"—the words "the feast of," in both verses 2d and 17th in our translation, being supplementary, and marked as such, are worse than unnecessary, and ought to be omitted. If the Twelve had been under mistake as to the proper day, the language quoted is not such as we should expect to have been addressed to them. Nor do they call in question the correctness of their Lord's statement,—which we may well believe they would have done, unless they did "know," as He had said. They offer no objections; on the contrary, they are forward to be ready at the proper time, and, unasked by Him, they "came to Jesus, saying unto Him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for Thee to eat the Passover." Ver. 17.

And the man at whose house the lamb was directed to be made ready, was distinctly to be told that the Master said, "I will keep the Passover at thy house with my disciples." He also, as a Jew, must have objected to his house being used for the celebration of the solemnity upon the night proposed, had it seemed to him the wrong one. But we read neither of objection nor of the necessity of explanation, on his part, any more than on that of the disciples.

An expression in the statement by Mark makes this, if possible, still more plain. "And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the Passover, His disciples said unto Him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the Passover?" Mark xiv. 12. There was no "anticipation" by the Saviour of the day. Before His disciples put the question as to the place of preparation, it was already "the first day of unleavened bread." This, then, was the very time enjoined by the Law. But not merely did Christ and His disciples purpose obedience; the Jews also did the same,—were accustomed indeed to do so, and on this occasion designed no deviation from their wonted practice. This was the time when "they," the people of the Jews, and not the Saviour and his disciples only, "killed the Passover."

So also, in the beginning of the same chapter we read, "After two days was the feast of the Passover, and of unleavened bread; and the chief priests, and the scribes, sought how they might take Him by craft, and put Him to death. But they said, Not on the Feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people." Mark xiv. 1, 2. Here the rulers are fully contemplating the fact of its being the Passover when they sought to put the Saviour to death, but they wished, from policy, to avoid doing so "on the Feast day," which followed the Passover day, and was a Sabbath. The Evangelist, in the manner in which the customs and purposes of the Jews are narrated, gives us little reason to suppose that they labored under mistake as to which was the Passover day. The connection in which the fact that after two days would be the Passover, and the purpose of the chief priests and scribes are put, seems to imply, that the one was the result of a knowledge of the other.

In the corresponding Gospel by Luke, we read, "Now, the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover. And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill Him; for they feared the people." "Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the Passover must be killed. And He sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the Passover that we may eat." Luke xxii. 1, 2, 7, 8. "They went and found as he had said unto them; and they made ready the Passover. And when the hour was come, He sat down and the twelve Apostles with Him. And He said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer." Ver. 13—15. The supper eaten is thus called expressly the Passover, and the time of it is expressly called "the day of unleavened bread," and, farther, the time "when the Passover must be killed." The law determined when the Passover must be killed; but it was necessary that the sanction of the chief priests and scribes should be obtained. This was not withheld, yet it could only have been given if they themselves, also, observed the ordinance at the same time.

Yet, in the face of all this evidence, Dr. Adam Clarke, in his Discourse on the Eucharist, (Introduction p. 25,) thinks it probable that the Passover on this occasion, was not observed either by Christ or by the Jews themselves, of the whole land. In this, however, as in other cases, there is a reason for the doubts and disbelief expressed on the subject. The creeds of the churches have an influence in leading to perverse interpretations, if we may not say, in causing a rejection of the testimony of the word of God. At the Lord's Supper, the Greek church uses leavened bread; the Romish church, unleavened. The reason of this difference is, that the latter assert, like many modern writers, that the Jews, on this Passover occasion, postponed the celebration a day beyond the appointed time; while the former maintain that Christ celebrated with leavened—that having anticipated the proper time, He ate the Passover a day earlier than that on which it was usually eaten. Protestant churches and Protestant commentators are not free of bias, and in some cases, the operation of the bias is very imperfectly concealed. Dr. Bloomfield, in his Greek Testament, (in a note on Matt. xxvi. 17,) objects to the view of the Jews having observed the Passover on the same night that Christ and his apostles did so, stating his objection, as he avows, in the words of Mr. Townsend: "If our Lord ate it the same hour in which the Jews ate theirs, He certainly could not have died that day, as they ate the Passover on Friday, about six o'clock in the evening. If he did not, He must have been crucified on Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, and could not have risen again the first day of the week, as the Evangelists testify, but on Monday."

The inference would, however, require to be well founded, and very correctly deduced, that is used to set aside Scripture statements so plain as those to which we have referred, on this point. The Doctor's inference is not so. The Evangelists do not say that the Jews "ate the Passover on Friday;" neither do they state on which day of the week the Saviour died. But they do say, that he observed the Passover at the appointed time, which, we elsewhere learn, as already shown, was on the 14th day of the month, whatever day of the week that might be; and they do record that he Himself distinctly declared that He should be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

[To be continued.

THE TRUE GENTLEMAN.

The distinguished Gouvernier Morris, of Morrissania, near the city of New York, was a gentleman, by birth, education, and the most lofty bearing. On being asked for his definition of a gentleman, he replied, in the words of the Psalmist:—

"'Tis he whose every thought and deed
By rule of virtue moves;
Whose generous tongue disdains to speak
The thing his heart disproves.

Who never did a slander forge,
His neighbor's fame to wound;
Nor hearken to a false report
By malice whispered round.

Who vice in all its pomp and power,
Can treat with just neglect;
And piety, though clothed in rags,
Religiously respect.

Who to his plighted word and trust
Has ever firmly stood;
And though he promise to his loss,
He makes his promise good.

Whose soul in usury disdains
His treasure to employ;
Whom no rewards can ever bribe
The guiltless to destroy."

This psalm was copied by Thomas Jefferson, in the smallest hand and neatest manner, in his common-place book.

OLD JOSHUA.

There was an old man of the Hilo church, whom they called Joshua, whose prayers I used to listen to with deep interest, when stopping at that station, for their peculiar unction and engagedness. Many things were told me by his pastor, illustrating his fervent piety and power in prayer. During the great sickness of 1846 and 1849 he passed away, to be, we doubt not, with the spirits of the blessed, among whom his remarkable spirituality, for a converted heathen, will exalt him to a precedence above many that attained in their earthly career to far more head knowledge of God and divine things than he.

The account given of him by his pastor is so characteristic and instructive, that we venture to transcribe a part of it here. He had been a member of the church for several years prior to the great revival of 1838 and 1839, without evincing any special marks of uncommon spirituality; but during that work, says Mr. Coan, he became deeply and thoroughly aroused, and at the same time wonderfully transformed.

"The study of the Bible, secret and social prayer, attendance at the house of God, religious conversation, visiting from house to house, laboring for souls, &c., were his meat and his drink. With no extraordinary native powers of mind, he became one of the most active and efficient helpers, merely through the strength of his piety, or, in Scripture language, 'through the power of the Holy Ghost' resting upon him.

"He was already an old man, but his strength and his youth were renewed like the eagle's. He became my almost constant companion in travel, patiently toiling by my side over the burning lava fields of Puna, and through the rivers and ravines of Hilo. His love for Christ, his compassion for souls, seemed deep, fervent, and constant, not always, of course, equally intense, but never doubtful. His prayers were highly fervent, deeply humble, believing and importunate. I have never met with a mightier wrestler at the throne of grace. Good old Jacob, when gazing up the celestial ladder, did not see more clearly into heaven than good old Joshua, when kneeling before God. I never tired in traveling with him, and his conversation and prayers never wearied. When my spirits were sad, my resort, next to the throne of grace, was the hut of good old Joshua. He was truly spiritual, and there was an unction about him which readily attracted spiritual minds. The wicked venerated and feared him, and the good loved him.

"As age and infirmity crept over him, he began to feel it more and more difficult to go with me on my tours. Several times, when invited to do so, he had excused himself, saying, 'I am too old and too feeble. My heart goes with you; but this poor old body cannot drag itself over the hills and the rivers any more. It is done.' Then, after a little reflection, all his old recollections would revive, and his desire to go again would become so strong, that he would say, 'Well, I will try once more. Perhaps God will give me strength to go through; if not, let him leave me by the way; all will be well.' Gathering up his strength, and taking his staff, the pilgrim and the patriarch would set off, 'faint, yet pursuing.' Usually, at the the close of the first day, and when bowing before the family altar, the old man would express his joy and gratitude to God that he had been permitted to attempt the tour. Listening to the word, and seeing the works of God, would so fill his soul with joy that he would spontaneously exclaim, 'I am glad that I came. I feel stronger than when I set out. The word does me good. Oh, how much I should have lost had I remained at home!' Such scenes were repeated several times before he finally yielded to the increasing infirmities of age.

"At length the strong man bowed beneath the pressure of years, and his active labors were confined to the circle immediately around the station. His wife, younger and more vigorous, was smitten with a paralysis, and hastened to the grave. This left his house and his heart desolate; for his conjugal relations were happy. He had no children. The measles and whooping-cough, with their attendants, prostrated his little remaining strength, and he was never again able to leave his house. He lingered, however, on the banks of Jordan, but with many longings to pass over.

"Often have I found him, while strength allowed it, lying prostrate with his old spectacles on, his Bible open on the mat (his bed,) and his face downward, eagerly digging gold from that precious and exhaustless mine. While thus absorbed, and with dimmed natural vision, he would not at first notice that any one had entered; but at length, raising his eyes a little, and descrying me, he would reach out both hands, clasp one of mine, press it, hold it fast, and look up to heaven, while the tears flowed down his aged cheeks, and he would remain silent for a long time. At length his struggling feelings would find vent in such words as follow: 'Bless the Lord! I rejoice to meet you. My heart is full. Oh! the word of God. Deep, high, broad, rich, wonderful! I relish it; I eat it; it is delicious food; it is sweeter than honey to my taste. I want too see Him. I long to be with Him. I long to go. But I will wait. He is good. He knows best. He will come by-and-by. But to be with Him. This only will satisfy my soul. This only will fill my heart.

"Expressions of a similar character fell from his lips during almost every one of our later interviews. At length we were summoned to the general meeting; and on our return it was announced that the Master had come and called for Joshua. My soul followed him in his celestial chariot, and I involuntarily exclaimed, 'My father! my father! the chariot of Israel and the horseman thereof.' He was a good man, and no one denies it. Both friends and foes say of Joshua, 'He was a good man.' Give me his simple faith and his sure hope, and I ask no other inheritance. Oh that my title to eternal life might appear as clear, as authentic, as his!"

MINISTERIAL COQUETRY.

Ministerial coquetry may be defined to be encouraging calls, or allowing them to be made from congregations, without any prospect of their acceptance, and with the predominant desire of self-gratification. It includes tampering in any way with a demand for professional services.

In the first place, encouraging calls for ministerial services, with no intention to accept them, is one of the evident signs of coquetry. There are many ways to encourage a call—by letters, by silence, by the intervention of a friend, by openly stating the desire of translation, or by allowing it to be inferred by doubts and contingencies—if such and such things should occur.

Or allowing calls to be made. Sometimes calls are encouraged and not offered, just as a coquette makes advances which are not reciprocated. Sometimes, however, calls are made out in the spirit of honest devotion that is doomed to the disappointment which often befalls a true admirer. To allow progress to be made, even when it has not originated in our own advances, partakes of the nature of coquetry, if it is in our power to prevent it, and if we do not intend to comply with the invitation.

The improbability of accepting the invitation that has been connived at, enters into the idea of ministerial coquetry. There are obviously cases where a minister is not prepared to give a definite answer, until the case is fully before him, with all the materials for a decision. Where any doubt, even, is entertained, we are willing to exclude the case from the odious category. The hatefulness of the transaction is usually in the proportion of the a priori improbability of not acceding to the offer.

The predominant vanity of the motive is another element in the philosophy and morals of coquetry. This motive is almost always disowned by the coquette, who loves to increase the number of her admirers and to adorn her love-roll with new conquests. But the "heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." Webster well enumerates vanity as the prevailing aim. Alas, that there should be ministers whose vanity entices them to tamper with sacred things!

In short, ministerial coquetry includes all kinds of tampering, or maneuvering, or equivocation in relation to a demand for professional services. Hence, even the keeping of a question open for an unnecessary length of time is guilty indecision; and it is usually coquettish in spirit. [Presbyterian Magazine.

A PRAYER-MEETING IN THE FOREST.

About the year 1787, a young man in Hampden Sidney College, which then had a considerable number of students, became somewhat anxious respecting his spiritual interest. There were few, if any, professors of religion in the college, and a state of things existed very far removed from seriousness. There was no one to whom young H. could make his feelings known. He had no Bible, nor could he, by such inquiries as he ventured to make, find one among all the students. He at length borrowed one secretly from the college steward, and retired into the woods, and spent the whole day in reading its neglected pages. The result was the deepening of his serious feelings, and a resolution to serve God, though secretly, for fear of his fellow students.

A friend, whose father, a pious man, lived a few miles from the college, was accustomed to go home every Saturday night. In as careless a manner as he could command, he requested this friend to borrow for him from his father, a religious book of some kind. The young man delivered the message to his father in the presence of the family. His sister, a pious and intelligent girl, immediately said, "I have the very book he should read." She gave the book to her brother, who brought it to the anxious young man. It was a rusty volume, nearly an hundred years old. It was "Alleine's Alarm to the Unconverted." It had been brought over from Ireland by some Scotch-Irish emigrant, who had settled in that part of Virginia.

On receiving the book the young man locked it up in his trunk till he should have an opportunity for reading it in secret. On the next Saturday, the college studies being suspended on that day, he was left alone in his room. He locked the door, and began to read. His tears soon began to flow. He spent the whole day in reading and in mourning over his sins. Towards night there was a rap at the door of his room. He was silent, and did not design to give admission to any one. As the knocking was continued and became violent, he composed his countenance as well as he could, threw his book on the bed, and opened the door. A student entered, who soon went to the bed, and took up the book which H. had been reading.

"What are you doing?" said he, "have you been reading such a book as this?"

Young H. was sorely tempted to deny the fact, and to turn the whole matter to ridicule. For a moment there was a fearful struggle in his mind—probably his eternal destiny was suspended upon it. He resolved to confess the truth.

"I have been reading it, and I am resolved to attend to a subject which I have neglected too long. I am resolved to seek to obtain religion."

To his astonishment, his visitor, from whom he expected ridicule and reproach, burst into tears, and said, "I envy you—you may get religion—I never can. Before I left home I was a professor of religion, and a member of the church, I came here among the wicked; I locked up my Bible in my trunk, and abandoned my profession. I have forsaken my God, and turned my back upon my Saviour; there can be no forgiveness for such a sinner as I am; your state is infinitely better than mine."

He did not, however, give way to utter despair, but resolved to join his friend in his effort to secure the favor of God.

They soon found two others who were interested for their souls' salvation. They formed an association for conversation and prayer, and resolved to spend every Saturday forenoon in devotional exercises. Their first meeting was held in a thick, unbroken forest, about a mile from the college. Each one gave out a hymn, read a chapter, and prayed. The result from these small beginnings was, a powerful revival of religion in college. A large number of the students were hopefully converted.

The two individuals to whom the incidents above given relate, became eminent ministers of the gospel, and were spared to a good old age to labor for God and to magnify the riches of his grace. [Watchman & Reflector.

DON'T WAST YOUR TIME.

Two young clerks in a large American and French house in Pearl-street, were particularly intimate, so much so, that although they boarded in different houses, yet they were constantly together during the hours of recreation from business.

One of them had been presented with a little French poodle, and he at once set about instructing it to perform all those little tricks for which the breed are famed.

For some days his companion witnessed his persevering efforts to make "Grotto" bring his handkerchief, catch pennies, stand upon his hind legs, and do many other trifling but amusing tricks. At length he got tired of being looker on at so much waste of time, and resolved that whilst his friend was being the tutor of "Grotto," he himself would be a pupil to a French teacher, and endeavor to master the French language by the time "Grotto's" education was completed.

Without saying a word to his friend, he commenced his studies, and being diligent, fast acquired a knowledge of the language; he also improved from hearing a good deal of French spoken in the store, though he carefully avoided uttering a word. At length "Grotto" was finished, and had very truly acquired a knowledge of an infinite number of amusing games, and his owner prided himself no little on his acquirements.

The owner of "Grotto" was a little the senior in the store of the other, and of course ranked him in promotions. One morning he came out of the private room of the principal member of the firm, and looking very much down-cast, approached his friend.

"Tom," said he "the firm want to send one of the clerks this summer to France to buy goods, and they have offered the chance to me, providing I could speak French, but as 'oui' is about the extent of my French, it's no go for this child. What a fool I was in not studying it when I was a boy."

"Well," said Tom, "whose chance is next?"

"Why yours, of course, ha! ha! ha! they will put the question all round out of politeness, and as none of us can parley vous ha! ha! ha! why sombody will be engaged, and all of us headed off."

In the course of the morning Tom was called before the firm, and in glowing terms were the advantages set forth, if he could only have spoken the language of the country they wished him to go to. Tom listened with delight, and inwardly chuckled at the surprise he would give them.

"Of course," said one of the firm, "you should have the situation if you could only speak French; but as you cannot, we shall have to employ some one else. 'Very sorry, great pity,' &c."

"Well," said Tom, "it can't be helped, and there is no time, I suppose, to study now, so I must just do the best I can. Mr. Toutette, shall you and I have a little chat, and perhaps I may pass muster."

Mr. Toutette and Tom entered into an animated conversation very much to the surprise of all present, which, after being kept up in double quick time for some fifteen minutes, Mr. Toutette very candidly told his partners that Tom was fully competent for the place.

Tom was a great favorite, and the firm were heartily glad that he was capable of holding the situation, and he was instructed to prepare himself for departure by the next steamer, with the privilege of peeping into the World's Fair.

Tom now returned to his friend, who met him with a right good 'Ha! ha! ha!'

"Well, Tom, no use; I told you so."

"Ah," replied Tom, "you are out this time. My French has been approved of, and I am done here—I sail in the next steamer."

"You don't say so; but, Tom, when did you learn French?"

"When you were teaching 'Grotto.'"

A new light flashed across the vision of "Grotto's" master. "What!" said he, "whilst I was fooling over that dog, were you studying?"

"Just so; and you now know with what success our time has been rewarded."

By the judicious disposal to time, one young man is on the high road to mercantile fame and fortune, whilst, by throwing away time, another, equal in abilities, is doomed to drudgery and clerkship perhaps all his days.

THE WAY WITH SOME PEOPLE.

Deacon S—— once employed a cobbler to take a few stiches in a boot, for which service he was asked half a dollar. The demand was considered exorbitant, but the deacon was not a man to have trouble with his neighbor on a trifling matter, so without a word of objection it was canceled. "All will come round right in the end," he said to himself.

Next morning, the deacon, who was a farmer, was on his way to his field with his oxen and plow, when the cobbler came out of his shop and accosted him.

"Good morning, deacon. You're just the man I hoped to see. The case is, I've hired the field yonder, and am going to sow it with wheat; but being no farmer myself, I wish you would stop and give me a little insight into the business."

The other was about to excuse himself, for he felt particularly anxious to finish a piece of plowing that day, which he could not, if detained at all; when, remembering the boot-mending, thought he, "The affair is coming right soon. Here is an opportunity for illustrating the Golden Rule, and returning good for evil. I will render the assistance he needs, and when asked what's to pay, will answer, 'Nothing, sir, nothing. I never make account of these little neighborly kindnesses.' That will remind him of yesterday."

So the deacon readily consented to do as requested, and going over to the field, commenced and finished sowing a bushel of grain; scarcely thinking, meantime, of how his team was standing idle in the cool of the day; but glorying in anticipation of the smart his neighbor would suffer from the living coals about to be heaped upon his head. The employer, who, seated on a pile of stones in the center of the field, had watched the process in silence, now rose to his feet, and very deliberately advanced towards the obliging farmer.

"Now for my revenge," thought the latter, seeing him about to speak; but the other only carelessly remarked, "It isn't much to do a thing when one knows how."

The deacon made no reply, but stood awaiting the question, "How much do you ask for your labor?" He awaited in vain, however; the question was not asked. The other began to speak on different topics, and the farmer, unwilling to lose more time, turned and hurried away to where he had left his team. He had gone some distance along the road, when a voice was heard calling,

"Hallo, deacon! Will you hold on there a minute."

The deacon turned his head, and his neighbor the cobbler beckoned him back.

"He's just thought of it," said the deacon to himself, half impatient at being again stopped. "My triumph is likely to cost about as much as 'tis worth, but I'll have it, after all. Urge as he may, I won't take a solitary dime."

So saying, he secured his oxen to a post by the road side, and ran back as far as the wall, against the opposite side of which the cobbler was carelessly leaning.

"Why, how you puff, deacon; there's no special haste called for. I merely thought to ask whether you don't imagine we shall have rain soon. You farmers pay more attention to these things than the mechanics do."

The deacon coughed a full minute, and then answered that he really couldn't say, but it seemed nearly cool enough for snow, and having given his opinion, he once more set his face farmward; musing, as he went, whether it might not have been well to have attached to the Golden Rule a modifying clause, suited to dealing with such people as his neighbor of the awl and last.

The deacon loves to this day to tell the story and laugh over it; but he never fails to add, "Well, well, it ended just as it should; inasmuch as I was wickedly calculating on rejoicing over my neighbor's humiliation!"

A MAN, A WOMAN, AND A CHILD.

A few Christian friends were recently admiring the character of one of their acquaintances, and descanting upon his virtues and graces. One of them remarked, "I admire him for his manly firmness and independence in sustaining the cause of truth and righteousness in the community." A second friend, who acquiesced in the correctness of this estimate, added, "And I particularly admire him for his gentle courtesy of demeanor. He puts me in mind of a true, kind-hearted woman." "Yes," immediately replied a third friend, "and I admire him because he is guileless as a child." "Well," exclaimed a lady, who overheard the conversation, "you have made him out a remarkable character. He is a man, a woman, and a child!" And so he was in each of the characteristics named.

The best form of Christianity is that which presents the loveliest combination of its graces. Every true Christian is believed to possess the substance of every grace. Love, which is the general attribute, includes every form of virtue and goodness. But observation teaches that while many Christians excel in particular qualities, and almost every one has something that may be admired, few possess a completeness of Christian character. This is the prevalent defect which mars the evidences of sanctification. A firm independence in bearing witness to the truth is worthy of all imitation. But why need it be dissevered from gentleness and meekness? Why not let there be superadded, kind-hearted courtesy and guilelessness? How transcendently beautiful in this world of ruin is a spiritual temple, whose proportions are arranged according to the science of the Scriptures, and where each part is not only admirable in itself, but derives increased effect from the general harmony which pervades the whole? Few persons seem to possess, at the present day, that completeness of character so necessary to the full illustration of Christianity. The combination of graces springs from divine power and goodness, and is lovely alike to the eye and to the heart. [Presbyterian Magazine.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 16, 1851.

SABBATH-BREAKING RAILROADS, CANALS, &C.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Much has been said and written of late in relation to the employment of Canals and Railroads on Sunday, Sunday excursion trains, &c.; and, very naturally, the Sabbath Recorder has not been silent on these points. But it appears that Seventh-day Baptists do not yet understand each other on this subject. You will much oblige a correspondent, therefore, and I think do no little service to the cause of truth, by answering the following inquiry.

While the Recorder protests against the effort to enforce the observance of Sunday as a Sabbath, is it to be understood to be the doctrine of Seventh-day Baptists, and of the Sabbath Recorder, that the Fourth Commandment, in its prohibition of labor on the Sabbath day, has reference only to the labor of man and beast—creatures that can tire—and has no reference to the employment or labor on that day of things that cannot tire? and that, therefore,

1st. "Seventh-day Baptists have no objection to the employment of machinery—things that cannot tire—on the Sabbath day?"

2d. They would urge "no objections to Sabbath railroad excursion trains, which would require the labor of only a few men, inasmuch as, if these trains were prohibited, a multitude of horses and drivers—beings that would tire—would be employed in excursions on that day?"

3d. "Seventh-day Baptists do not hesitate to become partners in business, or railroad stockholders, because the capital invested, the road, or the machinery employed, will be made to do labor on the Seventh or Sabbath day?"

ENQUIRER.

Reply.

Whether Seventh-day Baptists "understand each other on this subject," we shall not undertake to inquire; but if they do not understand the position of the Sabbath Recorder, it is time they did.

The fourth commandment, in its prohibition of labor on the Sabbath-day, has reference to "all thy work." Let an inspired commentator throw light upon this point. Isa. 58: 13—Not doing thine own ways. The Sabbath is not to be a day, in which one may labor for his own profit or emolument, whether by his own hands, or by the instrumentality of machinery. He shall employ no agency of any kind to minister to his avaricious desires. Nor finding thine own pleasure. The Sabbath is not to be a day of amusement. Such is the perverseness of the human heart, that, being restrained from the performance of labor by the express words of the commandment, and finding no pleasure in a spiritual improvement of the time, man naturally seeks to convert the Sabbath into a season of recreation. Hence, visiting, parties, social dinners, railroad and steamboat excursions, and, in some places, balls and theatrical entertainments. All these things are virtually included in the prohibition of the commandment. Nor speaking thine own words. Our common conversation, instead of being shaped with reference to our worldly concerns, and the amusements of the day, is to be of things pertaining to the cause of God.

It hence appears, that the Sabbath was designed to operate as a check to man's worldliness. It is sheer nonsense to suppose that it simply prohibits manual labor on the part of man, but allows the more extended gratification of his worldly spirit through the agency of beasts and machinery. The fourth commandment is a clear prohibition of every form of labor, which goes to build up human selfishness; and nothing but dishonesty of heart prevents any one from seeing it.

In regard to the second point, that "they would urge no objections to Sabbath railroad excursion trains, which would require the labor of only a few men," &c., we have only to say, that if there are any Seventh-day Baptists who talk in this style, we are ashamed of them. We are not willing that even a few men should break God's law; though, if it must be broken, we prefer to have the sin confined to a few, rather than have it participated in by a large number. Excursions on the Sabbath, whether by railroad or steamboat, are a wicked violation of duty. No Christian should ever indulge in them. What we have objected to, and what we must still oppose, is any and every attempt to coerce a cessation of such things by the civil law. As long as men will, in their depravity, find other modes of violating the Sabbath, if they are restrained from the use of railroads, we think it better that they should do it in that mode which involves the fewest number in guilt. To prohibit the running of a car on the Sabbath, on any given route, when the necessary consequence of that prohibition would be the calling into service of a multitude of horses and carriages, and a proportional number of men to drive them, would be very poor policy, to say the least. But because we thus speak, it must not be inferred that we have no objections to Sabbath railroad excursions.

The third point of our correspondent's inquiry, which respects partnerships in business involving labor and the employment of capital, machinery, &c., on the Sabbath-day, is one which calls for serious investigation. Our opinion is, that such partnerships go far to neutralize all the testimony, which those engaged in them are attempting to give in favor of the Sabbath. Seventh-day Baptists are not prepared, it may be, to take the ground which consistency demands of them. Totally to renounce all such partnerships, and to withdraw all their capital from institutions which do business on the Sabbath-day, with the fixed determination of living and dying poor rather than participate in the gains of Sabbath-breaking, seems like a bold undertaking. Who among us has faith enough to do it? Nevertheless, we have set ourselves up as reformers; and if we expect to sustain the character, we must make up our minds to be poor. When Sabbatarians, as a body, are ready to take this stand, we shall expect to see an overturning of society.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Why no Appointment of Sunday.

GLASGOW, September 26, 1851.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

The practice of the Church generally respecting the Sabbath might lead to the idea that the appointment of Sunday was very distinct—in the imagination of its observers. And yet facts in evidence of the contrary often present themselves. It is indeed only those who have made no close examination of the subject, who are ignorant of the difficulty of pointing to authority for their conduct in the matter. The better informed content themselves with assigning reasons for the want of the desiderated evidence. Another instance of this is before me, in a quotation given from a new Exposition of the Gospel of Luke, by the Rev. Dr. James Thomson, Eccles. He says :—

"Why clearer and more positive injunctions respecting the observance of the Lord's day were not given by our Saviour and His Apostles, it is not difficult to discover. It was easy to give strict injunctions respecting the Sabbath to the Jews, because they formed a single and separate nation, and had power within themselves to enforce its observance; but it was impossible to give similar injunctions to Christians during the first three centuries, or till the reign of Constantine the Great; for before that time Christians did not possess a government of their own, and therefore had not authority to enforce the observance of the Sabbath."

Such reasoning on the part of the defenders of the Sunday ought to have the tendency of opening the eyes of honest-minded Christians to the fallacy of their position. There is no recognition of the fact that the very design of God is that believers should commend holiness to others by its exhibition in their practice—that the church is to be a light in the midst of prevailing darkness, by doing whatever is good and right. The same line of argument adopted by this Minister of the Gospel would have justified Christians, supposing they had been silent about the evils of idolatry, or any other sin, until they had acquired power "to enforce" the opposite. The question is not as to their enforcing by authority their views on others, but what the Saviour and Apostles taught the disciples. And before any thing be said as to "why clearer and more positive injunctions respecting the observance of the Lord's day were not given," it behoves those who imagine that there is in the New Testament any "injunction" to observe any day instead of the Sabbath, to point it out, even if it should neither be "clear" nor "positive."

The King of Prussia, the Protestant King, in reply to a deputation of congratulation, complained of the "hell-born," "most wicked lies," which have been devised against him, among which he classed the report "that he was about to introduce the system of the Scotch church; then, that he had a hyper-Christian tendency, and intended to decree the English mode of observing the Sabbath," meaning, of course, the Sunday. And, last month, we read that "the opening of the triennial Belgium Exhibition of Painting, Sculpture, and the Fine Arts, took place on Sunday at Brussels, in presence of the King of Belgium in person, and of a most brilliant suite.

J. A. BEGG.

RHODE ISLAND CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday-keeping, Church-going, Church manners, &c.

PROVIDENCE, Sunday, Oct. 5, 1851.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Pressure of daily duties renders it impracticable for me to comply with your very agreeable request, to give your readers occasional notes on matters and things in Rhode Island. I regret it the more, as I have thus been unable to make due acknowledgment of your very good-natured criticism on my first effort. Lest you should think me disheartened, I have concluded to try again; and, as to-day is Sunday, the subjects at the head of this article may not be inappropriate.

Providence is emphatically a city of churches. There are no less than eight Baptist churches, the first of which claims to have been founded by Roger Williams, and to be the oldest in America. This last claim, however, is contested by the First Baptist Church at Newport, which has given rise to lengthy and able discussions between their respective pastors. There are also five or six Congregational churches, while Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Unitarians, Quakers, and Catholics, are all well represented. The blacks also have a large and flourishing church, which of course saves other churches the expense of negro pews, and obviates the necessity of sitting in the house with them.

Diverse as are the tenets of these various sects on the points of religious belief which distinguish them, they nevertheless have yielded a common consent to a practice, least taught by inspiration, and least sanctioned by apostolic example, of any practice to which Christians have ever yielded a common consent—I mean the practice of Sunday-keeping. The extent of this practice seems to indicate a deep-seated conviction of its obligation. Not till I became identified with this kind of society, in my present location, could I believe that the element of divine authority entered so sparingly into the reasons for this practice. A family with which I have lately become acquainted, consists of a widow lady and her daughter, members of the First Baptist Church—intelligent, well informed, and pious. On stating my belief to them, they replied, that they believed the seventh day to be the Sabbath, and had long wished to see Christians come back to its observance. They said they had found no other Sabbath in the Bible, and wondered why Christians were observing Sunday. If all were uninstructed save by the Bible, Sunday observance would be a wonder from its scarcity. It would be interesting to inquire how many, in this or any community, believe Sunday-keeping ever to have been sanctioned by divine authority. My daily experience convinces me that there are few—very few, indeed. A few examples may interest those who do not mingle in the society of Sunday-keepers.

Not long ago, while seated in the cars for Westerly, I was introduced to a Baptist minister from M. The Sabbath question was discussed at length by him, a Sabbath-keeping brother, and myself. He seemed very timid about assuming any position as his own, but suggested a thousand possibilities and contingencies, evidently distrusting their force, and fearing to assume them. He was endeavoring to suggest the possibility that the Sabbath had been abrogated, to prove which he said, "The Son of Man was lord of the Sabbath," and therefore had full control over it, to abrogate it or not at his will. On being asked who was meant by "Son of Man" in the text, he said it was any son of a man, or any human being. Supposing he had made some mistake, the question was urged, when he re-affirmed it as his explanation of the text. Such is the monstrous absurdity to which false theories lead men. He foresaw, that if he should make the text mean Christ as Lord of the Sabbath, he would be called on to show that he had abrogated the law. Not daring to undertake that, he chose rather to clothe foolish man with the prerogative of God, and place the immutable laws of Jehovah at his control. Perhaps he little thought that this was athiesm; but verily, if man is lord of the commands of Sinai, then God has become obsolete. A listener standing by, seeing the predicament in which our ministerial friend had placed himself, kindly took the oar, and the latter retired to recruit. My new friend very confidently assumed, that the law was yet in force, but that it required one seventh part of time only to be kept holy. Fearing that he had not stated his position as he meant, he was asked if that was precisely what he meant. He re-affirmed that one seventh part of time was the whole demand of the law. On being asked, if he should labor six years, and rest the seventh, whether he would not rest "one seventh part of time," and fulfill the law, he at once abandoned his position, and said it required one day in seven. But on being asked which of the seven days of the week the law specified, he replied that he did not wish to get into an argument, and retired. The ministerial friend now aroused himself and said, "That man's position was not correct!" The cars stopped, and I left them to arrange their own absurdities.

Does not the fact that men always arrive at such diverse conclusion in attempting to uphold Sunday-keeping, show a want of the Bible as a common reference? Certainly, that book cannot indicate all these contradictory theories. Not only the unlearned involve themselves in clouds and thick darkness on this subject, but the learned seem, if possible, even less prepared to show a divine sanction for Sunday observance. Not long ago a young candidate for the ministry, near the last week of his seniority in College, introduced the Sabbath question by asking me, with a very significant air, how far back we had any account of Saturday's being kept. He had evidently prepared to discharge a volley of dates, to show that Sunday might be traced clear back to Constantine and "the fathers"—an antiquity to which the practice of "keeping Saturday for Sunday" certainly could not lay claim. Not wishing to expose the ignorance of biblical history which his question indicated to the company, I waived an answer, and gave him time to recover; but he saw not his dilemma, and insisted on an answer. But on being told that the practice began with the first seventh day of the earth's existence, and had continued ever since, his chronological battery seemed to tumble down, and he appeared to remember of reading some such account somewhere. Rallying his forces, however, he supposed that it was obligatory upon the Jews to keep the seventh day of the week, but that Christians now were obligated to keep Sunday. He then went on to show that it was impossible to keep the seventh day on account of the revolution of the earth. But on being asked, how then it was possible to keep Sunday, since the revolution of the earth must affect that the same as the seventh day, his last hope seemed to fail him; and on being still farther asked, how the Jews could have been obligated to keep the seventh day, if that was rendered impossible by the rotation of the earth, he retreated from his position, and said, "Well, it is only required to observe one seventh part of time." Having thus abandoned his position of Sunday sanctity, for the more available one of "any-day sanctity," he was taken in hand by one of the company, who told him that he did not understand the subject; he must study it, and maintain the Sunday.

On another occasion, a student of high standing and good abilities, expressed his belief in the sanctity of Sunday, as indicated by apostolic example. This example was sought for, but on examining the passages usually quoted, and finding them totally inadequate to his purpose, he abandoned his Sunday, and said, "Well, I take it that one seventh part of time is all that is required."

One more example, and I will close this part of my letter. Not many evenings since, while sitting at the table with two young men, one of them asked me what I thought of the example of Christ and the Apostles in reference to Sunday-keeping. On being asked to specify those examples, he was much surprised to find nothing in the texts usually referred to, which indicated any sabbatizing whatever—that only two meetings were specified on Sunday, and that they occurred for objects not at all connected with sabbatizing. He said the arguments for Sunday were fairly refuted, and he knew not how to sustain them, but he would investigate the subject. He then remarked, that time had been lost or changed, but he knew not when or how. On being shown the land-marks along the march of time, which point back to the erection of the sabbatical monument, he at once saw his error, and retracted it. The other young man then said he firmly believed the seventh day to be the Sabbath. The next morning the young man with whom I held the conversation on the previous evening, asked a student of divinity, whom he supposed might be able to relieve him from the doubts and difficulties which had come over him, what authority he had for keeping Sunday. He replied, that he did not think there was any authority, but that he observed Sunday because others around him did so, and that "any day" would be acceptable. But the other informed him that "the seventh day was commanded to be observed;" and he replied, that "time had been lost, so that we could not tell which was the seventh day." It was replied by the other, that he had supposed so, but had just learned that such was not the fact, nor did he know how to evade the argument which had taught him its fallacy, nor could he refute those which had shown Sunday-keeping to be wanting in sanction, by precept or example. I cannot foretell the result of the investigation on his mind and others. Let us pray that all may learn of God and love his laws.

These facts have not been mentioned for the sake of presenting arguments in favor of the Sabbath to the readers of the Sabbath Recorder, but simply to verify the proposition, that the element of obligation enters sparingly into reasons for observing Sunday. There seems to be a vague, indefinite notion about apostolic example; but upon a careful search for it, it always flees away before this ghostly plan of "any day observance." No doctrine more derogatory to the claims of God has ever emanated from the Christian church than this, that no particular day of the week has any sanctity, and that the Sabbath day derives all its sanction from the mere contingencies of human society. It is emphatically a no-Sabbath dogma, under a new name. But, says one, some day is sanctioned, but no particular day. How can that be? If God has bestowed a blessing on any day, it must be on some particular day of the week, to the exclusion of all others. The only inquiry then is, Which day of the week is thus favored of Heaven? This is pointed out in our guide-book, so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err. To him who denies that any day of the week is sanctified, and obligatory as a Sabbath, belongs the task of showing that the fact stated in Genesis 2: 3 has ceased to be a fact, and that the obligation imposed by the command recorded in Exodus 20: 10 has ceased to be an obligation.

That this "any day" doctrine should find many adherents in this city, and especially among students, is not surprising, when we remember whence it emanates. It is the teaching of one whom we all venerate, and whose counsels in most things are wise. But this dogma stops not here; it is as wide-spread as "Wayland's Moral Science," and travels the world over with Wayland's pupils. The Sabbath day, robbed of God's sanction, and made the supple subject of convenience! Many, very many, fancy that their convenience demands no Sabbath-day at all. Well, if convenience be the god of the Sabbath, let it be obeyed. But if the Lord, who said, "The seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt do no work," be the God of the Sabbath, let him be obeyed, and let Presidents of colleges learn of him. But I have reached the limits of this article, and must reserve the other matters for another number.

THE METHODISTS IN CALIFORNIA.

The Ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church recently held an annual meeting in San Francisco. It was a miniature conference, and held after the manner and embracing all the interests of an annual conference in the Atlantic States. The Rev. Wm. Roberts, Superintendent of the Oregon and California Missionary Conference, who visited the Pacific coast as a missionary in 1847, and organized a class of the M. E. C.—the first Protestant church in San Francisco—was present, and preside at the meeting. Ten ministers, exclusive of visiting brethren, were present. The report on Education showed that two seminaries had been incorporated, according to law, by the friends respectively at Sacramento and Santa Cruz. These institutions were received under the patronage of the Conference. A charter for a college to be located in Santa Clara has been secured, and trustees appointed, under the name of "The Board of Trustees of the California Wesleyan College." Over twenty-seven thousand dollars have been subscribed towards endowment, and ample grounds obtained.

Twelve Circuits have been organized, and in general give a comfortable support to the ministers laboring on them. Much ground, however, remains unoccupied, and an earnest demand for more laborers immediately was forwarded to the Missionary Board at home.

Sunday schools and Bible classes have been organized to a considerable extent. The statistics placed before the Conference show the following results: Number of schools 11, of officers and teachers 65, scholars 295, Bible classes 6, persons in Bible classes 86, volumes in libraries 1215.

Twelve churches and five parsonages have been built, at an expense of over twenty thousand dollars. The present indebtedness for church property is about five thousand dollars, and the present valuation is over twenty-one thousand.

It was unanimously determined to publish in the city of San Francisco a weekly literary and religious paper, under the name of California Christian Advocate. A publishing committee were appointed, and M. C. Briggs and S. D. Simonds were elected Editors. The first number will be issued the first week in October, and the paper will be afforded to subscribers at $6 per annum.

PENNSYLVANIA ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.—The Philadelphia correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune says that the Pennsylvania Anti-Slavery Society assembled at Westchester on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 7. The audience was large and enthusiastic. Letters were received from Messrs. Lloyd Garrison, Douglass, and others. A report was read concerning the Fugitive Slave Law. It contains, among other things on this subject, the following :—

"The Fugitive Slave Law we regard as an infraction of the Constitution, an offense against the code of nations, and a violation of the law of God. We cannot, we will not obey it. Neither will we encourage others to obey it."

There was an adjourned session on the morning of the 8th, and one also in the afternoon, at both of which able speeches were made, and resolutions of the character of the above adopted.

THE HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.

This road between New York and Albany was opened on the 8th inst. with appropriate ceremonies. At 7 o'clock in the morning a train of seven cars, containing the Board of Directors, Stockholders, &c., started from New York for Greenbush, opposite Albany, which place they reached at 11 o'clock, having made the entire distance of 143¾ miles in three hours and fifty minutes. A collation there awaited the company, the discussion of which, with the usual wine-drinking and speech-making, occupied about three hours. At 2 o'clock the return train started for New York. The distance from Greenbush to Poughkeepsie—70 miles—was made in one hour and thirty-eight minutes, and to the Depot at Thirty-Fourth Street, in three hours and forty-five minutes. This, with a heavy train, is a rate of speed which we believe has not been equaled in this country. It is intended to run the regular trains through in less than five hours.

A reporter of the N. Y. Daily Times, who accompanied the train, speaks as follows of the condition and management of the road :—

"There was little of ornament or decoration, on the line of the road, but much—very much of comfort and security. The track seems to have been laid in the most substantial manner, and even when running at the rate of forty miles an hour, the motion was so perfectly easy that reading was almost as easy as riding, and writing not very difficult to those whose professional duties occasionally require the practice of chirography under such disadvantages. The excellent flag system established upon this road renders an accident almost impossible, and gives a feeling of security to the traveler not ordinarily included in the pleasures of a railroad journey. It may not be generally known, that flag men are stationed upon every mile of the road, generally at the curves, or upon a slight acclivity where the view of the track may be extended for some distance. Upon the approach of each train it is their duty to signalize the engineer whether he may go ahead confidently, or must slacken his speed, or stop because of danger, &c. During the intervals between the passages of the trains, these flag men examine the road to see if all is secure, and to repair, or procure the repair, of the slightest damage, and the removal of the least obstruction. Thus the entire road is kept under a system of vigilant police.

The following brief history of the Hudson River Railroad, just completed, is given by the Albany Evening Journal :—

The Company was organized March 1st, 1847, and to the 31st December, 1848, the amount of capital stock subscribed was $3,110,500; of this amount $2,384,200 was paid in. The expenditures for this period were $481,386 12 for land; $1,426 83 for buildings; $1,581,366 34 for construction, and $108,533 18 for salaries. No part of the road was in operation on the 1st January, 1849, but during the summer and autumn of that year the track was open for travel to Peekskill, and December 31st to Poughkeepsie. During these years the capital stock was increased to $3,281,500; of this amount $3,157,175 was actually paid in. The whole cost of the road to December, 1849, was $5,003,675 39. During the year 1849 about forty miles of double track was laid, extending from New York to Peekskill, and a large amount of work was done to secure the structures, increase the conveniences, and promote the safety of the road. That portion of the read between Poughkeepsie and Albany was put under contract in July, 1850. On the 16th June the road was opened to Hudson; July 7th, to Oak Hill; August 3d, to Tivoli; and October 1st, to Albany.

COLLEGES IN THE UNITED STATES.—A correspondent of the Christian Watchman and Reflector says that there are sixty-one Colleges, in twenty different States, and their alumni in the aggregate number about 50,000, being an average of 800 to a college, and 2,500 to a State. More than two-thirds of these graduates have been from twelve colleges in eight States—17,700 from Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, and 16,300 from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, and Virginia. From the best authority within our reach, we find that, last year, there were about 11,000 students or undergraduates in all the colleges of the United States. If an average of the classes be taken, at least 2,750 young men must have gone forth from these colleges, to mingle, professionally or otherwise, with their fellow-citizens throughout the land.

PERIODICAL ISSUES OF THE TRACT PRESS.—Besides the daily publication of nearly 4,000 books, and 30,000 smaller publications, the American Tract Society has an unprecedented circulation for its various periodicals. The illustrated Family Christian Almanac has an annual sale of more than 300,000 copies. The American Messenger, a monthly newspaper, is sent to about 200,000 families. The Amerikanischer Botschafter, or American Messenger in German, has a circulation exceeding 20,000 copies. And in The Messenger for this month we see the prospectus and specimen pages of a periodical for children, handsomely illustrated, to be called The Child's Paper.

THE HILLOTYPE.—A fine specimen of the art known as the Hillotype is on exhibition at Albany. The Argus says of it :—

"It is a view of Mr. Hill's mountain home, with the Catskill for a back-ground, and a waterfall in the fore-ground, presenting a beautiful landscape, tinted by the new process. Nothing can exceed it in finish, and no effort of art can imitate so well the ærial perspective which is here presented in entire keeping. The discoverer has not yet brought his instruments or his manipulation to the degree of perfection to which he aspires; but he has achieved wonders thus far, and is encouraged to proceed in his experiments by the almost certainty of complete success."

☞ The above, after going the rounds, is declared to be entirely erroneous. The view spoken of is nothing else than an ordinary Daguerreotype, finished in the usual way. Mr. Hill has not yet exhibited his pictures in public, and many persons fear he never will.

THE "SPIRITS" AND THE SABBATH.—"A neighbor of mine, (says a friend writing from Alfred Center,) informs me that he has recently visited a place in the State of Pennsylvania, where there is great excitement on account of the presence, not of the 'spirit rappings,' but of the equally mysterious 'spirit writings,' conducted, it seems, on the same principle as the rappings. One thing connected with the matter, (if not more,) is difficult for me to explain; and that is, the 'spirit' has directed the people to observe the seventh day for the Sabbath, and many have become obedient to the direction. How is this? They live remote from Sabbath-keepers, and seem never to have known them. In reflecting upon the circumstances, I have come to the conclusion, that there is in the public mind a deep and extensive conviction, that the seventh day is the Sabbath."

SALARIES OF ENGLISH BISHOPS.—The developments of the past year in relation to the enormous sums received annually by the English Bishops, are likely to be of some use. The Privy Council has recently given its sanction to a scheme regulating the income of the Bishops, with a view to create new Sees to be supported by the surplus funds. The following are to be the incomes of the Bishops after the death of the present incumbents—sufficient, one would think, to supply the wants of any "successor of the apostles :"

See	Income.	See	Income.
Canterbury	£15,000	Glo'ster & Bristol	£5,000
York	10,000	Hereford	4,200
London	10,000	Litchfield	4,500
Durham	8,000	Lincoln	5,000
Winchester	7,000	Llandaff	4,200
St. Asaph	4,200	Manchester	4,200
Bangor	4,200	Norwich	4,500
Bath & Wells	5,000	Oxford	5,000
Carlisle	4,500	Peterborough	4,500
Chester	4,500	Ripton	4,500
Chichester	4,200	Rochester	5,000
St. David's	4,500	Salisbury	5,000
Ely	5,500	Worcester	5,000
Exeter,	5,000

STORM, SHIPWRECK, AND LOSS OF LIFE.—The vicinity of Prince Edward's Island and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, has been the scene of a fearful storm and great loss of life. The gale commenced on Friday night, the 3d inst., and continued till Sunday night. A large number of vessels engaged in the mackerel fishery were there, of which some three hundred sail got safely into the harbors, while probably one hundred sail were driven ashore. A dispatch from Halifax, dated Oct. 11, says that "the whole shore is strewed with the wrecks of vessels, and the dead bodies of their crews. At the village of Cavendish, (Prince Edward's Island,) the bodies of twelve persons had floated ashore. The body of a man with a boy lashed to his back, came ashore at Restico. There is reason to believe that over one hundred bodies have already floated to the beach." The following are the names of some of the lost vessels :—

Schooner Harriet Newell, of Harwich—lost two hands. Lyon, of Castine—master, mate, and six hands lost. The Forest, of Newburyport, and Mary Moulton, of Castine—all hands lost. Franklin Dexter—ten hands lost. Flint, of Gloucester—ten lost. Telegraph, of Boston—eighteen lost.

OUTRAGE ON AN AMERICAN ABROAD.—Private letters, says the Troy Budget, announce that Gen. Averill, of St. Johnsville, who is now traveling in Europe, has just been expelled from Milan, in a dastardly manner, without any explanation being given by the Government in justification of its conduct. It appears that General Averill was allowed to travel from the Alps to Milan. After reaching that city, he was seized by gendarmes, and brought before the authorities, who immediately ordered, without any trial, explanation or justification, that he be taken in charge of police to the frontiers of Sardinia. He was allowed barely time at his hotel to arrange his trunks, when he was placed in a carriage between two gendarmes, and driven to the Sardinian frontier. Here he was detained under guard for about twelve hours, until the arrival of his trunks, when he was taken on the Sardinian soil, and forbidden to recross the frontier. The only explanation given here was, that he was a dangerous man—that they had had notice of his arrival—and were prepared for him.

THE FUGITIVE BOLDING.—A Card published by Mr. E. D. Culver, who has had considerable to do with the case of Bolding, the Poughkeepsie fugitive, says that Mr. Anderson, the master, has gone to South Carolina, after having executed a deed of emancipation, which is lodged in the hands of Marshall Tallmadge of New York. Bolding is to be sent by steamer from Charleston to New York, and on his arrival the money is to be paid, and the deed delivered. He is expected the last of this week or the first of next.

"THE NEW YORK REFORMER," published at Watertown, N. Y., by L. Ingalls, A. H. Burdick, and L. M. Stowell, has recently been enlarged and improved. It is "an independent family paper, devoted to temperance, education, choice literature, the family circle, a reform in the assessment and license laws, and the general news of the day."

THE FAIR OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE, at Castle Garden, New York, continues to draw crowds, and is really a pleasant place to spend a few hours. Among the specimens of art there, visitors should not fail to examine Gurney's Daguerreotypes—the finest on exhibition, if not the finest ever produced.

MRS. JUDSON, widow of Rev. Dr. Judson, arrived at Boston week before last by the steamer Canada. She brings the children of her deceased husband, who have much improved in health by their voyage from India.

The average of additions to the Baptist churches in India, compared with those of the Baptist churches in England, is eight to three.

General Intelligence.

European News.

The U. S. Mail Steamer Humboldt, with five days later news from Europe, arrived at New-York on the 8th inst.

The Great Exhibition continued to become more and more attractive as the period for closing it approached. The attendance averaged from 60,000 to 65,000 persons during the one shilling days.

The French capital had been agitated by all sorts of rumors respecting a change of Ministry, but these reports were apparently spread abroad only for stock exchange purposes, where they had produced a fall in the funds.

The West India steamship Avon arrived at Southampton on the 23d ult., with specie valued at $1,500,000, a large portion of which was from California.

M. Kossuth and the few stanch followers who were in Kutahia with him, have now quitted the Ottoman territory. They left the Dardanelles for Messina on board the American steam-frigate the Mississippi, the 7th inst; from the latter city they go to the United States.

The yellow fever is prevailing at Oporto, and a circular has been issued by the authorities throughout the country, and to foreign consuls at Lisbon, stating that Oporto is to be considered a suspected port, and vessels proceeding from thence are to be placed in quarantine for eight days.

A letter from Rome, of the 14th, in the Débats, states that another attempt to murder by means of an explosive contrivance, had occurred there within the last few days. A tube, filled with gunpowder and bits of iron, had been placed in a passage leading to the laboratory of a chemist, at whose shop several persons, well known for their attachment to the Pontificial Government, usually meet in the early part of the evening. Fortunately the match fell out of the tube, after having been lighted, and the explosion did not take place.

Rumors are afloat of serious disturbances having broken out at Van, in Asia Minor. Towards the latter end of last month, according to the informants, the Christian population, composed mostly of Armenians, had raised the standard of revolt, and had attacked the Mussulmans, who number about 20,000. The number in killed and wounded is extensive, and were it not for Fehatal Bey, the Turkish chief, who came to restore order, the massacre would have been awful. The city has been pillaged and part of it destroyed by fire, the work of incendiaries. The dispute between the Christians and Mussulmans arose on account of the former having adopted bells for their churches.

The steamer Asia, with three days later news from Europe, arrived at New York on the 10th inst.

Several heavy failures in England and Scotland are announced.

The wire of the Electric Telegraph between England and France was laid down on Thursday, Sept. 25, to within 2½ miles of the French coast. It was all done without accident, and the electric communication found to be perfect at every stage of the process. The whole would be finished the next day.

The Morning Chronicle understands that the result of the late meeting of the Arctic officers, Sir Edward Parry, Sir James Ross, and Captain Beechey, at the Admiralty, has been the expression of their unanimous conviction that Sir John Franklin has taken the passage to the northwest out of Wellington Channel, and that he must be sought by taking the same route.

In France, several editors have recently been fined and imprisoned, and several newspapers suspended.

The French Academy of Sciences has lately been overwhelmed with communications upon the disease under which the vines are suffering. This has become quite as serious as that of the potato. Most of these communications describe in detail the circumstances and peculiarities of this scourge; a few only attempt to account for it.

Six missionaries (of whom two are French, two Belgian, and two Dutch) and three lay brothers, are about to proceed from Paris to Havre, where they will embark for Oregon. They are to precede Monsignor de Mers, Bishop of Vancouver, who is about to preach the Gospel in California.

Letters from Athens of the 9th state that a Democratic conspiracy had been discovered in that city, and that in consequence the Editor of The Minerva, among other persons, had been arrested. According to a letter in the Austrian Lloyd, the object of the conspiracy was to overthrown the influence of France and substitute for it that of England.

California Items.

The intelligence of gold in Australia has created a perfect stampede among the immigrants to California from the penal colonies, hundreds of whom are returning, to the great relief of the community upon whom they have been preying for the last few months. A number of convicts from that quarter were in custody of the Vigilance Committee, to be sent back on the first opportunity. There were many others of the same stamp ordered to leave, whose cases were gradually coming up before the Committee. Those who have been in the country for a year and upwards, have amassed much money, by keeping dens or cribs for the vilest of the human species—dividing plunder taken from the honest and industrious members of the community.

The San Jose Visitor tells a story of an onion, raising in Santa Clara Valley, measuring eighteen inches in circumference, and weighing two pounds and two ounces. It is claimed as a fair sample of the lot. A sugar beet, raised in the same neighborhood, weighed fourteen pounds and eight ounces; it was two feet long, and twenty-six inches in circumference. There are some in the same garden which, it is believed by those who have seen them, will weigh twenty-four pounds! These beets grow on a spot thirty-three feet above the water, and have never been irrigated.

The Assessor of Los Angelo County, California, says there are within its limits 104 vineyards, containing 400,000 vines, exclusive of the vineyards claimed by the padras at San Gabriel. All but twenty of the vineyards are within the limits of the city. He places the cattle at 100,000 head; working oxen, 750 yoke; gentle horses, 2,500; unbroken horses, 10,000. The property of the county is divided among 430 proprietors. About 15,000 head of cattle have been sold this year to go out of the county, at an average of $15 per head.

In the town of Hamilton, on Feather River, a young man by the name of Daniels hung himself in prison with a leather string or rope cut from the legs of his boots. He had been accused and found guilty of stealing a small sum of money, on a bar in the vicinity, and requested to stand a trial in court rather than receive the lashes which were his sentence.

The San Franciscans are agitating the subject of a magnetic telegraph from the city down the bay to San Jose, thence to Stockton and Sacramento. The distance is 180 miles, and the estimated cost of the work is $49,000. It is thought the enterprise would pay handsomely.

California Pines and Cedars.—Of all the wonders I have seen in the vegetable kingdom (remarks an observant traveler) nothing will bear comparison with the magnificent and lofty growth of cedars and pines, which embellish the hills and the mountains that lead and make up the Sierra Nevada range. The magnificence and grandeur of scenes, in which these trees abound, cannot be imagined by any man who has not seen them, and felt the awe and sublimity to which they give rise. I have counted, in a circle of fifty feet, thirteen pine trees, not one of which was less than 250 feet in height, nor were any of them marked by the slightest curve or inclination. They are the inimitable and lofty monuments of Nature, uninfluenced by sweeping storms and winds, unbent and undecayed by a centurian age. Not a limb or a knot can be found upon their bodies, until you reach the altitude of from one hundred to two hundred feet, beyond which hight they continue to grow, until their towering majesty overawes all surrounding objects, and affords a fit refuge for the noble bird which adorns the banner of our country.

The Revolution on the Rio Grande.—The New Orleans Delta regards this movement as a very formidable affair, and entertains sanguine hopes of its success. Col. Caravajal, the leader, is decidedly the most prominent and capable man in that part of the country. He is supported by the brothers Canales, who are men of great note and influence in the Sierra Madre; also, by Castillo, late commander of the National Guard; by Don Jesus Cardenas, late Governor of Tamaulipas; and, in fact, by nearly all the aspiring men in the country. They are aided, too, by a number of prominent citizens, and a strong body of invincible fighting men from Texas. Camargo, a considerable town in Tamaulipas, is already in possession of the insurgents, who were about to march on Matamoras, distant about four days' march. Ere this, a decisive battle has no doubt been fought at Matamoras, which has fixed the character of the movement.

A French Tragedy.—Not long ago, a man named Jobard, while at the theatre in Lyons, witnessing the representation of Adrienna Lecouvreur, rose from his seat, drew a poignard and plunged it into the heart of a young and beautiful woman, who was present with her husband and a party of friends. It has since been proved, that this Jobard, tired of life, and anxious to put an end to an existence that was a burthen to him, chose this method of accomplishing his design. He had at first contemplated suicide, but recoiled from the commission of an act which precluded the possibility of repentance. To take one's own life is a sin, and a sin for which no atonement can be made, committed as it is at the very instant of giving up the ghost. But when you shed another's blood, the State, before, in its turn, shedding yours, gives not only time, but opportunity and encouragement to repentance. Jobard determined, then, to break the sixth commandment, and straightway to receive absolution, and die in the bosom of the church.

The Revolution in Mexico.—Further details of the Revolution in Northen Mexico have come to hand since our last. It seems that a sharp engagement took place between the Revolutionists and the Government troops, which ended in the success of the former, who took and held the city of Camargo. The Mexicans are said to have lost some sixty men. The Revolutionary forces were about marching for Reynosa and Matamoros. It is stated that about two hundred Americans were with them. The pronunciamento issued by the revolting towns, sets forth the reasons for the step they have taken; they detail the grievances they have suffered from the Mexican Government, and the objects they propose to attain by establishing their independence.

Fraud on the Revenue.—Mr. J. K. Herrick, a well-known importer of Books and Stationery, has been discovered in passing fraudulent invoices through the Custom House. He has been arrested, and made full confession. About $50,000 worth of goods in his store has been seized by the Federal officers. The discovery was made by some parties in the book trade, who have been undersold by Mr. Herrick. His practice was to copy invoices, reducing the quantity, and in one instance he passed 860 Bibles upon an invoice which stated the number at 500, he paying duty only on the smaller number. He has passed about twenty of these invoices. Mr. Herrick has heretofore borne a good character, was in the first social standing, a member of a Church, &c. [Tribune.

Scene in an Alabama Court.—The Tuscaloosa (Ala.) Monitor of Oct. 2, states that John Kirby, an old and respected man, was shot in the Court House there on the 30th Sept. Kirby had indicted Frederick P. Hall for wounding him in April, and during the proceedings a quarrel ensued. Kirby drew a pistol which a bystander named Whitfield attempted to take from him—and in the struggle it went off, passing through Kirby's thigh and causing almost instant death; the ball also penetrated Whitfield's leg, but not seriously. Kirby's son, supposing that Hall shot his father, fired at him, but missed him and hit a juryman in the leg. The Judge ordered the Sheriff to arrest Hall, when he surrendered and delivered up his pistol loaded.

The Flying Cloud made the passage round the Horn to San Francisco in 50 days shorter time than any voyage on record. Her greatest day's run was 374 miles, beating the fleetest of Collins's steamers by 50 miles. In three successive days she made 992 miles. At this rate she would cross the Atlantic in less than nine days.

SUMMARY.

At Utica, N. Y. last week, J. Conklin was found guilty of arson in the first degree, for firing the barn of Mr. Sayres, connected with his house, in February last. It was shown on the trial that Conklin was the ringleader of the incendiaries last winter. The District Attorney also stated that persons holding property in the city were under indictment and would be tried as soon as the evidence could be collected. Conklin was sentenced to be hung on the 21st of November.

A large number of business men, in differ ent parts of the country, have failed within a month past, in consequence of the pressure in the money market. Some of them were wealthy, and took this way to save themselves from paying notes which they had endorsed to accommodate their friends. Among the heaviest failures are those of David Pingree of Salem, Mass., W. O. Brown of Buffalo, a produce operator in the West, and Wm. H. Imlay.

Margarett Garraty—the youug woman who several months ago, at Newark, N. J., killed the man who had ruined her under promise of marriage, by stabbing him while walking the street with the wife he had just married—was tried last week, and pronounced "Not guilty by reason of insanity."

William Moran and two others were drowned at Blackstone, Mass., on Friday evening, Oct. 3. They were in a chaise on the Railroad bridge, when by some accident they were overturned into the water, a distance of seventy-five feet, and were drowned.

In the way of telegraph lines, Michigan alone has now already more miles completed than has the whole of England. From Detroit there are six lines, and in the State thirty stations; and the whole number of miles in operation in the State is 683.

Mr. Edmond de Ginoux has an article in the Almanach Populaire de la France, upon the Presidents of the American Republic, in which he gives an account of a visit to Gen. Taylor at Whitehall, in Washington, on which occasion he had the pleasure of seeing Lady Bliss, the President's daughter.

News has been received of the death of Mr. James Richardson, the enterprising African traveler, on the 4th of March last, at Unqurutua, six days distant from Kouka, the capital of Bornou. He had separated from his companions, Drs. Barth and Overweg, in January.

Bishop Delancy, in his annual address to the Episcopal Convention of Western New York, urges the importance of procuring such an endowment for their college as will enable the trustees to offer tuition free of charge.

The Charleston Christian Advocate says that the list of revival notices for a few months past, has contained accounts of the accession to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of nearly two thousand five hundred persons.

A traveler writes from Dunkirk to say, that though last year it was only a village, it has now 3,000 inhabitants, and single lots are selling there for $1,000. The houses erecting are rented as soon as the corner stone is laid.

By accounts received at the Sandwich Islands, and published in the Polynesian of 19th July, there is strong reason to believe that the riches of the gold mines in Australia are equal to those of California.

Of the 216 Cuban prisoners sent to Spain, says the Washington Intelligencer, fifty-one are ascertained to be of the age of 22 years and under, down to the age of 16; and of the whole number only 18 are above the age of 30 years.

Gov. Slade, the agent of the National Educational Society, was at Buffalo on the 20th ult., having in charge some thirty young ladies bound westward as teachers. The Society has sent out to the West about 250 teachers.

The Michigan Central Railroad is now opened to South Bend, in Indiana, 161 miles from the Lake. The whole line will be completed to Chicago by March next.

People now come from Albany to New York, transact business, and return home by bed-time. The time allowed for a "special train" is four and a half to five hours.

A recent statute of Massachusetts requires all cities and towns having old public records in a perishing condition, to have them copied in good style and preserved along with the original.

The President of the United States has given orders to the Naval Stations to fire salutes and extend all military honors to Kossuth at New-York and other places. A grand dinner will be given him at the President's House.

The Chilicothe Gazette of the 2d, announces the death of the venerable and respected Ohio pioneer, Hon. William Creighton, at the age of 73 years. Mr. C. visited Ohio in 1796.

The President has sent instructions to arrest all the parties to the Syracuse outrage, and for their committal for trial on a charge of treason.

The Wards have placed a new steamer, called the Captain, in their line of Lake Erie boats. Her cost was upward of $100,000.

The Governor of Massachusetts has appointed Thursday, the 27th of November, to be observed as a day of public thanksgiving and praise.

The Old School Presbyterians have their greatest strength in Pennsylvania, where they number over 50,000 members.

The steamer James Jackson burst her boiler near Shawneetown, Ill., on the 21st of Sept., killing and wounding thirty-five persons.

The Wilmington (Del.) Blue Hen's Chicken proposes the establishmeut in that city of a Female Medical College.

Mr. E. Webster, a respectable citizen of Jefferson, Ohio, was struck by lightning on Wednesday the 10th ult., and instantly killed.

John S. Kelley, a tailor of Boston, has recently received intelligence from England that a legacy of £10,000 has been left him.

Potatoes throughout the West this year will be a failure. They are at present retailing at one dollars a bushel in Galena.

The Oregon Fever has broken out again in Iowa, and large numbers of farmers there are anxious to sell out their farms and "go west."

The first frost appeared at Chicago on the 24th ult.

The gale on Lake Ontario, on Friday, Oct. 3, was attended with serious loss of life and property. Among the accidents, we have to record the loss of the British schooner Christiana, of Sarnia, near Wellington, below Presque Isle, with eleven or twelve lives, crew and passengers, all of whom found a watery grave. The American schooner Kentuckian was also lost, near Presque Isle, with all on board. The number of individvals on board, or lost, has not been ascertained. Three more schooners are reported ashore on the Canada coast, but the crews were saved.

The citizens of Illinois are to vote upon a bill somewhat similar to the free banking law of this State, at the election to be held on the 4th of next month. This bill authorizes the Auditor of the State, upon persons desiring to establish a bank placing in his hands public stocks of the United States, or State stocks, on which full interest is annually paid, to the amount of fifty thousand dollars or upward, to deliver to them the same amount of bank notes for circulation.

A subscription is making in this city for the presentation of a service of plate to Mr. Boorman, late President of the Hudson River Railroad, as a complimentary acknowledgment of his services in that capacity, for which he always refused to receive any compensation whatever. In order that the compliment may be rendered the more acceptable by the numbers that join in it, the subscriptions are to be limited to twenty-five dollars apiece, and "the service" is expected to cost not less than $5,000.

At the Fair at Castle Garden, the New-Jersey Zinc Company exhibit specimens of zinc ore, and white, brown, and black paints made from zinc ore. Their brown and black paints are composed of the oxides of iron or zinc. They act galvanically on iron, protecting it from rust: the iron being negative and the zinc positive. The white is a pure oxide of zinc. These paints being oxides, only resist the action of atmospheric air, becoming harder the longer they remain exposed. The contrary is the case with the leads.

The New-York and New-Haven Railroad Company are having constructed a set of smoking cars for their trains. One of them is completed and upon the road. The smoking room is divided from the baggage part of the car by a partition, and instead of the doors opening in the centre, they communicate with a gallery upon the side, which is furnished with a railing, and affords a pass-way from the end of the car to the baggage room, and without passing through the smoking room.

The N. Y. Tribune of the 7th inst. says: The managers of the Western Bank of White Creek were to-day redeeming all their liabilities, taking up bonds and other evidence of indebtedness, and the bill-holders will be able to have their bills taken up at the usual rates for sound State Money. This resumption will only leave three others out of the field, viz: the James Bank, Farmer's Bank of Mina, and Bank of New-Rochelle; and these are by no means despaired of.

An extensive vein of copper has been found in the vicinity of Bad Axe, Wisconsin. Mr. D. Smith, while out hunting, discovered traces of copper, where he afterward commenced sinking a shaft. He has already taken out some sixty thousand pounds of ore, mixed with native mineral, valued at sixty dollars the thousand, and by "drifting ahead" in the crevice between the rocks, has found the vein to be of great value. It is reported to be seven feet in thickness, and a depth as yet unexplored.

The Elmira Karlon of Friday, states that the Williamsport and Elmira stage was driven off a precipice a few miles this side of Ralston, with eight passengers inside. The stage rolled over and over with frightful velocity, down a bank 30 feet deep—all the passengers were more or less hurt, and one of them, Dr. Martin, of N. J., it is feared was fatally injured. He was left at a house naar the spot where the accident happened.

The Journal of Commerce, the organ of the Castle Garden Committee, publishes the names of some six thousand patriotic citizens of New York, "in the cotton trade and sugar line," and kindred pursuits, who pledge themselves that they will "support no candidate for State officers, or for member of Congress, or for the State Legislature," who is opposed to any of the "Peace Measures," or in favor of reopening the questions that were settled by the Compromise.

At the truly magnificent dinner given by the Bostonians to the President of the United States, his cabinet, and other dignitaries, on Boston Common, at the Railroad celebration, where many thousands of the elite of New England were present, no wine was given—nothing, save coffee and Adam's ale, the oldest and softest liquor extant.

Surgeon Kane, of the Exploring Squadron, is of the opinion which he expressed before sailing, that Sir John Franklin must have sailed north, by Wellington channel, and may have drifted into the Polar sea, where it is quite possible his party may live for years without the means of escape. The American squadron drifted to within a few days' sail of open sea.

Dr. Kane, of the Advance, has brought home a specimen of the largest white bear on record, an animal which he shot in one of his hunting excursions. He has also the only specimen in our country of the Sea Unicorn, which has an ivory tusk of eight feet in length projecting from the head, and a hide like the Walrus.

An unknown Irish woman, aged about fifty years, was run over by a train on the Providence Railroad in West Roxbury, Mass., and was instantly killed. She was walking upon the track as two trains were approaching from opposite directions, and becoming confused in her efforts to avoid one engine, stepped directly in front of the other.

"Decorah" is the name of a new town in Wineski Co., Iowa. A correspondent describes the surrounding country in almost rapturous language—its game, its fish, its rivers, its woods, its fertility, and withal he says the owner of the town gives free lots to actual settlers. Those already located are mostly from New-York.

The "Butcher's Melting Association," of Philadelphia, recently made a sale of 500 casks of tallow, the average weight of which is over 1,000 lbs. This is probably the largest sale of tallow ever made in this country. It is for the Liverpool market.

The Daguerrian artists will hold a National Convention in this City on the 11th of next month.

A terrific clap of thunder, neither preceded nor followed by any other, recently astonished the people of East Dumfries, Canada. Some men were at work in a field, and without notice, were thrown down by the lightning, and rendered for a few seconds powerless, whilst the flash expended its power on a neighboring tree, which it shivered and set on fire. The thunder instantly followed the flash, and it was of the most awful description.

Letters from on board the ship Vandalia at Acapulco say, that the whole crew suffered immensely with fever; 60 men were down at a time, and were so much reduced as to be scarcely able to walk about.

The Peach season is now about over, though some poor specimens of the fruit may still be seen in market. Over 10,000 baskets, averaging $1 25 each, have been sent from Morris County, and consumed in New-York.

Mr. Thomas Ash, of Throgg's Neck, Westchester County, has this season raised a Bartlett pear, which weighs sixteen ounces, and measures eleven and a half inches in circumference.

Mr. Theron Fisk, of Warsaw, Wyoming County, has subscribed two thousand dollars, to constitute two scholarships in the Theological Seminary connected with the University of Rochester.

Lucius Clements, mail contractor, has been arrested, charged with extensive mail robberies. He is now lodged in the jail at Montpelier, Vt.

A reward of $1,000 has been offered by the citizens of Grayson County, Va., for the arrest of Bacon, the abolitionist.

There is a famine at Durango, Mexico. Corn was selling at a dollar a peck; it was caused by Indian ravages.

The recent gale on Lake Michigan carried away a valuable portion of Michigan-av. in Chicago.

Several new plank roads have been commenced in northern Illinois.

The Fair of the American Institute opened at Castle Garden, New York, on the 1st inst.

Jenny Lind sings in Detroit on the 1st proximo.

New York Market—October 13, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 87 a 4 94; Pearls 5 50.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 68 for State, 3 75 a 4 00 for Ohio, Michigan, and Indiana, 4 06 a 4 18 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 81. Corn Meal 3 37 for Jersey, 3 50 for Brandywine. Buckwheat 2 00 a 2 50 per 100 lbs.

Grain—In Wheat there is not much doing, and prices are nominal; good Genesee 97c., handsome white Ohio 87c., red Ohio 80c. Rye 68c. Barley 75c. for fair four-rowed. Corn 56 a 57½c. for Western mixed, 61c. for round yellow. Oats 35 a 36c. for Jersey, 39 a 40c. for State.

Provisions—Pork, 13 50 for new prime, 15 25 for new mess. Beef, 5 00 a 6 00 for prime, 8 75 a 11 00 for mess. Dressed hogs 6 a 6¼c. Lard 8¾ a 9¼c. Butter 8 a 11c. for Ohio, 10 a 15c. for State. Cheese 6 a 6¾c.

Hay—Good shipping demand at 50 a 56c.

Hops—20 a 22c. for Western, 22 a 26c. for Eastern.

Seeds—Flax 1 31. Clover 9 a 9½c. per lb. Timothy 15 00 a 23 00 per tierce.

Lumber is in better demand, and brings better prices. A cargo sold at 13 00.

MARRIED.

In Wayne, Erie Co., Pa., June 10th, 1851, by Rev. H. Hallock, Mr. John G. Colgrove to Miss Cordelia T. Miller.

In Watson, Lewis Co., N. Y., Sept. 27, 1851, by Eld E. Robinson, Mr. S. V. Carpenter, late of Albion, Wis., to Miss Elizabeth Jane Burdick, of Watson.

In Independence, N. Y., on the evening of Oct. 4th, 1851, by Eld. T. E. Babcock, Mr. Jeremiah Clark, of Andover, to Miss Catharine Crandall, of Independence.

In Hounsfield, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 29th of August, by Rev. J. Greene, Mr. Delos Crandall to Miss Fanny Frink, eldest daughter of Dea. Elias Frink, all of the above place.

DIED.

In Henderson, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 22d of February, 1851, Mrs. Mary Green, wife of Ethan Green, Esq., in the 79th year of her age, after an illness of six weeks, in which she suffered exceedingly, yet endured with the patience and resignation which pure religion only can impart, not a murmur or complaint escaping her through the whole of her affliction. For nearly fifty years Mrs. G. had been a professed follower of Christ, and for forty-eight years had been a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church. She was one of the few who united in the church covenant formed at the time of the organization of the Church at Adams, and remained a valued member of the same body till her death. Her natural disposition was amiable; and the religion which was her solace in death rendered her manners engaging and her conversation edifying and agreeable. Mrs. Green had been the mother of fourteen children, twelve of whom survive her. At the time of her death her descendants—children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren—numbered one hundred and thirty. Up to the time of her last sickness, she had enjoyed good health and was vigorous and active for a person of her age. COMM.

In Persia, N. Y., Sept. 10th, 1851, John Babcock, aged 77 years. He had long been a member of the church of Christ, and left his friends the sweet hope that he has gone home to the blessed inheritance promised to the redeemed. He was born in Rhode Island, in the town of Westerly, whence he moved to Brookfield, and thence to Persia.

At Hope Valley, R. I., on the 9th inst., of pulmonary consumption, Mrs. Clarissa Crandall, wife of Peleg W. Crandall, aged 23 years. She was a much esteemed member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Rockville, and died in the triumphs of faith; trusting in Christ as the "resurrection and the life."

In Andover, N. Y., Sept. 26th, 1851, of dysentery, Mary A., only daughter of John and Eliza Brown, in the sixth year of her age.

In Sangerfield, Oneida Co., N. Y., Sept. 29th, of dysentery, Otis Orlo, only child of Joel G. and Martha S. Saunders, aged 2 years and 2 months.

In Genesee, N. Y., Oct. 1st, 1851, of bloody flux, Eliza Josephine, daughter of Albert B. and Fanny Crandall, aged 3 years, 5 months, and 12 days.

"Happy infant, early blest,
Rest! in peaceful slumber rest." A. B. C.

LETTERS.

Daniel Coon, Charles Spicer, Nathan V. Hull, J. C. Green, W. B. Maxson, R. W. Utter, I. M. Rose, J. Clarke, J. H. Turner, H. P. Green, E. S. Bailey, E. Church, N. V. Hull, S. S. Griswold, John Cottrell, Joshua Clarke, S. V. Carpenter, A. B. Crandall, C. M. Lewis, O. C. Babcock, T. E. Babcock (will send to Alfred) H. G. Hawley (found at post-office.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Wm. Satterlee, Berlin	$2 00 to vol.	8	No. 52
Truman Saunders "	2 00	8	52
Amelia Green "	2 00	9	26
John Davis "	1 80	7	52
Dan'l G. Smith "	1 00	7	52
Chas. D. Coon, Portville	2 00	9	16
John J. Brown "	2 00	7	52
J. B. Maxson, New Lebanon Spa	2 00	8	52
M. & E. Hawley, Broadalbin	2 00	8	52
S. V. Carpenter, Watson	2 00	6	52
H. F. Randolph, Millington, N. J.	2 00	8	52
Daniel Noe, Albion, Wis.	2 00	8	52
J. Smalley, New Market, N. J.	2 00	8	52
Isaac Clawson "	2 00	8	52
John G. Colgrove, Wayne, Pa.	2 00	7	52
Of J. G. Colgrove, for Sab. Sch. Visitor,			25c

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

Receipts for the Missionary Society.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums not previously reported in the Recorder:—

A member of Shiloh Church	$12 00
Female Mite Society, Shiloh, N J	20 00
Monthly Concert Col "	13 27
Church at "	13 46
Church at Waterford, Ct	21 00
Church at New York, Monthly Concert Col	115 48
N Y Sab Sch for Sab Sch in China	2 00
1st Church in Verona	4 00
Church at Rockville, R I	7 00
Miss Ann S Clark, Broadalbin	2 00
Martin Dunn, New Market, N J	1 00
Catharine Vandine "	50
Church at Pawcatuck, R I	118 61
Fem Miss Soc of Pawcatuck, to educate Chinese child	25 00
Mrs Sarah Lewis, Hampton, Ct	1 00
Church at Westerly, R I	6 00
Thos R Green, Phœnix, R I	10 00
Church at Greenmanville, Ct, to constitute L Ms	125 00
Greenmanville Sabbath-School	50
1st Church in Brookfield	14 10
Female Sewing Society at Berlin	40 00
Church at Berlin	28 00
Calvin Waldo, Hayfield, Pa	2 00
Perry Cole "	2 00
Mrs P Cole "	1 00
James Stelle "	5 00
Church at "	20 00
Western S D B M Society	20 00
1st Church in Genesee	18 00
Martin Wilcox, 1st Verona	5 00
Of Maxson Green's estate, for Chapel, Shanghae	100 00

A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

Daguerrean Gallery.

GURNEY'S Daguerrean Gallery, No. 189 Broadway, has been known for years as one of the first establishments of the kind in the United States, and the oldest in the city of New York. He has recently greatly enlarged his Gallery by the addition of more rooms and large skylights, and other improvements, rendering it one of the most extensive establishments in this country. Mr. G. attends personally to his sitters, and from his great experience in the art he is enabled, at all times, to give perfect satisfaction. The large-sized pictures recently taken by his new process are universally acknowledged superior to any heretofore taken in this country. A large collection can be seen at all hours of the day. Ladies and gentlemen are respectfully invited to examine them.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

New York Weekly Times.

A very Large Newspaper for the Country.

EDITED BY HENRY J. RAYMOND.

Price $2 a year; 10 Copies for $15; 20 Copies $20.

On SATURDAY, September 27, the subscribers issued the first number of a NEW WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, in the city of New York, called the NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES, printed upon a very large quarto sheet of eight pages and FORTY-EIGHT COLUMNS, in close, clear type, and in the handsomest possible style.

The NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES will be printed on THURSDAY of each week, and will present THE NEWS OF THE DAY, in all departments and from all quarters; CORRESPONDENCE from all parts of Europe, from California, Mexico, and South America, and from all sections of the United States, written expressly for The Times by intelligent gentlemen permanently enlisted in its support. FULL REPORTS of Congressional and Legislative Proceedings; of Public Meetings, Political and Religious; Transactions of Agricultural, Scientific, and Mechanical Associations; and generally of whatever may have interest or importance for any considerable portion of the community: LITERARY REVIEWS AND INTELLIGENCE, prepared by competent persons, and giving a clear, impartial, and satisfactory view of the Current Literature of the day: CRITICISMS of Music, the Drama, Painting, and of whatever, in any department of Art may merit or engage attention: and EDITORIAL ARTICLES upon everything of interest or importance that may occur in any department—Political, Social, Religious, Literary, Scientific or Personal, written with all the ability, care and knowledge which the abundant means at the disposal of the subscribers will enable them to command.

THE WEEKLY TIMES will be under the Editorial management and control of HENRY J. RAYMOND; and while it will maintain firmly and zealously those principles which he may deem essential to the public good, and which are held by the great Whig party of the United States more nearly than by any other political organization, its columns will be free from bigoted devotion to narrow interests, and will be open within necessary limitations, to communications upon every subject of public importance.

In its Political and Social discussion, The Times will seek to be Conservative, in such a way as shall best promote needful Reform. It will endeavor to perpetuate the good, and to avoid the evil, which the past has developed. While it will strive to check all rash innovation, and to defeat all schemes for destroying established and beneficent institutions, its best sympathies and co-operation will be given to every just effort to reform society, to infuse higher elements of well-being into our political and social organizations, and to improve the condition and the character of our fellow-men. Its main reliance for all improvement, personal, social, and political, will be upon Christianity and Republicanism—it will seek, therefore, at all times, the advancement of the one and the preservation of the other. It will inculcate devotion to the Union and the Constitution, obedience to Law, and a jealous love of that personal and civil Liberty which constitutions and laws are made to preserve. While it will assert and exercise the right freely to discuss every subject of public interest, it will not countenance any improper interference, on the part of the people of one locality, with the institutions or even the prejudices of any other. It will seek to allay, rather than excite agitation:—to extend industry, temperance, and virtue:—to encourage and advance Education:—to promote economy, concord and justice in every section of our country:—to elevate and enlighten public sentiment: and to substitute reason for prejudice, a cool and intelligent judgment for passion, in all public action and in all discussions of public affairs.

The subscribers intend to make The Times at once the best and the cheapest Weekly Family Newspaper in the United States. They have abundant means at their command, and are disposed to use them for the attainment of that end. The degree of success which may attend their efforts, will be left to the public judgment.

VOLUNTARY CORRESPONDENCE, communicating news, is respectfully solicited from all parts of the world. THE WEEKLY TIMES will be mailed to subscribers at the following rates:

Single Copies	$2.
Ten copies to one address	$15.
Twenty copies to one address	$20.

Postmasters throughout the United States are authorized and invited to act as agents for the NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES.

THE NEW YORK DAILY TIMES

Will be published at the same office EVERY MORNING and EVENING, and will be sent to subscribers in any part of the United States, at the low price of FOUR DOLLARS a year. All payments for subscription or advertising must be made in advance; and postage on all letters must be prepaid. Communications for the editorial department must be addressed to HENRY J. RAYMOND, Editor of The New York Times: letters upon business or inclosing money, to RAYMOND, JONES & CO., Publishers.

Subscriptions and Advertisements left at the office, No. 118 Nassau st. or sent by mail, are respectfully solicited. RAYMOND, JONES & CO.

New York, October, 1851. o9tf.

Miscellaneous.

A Home Picture.

BY FRANCIS D. GAGE.

Ben Fisher had finished his hard day's work,
And he sat at his cottage door;
His good wife, Kate, sat by his side,
And the moonlight danced on the floor:
The moonlight danced on the cottage floor,
Her beams were clear and bright,
As when he and Kate, twelve years before,
Talked love in her mellow light.

Ben Fisher had never a pipe of clay,
And never a dram drank he;
So he loved at home with his wife to stay,
And they chatted right merrily;
Right merrily chatted they on, the while
Her babe slept on her breast;
While a chubby rogue, with rosy smile,
On his father's knee found rest.

Ben told her how fast the potatoes grew,
And the corn in the lower field;
And the wheat on the hill was grown to seed,
And promised a glorious yield;—
A glorious yield in the harvest time,
And his orchard was doing fair;
His sheep and his stock were in their prime,
His farm all in good repair.

Kate said that her garden looked beautiful,
Her fowls and her calves were fat;
That the butter that Tommy that morning churn'd
Would buy him a Sunday hat;
That Jenny for Pa a new shirt had made,
And 'twas done too by the rule;
That Neddy the garden could nicely spade;
And Ann was ahead at school.

Ben slowly raised his toil-worn hand
Through his locks of grayish brown—
"I tell you, Kate, what I think," said he,
"We're the happiest folks in town."
"I know," said Kate, "that we all work hard—
Work and health go together, I've found;
For there's Mrs. Bell does not work at all,
And she's sick the whole year round.

"They're worth their thousands, so people say,
But I ne'er saw them happy yet;
'Twould not be me that would take their gold,
And live in a constant fret;
My humble home has a light within,
Mrs. Bell's gold could not buy,
Six healthy children, a merry heart
And a husband's love-lit eye."

I fancied a tear was in Ben's eye—
The moon shone brighter and clearer,
I could not tell why the man should cry,
But he hitched up to Kate still nearer;
He leaned his head on her shoulder there,
And he took her hand in his—
I guess—(though I looked at the moon just then,)
That he left on her lips a kiss.

The Expedition in Search of Sir John Franklin.

The "Advance," one of the vessels sent out from New-York in search of Sir John Franklin, returned last week from a voyage full of peril, full of incident, and successful in everything but the great object of her search. Her consort, the "Rescue," parted from her in a gale off the Banks of Newfoundland. The following narrative of incidents that befell the expedition, we copy from the N. Y. Tribune:—

The American Expedition entered Wellington's Sound on the 26th of Aug., 1850, where they met Capt. Perry with the Lady Franklin, and Sophia, and where afterwards joined by Sir John Ross and Commodore Austin. On the 27th, Capt. Perry discovered unmistakable evidence of Franklin's first Winter quarters—three graves with inscriptions on wooden headboards dating as late as April, 1846. Their inmates, according to these inscriptions, were of his crew—two from the Erebus and one from the Terror. There are besides fragments of torn canvas, articles of clothing, wood and cordage, undoubted evidence of a large and long encampment; but affording no indications which would serve as guides to the searchers or give assurance to hope.

On the 8th of September the Expedition forced through the ice to Barlow's Inlet, where they narrowly escaped being locked in the ice. But they so far succeeded, and on the 11th reached Griffith's Island, the ultimate limit of their Western progress. From this they set sail on the 13th, with the intention of returning to the United States, but were locked in, near the mouth of Wellington's Channel. Here commenced those perilous adventures, anything comparable to which, were never encountered and survived. By force of the northern icedrift they were helplessly drifted to 75° 25′ N. lat., and thence drifted again into Lancaster Sound, somewhat, we should say, in a south-easterly direction. The agitation of the ice elevated the "Advance" nearly seven feet by the stern and keeled her 2 feet 8 inches starboard. In this position she remained, with some slight changes, for five consecutive months. And while in it the depth of winter closed its frozen terrors around the expedition. The polar night fell upon them, and for eighty days no ray of solar light broke upon them. The thermometer (Fahrenheit) ranged 40 degrees below zero, and sometimes sank to 46. Early in the awful night of November 5th the Rescue was abandoned, for the purpose of economizing the fuel, and the crews of both vessels determined to brave their fate together. They every moment expected the embracing ice would crush the vessel to atoms, and consequently stood prepared, sleeping in their clothes with knapsacks on their backs, to try chances on the ice, mid storm, and terror, and night. For this terrible trial they had made every preparation, had provisions sledged and every thing in readiness which might be useful for such a journey. They were then 90 miles from land, and so certainly did they expect that they should make this alarming trial that on two occasions, (8th December and 23d January,) the boats were actually lowered and the crews assembled on the ice to await the catastrophe.

During this period the scurvy became epidemic, and assumed an alarming character. Its progress defied all the usual remedies, and only three men escaped the attack. Capt. De Haven was himself the greatest sufferer. The constant use of fresh water obtained from melted ice, active mental and physical exertion, and the care of Divine Providence, arrested any fatal result; and the disease yielded to a beverage composed of a sort of apple tea and lemon juice. After entering Baffin's Bay, Jan. 13, the ice became fixed, and the little expidition became stationary and fast in the midst of a vast plain of ice, 90 miles from any land. The stores, materials and cordage were stowed away in snow-houses erected on the ice, and a sort of encampment was formed, with all the appearance, if not the solidity, of terra firma. The tables of ice varied from three to eight feet in thickness.

Nor was this situation of peril and awe without its attractions. Auroras Parhelia—(mock suns), and mock moons, of the most vivid luster succeeded one another without intersession, and as a day approached, the twilights, streaking the northern horizon, were vividly beautiful. At length the god of day showed his golden face (18th Feb.) and was hailed with three hearty American cheers. Gradually his influence was felt, and the waxen-like color of the complexion, which the long night had superinduced, gave place to freckles and tan. The disease, too, quickly diappeared.

On the 14th of May the Rescue was reoccupied.

The disruption of the ice was sudden and appaling. In twenty minutes from its first moving the vast field, as far as the eye could reach, became one mass of moving floes, and the expedition once more drifted southward. By a continued providential assistance it passed the perils of Lancaster Sound and Baffin's Bay, and on the 10th of June emerged into open water, lat. 65° 30′ N., a little south of the Arctic circle, being thus released from an imprisonment of nearly nine months, during which they helplessly drifted 1,060 miles. While in Lancaster Sound the roar of the rolling water and tumbling ice exceeded all earthly tumult, and was sometimes so loud and stunning as to render both voice and hearing useless.

Capt. De Heaven's first care on his escape was to repair damages and restore the health and vigor of the crews. With that object he visited Greenland, where he refitted. After a short delay, with unabated courage and unflinching purpose he once more bore northward. On the 7th of July the expedition spoke some whalers, and on the 8th passed the whaling fleet by the Dutch islands, there arrested by the ice. By the 11th the Expedition reached Baffin's Island, and entered through vast masses of loose ice. Here the Prince Albert joined. They continued in company till Aug. 3d, warping through the ice, when the Prince determined to try the southern passage. De Heaven persevered in his course until the 7th, when he became completely entangled in floes and bergs. Here again the Expedition encountered perils of the most alarming kind. The floating ice broke in the bulwarks, and covered the deck in broken masses like rocks tumbled pell mell by a mountain torrent. The more than iron endurance of the gallant ships was severely tested by the crush of the closing ice, but they rose to the pessure as if defying the elemental strife, baffled its fury, and somewhat disabled, but still without a plank yielding in any vital part, rode safely in an open road on the 19th day of August.

Here finding the north and west already closed against them, the American expedition set their sails and bore homeward, after having dared and suffered, and overcome difficulties and dangers such as scarcely if ever beset the path of the marines.

Thus ends this noble expedition, without discovering any satisfactory index to the fate of Sir John Franklin; but at the same time without any evidence to preclude further hope. Sir John might have won the point which the Advance was baulked of by the fatal drift into Lancaster Sound. If so, and it is not impossible, there is no reason to doubt the possibility of himself and the crew surviving in those regions where nature has adapted the rescources of life to the rigors of the climate.

Culture of the Grape in the West.

Grape Raising and Wine Making is becoming an extensive business in Ohio and some other of the Western States. The "Catawba" variety of grape is most generally cultivated, and is said to produce a quality of wine equal, if not superior, to any imported article. The process of its manufacture is thus described by The Cincinnati Enquirer:

The press is a common construction combining mill and press together. The grape is put into a hopper, at the bottom of which are two fluted rollers, which, revolving, crush, not grind, the berry; and thence it falls into the chamber. When sufficiently filled, plank are fitted over the pulp, and by means of a powerful iron screw, the juice is pressed out, running through a faucet into a large clean tank below. The first quality of wine is obtained from the first run, as it is called, after which the pulp is pressed over twice again, yielding inferior qualities at each process. The liquid, as it comes from the press, is of a beautiful color and rather too rich to imbibe freely. From the tank it is put into barrels, and after a time into bottles. Every part of the process is marked by cleanliness and neatness—in great contradistinction from that of European vintages, where the "delicious imported" is pressed out by brawny feet.

The quality of this year's wine will take equal rank with, if it does not exceed, the excellence of that of 1848. Tested at the press, it exhibited a superiority over last year's in the proportionate weight of 78 for that year and 92 for this. We predict, therefore, that the wine of 1851 will be very generally and extensively sought after.

An acre of vines will produce on an average not over three hundred gallons of wine: fifteen hundred bottles will therefore be the product of an acre. The prices obtained for the liquid at the press will not average over seventy-five cents the gallon. The first cost per bottle, then, is but fifteen cents.

Remarkable Escape of a Prisoner.

Edward Holt escaped from the Trenton (N. J.) Jail recently in a remarkable manner. The prisoner occupied one of the lower cells in the middle wing. He had taken up a part of the floor of his cell and dug down a perpendicular depth of seven feet. The foundation wall is about six feet below the surface. He burrowed under the wall, and up to the surface of the ground on the outside. This brought him into the yard of the prison. Then, by means of a ladder made of pieces of rope and bedding, and the slats from the bottom of his bunk, with hooks on the end made of nails, he scaled the outside wall. He had to throw the ladder to the top—the hooks caught in the coping; and, after reaching the top, he reversed his ladder and let himself down on the outside. A course of stone is laid immediately under the floor of the cells. These were removed, put on his bunk, and carefully covered over with the bedding.

The digging was performed with a bed screw, and thin pieces of boards were used for shoveling up the dirt. All the dirt thrown out on the cell floor was put there on Sunday after six o'clock in the evening—the hour at which the cells were fastened for the night. After he got down some five feet, he made a ladder to get in and out of the hole with the dirt. He carried the dirt in a pail, to which he had a rope attached. After getting the pail full, he came up with stones in his hand, and having deposited them very carefully on the floor, pulled up the pail full of earth. Every thing had to be done with great caution, as the least noise would reverberate through the corridor and would be heard by the watchman. Before he left he composed a poetic effusion of four lines, and on the wall he painted with charcoal and red chalk, a variety of handsome figures; underneath the principal one, which represented a beautiful tableau, he drew, in letters—"Liberty's wanted by every body."

Indian Reservation in California.

The San Francisco Morning Post gives some incidents of an exploring expedition to Clear Lake and Valley, the great Indian Reservation of California.—We copy descriptions of the country:—

Clear Lake Valley, which, by the terms of the treaty, has been ceded to the Indians forever, is about 12 miles long and 6 miles broad. It is one of the most beautiful sections of our State. It is well watered and wooded. Springs of crystal water, cold as ice, bubble up from the Alpine hills which bound the valley; the murmurs of these streams forcing their way through the foilage, are heard throughout the valley in every direction; they run with a perennial freshness—now serpentine, now straight in their course—and they empty into one common reservoir—the clear Lake. These streams irrigate the valley, and make it a garden. The soil is of surpassing fertility; without any tending, and without any other labor than that of planting the grain. Indian corn grows to the greatest perfection. Melons of great size and of the most delightful flavor, are also grown by the Indians. These are the only articles of food which they raise from soil. But, as if to shame their indolence, Nature supplies them with fruits from her liberal hand, and the pea, the grape, the hazle-nut, and the oak spring up from the rich bosom of mother earth in the most wild luxuriance, without a hand to trim or tend them. The profusion with which every variety of plant and flower is known to grow in Clear Lake Valley, is the best proof of the vigor and ferility of the soil. Dew falls more heavily there than in any other portion of the State that I have ever yet visited, and on the 16th of August a plentiful rain fell in the valley. The most careful observations convinced me that the valley, and the neighboring country, does not suffer those severe droughts to which other portions of the country are subject.

But the red men have another source of livelihood, which always meets their demand. The lakes and streams abound with fish of the finest flavor, and the dry leaves in the forests crackle beneath the tread of the deer, the elk, and the grizzly bear. The woods teem with game. Ducks, geese, plover, quail, and pheasants swarm among the trees, and darken the air in their rapid flights. The vension and bear meat is exceedingly fine.

Clear Lake is about forty miles long, and from two to four miles wide. Its waters are fresh, deep, and very clear and cold. The lake empties itself into the Sacramento River, by Putta Creek, its source is in the mountain streams. I judge that the lake is navigable, but it is at present inaccessible by water. Whether the ultimate settlement of the country upon the shores of Clear Lake, will render the construction of a canal advantageous, or whether it is practicable to construct such a canal, is at present a problem.

The whole of Clear Lake has been ceded to the Indians by the treaty concluded on the 16th of August last. Other tribes occupying portions of the country on the east, are to be removed to Clear Lake Valley. This, by the terms of the treaty, is made the permanant homes of all the Clear Lake Indians. We have, it is true, ceded a valuable territory; but for this cession we have gained undisputed possession of the whole Indian country around the valley. The fertility of the country acquired is equal to that of the valley, as I have described it.

Artificial Leg at the Exhibition.

From the London Times.

We have to introduce to the notice of the public another triumph of American ingenuity included in that department of the Exhibition, but which in some way or other has hitherto escaped observation. The Marquis of Anglesey will hear with a feeling of satisfaction, that if our cousins beat us in our yacht-building, they are equally preëminent in the manufacture of artificial legs. In the latter branch of industry their superiority will not be grudged, and they really owe society some act of reparation for having introduced among us Colt's revolvers. The artificial leg patented by Mr. Palmer is, in its way, a most admirable, ingenious and philanthropic contrivance, and its invention is so remarkably characteristic of the country whence it comes, that we cannot resist the temptation of inviting attention to it. The patentee in some way or other lost his leg, and, having tried the best substitutes hitherto devised for such a case, like a true American, he set himself to think whether he could not improve upon them. His study of the subject was crowned with the most striking success, and he exemplifies that success in his own person by walking about almost without any perceptible lameness, and with an apparent ease and comfort which are truly surprising. He publishes annually at Philadelphia a journal, which he calls Palmer's Patent Artificial Leg Reporter and Surgical Adjuvant. This curiously entitled periodical accompanied a specimen of the leg to the Exhibition, and the 1st chapter of vol. 3, No. 1, we find commenced by this heading, "Fugitive Thoughts on Amputation." From another chapter, entitled, "Synopsis of the Invention," we gather that it is distinguished by its perfect combination of lightness with strength, and by the extraordinary fidelity with which it imitates nature. Having closely examined it, we can testify to its merits on all the leading points specified, nor have we any reason to doubt that the enameled surface of this leg, as stated, "is rivaled only by the mechanism of nature, and that a lady may were silk hose and slippers without betraying the loss she has sustained." Mr. Palmer has received extensive orders for his patent in this country, and the public may soon expect to see timber-toed veterans no more stumping about Greenwich or Chelsea. The dentist who fills the beauty's mouth with a set of pearly teeth, and the artist who dyes the gray or red head, and covers baldness with an artificial profusion of locks, have now added to their admirable deceptions those of the American artificial leg, which, may occasionally lead to awkward mistakes, but cannot fail to be regarded as a great boon to suffering humanity.

Singular Circumstantial Evidence.

The Monticello Watchman gives the proceedings on the trial of Wm. R. Palmer, charged with the murder of his brother Timothy Palmer, in the town of Mamakating, in May last. There was a quarrel between the brothers as to the title of certain lands, and William had threatened many times to kill deceased if he persisted in cutting wood, peeling bark, &c., on the premises in dispute. The testimony showed the deceased was alive at noon of the 15th May last—that about one o'clock of that day he left his home alone for the woods in which his body was found, to peel bark—that the prisoner was home about the time he left, and no other male person—that about half an hour afterward the prisoner took his rifle and went in the direction of the woods where the body of the deceased was found—that about 2 o'clock the report of a rifle was heard in the direction of the bark-peeling, and as Mrs. Palmer testified a cry of murder, and as Mr. Rafferty said, a shriek—that the prisoner informed Mrs. Palmer when he left the house, that she need not call him to dinner, and that he returned to the house about 5 o'clock, from the direction of the woods in which the body was found. There was a tree upon the body, so placed as to give the idea of accidental death by its fall; but an examination showed a buck-shot wound in the breast, to the heart. The buck-shot resembling some in possession of the accused, and the wadding extracted fron the wound which it had penetrated 2½ inches, was found to be part of The Albany Evening Journal of April 18, 1851. It was washed, and could be read. A loaded gun of the prisoner was discharged the next day on the Coroner's inquest, and found to contain a wadding which was part of The Evening Journal of the same date, of like type, &c., presumptively the same paper. The jury returned verdict of guilty.

When asked if he had anything to say, the prisoner replied; "Yes, I have. The reason is that I am not guilty of the crime, and it has not been proved satisfactorily. At least, I think the evidence was altogether circumstantial and presumptive."

Judge Wright, after an impressive exhortation, sentenced the man to be hung on the 20th of November next.

The evidence showed a malignity and baseness on the part of the prisoner, which he seemed to have fostered till, from step to step, it reached murder.

It will be recollected that the shooting of a school-mistress in New-Jersey was traced to the murderer by the circumstance that the wadding was found to be part of a newspaper in his possession. [Albany Atlas.

From Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

A Condensed History of Steam.

About 280 years B. C. Here of Alexandria formed a toy, which exhibited some of the powers of steam, and was moved by its power.

A. D. 540, Anthemius, an architect, arranged several caldrons of water, each covered with the wide bottom of a leathern tube from which rose a narrow top with pipes extending to the rafters of the adjoining building. A fire was kindled beneath the caldron, and the house was shaken by the effect of the steam ancending the tubes. This is the first notice of the power of steam recorded.

In 1543, June 17, Clasco De Garoy tried a steamboat of 209 tons with tolerable success at Barcelona, Spain. It consisted of a caldron of boiling water and a moveable wheel on each side of the ship. It was laid aside as impracticable. A present, however, was made to Garoy.

In 1650 the first railroad was constructed at New-Castle-on-Tyne.

The first idea of a steam engine in England was in the Marquis of Worcester's "History of Inventions," A. D. 1663.

In 1710 Newcomer made the first steam engine in England.

In 1718 patents were granted to Savary for the first application of the steam engine.

In 1764 James Watt made the first perfect steam engine in England.

In 1736 Jonathan Halls first set forth the idea of steam navigation.

In 1778 Thomas Paine first proposed this application in America.

In 1781 Marquis Jouffroy constructed one on the Saone.

In 1785 two Americans published a work on it.

In 1789 William Tymington made a voyage in one, on the Forth and Clyde canal.

In 1802 this experiment was repeated.

In 1782 Ramsep propelled a boat by steam at New York.

In 1787 John Fitch of Philadelphia, navigated a boat by a steam engine on the Delaware.

In 1793 Robert Fulton first began to apply his attention to steam.

In 1793, Oliver Evans, a native of Philadelphia, constructed a locomotive steam engine to travel on a turnpike road.

The first steam vessel that ever crossed the Atlantic was the Savannah, in the month of June, 1810, from Charleston to Liverpool.

Hussey's American Reaping Machine.

From the London Morning Chronicle.

An exhibition of Hussey's American Reaping Machine took place on Thursday, at Hadham-hall, Herts, before a very large concourse of agriculturists, many of whom came from a considerable distance to witness this (to us) novel feature in farming operations. The first display was upon a field of barley, which, although very much laid, was taken up by the machine in a very satisfactory manner. The reaper was then set to work upon a piece of clover. The manner in which its resistless blades swept through this crop was a matter of great astonishment. This feeling was freely expressed by all who witnessed it. It might be compared to the sweeping of a strong wind over the surface of a lake, so rapid and comparatively effortless was its progress through the standing crop. The crowning effort was made in a field of wheat. The success of the machine, perhaps, chiefly depends upon its capability of reaping the "golden grain," and its powers were fully put to the proof in this instance, the crop being very thin, and drooping from over ripeness. This, though a great disadvantage, afforded the implement an opportunity to show its peculiar advantage. Its projecting blades, cutting as they do from right to left and from left to right (the grain being held by an upper row of times), have something of the effect of a long row of scissors; thus, as the reaper pressed forward the grain fell over on the platform regularly and without difficulty. The machine performed its work at a very rapid rate, to the evident astonishment of the laborers present. A little incident which occurred speaks volumes as to the efficiency of the day's work. A herculean figure, in a smock frock, after earnestly contemplating the execution performed before his eyes, took his reaping hook and deliberately broke it over his knee, throwing the pieces away in despair. The inventor (Mr. Hussey) who was present the whole day, and the gentleman representing the proprietors (Messrs. Dray & Co. Swan-lane, London,) consented to make a second trial on the following day, the result of which was, we were informed, equallly satisfactory.

SMALL PAPERS.—There is some truth in the following from the Western Watchman:

Our sheet is of a moderate size, compared with some that are published at the East, but as large as its present means will justify. Should our circulation increase as we hope it will, we intend to increase its size, and otherwise greatly improve its appearance. But after considerable experience with the weekly press, we are free to say, that we have not preceived the advantage of very large papers. They are inconvenient, and contain more than people wish to read. It is quite as easy to fill a large sheet as a small one. But a weekly paper is not the place for many long essays. Short, pithy, pointed articles, are far more likely to be read, and to do good. In large papers much of the work of editing is thrown on the readers. The editor has not time to wash out the gold, so he shovels it, sand and all, to his readers, to wash for themselves. Some small papers contain more valuable reading than large ones. We shall a,m togive a well filied, rather than a large sheet, believing that its value does not depend entirely on the number of its square acres.

HORSE-POWER DITCHING MACHINE.—Mr. Charles Bishop, of Norwalk, Ohio, has invented and taken measures to secure a patent for a good improvement in Ditching Machines, whereby the old spade method of ditching by manual labor is entirely thrown into the shade. His machine is worked by horse power, and is provided with a revolving excavator, the shaft or axele of which lies in the direction of the length of the ditch. The excavator is of a screw form, and is operated by an endless chain. The ditch is cut of a semi-circular form, and it deposits the cut clay, or other kind of excavated earth in a box, from whence it is delivered at one side on the road by scrapers attached to the endless chain. The machine being propeled forward by a friction roller, moving in the ditch, and operated by the excavator shaft.

A FRENCHWOMAN'S REVENGE.—Madame D. had a magnificent cat; Monsieur C. amused himself one day by killing it, for want of something else to shoot. Madame D. caused to be set in her own house, and in the houses of her friends, all sorts of mouse-traps, and when three or four hundred mice were caught, she had them put into a box, which was forwarded to Madame de C. at her country house. The lady eagerly opened the box herself, expecting to find in it some new modes; the mice jumped out and presently filled the house, while at the bottom of the box was found a note directed to Madame de C. "Madame, your husband has killed my cat; I send you my mice."

Foreign Items.

The Algiers papers relate a melancholy accident which recently took place on the beach of Mustapha. An order had been given on the previous night by the Colonel of the 8th regiment of the line, that the men should march down the next morning to bathe. Although the sea during the night had become very rough the order was not countermanded. At the roll of the drum the men went into the water, and in a few minutes a number of them were knocked off their legs by the waves. By the exertions of such of their comrades as were expert swimmers, they were all saved with the exception of five, who were washed away and drowned.

The Avenir de Nice of the 10th mentions a sharp encounter between a party of 48 smugglers of the county of Nice and a detachment of Piedmontese custom-house officers. The former had been to the Broc, a French village on the frontier, to get salt, which is twice as dear in the Sardinian States as in France. The custom-house officers, 38 in number, lay in wait for them at the bridge of La Madalena, in consequence of information they had received. The struggle must have been dreadful, as twelve of the smugglers were killed, and several of the officers wounded. Only three sacks of salt were captured.

The Journal du Haut-Rhin states that the Rhine has overflowed its banks, and by carrying away a dyke caused great damage. Several villages near the banks of the Rhine have been inundated, and the crops destroyed. The ravages would have been greater but for the the prompt assistance given by the soldiers of the garrison of Neuf Brisac, who by their exertion turned the course of the water again to the bed of the Rhine.

The Court of Assizes of the Saone-et-Loire, has just sentenced to the punishment of death a woman, named Catherine Renaud, aged 33, for having attempted, in complicity with a man named Latreche, to burn down her own house, insured far above its value in the Palladium Office. The male prisoner was condemned to hard labor for life at the hulks.

During a horse race in the Champ de Mars, one of the horses, while going at full speed, was suddenly struck with apoplexy, and fell dead, throwing his rider with great force some distance over his head. The jockey was bled on the spot, and afterwards carried to the Hospital Cochin.

Miss Mary Legare, sister of the former Attorney General of the United States, is engaged in the Lumber trade at the Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and advertises to supply any amount of building lumber, boat plank, &c.

Some of the German journals state that in the northern part of Germany the potato disease had made its appearance with great intensity. From Cologne to Berlin the tubercle is represented as unfit for food, and as sending forth a most offensive odor. It is feared that the poorer classes will suffer severely this year from the calamity.

A letter from Patras (Greece) states that, in the memory of man the supply of dried currants has not been so great as it is this year. The quantity obtained is three times greater than in 1850, and twice as great as in 1849. Forty English vessels were waiting at Patras to take in cargoes of this fruit.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J. W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First commences Aug. 27 and closes Dec. 2.
" Second " Dec. 3 " " March 16.
" Third " March 17 " " June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting,	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

BOARD, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. CLARKE, Sec. } of Trustees.

DERUYTER, July 18, 1851.

Election Notice.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Albany, August 27, 1851.

TO the Sheriff of the City and County of New York:
SIR,—Notice is hereby given that at the General Election, to be held in this State, on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Samuel A. Foot.

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan.

A Comptroller, in the place of Philo C. Fuller.

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt.

An Attorney-General, in the place of Levi S. Chatfield.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Hezekiah C. Seymour.

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Charles Cook.

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Alexander H. Wells.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court, for the First Judicial District, in the place of James G. King, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Senator for the IIId, IVth, Vth, and VIth Senate Districts, in the place of Richard S. Williams, Clarkson Crolius, James W. Beekman, and Edwin D. Morgan, whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

County officers to be elected for said County:

Sixteen Members of Assembly.

A Register, in the place of Cornelius V. Anderson.

A Recorder, in the place of Frederick A. Tallmadge.

Two Judges of the Superior Court, in the place of Thomas J. Oakley and John L. Mason.

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Daniel P. Ingraham.

A Surrogate, in the place of Alexander W. Bradford.

A Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, in the place of Jacob L. Dodge.

Two Governors of the Alms-House, in the place of Simeon Draper and Francis R. Tillou.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, there is to be elected a Justice for each of the six Judicial Districts, into which the City of New York is districted, pursuant to Chapter 514, Laws of 1851. Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, August 28, 1851.—I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of the notice of the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, received this day, from the Hon. Christopher Morgan, Secretary of State. THOMAS CARNLEY,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

N. B.—All the public newspapers within this County will please publish this notice once in each week, until the Election, and send in their bills for advertising the same as soon as the Election is over; so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors and passed for payment. Sept. 4.

People's Line of New York and Albany Steamers

THE steamers ISAAC NEWTON, Capt. Wm. H. Peck, and HENDRIK HUDSON, Capt. A. P. St. John, forming the People's Line between New York and Albany, leaving foot of Cortland-st., New York, every evening at 6 o'clock, and Albany evening on the arrival of the Express Train from Buffalo.

The steamer NEW WORLD, Capt. Acker, leaves foot of Chambers-st., New York, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning, at 7 o'clock, and Albany on alternate days.

For passage or freight apply on board, or to A. P. Schultz at the office foot of Cortland-st.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville - Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to
GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 19. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 23, 1851. WHOLE NO. 383.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c." [Continued.

But we farther quote Bloomfield's mode of accounting for the supposed probability of Christ and the Jews having observed different days. "By reckoning," says he, "from the first appearance of the moon's phases, a doubt might exist as to the day, and this doubt afforded ground occasionally for an observance of different days, which," he adds, "it is said, the Rabbinical writings recognize. And as the Pharisees and Sadducees, and also the Karæi, differed on many other points, so it is likely they should on the present." And if there was a day difference when the month began, so also, he supposes, in the calculation as to the 14th day. He concludes that "Thus every real difficulty, as far as the subject admits of it, is solved; and, moreover, this is not a mere novel notion, but was adopted by some ancient Fathers, being found in Euthymius."

We supply from a different source Euthymius' proof, that the reader may likewise judge of the value of his conclusion. Penn, in his Annotations on the Book of the New Covenant, (on Luke xxii. 7,) complaining that "the commentators of the middle ages have created almost inextricable perplexity respecting the day on which our Lord kept the Passover," instances Euthymius, in illustration, as converting our Lord's words, (Luke xxii. 15,) "With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer," into "with haste I have hastened, that is, anticipated," to eat the Passover. "He anticipated the time by one day."

It is perfectly obvious that the difficulty lies not in the subject, but in the mode in which it has been treated; and we require to remember, that it is as necessary to guard against ancient fictions as "novel notions." No attempt is made to obviate the force of the objection arising from the power which the Pharisees possessed of preventing the blood of the Passover lamb being presented at the altar of God. No evidence is offered that any doubts really did exist as to the time of the new moon; although this doubt, which our author, at first, says only "might exist," he immediately affirms actually "afforded ground, occasionally, for an observance of different days." And no mention is made by whom, even, "it is said" that the Rabbinical writings do recognize such a difference.

We can, indeed, perceive no ground on which to come to the Doctor's conclusion. He is, evidently, very easily satisfied as to the value to be attached to opinions and statements favorable to his own views; so that we cannot believe, on his authority, that "it is likely" that the Pharisees and Sadducees differed as to which was the 14th day of the month. "Every real difficulty" of his theory remains unsolved. These difficulties are indeed insuperable, but they would hardly be entitled to the name of difficulties, if capable of removal by the enunciation of a few unsubstantiated possibilities, even if there were not decided ground for a different conclusion. There is, however, full reason to be satisfied that the Passover, on this occasion, was observed by the Jews at the proper time, as by Christ and His apostles. An allusion to the Feast day, in the Gospel by John, which some have mistaken, remains to be noticed, when we more fully consider the Passover Sabbath, which immediately followed the day on which the lamb was eaten.

But the truth of God regarding the time and import of the Passover, is wholly independent of the errors of men. Whether or not the Jews generally observed the solemnity at the same time, we have seen clearly, that Christ, who rejected all apostatizing traditions, and who knew well, and gave perfect obedience to the Law, did eat the Passover, and that on the divinely-appointed evening. He Himself, therefore, could not be sacrificed at the same time. It was not possible that He could, at the same identical time, observe the type, which foreshowed His death on the cross, and, by his death on the cross, realize it as the antitype. The death of the great Lamb of God was thus, of necessity, later than the slaying of the lamb of the flock of which he ate; and we know, unquestionably, from the Gospel narratives, that one day, and one day only, intervened. As, therefore, the Passover lamb was killed on the 14th day of the month, "between the two evenings," so the crucifixion of the Redeemer took place at a corresponding period of the ensuing day—approaching, therefore, to sunset, or the beginning of the 15th, which was the Passover Sabbath according to the Law.

The Passover lamb was eaten on the 14th, after sunset, in practice from six till twelve at night. The 14th, commencing at sunset, continued till the ensuing evening, when the 15th day also commenced—although not generally so considered by authors treating on the subject, nor, we believe, in the present day so regarded by the Jews themselves. According to Scripture order, it is to be remembered, this evening—like all other evenings from the beginning of creation, when "the evening and the morning were the the first day"—requires to be reckoned as pertaining to the day following. The lamb, therefore, was eaten on the evening of the 14th day, and not on "the evening subsequent to the 14th day," as Horne affirms.—Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures, vol. iii. p. 306.

Accordingly, we read in the account of the Mosaic institution, that it was so reckoned; for, having been killed in the appointed manner, between the evenings, after the prescribed sprinkling of the blood, the roasting of the lamb had to be effected, and still they were to "eat the flesh THAT night." Exod. xii. 3. "And Moses said, Thus saith the Lord, about midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt, and all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die," Exod. xi. 4. This is thus repeated in the following chapter, "For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt." Exod. xii. 12. And the appointment of its observance is, "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at even, [not 'the evening subsequent to the 14th day,'] ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month, at even." Exod. xii. 18.

By the Jews, at the time of our Lord's death, the night on which the Passover was eaten, accordingly, was evidently so reckoned, as part, not of the day preceding, but of that which followed. For, as by the Law, the 15th of this month was the Passover Sabbath—"a Holy Convocation unto the Lord," in which no servile work was done, while the fourteenth day, which was the Passover day, on which the lamb was eaten, was no Sabbath; so we find, from the statements of the Evangelists, that the morning immediately following the night on which Christ and his disciples ate the Passover, (and which would have been a Sabbath if the view we are now opposing were correct,) the Saviour was judged, condemned, and given over to be crucified by the Jews; which they would not have done had they regarded it as a Sabbath. The 15th day, which, by the Law, was the Passover Sabbath, the Jews also on this occasion regarded as such; for, on the 14th, some hours before sunset, when only, and not before, the 15th would commence, in anticipation of its approach, they besought that the legs of the crucified three might be broken, and the bodies be removed, in order that they "should not remain on the cross on the Sabbath day, (for that Sabbath day was an high day.") John xix. 31.

It was not until "the even" arrived, that the Sabbath, like any other day, did commence. It was "when the even was come" of the preceding day that Jesus sat down with the twelve; and the day, then commencing, continued till the succeeding evening. That evening, however, the 15th, being the Sabbath according to the law, commenced; and the desire of the Jews, and the haste of the two interring disciples, equally testify that with the evening, in their estimation, came also the Sabbath's sacred time. The anxiety of the former that the bodies might be removed from the cross, was that they "should not remain on the cross on the Sabbath day;" while, the fact that the Sabbath approached, determined Joseph in the choice of a place of interment, for "there laid they Jesus, therefore, because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand." John xix. 42. The preparation day was, as we have seen, "the preparation of the Sabbath."

As the practice of the Jews is to partake of the unleavened bread and bitter herbs between six and twelve o'clock at night, we cannot understand how they reckon this night to the preceding day. For although we, Gentiles, have adopted a computation inconsistent with that indicated in the Word of God, yet the Jews, in all lands, are accustomed to reckon other days in Scriptural order. They uniformly begin the day with the evening; and it is difficult to discover any sufficient reason for departure from the rule in reference to the night of the Passover.

Inattention to the fact, thus proved, that the 14th day only began in the evening, when the lamb was to be eaten, is indeed to overlook a distinction expressly made in the Law itself, between the Passover and the Feast of unleavened bread. The Mosaic appointment is, "In the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, is the Lord's Passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month, is the Feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord." Lev. xxiii. 5, 6. Here, the 14th day is the Passover, including "the even," as belonging to it; the 15th is the Feast. In a parallel statement, reference to the even is omitted: "In the fourteenth day of the first month is the Passover of the Lord. And in the fifteenth day of this month, is the Feast." Num. xxviii. 16, 17. The whole "fourteenth day," and not a part only, is the Passover; just as the "fifteenth day," and not a part only, is the day with which the Feast begins. For the text continues, "Seven days shall unleavened bread be eaten. In the first day shall be an Holy Convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein." ver. 17, 18. Obviously the solemnity is divided between "the Passover" and "the Feast" which followed.

It is, indeed, true that the whole solemnity, including both parts, is sometimes termed "the Passover," and, at other times, equally, is the whole solemnity termed "the Feast of unleavened bread." But, as it is not less true, that the Passover and the Feast are regarded and described distinctively, where such discrimination is required, we may not confound them together. This, however, is done by those who suppose the Passover night, on which the lamb was eaten, pertained to the 15th day, which was the Feast, instead of observing that both the 14th and 15th are days—comprising both "the evening and the morning"—each beginning with the evening.

The day thus belonging to the Passover night, which formed part of it, was called "the preparation day" of the Passover Sabbath. It is not so named in the Law, but is by the Evangelists. They all refer to it under such terms as "the preparation of the Passover"—"the Jews' preparation day"—and "the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath." This was the day on which Christ was crucified; so that the Passover lamb, which had been killed "between the two evenings," was afterwards eaten on the night of the very day on which Christ was crucified, although He did not expire upon the cross until a period corresponding with "between the two evenings"—an entire day later than the killing of the typical lamb.

This Passover day, being the 14th, was not a Sabbath; but was "the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath." John speaks of it under several designations. In the account of Christ's being placed at Pilate's judgment-seat, he says, "And it was the preparation of the Passover, and about the sixth hour." John xix. 14. After the crucifixion, "the Jews, therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, (for that Sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away." Ver. 31. And again, accounting for the haste with which Joseph and Nicodemus consigned the Saviour's body to the tomb—"There laid they Jesus, therefore, because of the Jews' preparation day, for the sepulchre was nigh at hand."—Ver. 42. [To be continued.

"COME THIS WAY, FATHER!"

During a short visit to the sea-shore of our State, some two years since, with a party of friends, it was proposed one bright afternoon, that we should make up a party and go down the harbor on a fishing excursion. We accordingly started, and after sailing about three miles, a young lady of the company declined going father, and requested us to land her on one of the small islands in the harbor, where she proposed to stay until our return. My little boy, then about four years old, preferred remaining with her. Accordingly we left them, and proceeded some six miles farther. We remained out much longer than we intended, and as night approached, a thick fog set in from the sea, entirely surrounding us. Without a compass, and not knowing the right direction to steer, we groped our way along for some hours, until finally we distinguished the breaking of the surf on the rocks of one of the islands, but were at a loss to know which one of them. I stood up in the stern of the boat, where I had been steering, and shouted with all my strength. I listened a moment, and heard through the thick fog and above the breaking of the surf, the sweet voice of my boy, calling, "Come this way, father!—steer straight for me—I'm here waiting for you!" We steered by that sound, and soon my little boy leaped to my arms with joy, saying, "I knew you would hear me, father!" and nestled to sleep on my bosom. The child and the maiden are both sleeping now. They died in two short weeks after the period I refer to, with hardly an interval of time between their deaths. Now tossed on the rough sea of life, without compass or guide, enveloped in fog, and surrounded by rocks, I seem to hear the sound of that cherub voice, calling from the bright shore, "Come this way, father!—steer straight for me!" When oppressed with sadness, I take my way to our quiet cemetery, still as I stand by one little mound, the same musical voice echoes from thence, "Come this way, father!—I'm waiting for thee!"

I remember a voice,
Which once guided my way,
When, lost on the sea,
Fog-enshrouded I lay;
'Twas the voice of a child,
As he stood on the shore—
It sounded out clear,
O'er the dark billows' roar—
"Come this way, my father!
Here safe on the shore
I am waiting for thee."

I remember that voice,
Midst rocks and through breakers,
And high-dashing spray,
[illegible] my heart
Did it sound from the shore,
As it echoed out clear
O'er the dark billows' roar,
"Come this way, my father!
Steer straight for me;
Here safe on the shore
I am waiting for thee."

I remember my joy
When I held to my breast,
The form of that dear one,
And soothed it to rest;
For the tones of my child,
"I called you, dear father,
And knew you would hear
Far o'er the dark sea,
While safe on the shore
I was waiting for thee."

That voice now is hushed
Which then guided my way;
The form I then pressed
Is now mingled with clay.
But the tones of my child
Still sound in my ear,
"I am calling you, father!
O, can you not hear
The voice of your darling
As you toss on life's sea?
For on a bright shore
I am waiting for thee."

I remember that voice;
In many a lone hour
It speaks to my heart
With fresh beauty and power,
And still echoes far out
Over life's troubled wave,
And sounds from loved lips
That lie in the grave—
"Come this way, my father!
O! steer straight for me!
Here safely in heaven
I am waiting for thee!"

MANLIKE AND GODLIKE.

A gentleman who had filled many high stations in public life, with the greatest honor to himself and advantage to the nation, once went to Sir Eardley Wilmot, in great anger at a real injury that he had received from a person high in the political world, which he was considering how to resent in the most effectual manner. After relating the particulars to Sir Eardley, he asked if he did not think it would be manly to resent it? "Yes," said Sir Eardley, "it would doubtless be manly to resent it, but it would be godlike to forget it."

This the gentleman declared had such an instantaneous effect upon him, that he came away quite another man, and in temper entirely altered from that in which he went.

How this little incident touches the heart: A mother, who was in the habit of asking her children, before they retired at night, what they had done during the day to make others happy, found a young twin daughter silent. The elder ones spoke modestly of deeds and dispositions, founded on the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would they should do unto you." Still the little bright face was bowed down in silence. The question was repeated, and the dear little child said timidly: "A little girl who sat by me on the bench at school had lost a baby brother. All the time she studied her lesson she hid her face in her book and cried. I felt so sorry that I laid my face on the same book and cried with her. Then she looked up and put her arms round my neck, but I do not know why she said I had done her so much good."

STUDY.

Sit! sit! sit!
From matin hour till twilight gloom,
He's a "fixture" there in his dusky room;
Away the moments flit,
And the world outside, with joyous din,
Moves gaily on—but the world within
Is labor, and toil, and care:
No turn knows he in the weary day,
But the turn that shows the pivot's way,
As he turns his easy chair.

Think! think! think!
In the smith's bright forge the fire glows,
But the smith himself the bellows blows—
Unheard the hammer's clink!
Not so the fire that lights the brain
Of him who wears the galley chain,
Or makes the press-gang go;
He must flash with light and glow with heat,
With quill in hand his brain must beat—
But never indulge a blow.

SALVATION ILLUSTRATED.

BY REV. JOHN TODD, D. D.

'Did God leave all men to perish in a state of sin and misery?' asked a Bible-class teacher.

'O dear!' said Edward, 'was there ever so hard a question!'

'The question is easy enough. It's the answer that's hard,' said Crawford.

'Well, answer it then!' replied the same boy. 'There are no less than three things that puzzle me.'

'What are they?' asked Crawford.

'First, why should God elect some, and leave others? Second, why should he do it from eternity, and not at any time? And, thirdly, why should he do it out of his mere good pleasure, without any reason for it? I am sure I can't choose things without having some reason for it! Mere good pleasure.'

The boys were sitting together in a kind of frame in the garden, which was covered over with grape vines, and were now to finish the lessons of the day by getting their answer in the catechism. They saw Mary, as she passed the window, and said:—

'Mary, won't you send out Mr. Fox here to help us?'

'I send out Mr. Fox!' said Mary. 'Pray what power have I to order him out to you?'

'Oh, we don't know that—only we know that he will do any thing that you ask him to do. We heard him say so to you this morning!'

'Nonsense!' said Mary.

'Well, if you won't send him, won't you ask him to please to come out?'

'That sounds more like it,' said Mary. After a while, Mr. Fox came out into the garden, apparently very reluctantly, either because he dreaded the catechism, or else because he found the company of the young ladies quite interesting in the house.

The boys stated their difficulties, but not very clearly.

'Let us take one thing at a time,' said Mr. Fox. 'What is the first difficulty?'

'The doctrine of election,' said Crawford.

'Well, what of it?'

'That God should elect some to everlasting life, and leave others to perish,' said Crawford. 'It seems wrong.'

'You make me think of Joe Hunt,' said Mr. Fox. 'One beautiful moonlight evening, Joe Hunt and Samuel Stearns agreed that they would get over into my friend Mr. Napier's garden, and steal his peaches. So, about ten o'clock they got over the fence, very carefully and still. But Mr. Napier was walking in the shade of the house in a piazza, and saw them. When they had shaken one tree, and got their pockets filled, he went toward them. They both ran and he ran, after them. By and by, Sam Stearns tripped and fell, while Hunt escaped. So Mr. Napier seized Sam; and the boy struggled and tore and tried to get away, but my friend was a strong man, and so held him fast. Nay, he led him back to the house, and spoke kindly to him. He was very unwilling at first to tell his name, or go into the room where there was a light; but he did go in, and then he told Mr. Napier how he was a poor, fatherless boy, how he had been led into temptation, and how he was sorry for his faults, and promised that he would never be guilty again—in short, he appeared so penitent, that Mr. Napier not only forgave him, but became his friend. He sent him to school and watched over him, and he became a good and useful man. But Joe Hunt grew worse and worse, till at last he was sent to the State's prison. But he always quarreled with the election made by Mr. Napier. Though he ran away with all his might, and kept away, and associated only with the wicked, yet he always stood to it, that if Mr. Napier had only caught him, held him tight, and talked to him faithfully, he should have been good, and become a good man! He always insisted upon it, that it was this partiality of Mr. Napier that ruined him! Just so men feel and talk about God. Like Joe, they break over on forbidden ground. If God takes hold of them, they struggle to get away, as Sam did. And if they can they do get away—choose to get away from God, and choose to be left, and then complain that God has done them injustice by not choosing them! Had Joe any right to complain, or charge his subsequent wickedness upon Mr. Napier?'

'I think not,' said Edward.

'Well, what next,' said Mr. Fox.

'Why, that God should choose men from eternity,' said Crawford.

'When could he choose them, if he chose them at all?'

'When they repent and become good,' replied Edgar.

'But suppose from eternity God knew who would repent, and when they would repent, and every thing, just as fully as after they had done this; then how could he help choosing them from eternity? What matter is it when God makes up his mind to do what he does, since he knows every thing that ever will or can take place? Are we through with your difficulties?'

'One more,' said Edward. 'The answer says, God (out of his mere good pleasure) elected some to everlasting life. I don't see how it would be right for him to save some men, and leave others to perish without any reason for it.'

'Nor do I. But who says it would? Is not to do any thing out of his mere good pleasure, the same thing as to do it without any reason?'

'By no means. Where did you get that young peach tree which you planted in the garden?'

'I got it in Mr. Atwood's nursery,' said Edward. 'He told me that I might dig up any one that I chose in the whole row.'

'Very well; did you dig up the largest or the straightest of them all?'

'No. There were many larger and straighter,' said Edward.

'Well, you had some particular reason for taking the one you did. Perhaps you can remember the reason. Try and see. I don't want you to tell it to me. But can you remember it?'

'Yes, I can; and I thought it a good reason.'

'Very likely it was a good reason. Have you ever told any body why you chose that particular tree?'

'No,' said Edward.

'Well, then,' suppose I should say that you had your choice of a long row of trees, and out of your own pleasure you chose that tree; that is, you never told the reasons; would that be saying that you had no reasons?'

'No, I think not.'

'So I think. And when we say that God did any thing out of his mere good pleasure, we mean that he has not told us the reason why he did it. But we do not mean that he has no reasons. Do you understand me?'

'Yes, I think I do.'

'Now, let us talk a little more about that peach tree. You remember that you told me last year, that you made a bargain with it, that if it did not bear fruit that was good, you would cut it down, and that it did not bear good fruit, and yet you did not cut it down, as you said you would. Do you remember telling me so?'

'I do,' said Edward. 'But I made a new bargain with my tree.'

'Will you please to tell us what it was?'

'Why, I went over to Mr. Camp's and got some buds of grafted fruit, and put in five, and then told the tree that if it would cherish the new buds and cause them to grow and bear fruit, then I would not cut it down, but would take care of it. This I called my new bargain?'

'Very well; that is just what I wanted. Your peach tree illustrates an important truth. If it had borne good fruit without budding, you would have kept your first agreement. But as its fruit was worthless, you got your buds, and thus brought it into a state of bearing good fruit. Just so God has done for the human race. He told Adam, that if he would live holy and not sin, and bring forth the fruits of holiness, he should live in his garden and be blessed forever. But as Adam brought forth only the fruits of sin—and so does every one who has sprung from him—he has pro- by a Redeemer has brought them into a state of salvation. And as it is the bud which you put into your tree that produces good fruit, so it is the grace which God puts into the heart of man that brings forth the fruits of holiness in him. Thus God brings men into a state of salvation by a Redeemer. Have I now answered all your inquiries?'

The boys were silent for a few moments. At length Crawford said—

'After all, I cannot see why God choses some to everlasting life, and leaves others.'

'Nor can I,' said Mr. Fox. 'But we know he does. He chose Paul, and left Judas to his own way. Nor can you see why Edward should be lame, and unable to get about, except with his little crutches, while you and I have sound feet and legs. God does not tell us why he does this or that, but we know that he has good reason for every thing he does.'

'How do we know that?' said Crawford.

'Because we know that He is good, and wise, and powerful; and such a being cannot do any thing without having the best reason for it.'

'Shall I ever know why I am lame?' said the little lame boy.

'Certainly, if you are a child of God, he will hereafter explain it to you, and to your entire satisfaction. But supposing you had been born with sound limbs, and then you had broken your bones yourself because you did not want to be beholden to God for sound limbs, could you then blame God, if he let you be a cripple all your days?'

BAPTIST MISSIONS IN BURMAH.

The N. Y. Chronicle says that letters from Messrs. Kincaid and Dawson, dated May 13th and June 12th, have been received. Having succeeded in finding a house at Rangoon, they returned to Maulmain to remove their families. At Maulmain they soon learned that the governor had proceeded with great severity by fine and imprisonment against those who had in any way favored them, and threatened further violence. They nevertheless went on with their arrangements, and arrived at Rangoon on the 16th of April. Their families and effects were landed as soon as possible, in order to get them ashore before a prohibition could issue against them. They found the old man who had sheltered them afraid to admit them to his house, and general dismay among their acquaintances.

On the 18th of April they had an interview with the governor, who addressed them harshly for presuming to come to Burmah. On Mr. Kincaid reminding him of the royal favor he had formerly received, as a reason for returning, he grew milder, and permitted them to remain, but forbade them to leave the house unattended by his interpreter. To this order they have paid no attention. The very next day a respectful Mahommedan was savagely beaten for venturing to render them some assistance. They had a second interview with the governor, on the 22d, who received them kindly, but forbade the circulation of tracts. They succeeded on that day in procuring a convenient house, with sufficient room for both families, a chapel, and a dispensary.

On the 3d of May a royal writer called with a message from the governor, that the king had expressed pleasure at the arrival of the American teachers, and the hope that they would remain in Burmah; his Majesty ordered that no one should molest them. Public worship in Burman and English was commenced on the first Sunday in May, and had since been statedly observed, the congregation sometimes numbering from thirty to forty. An aged priest from Ava, a person of high rank and great influence at court, called at the mission house several days in succession, and at last craved permission to lodge there. He had attended public worship three times, requested the brethren to accompany him to Ava after the rains, and promised them his utmost favor on their arrival at the capital.

There was a constant stream of visitors; a daily average of near forty had received medical or surgical aid; among them, a principal officer of the customs, whose case was considered desperate, obtained relief. An orphan youth, nearly blind, who before his calamity had studied for the priesthood, came for help, and asked leave to stay with the missionaries, to which they assented. His eye-sight is improved, and he receives Christian instruction with apparent interest.

What are the motives that have prompted this unexpected favor from the government, or how long it will be enjoyed, cannot be conjectured. At present a door seems to be opened for the gospel in Burmah. The church at Rangoon is dispersed, except a few aged persons, and communication with the Karens in the jungles, during the wet season, is very difficult.

THE DYING YOUTH.

A stranger met me at the close of my usual service, on Sabbath evening last, and said, "Sir, will you go to see my brother, who is dying at the hospital? I have tried for weeks to get his consent to see a minister, but he has refused till now. To-night he must die; he has led a wretched, miserable life; will you go?"

I followed the stranger to the hospital, and found upon the bed the poor wreck of a man, bearing marks of disease in every feature; his lungs were almost gone, and every moment he choked for breath. His brother told him who I was, and why I came. "You must be very short," said he, "I've only a moment to live!" "You have something to think of, then," I said; but he answered, "I can't think. I can't think of any thing." At length, however, his convictions were aroused; and he sent forth a piercing cry, still ringing in my ears, "It's too late! It's too late!" I told him of the thief upon the cross, and tried to make him feel, at once, his guilt and need of mercy. I then asked if I should pray. "Be short," he answered; but when I closed, he exclaimed, "Can't you pray more for me? Don't go away! stay with me all the night! how can I pray? May God have mercy! It's too late—but finding I could do no more, I left him in the hands of God. What mattered it that this man had prostrated himself with disease? that he had crushed a wife's affections, and sent her before him to the grave? that he would leave an unprotected orphan? that he had squandered all his property, and wasted talents given for good?—what mattered all this, compared with the fact that he was to die—without hope? From his sunken eyes gleamed forth the sentence of God's word, "No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of God!

[Rev. J. P. Thompson.

REPENTANCE.

AN ALLEGORY BY ONE OF THE FATHERS.

A hermit was conducted by an angel into a wood, where he saw an old man cutting down boughs to make up a burden. When it was large, he tied it up, and attempted to lift it on his shoulders and carry it away; but finding it very heavy, he laid it down again, cut more wood and heaped it on, and then tried again to carry it off. This he repeated several times, always adding something to the load, after trying in vain to raise it from the ground. In the mean time the hermit, astonished at the old man's folly, desired the angel to explain what this meant. "You behold," said he, "in this foolish old man, an exact representation of those who, being made sensible of the burden of their sins, resolve to repent, but soon grow weary, and instead of lessening their burden, increase it every day. At each trial they find the task heavier than it was before, and so put it off a little longer, in the vain hope that they will by-and-by be more able to accomplish it. Thus they go on adding to their burden, till it grows too heavy to be borne, and then, in despair of God's mercy, and with their sins unrepented of, they lie down and die. Turn again, my son, and behold the end of the old man whom thou sawest heaping up a load of boughs." The hermit looked, and saw him in vain attempting to remove the pile, which was now accumulated far beyond his strength to raise. His feeble limbs tottered over their burden; the poor remains of his strength were fast ebbing away; the darkness of death was gathering around him; and after a convulsive and impotent attempt to lift the pile, he fell down and expired.

HINT FOR A PRAYERLESS MOTHER.

As a little boy sat looking at his mother one day, he said, "Grandpapa will be in heaven!—Aunt will be in heaven!—Mary will be in heaven!—Baby is in heaven!—But mama!" Here the child paused, and looked very solemn.

"Well, dear," said the mother, "What about mama! Will not mama be in heaven?"

The little fellow shook his head very gravely, and replied, "Oh, no, no!"

"Why do you say so?" asked the mother, deeply affected.

"O you do not pray," he replied; "so you will not go to heaven?"

"Yes, my dear, I do; I often pray for you when you do not see me, very often indeed."

"Ah, I never saw you then. Kneel down now, and let me hear if you can pray!"

The mother knelt by her child, and prayed aloud for herself and little one, and that day learned a lesson she will never forget.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 23, 1851.

THE EARTH'S ROTUNDITY AND THE SABBATH.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Some months since I sent you a communication, which I have reason to think you never received. It was to this effect: I trusted that I fully appreciated the kindness which led you to make such a lengthy reply (in your paper of January 3, 1850,) to my communication; but it was not satisfactory to my mind. Still, I did not feel convinced, at that time, that it would be profitable, to either you or me, to occupy any more precious time in considering the particular subject to which it referred. Since, however, my return from a long absence, I have felt more than ever inclined to reply, hoping that my only motive is to establish truth.

You say, "What is required is simply this, that the inhabitants of each country begin to observe the Sabbath when the seventh day of the week begins there, and that they end the observance when the seventh day of the week ends there, without regard to the time when it begins and ends in some other country." Now I will suppose the first seventh day ever known on earth commenced when the sun sunk below the western horizon of the meridian of the garden of Eden at the close of the sixth day. This was Adam's first day; and I will follow your illustrious personage in one of his weekly journeys from east to west, and hear the mandate go forth again and again, "Do him honor," until he has but one second of the 24 hours of his journey remaining; still the command is, "Begin to do him honor," so that on the very borders of the land where man was created, the Sabbath must commence just before the first day of the week does immediately adjoining. For, if it is a matter of great importance that the precise seventh day of the week be kept in all parts of the earth, and that too commencing exactly at the going down of the sun, should not Christians in this land of light be enabled to define the exact meridian for this illustrious personage to commence his course, and then speed their missionaries to this boundary to point out duty. But would this be consistent with the command, "Let all things be done unto edifying," (1 Cor. 14: 26,) or, "Let all things be done decently and in order?" No; rather should they say, God commanded the Jews, (Ex. 12: 2,) "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months," and the precise day for the Jews to keep a Sabbath was pointed out by the Manna's falling on the sixth day in a double quantity. But the church was then confined to one side of the earth. When Christ came, and the Gospel was to be spread around the globe, the ceremonial part of the law, inapplicable to such an extension, was laid aside, and his own words are, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul," &c.; "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "On these two commandment hang all the law and the prophets." Now, it can be plainly shown, that it is for the glory of God, and our good, spiritually and temporally, to keep a day of rest; therefore we are commanded to do so. But to be obliged to keep particularly the seventh day around the globe, when God, by his providential arrangements, has prevented our doing so without bringing confusion, does therefore, may we not conclude, that when Christ said, "Go into all the world," &c., "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," the keeping of exactly the seventh day was not included in the commission.

In regard to Dr. Edwards' writings, although I do not exactly agree with him in all his opinions, still I do not see the same objections as you do to his book. He gives us reasons why he supposes the first day of the week took the place of the seventh among the early Christians, but then, lest we should think it the only day of the week that would be kept as the Sabbath acceptably to God, commemorating the event which he supposes should be now commemorated, viz. the completion of the work of Redemption, he mentions the fact of the rotundity of the earth, and adds the remark on the 94th page, "Each should inquire," &c.. However, I trust that Christian courtesy led you to send him the paper to Andover, containing the charges, and that he has replied in a spirit of Christian meekness, if the reply has escaped my notice.

In closing, allow me to remark, that I would fain hope, that all true Christians, (with their hearts established with grace,) rather than being often found on controversial ground, may far more frequently meet together in the house of prayer, and that too on any day of the week when they can best advance the Redeemer's kingdom. A. STEWARD.

UNION PARK P. O., New York, Oct. 14, 1851.

Reply.

The writer of the foregoing, notwithstanding he avers that "it can be plainly shown to be for the glory of God and our good, spiritually and temporally, to keep a day of rest," and that "therefore we are commanded to do so," appears to deplore the "confusion" which would grow out of an attempt "to keep particularly the seventh day around the globe;" and therefore concludes that "the keeping of exactly the seventh day was not included in the commission" which Christ gave to his Apostles. But what he means by intimating that this "confusion" is virtually condemned in Col. 2: 16, and yet in the same breath declaring that God has "commanded us to keep a day of rest," we are at a loss to understand. Nothing is more clear to our mind, than that, if God has commanded us to keep a day, he has somewhere (either in the commandment itself, or in some other connection where there could be no doubt about the reference) plainly indicated what day he would have us to keep. Indeed, we know not that any one thinks otherwise. The anti-sabbatarian, it is true, denies that any particular day is designated; but then he is perfectly consistent with himself—he denies that God commands the thing. But all, without exception, who hold to a divine obligation to keep any day, admit that God has, in some way, pointed out what day it shall be. Seventh-day Baptists hold, that the fourth commandment itself designates the day. Those who keep Sunday, founding their obligation to do so upon what they suppose to be divine authority, hold that the Resurrection of Christ and the practice of his Apostles designate the day. They are divided, it is true, as to whether the fourth commandment lends any authority to the practice, some maintaining that it does, and others that it is abolished entirely. Nevertheless, those who plead for its authority still, and argue (however inconsistently) that it merely requires one day in seven, do not leave the thing here. They argue, farther, that the particular day to be observed is pointed out in some other connection. They argue, that for the Jews it was designated by miracle—the falling of the Manna; and that for Christians it was also designated by miracle—the Resurrection of Christ. It appears, therefore, that all classes of persons who hold to the keeping of a day of rest upon any other grounds than mere conventional arrangement, are unanimous in the conviction that some particular day is designated by divine authority. Our correspondent, if he is at all consistent with himself, must hold the same; and holding thus, we would like to know how he expects to obviate that very "confusion," which, he apprehends, would grow out of an attempt "to keep particularly the seventh day."

As to our former attempt (nearly two years ago) to show the adaptation of the law of the Sabbath to the earth's rotundity, it may have been very faulty. We may have failed to satisfy our correspondent's mind, and we may have blundered so as to make the matter appear worse than it did before. But we are not, on that account, disposed to admit that the keeping of the seventh day must of necessity breed confusion on this round earth. It is so clear to persons of common discernment, that precisely the same kind of confusion must result from the keeping of any day, and yet so palpable that no such confusion ever does result practically, that we are not disposed to make an exchange of opinions till we can get a little more boot. We shall hold on to the seventh day, therefore, and inculcate it upon others, till we become ready to avow ourselves anti-sabbatarians of the most ultra sort.

The objection which our correspondent makes to our attempted solution of his difficulty, has a very plausible appearance. We ought, perhaps, to have been a little more full in our remarks. If we mistake not, the argument was theoretically correct. In its practical application, however, it may be attended, apparently, with the very difficulty which we are now called to meet. After showing that the first seventh day would begin at the going down of the sun in the garden of Eden, where man was created, and from that point would move round the world westward till it reached again the point of starting, we ought to have added, that in point of fact, the day does now begin in the east of Asia, the longitude of Eden being a central one; so that, when it is mid-day on the Sabbath at Eden, Jerusalem, &c., it is Sabbath [illegible] in some places commencing, and in others just ending. Thus, when the Sabbath was drawing to a close in China, it would be just about commencing in America, while in the west of Europe it would be about sunrise on Sabbath morning. The difficulty, which our correspondent imagines, would therefore occur on that part of the globe which is occupied by the ocean—just where it would have no practical bearing.

We say, that the Sabbath-day does now begin in the east of Asia. And did it not always begin there? Did it not begin there from the creation of the world? Such questions may be asked by those who are more ready to find fault with God's commands, than to obey them; but all the answer we have to make is, that the "Sabbath was made for man." Of course, at the beginning, the Sabbath began and ended where man was. As there was no man in China, the Sabbath did not begin there; it was not wanted there. The seventh day, as a natural day, traveled round the globe then, as it does now; but not as a Sabbath-day. As the Sabbath, it began and ended in the garden of Eden. But when afterwards, (especially after the flood,) men began to migrate from that region eastward and westward, the Sabbath would begin where they had fixed their abode. To those who had fixed their abode in China, the Sabbath would commence some five or six hours earlier than in Palestine; and to those who had settled in the west of Europe, as much later. In this way, the region where man originated would become a central meridian, from which time could be reckoned without difficulty.

TEMPERANCE AMONG "HARD-SHELLS."

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

There is an article going the rounds of the papers, which has also found its way into the Recorder, to the effect that a Baptist Church of "Hard-Shells," in South Carolina, excluded a number of its members for joining the Sons of Temperance and "living sober lives," designating it as a "grievous and wicked offense," calling for "punishment." Now I confess to entertaining doubts of the truthfulness of this statement. I can readily conceive how that church could feel bound to discipline its members for joining the Sons of Temperance, or even a Temperance Society; but that any church, however ignorant and superstitious, should regard it sinful to live "sober lives," I do not believe. As it is my firm belief that the statement is grievously and wickedly exaggerated, I ask your exchanges to copy this, that it may go back to the "Hard-Shells;" and I ask that church, for its own honor, and for the honor of the cause of Christ in general, to explain and correct, if correction is called for.

Yours for truth and right, N. V. HULL.

ALFRED CENTER, Oct. 5, 1851.

ARTICLES OF FAITH, &C.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

In perusing the Minutes of the South-Western Association, which were published in your paper of October 4th, I was exceedingly pleased to find that so goodly a number of Seventh-day Baptists have at length found out that the Bible, with the promised assistance of the Holy Spirit, is sufficient to guide the disciples into truth, so that there may be a general uniformity and unity of faith with respect to the doctrines of the gospel. And I do earnestly hope and pray, that some of their able and influential members will use their endeavors and influence to convince other churches and associations of that all-important truth. It will be remembered, that our General Conference, some ten or fifteen years ago, passed a resolution, that no church should be received into the Conference without written articles of faith. And at that time I considered that act to be a seed of Roman corruption, sown on Seventh-day Baptist soil, or that it was a shoot of the deadly poison, sprung up from seed previously sown; knowing, as I did, that the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., which was called the mother church, flourished more than a hundred years without any written articles of faith or covenant. For it was a maxim with them, that the Bible alone is the religion of Protestants. And I think I hazard nothing when I say, that all creeds written in any other than Scripture language, as a rule or standard of church discipline and fellowship, are nothing more nor less than putting the laws of men in the place of the law of God. Wherefore, surely, all such creeds and standards ought to be immediately abolished and done away with, among Seventh-day Baptists at least. I consider that they have a direct tendency to make hypocrites, or at least to induce people to profess to believe what they do not, rather than to be kept out of the church. May the good Lord have mercy upon us all. Amen.

WM. STILLMAN.

RHODE ISLAND CORRESPONDENCE.

Church-going and Church Manners.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

In my last communication, I animadverted on Sunday observance, as not being founded in a sense of religious obligation. This proposition should be qualified by many exceptions; for very many have taken for granted that the Bible commands it, and hence the sense of obligation is the same as if it were really so; and others have honestly inferred that Sunday has divine sanction. But I think that by far the greater portion of the Christian world observe the first day from circumstances not at all connected with divine sanction. So far as I can judge, the following enter largely into the reasons for the practice in question.

1st. Convenience. Thus, a young man already alluded to, said he observed the first day because the community in which he lived did. He could not realize the design of the Sabbath if he should observe any other day. He would molest and be molested constantly. This, I think, is the plea always used by the few of our brethren who have left the Bible Sabbath. It may not be amiss to examine its claims a little. It will at once be observed, that this can have no weight, except as applied to an individual. Since the community in which one lives observes the first day, it may be more convenient for that person to do so. But that is no ultimate reason for the act. It may be a proximate reason for the individual. But why does the community do so? It is said, because other communities do. But why do other communities? Suppose all Christendom observe the first day, or that all the human race do it; it may still be asked, why they do it? It appears, then, that this argument of "convenience" fails, for certainly there can be no more convenience in one day than another. All days in themselves are alike adapted to sabbatism. We must then ask for some other reason for the practice of Christians at large. If A. says I do so because B. does, then B. may say, I do it because A. does; but in this way we never arrive at a reason for both A. and B. In relation to our apostate brother, then, though he observes the first day because the community does, he may yet be without an adequate reason. It is his business to show that the community has an adequate reason—that it be required by the law of God. Every reason short of this is a delusive sophism. This doctrine of convenience involves the most fatal consequences. If the community in which a man lives procure its subsistence by plundering wrecked vessels, it will certainly be more convenient for him to join them—he can subsist there by no other avocation. And if convenience be the rule of duty, then this man ought to be a pirate, and do as his neighbors do. No amount of convenience can warrant labor on the Sabbath day, so long as God's law forbids it. It is one of the surest proofs of Christian character, that we are willing to suffer inconvenience for the sake of truth. Let the patient suffering of Christ, the apostles, and holy martyrs, teach us the true way.

The second reason for the general observance of the first day is the influence of parental example. We are often told by those who assent to the sanctity of the seventh day, that they cannot consent to leave the practice of their ancestors. This influence is stronger than we are apt to suppose. Probably the parent exerts the strongest influence on the mind of the child of which it is susceptible. From the earliest recollections, this practice stands associated with all that is dear on earth. It is hallowed by a thousand recollections of early days. It is not strange, then, that its abandonment should seem sacrilegious. It is the behest of the loved and departed. We can but approve the spirit which cherishes and honors parental instructions; but no one can for a moment urge such instructions as the Christian's rule of duty. He always refers his actions to the great law of laws, and abides its teachings.

But my design, when I took up the pen, was to animadvert upon the practice of church-going, and church manners, in this city. This, like all cities, and some villages, has its quota of loafers and street-walkers; nor is that class of animals (not worthy of a name) wanting whose special business it is to stand at the entrance to the meeting-house, and delight the ladies as they pass with the scent of the delicious weed deeply treasured there. With these exceptions, the people are a church-going people. Large assemblies are found at all the various places of worship. Sunday-Schools are well conducted, and numerously attended. They seem, indeed, to be looked upon in their true importance, and have doubtless exerted great influence in inducing the most commendable habit of church-going so much to be praised in this city. It is not my province to say what may be the motives of all in going to the place of worship. Perhaps some do go to display fine persons and fine apparel. Be it so. I had rather see them there with such motives, than that they should stay away. That is the very place for such pride to find its rebuke, if the gospel be preached in its fullness If they go even to revile and to ridicule divine things, let them go, and let God's truth burn them up. Let all be brought under the influence of the gospel. It were fair to infer, that by far the greater portion of the multitudes who assemble here on first-day, do it for the purpose of instruction in divine things. Of the instruction which they receive, I can say but little. It is, however, here as elsewhere. Some preachers deal in fine-spun theories and obscure abstractions; others talk of the law, and faintly suggest the terrors of its penalties. Some please the ear with rhetorical accuracy, and, fearful lest they should descend to vulgarity and boisterousness, they make themselves inaudible to a greater part of their audience. A few melodious tones of voice and mechanical movements of the hand alone indicate the exercise in which they are engaged. It is far from me to despise rhetorical accuracy; but, like electricity, steam, and other agents in nature, when misused, it becomes a thing of dread. When it shuts in the upgushings of the soul, and restrains the rising feelings, it transcends its legitimate sphere, and prevents the true effect of pulpit oratory. It is true, religion is not all passion; nor is it all mathematical mechanism. Its appeals are to both the passions and the reason. The truest oratory is that of nature. It deals not in stiff and mechanical monotony. Now it rushes by in the whirlwind, and now sits down in the beauty of moonlit stillness. Here it thunders in the rush of noisy cataracts, and there whispers in the soothing strains of evening zephyrs. The human soul is a harp of numerous strings, over which the cold, stiff fingers of artificial oratory may sweep forever, and never wake to tune a single melody. The sermon may be composed with all the accuracy of Aristotle's "dictum," and may be delivered with gestures that outvie the steam-engine in accuracy of lines and angles, and yet fall like an iceberg upon the congregation. If the deep waters of the soul be stirred, let them well up from their gushing fountains, and flow from heart to heart, melting down the icy barriers of the soul.

[illegible] custom common to all denominations in this city, viz., that of writing and reading sermons. Of this habit there are various opinions. It cannot be doubted, that this mode of sermonizing has some advantages. It ensures all the accuracy of arrangement, and correctness of argument, which the author is capable of exercising in the undisturbed retirement of his study. But it seems to me that even accuracy, desirable though it be, may be purchased at too dear a rate. It often checks those spontaneous effusions of soul inspired by the occasion, and which constitute the soul and power of natural eloquence. No experienced public speaker will deny, that often the inspiration of the moment furnishes the most vivid thought and appropriate illustration. In the retirement of the study, all this stimulus is wanting, and the preacher who relies wholly upon preparation made there comes before the audience to express only the cold cogitations of uncongenial solitude. If his soul glow with thought far above his studied composition, it must still be expressed in its dull prosy lines, and thus check the very element of power in elocution. It is only when thoughts come burning from a soul warmed by their power, that they penetrate the heart. Let the subject be well studied and carefully arranged in the study, and then let it leap forth in words like gushing waters from their mountain caves. It may be said, that the speaker cannot always feel the inspiration of the subject and the occasion. If this be true, he may despair to touch the hearts of his hearers, and his written sermon would be an idle form. But besides tending to dry up and fetter the lively emotions of the soul, it induces a dependence on written words and forms, altogether incompatible with the extemporaneous scenes amid which we live. We cannot at all times retire and write a sermon when one is needed, till the occasion be past when it would have been effectual. We need men who can snatch the moment, on steamboats, on cars, and elsewhere, and plead for the truth with the eloquence of ready thought.

In every church which I have attended, what of vocal music there was, became half inaudible by the thundering tones of the ponderous organ. How much of its harmony entered the ear of Heaven as acceptable worship, I will not essay to determine. I may without offence suggest, that so far as it may inspire deeper devotion in the heart, it may be approved of God. To what extent it may do this I will not venture to affirm. I think this is certain, that the instrument itself cannot worship God, and that if it be touched with fingers tuned to Italian skill, while the heart be unregenerate, this splendid performance involves no worship. I have but little trouble to conceive that a musical instrument may conduce to higher devotion if properly employed; but upon what principle the practice of inviting the ungodly sinner to perform this part of divine worship is founded, I never could perceive. Why may he not as well pray or preach for us? Will some one give us light on this point? The choirs here usually number not more than eight singers in all. Why are not the voices of the congregation tuned to praise?

I will allude to one more practice, which commends itself to every Christian. In every instance of attending church on first-day, I have been invited by some member, before entering the house, to sit with his family, and then proffered the place at any future time. I never saw a stranger enter the house and seek a place to sit. I wish our own brethren would emulate this virtue; for I have often, among them, seen strangers walk through the house, and then have to intrude themselves into unproffered accommodations; yea, more, I have seen them unceremoniously crowded out by the owners of the seats they have thus been compelled to assume. Christianity is full of politeness, and seeks above all other places to make the house God a place of good manners. D. E. M.

BROWN UNIVERSITY, Oct. 9th.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS CONVENTION.

A Woman's Rights Convention (so called) was held in Worcester, Mass., during three days of last week. It was numerously attended, and was addressed by several speakers, distinguished in their way, among whom were William H. Channing, Wendell Phillips, Chas. List, Paulina W. Davis, C. J. H. Nichols, Emma R. Coe, Lucy Stone, Ernestine L. Rose, and "Dr. Harriett R. Hunt." Letters were also read from various persons who had been invited, but did not find it convenient to attend, among them Harriett Martineau, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry W. Beecher, and Horace Mann. A lengthy report of the proceedings of the Convention is before us, from which it appears that the main business was speech-making, and reading reports. The resolutions discussed set forth that "the Right of Suffrage for Woman is the corner-stone of this enterprise," and "that it will be woman's fault if, the ballot once in her hand, all the barbarous, demoralizing, and unequal laws, relating to marriage and property, do not speedily vanish from the statute-book." A lengthy report on Industrial Avocations was read, which represents that one prominent "obstacle in the way of woman's industrial redemption is the inconvenient style of her attire." The Report says :—

"That the present long-flowing skirt is a serious impediment to her efficiently engaging in many productive branches of useful industry, must be admitted. The experience of all who have made the trial has been, that the healthful and agreeable business of agriculture and horticulture cannot be prosecuted with pleasure and advantage, with her shroud-like drapery about her feet and limbs. Mechanical labor, especially that requiring the use of machinery, would with great difficulty be accomplished, and in many cases would be attended with great danger, from its preventing a free use of her limbs, and also its liability to be caught in the machinery. Consequently woman is at present to a great extent unfitted by her dress for self-support and independence."

HENRY CLAY ON THE COMPROMISE MEASURES.—Several distinguished citizens of New York recently communicated to Henry Clay a request that he would visit this city and address the people on Compromise, Secession, &c. He declines doing so on account of feeble health. His letter of declinature, however, expresses at length his views on the subject. The necessity of maintaining and enforcing the Fugitive Slave Law, "unrepealed, and without any modification that would seriously impair its efficiency," he thinks, "must be admitted by the impartial judgment of all candid men." And he is so confident of the general admission of this doctrine at the North, that he has no very serious fears for the Union from that quarter. At the South, there is "enough to encourage the friends of the Union, and but little to excite solicitude and alarm." All the Southern States, except Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina, acquiesce in the Compromise. Of Georgia and Mississippi there is much to hope "from their known patriotism and intelligence;" while in South Carolina the occasion of apprehension is "not so much for the security of the Union as for her own peace and prosperity."

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.—At a Concert of Prayer held in New York on the first Monday of this month, a letter was read from Mr. Crane, dated July 9, 1851, which exhibited a promising state of missionary operations at Aintab. The want of missionaries is felt there. Delegates had arrived from the adjacent villages, entreating that a missionary might be sent to them. These delegates came, in some instances, empowered to bear the expenses of the missionary there and back. A letter was read from Trebizond, dated August 4th, which speaks of a number of Christians, in that region, being imprisoned and persecuted, kept for two weeks in close confinement and chained two-and-two. A gratifying degree of interest, however, was manifested by the natives in the teachings of the missionaries.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN PAPAL COUNTRIES.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, at its yearly meeting in July, memorialized Lord Palmerston on behalf of religious liberty in Roman Catholic countries abroad, especially the Papal States, Naples, and Austria. Lord Palmerston replied, that "her Majesty's Government are deeply impressed with a conviction of the truth of the principles laid down in the petition;" "they have not omitted, and will not omit, to avail themselves of every proper opportunity of urging those principles on other Governments, as far as may be consistent with a due regard for international independence, and with any prospect of obtaining a useful result."

DEATH OF MISSIONARIES.—Letters from the Mendi Mission, West Africa, published in the American Missionary, mention the death of Mrs. Minerva Arnold and Mrs. Eliza B. Tefft. The former died on the 9th, and the latter on the 10th of June last.

ARRESTS FOR TREASON IN SYRACUSE.—On Fourth-day of last week, Oct. 15, five citizens of Syracuse were arrested by the U. S. Marshall of the Northern District of New York, on warrants issued by Judge Conklin, of Auburn, charged with aiding in the rescue of the fugitive slave Jerry. Their names are Moses Summers, part proprietor of the Onondaga Standard; James Davis, a butcher; Stephen Porter, a butcher; Ira H. Cobb; and William Thompson, colored. They were all taken to Auburn, where a three-days' examination, with a view to decide whether they should be committed for trial on the charge of treason, was conducted before Judge Conklin by the District Attorney, James R. Lawrence. On Sabbath afternoon, the District Attorney said he had no farther evidence; to present; the counsel for the prisoners declined to offer any evidence, and the Judge took until 10 o'clock of Second-day to consider the case.

It is understood that warrants have been issued for the arrest of several other persons, including a number of influential citizens of Syracuse. Should they be bound over for trial on the charge of treason, the case will be an interesting and important one.

MUSIC BOOKS.—Two new music books have been laid on our table. One of them is a quarto volume of 102 pages, entitled, "Lablache's Complete Method of Singing, or a rational Analysis of the Principles according to which studies should be directed for developing the Voice and rendering it flexible, and for forming the Voice, with examples for illustration, and progressive vocalizing exercises; translated from the French of Louis Lablache, and improved from all former issues by the addition of new exercises for sustaining the voice, and an engraving representing all the parts of the mouth and throat brought into action in the cultivation and development of the Human Voice." The other is a new collection of Sacred Music, called "White's Church Melodist," by Edward L. White, editor of "Modern Harp," "Sacred Chorus Book," "Boston Melodeon," "Tyrolien Lyre," &c. Of the merits of these works, we are not musician enough to say much; but a musical friend to whom we have referred them, thinks that the book by Lablache is very valuable, while that of Mr. White has many excellencies, especially in the arrangement. They are published by Oliver Ditson, Boston, and sold by J. E. Gould & Co., 297 Broadway, N. Y., and by all music dealers.

THE STORM OFF PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.—A dispatch from St. John, N. B., dated Oct. 15, says: Authentic intelligence has been received here of the loss of fifty British fishing vessels, and the probable destruction of over one hundred lives. The bark Amelia Ann, from New York, arrived at Schediac on the 10th, and the Prince Edward's Island packet on the following day. The latter reports that one hundred and sixty sail of vessels, consisting of ships, brigs, and schooners, had been wrecked from the North Cape to Malpac, and that sixty bodies were buried in one grave. Two ships had stranded at Richibucto—one a Russian, which had been condemned, and the other an English vessel, which lies buried in the sand.

The schooner N. Rogers, of New London, Thos. Rogers master, was off Prince Edward's Island when the gale commenced, and she, with a fleet of fifty or sixty sail, stood off the coast. She made a harbor in the Gut of Canso the following Monday, having lost everything from deck, her foresail and flying jibboom. Capt. Rogers reports that the gale was tremendous, and attributes the safety of his vessel to the giving away of the foresail at the moment she was struck and knocked down by a heavy sea.

CHEAP POSTAGE.—The Boston Cheap Postage Association, (of which John W. James is President, and Joshua Leavitt Secretary,) is out upon the postage law of 1850, as being altogether a different thing from what was asked and needed. They take Rowland's Hill's scheme as a model, and advocate—

1. The abolition of the franking privilege.
2. An uniform rate for all distances on letters, one cent for the half ounce.
3. An uniform rate of one cent on newspapers, whatever the size, and the sale of news-stamps at fifty cents the hundred.
4. The prepayment of all postage.

These ameliorations are insisted upon, as proved by the British system, and approved by common sense.

THE CHRISTIAN REVIEW for October is an excellent number of that always sterling quarterly, as will be seen by the following table of contents :—

I. Grote's Greece; by Prof. J. T. Champlin. II. Examination of Dr. Woods, argument for Infant Baptism, from Ecclesiastical History; by Rev. H. J. Ripley, D. D. III. Beneficence the noblest Aim; Rev. G. B. Ide, D. D. IV. Objections to this Life as the only Period of Probation considered; by Rev. A. Hovey. V. Annexation of Louisiana; by Rev. J. M. Peck. VI. The Ultimate Supremacy of the Kingdom of Redemption; by Rev. H. B. Smith, D. D. VII. The Temporal Power of the Popes; or, Popery as a Politico-Ecclesiastical Institution; by Rev. J. Dowling, D. D. VIII. Notices of New Publications. IX. Intelligence.

Mr. Joseph A. Woodward publishes in the Charleston papers a letter, in which he asserts that John C. Calhoun, in his last hours, made known to several of his confidential friends his despair of preserving the Federal Government, as well as his conviction that resistance to the then pending measures of the North, if they should be carried out, would be the duty of the South, and of each single State of the South, even if no more than one could be found willing to act.

J. Doggett, Jr., No. 59 Liberty-st., has recently issued "Poor Richard's Almanac," with a Calendar for 1852, and containing the editorials written by Dr. Franklin for the years 1739, 1740 and 1741. Franklin edited, printed and published an Almanac with the above title for twenty-six years.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

General Intelligence.

European News.

Two steamers from Liverpool—the Atlantic and the America—have arrived since our last, bringing one week later news. The Atlantic had a long passage, in consequence of breaking the rod of her air pump. This was of English manufacture, not American. As soon as it could be taken out and replaced with a spare rod, which the ship always carries, she went on her way again.

The Marseilles journals announce the arrival, Sept. 26, in that port, of the Mississippi, having on board sixty Hungarian refugees, and among them Kossuth. This steamer only put in for coals, and was to depart immediately for England. No person disembarked from her, but several of the merchants went on board.

On the arrival of Kossuth in the Dardanelles, the Captain of the Mississippi went on board the Turkish vessel and placed his ship at the disposal of the exiles, at the same time, as is reported, presenting $15,000 to their leader, in the name of the American Government.

Sir John Ross has arrived at Stranraer, Scotland, with the schooner Felix. He left the ice on the 18th August. Sir John's opinion is, that only a screw-steamer can accomplish anything in the search for Sir John Franklin.

Since the discovery of gold in Australia, ships for Sydney, the nearest port to Ophir, as it is called, have greatly increased in number. The General Post Office at London advertises twenty vessels at once, by which letter bags will be sent.

The contractors for building the Crystal Palace received notice from the Executive Committee to commence pulling it down after the 11th inst. It is proposed to carry the building to Battersea, and set it up there as a winter-garden. The profits of the Exhibition are to be used as a fund for similar exhibitions hereafter.

The submarine telegraph to France has been completed. The great cable which was intended to reach the whole distance proved too short by half a mile, owing to the irregularity of the line in which it was laid down. It was pieced out with a coil of wire coated with gutta percha. This will, however, have to be taken up and supplied with cable. The connection is complete with France, and messages are sent across with perfect success.

The Chrysolite, a clipper ship, built at Aberdeen by the Messrs. Hall, for the Liverpool and China trade, has just made the voyage from Liverpool to Anjeer in 80 days. This is the quickest voyage on record. The Oriental made the same passage out in 89 days, and that was without precedent; but, for the present, the Chrysolite has the palm. The ship was built expressly to contest the voyage with the Oriental, and no expense was spared. She is, we believe, of 500 tuns burden, per register, but carries nearly 900 tuns or tea.

Ossian E. Dodge has created some excitement in England, by offering ten thousand dollars for the Crystal Palace one day and night soon after the close of the exhibition.

In France, persecutions of newspapers continue. Usurpation by Louis Napoleon is still talked of. So is the nomination to the Presidency of the Prince de Joinville.

The Pope has published an "Act of Grace," whereby all offenses not involving a punishment of more than six months' imprisonment are pardoned, and all sentences for longer terms shall be shortened by one year; but this lenity is not to apply to great cheats and thieves, forgers, or political offenders!

Advices from Madrid of 21st state that the authorities of Cuba have proposed a plan to fortify the Island at the expense of forty million reals, and Gen. Concha is of opinion that this sum might be obtained by the saving proposed in the War Department. A committee of General Officers approved of Gen. Cancha's plan.

A French Company at Martinique is about to transport into that Colony 4,000 negroes from Benia and Dahomey, on the Western Coast of Africa, pursuant to recent treaties with the black Princes of those countries.

An Arab tribe in the outskirts of Algiers, had a quarrel with another in the great Sahara, and marched against it in two bodies. One of these made a pretended attack on the town for the purpose of drawing out the active population, the other penetrated into the place and massacred every one they met.

A terrific explosion took place lately at Zante, Greece. A small house, on the ground floor of which was a shop kept by a Greek, accidentally caught fire. The Major of the 41st Regiment (British) turned out immediately with a party of his soldiers to aid in extinguishing it. The townspeople also flocked to the place in great numbers, to render what assistance they could. But before the fire could be extinguished, it had reached the second story, and all of a sudden a most awful explosion ensued. It appears that two barrels of gunpowder had been imprudently concealed in a closet adjoining one of the rooms in the second story. At the very moment of the explosion several persons were on the roof of the house; and the result can easily be imagined. Eleven men perished at once, and among these a drummer of the 41st Regiment. The Major of the same corps was severely wounded, and equally so were no less than 150 of the inhabitants.

A gale which raged without intermission for 48 hours on the 24th and 25th of September, on the Eastern Coast of England, led to the most calamitous loss of life and property, especially at and near the mouth of the Humber. Considerably upward of 100 vessels were stranded, and the loss of life was fearful. On Thursday, the 24th, the vessels known as coasters were keeping close under the land, with a slight southeasterly breeze, when suddenly the wind veered to the N. E., and rose to a hurricane, making it impossible for many of the coasters to stand out from the land. Most of them were driven on the rocks and dashed to pieces. On a great number every soul perished. The whole range of coast, as far as the Yarmouth roads, were strewn with the wrecks.

Efforts are making to induce emigration from Ireland to Peru. The Government of that country consents to pay two-thirds of the passage-money, or £6 for each adult. In consideration of this sum the parties bind themselves to work a certain length of time at fixed wages, or else to repay it in monthly installments. Only Catholic emigrants are wanted.

California News.

The steamer Illinois, from Chagres, arrived at New-York last Sabbath, bringing two millions of dollars in gold dust, and nine days later news from California.

The City of Marysville has been visited with another serious fire, and Spanishtown, on the Calaveras River, has suffered from an extensive conflagration, which consumed 150 dwellings, the whole loss amounting to $250,000

Crime has diminished throughout the State, and no execution has taken place either in San Francisco or in the interior, since the sailing of the last steamer. The Indians in the Southern part of the State are quiet; those in the North, in Trinidad and Klamath Counties, are becoming somewhat troublesom.e

The gold diggings continue to yield rich returns to the labors of the miners. The auriferous quartz veins are being extensively worked, and generally with great success.

San Francisco has recovered from the two great conflagrations of May and June, and has been rebuilt in far better style than before. Numerous fire-proof brick and stone buildings have been erected, and many others have been commenced. Altogether, the condition of affairs in California is highly satisfactory.

From Panama, we have intelligence that of the band who in their attempt to rob a specie train crossing the Isthmus in September killed two of the guard, two had been arrested, and had made full confession, which would probably lead to the arrest of several others.

The Panama Star of Oct. 3, says: By the arrival, yesterday, of the French brig Marie Louise, from Callao, whence she sailed on the 20th Sept., we learn that the steamer Chili had just arrived in that harbor from Valparaiso, bringing the important but unpleasant information, that a revolution had broken out in Chili, and that many of the troops had declared in favor of General Santa Cruz for Prsident; that Coquimbo and other cities were in possession of the new party, and that everything throughout the Republic was in a disorganized state.

Concerning the Revolution in New-Granada, the Panama Star of the 3d inst. says:—About 9 o'clock on Wednesday night, the city was startled "from its propriety" by the sudden sound apparently of every church bell in it—and they are something less than a thousand—and the loud cries of "Viva la Republica Nueva Granada" from the throats of the loyal domocratic "paisanos," who all at once thronged the streets. On inquiry into the cause of jollification, we learned that a courier had just got into town, with dispatches to Gov. Diaz, informing him that Gen. Thomas Herrera, leader of the Government forces, had subdued the remaining revolutionary forces in the Republic under command of Gen. Berrera, in the province of Antioqua. This is the main established fact.

The North Pacific Whaling Fleet.

The Alta California has important and sad intelligence from the whaling fleet of the North Pacific. A vessel had arrived at San Francisco, which was on the 31st of August boarded by the whale ship John Wells, of New Bedford, Captain Cross, who reports the following vessels as being totally lost this season:—Ajax, of Havre; Aramatta, of New London; Arabella, New Bedford; New Bedford, of New Bedford; America, of New Bedford; Cosmopolite, of France; Mary Mitchell, of San Francisco.

It appears that the whole whaling fleet had wintered in the Gulf of Anadir, in the northern part of the sea of Kamschatka, in Russia in Asia, and, on the coming on of Spring, had set sail for Bhering's Straits; but in attempting to pass through into the Arctic Ocean, the fleet was environed by ice, and the above-named vessels were totally wrecked. The crews of the destroyed vessels are reported to have reached the main land in safety; but it is said that in some disturbances afterward with the natives, eleven of the whalemen lost their lives.

The John Wells is stated to have borne evidence of the severe navigation she had encountered. Her spars were nearly all gone, her hull more or less damaged, and she had scarcely a sheet of copper upon her.

It was supposed that some sixty more vessels had shared the fate of those mentioned above; and it was quite impossible to tell how many more would be likely to be lost in their attempts to escape from the ice.

The general result of this season's whale-fishing is set down as a total failure.

The Plague in the Canary Islands.

The Canary Islands have been visited by a frightful epidemic, or plague, which is said to have been brought by fishermen from the coast of Africa. At first it was thought to be a kind of cholera morbus. But an examination by the Board of Health showed that it was the plague. It raged with such fury that the inhabitants, in consternation, abandoned the town without caring for anything but their persons, to such an extent that they even forgot the ties of blood. Death surprised them in the midst of their flight, so that roads were covered with corpses over which not a tear of frendship, or of filial or fraternal love, was shed, because terror had smothered every sentiment except that of self-preservation. As was to be expected, the fugitives, carrying with them the fatal germ, infected the country, which became the theater of the most horrible scenes. The beasts, abandoned in the city, perished for want of food, and the decomposition of their bodies, together with that of the human corpses which remained unburied in the streets, vitiated the atmosphere to such an extent that any unfortunate person who might return to the city fell dead almost as soon as he entered a house. However, this was stopped as soon as possible by the energetic measure taken by the Military Governor, and by the humanity of the second alcade of the Corregidor, and various young men, many of whom fell victims to their heroism.

At last the supposition was confirmed, that the epidemic was not the cholera, but the terrible plague of the Moors, it having been ascertained that it was introduced into the Island of Grand Canary by the fishing vessels which frequent the western coasts of Africa. The persons in the island devoted to this traffic, numbering about 1,800, have almost all perished, as there remain only enough to man a single vessel. According to the declarations of the masters of the said vessels, on all the western shores of Africa there reigns a deathly pest, which carries off the inhabitants, the mortality being so great that the corpses are strewed upon the earth in incredible numbers, and their decomposition augments the influence of the corrupted atmosphere.

As soon as the Commandant General of the Province learned the abandonment of the City of Las Palmas, he sent a portion of the garrison of the capital to bury the dead, but the greater portion of the soldiers were attacked by the epidemic and died. In short, in order to give an idea of the ravages of the pest, it is only necessary to state, that in two months 6,000 persons died in the City of Las Palmas, and 16,000 in the whole island. Up to the last dates the plague had spared the towns of Agatee and Fejeda.

From the Cape of Good Hope.

The ship Spring Bok, from the Cape of Good Hope, Sept. 3, arrived at Boston Oct. 15. Her news is 33 days later. The accounts are more favorable for peace. The Government has been reinforced by two fine regiments and 100 artillery men—in all 1,500 men. Sir Harry Smith, the English Governor, was in high spirits at the more favorable prospects, and said he would conclude no treaty of peace short of the unconditional submission of the Kaffirs. Notwithstanding the prospect of peace, the papers are still filled with the details of a dreadful guerilla warfare, which has reduced the country in some places to a desert of ashes—men are murdered on the high roads, and flocks and herds are stolen by thousands. Conspiracy among the Hottentots and Kaffirs on the frontier to rise and murder the English and their allies, had been discovered and frustrated. Several hostile chiefs had expressed a desire to make peace, but letters state that it will probably be months before troops can be brought to bear upon the enemy and force it at the point of the bayonet.

The venerable John Phillips, Superintendent of the London Missions in South Africa, died on the 27th August.

Land Difficulties in Livingston County.—The Livingston Republican says that Anti-Rentism has broken out in Springwater, in that County, and adds these particulars: It is well known that there is a large tract of land in that town claimed by the Pultney estate. Much of this tract has long been occupied by men who have cleared the land, erected buildings, and made what was a rugged and almost barren soil, good farming land, and after being on the land some twenty to forty years, the Company now come forward and claim the land, although previously they had not even attempted any jurisdiction. An attempt to serve a couple of writs of ejectment served to assemble some two hundred armed persons, who threatened the application of a coat of tar and feathers as an outward covering for the officers if they did not desist from the service of ejectment papers. The officers gave it up and left the place.

A Young Rogue.—The New York Police recently re-arrested Thomas Andrews, a boy eleven years of age, who was committed to the Tombs for some petty offence about a month before, and escaped in a very ingenious manner. There are a number of barrels placed in the yard of the City Prison for the rception of swill. When these are filled, the lids are closed, and they are carted away to the place of deposit in the upper part of the City. Andrews, noticing that one of the barrels was not quite full, jumped into it unobserved, and closed the lid. Thus submerged to his throat in the offensive liquid, he patiently awaited the carman, who shortly arrived, and, taking the supposed full barrel on his cart, carried it off. When he stopped to unload, Andrews sprang out, and the carman was so paralyzed with astonishment that he could offer no impediment to the young rogue's flight.

Trick of a Slaver.—The Plymouth Journal narrates the following trick of an African slaver: Two full slavers have lately escaped, one from Lagos, a Sardinian, and another, a Spaniard, from Port Legino, with three and five hundred respectively. The Lagos fellow escaped by a clever trick; he saw the Prometheus, steam-sloop, Commander Foote, standing in, and was then in the act of hoisting his water-casks in. The Captain, however, bolted off to a merchant skipper, who was known to be legitimately taking in a boat-load of palm-oil, and for a matter of $300 induced him to exchange boats for a few hours; the steamer came in, boarded him, and seeing him busily engaged in taking in palm oil, stood off again; he then finished his proceedings, got the niggers on board, and bolted in the night.

The Hackensack Bridge.—Of this Bridge, which was recently burnt down, but was again ready for use last week, the Newark Advertiser says:—It was burned down in 1845, and 32 working days were required to rebuild it, (the crossing being interrupted 6 weeks and 2 days,) during which time 20,000 passengers were ferried over. On this occasion the crossing was interrupted one month, 21 days only were employed to rebuild the bridge, and over 100,000 people were carried over the ferry, besides a large number of teams—and without accident. The Company have employed an average of 500 men in the work, and no serious accident has occured to any of them, although they have necessarily been placed very often in positions of imminent peril.

Beards.—Mr. Andrew Jackson Davis comes out in The Hartford Times in favor of men's wearing their beards. He says the hairs of the beard are ultimations or continuations of nerves; those of the hard coating and membrane of the eye are connected with the beard on the upper lip, and when that is shaved off the nerves are exposed to injury; some diseases of the eye he attributes to shaving. In women, these nerves instead of terminating in the upper lip are buried in the cheeks, and have much to do in controlling the phenomenon of blushing. Bronchitis and maladies of the lungs are produced by shaving off the beard on the chin. Mr. Davis also argues that mustachios are no obstacle in the way of eating, or any other function in which the lips are employed. [Tribune.

Worth Knowing.—A young lady of this city, while in the country some years ago, stepped on a rusty nail, which ran through her shoe and foot. The inflammation and pain were of course very great, and lock-jaw was apprehended. A friend of the family, however, recommended the application of a beet taken fresh from the garden, and pounded fine, to the wound. It was done, and the effect was very beneficial. Soon the inflammation began to subside, and by keeping on the crushed beet, changing it for a fresh one as its virtue seemed to become impaired, a speedy cure was effected.

SUMMARY.

The Rochester Democrat says that Henry M. Whitney, a young man who lived in Rochester about fifteen years, has recently been appointed by Kammehammeha, Postmaster General of the Sandwich Islands. Mr. Whitney went on about two years since to Hawaii, expecting to receive an appointment of some distinction from the King. E. O. Hall, Esq., formerly of Rochester also, is editor of The Polynesian, the leading and official newspaper at the seat of Government. In 1831, Mr. Hall was a journeyman printer in Rochester.

The sailing days for the U. S. Mail Steamers for San Francisco have been changed. Hereafter the sailing days will be the 9th, 11th, 24th, and 26th of each month, unless the day happens upon Sunday, when they will be dispatched on the day following. The Pacific Mail Steamship Co. have received permission from Government to sail from Panama immediately on the arrival of the Atlantic mails, instead of waiting as heretofore until the regular days established by the P. O. Department, thus avoiding a detention of some four or five days.

Mr. Joseph Reed, an enterprising farmer in the Germany neighborhood, (The Sussex (N. J.) Herald states,) was badly bitten in the arm and face by a mad dog a few days since. The dog belonged to Mr. Reed, and had shown ferocious disposition for some time past, and had been bitten several years ago by a rabid dog. At the time of his biting Mr. Reed, such was his ferocity that it was with difficulty he was compelled to let go his grasp, and after doing so, he continued to bite posts, fences, and whatever came in his way.

There was held in New York last week a Convention of Delegates from the several Colleges of Pharmacy in the United States, viz: Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati and Boston. The object of this meeting was to consider and arrange, as far as practicable, a standard of quality and of strength for Imported Drugs and Medicines, to be submitted for the action of Congress, with a view of rendering the decisions of the Custom-House Examiners uniform at all the ports of entry.

On the morning of Oct. 15, a fire broke out in the Orphan Asylum at Cincinnati, which destroyed the entire edifice. There were at the time one hundred and six boys in the building, many of whom saved themselves by jumping out of the windows. One hundred of the children were saved, and six, it is feared, perished in the flames. Three bodies of the six have been found in the ruins. Many of those saved were badly burned, or otherwise injured while making their escape.

Two Hungarians of distinction arrived at Philadelphia week before last, and left for the West, without making themselves known to any number of the citizens of that place. One was Madarasz, who during the revolutionary agitation, was know as the leader of the ultra Radical party; the other Baron Metelenyi. They have gone West intending to settle at some point in Wisconsin or Iowa. They expect to be followed to their new home by a body of other emigrants.

The work of enlarging the Erie Canal will commence immediately on closing the Canal. The plans and contracts will be complete in November. The Buffalo Commercial says: "The amount of money to be expended during the year will be between three and four millions of dollars, which properly, applied, will go far to excavate the prism of the Canal to its full width the whole distance, thus greatly facilitating the movement of craft during the next season.

Hon. Hiram Rider, of Willington, formerly Treasurer of Connecticut, Sheriff of Tolland county, and County Court Judge, died at his residence on Friday. His wife was buried on Wednesday of the same week, and his daughter died the week previous. All of them died of the dysentery, which has recently been quite prevalent in that town.

The steamboat men of New-Orleans have formed a combination to demand higher wages, and commenced operations by attacking those who declined joining them. The first crew belonging to the Brilliant was turned off the boat by the rioters; a second crew, hired at $50 or $60 per month, was also turned off, and the captain could not get away unless the demands were complied with.

Joseph A. Divver, an ex-alderman of New-York, committed suicide last week by taking prussic acid. Mr. D. was once in affluent circumstances, but had lost much of his prosperty within the past few years. He was a volunteer in the Mexican war and fought several battles under General Scott. Insanity is spoken of as the cause of his last fatal act.

James Boorman, Esq., for whom the compliment of a service of plate had been intended by the Hudson River Railroad Company, at a cost of $5,000, declines the gift, and proposes, in its stead, that the amount be applied to the vesting of a fund for the relief of such of the employees of the Company as may be disable by accidents in its service, or to the relief of the families of such employees.

There are about 4,500 men now engaged in building the New-Haven and New-London Railroad. This road will make, with the New-York and New-Haven, the Norwich and Worcester, and the Norfolk County Roads, probably as near an Air Line to Boston as we shall have for some years.

A notable feature in the Daguerreotype Exhibition at the Fair of the American Institute is Root's series of illustrations of the popular and touching song of "The Old Arm Chair." There are seven or eight well-executed pictures, marking the chief incidents mentioned in the song.

The infant child of Mrs. Susan Dean, residing at No. 324 Spring-st., New York, was recently found by its mother hanging by the neck and dead. It appears that she had placed it in bed, and while engaged in another room it had rolled off the side of the bed and was caught by its neck between two posts projecting above and attached to a cradle which was standing near.

Advices from Para, to Sept. 28, state that the yellow fever, small-pox, and other diseases, were fearfully mortal at that place, and were carrying off a large number of the inhabitants.

Much interest is manifested in the diplomatic circles at Washington with regard to the expected arrival of a Special Minister from Spain to demand satisfaction for the Cuba outrage.

It is computed that there are between 6,000 and 10,000 Chinamen even now resident on our Pacific coast.

The old tavern on the road between Albany and Troy, and known as the "Bull's Head," has been selected as the site for the New York State Idiot Asylum, of which Dr. Wilbur, of Barre, has been appointed the Superintendent.

A colored lady named Eliza Greenfield is creating quite a sensation in musical circles. She is said to have a very powerful and sweet voice, and is to give a Concert shortly. She is called the "Black Swan."

The farce of digging for treasure at the old French Fort at Oswego, has been revived. A young girl, who is said to have seen the treasure in a mesmeric sleep at Albany, is on the ground to direct operations.

The $40,000 or $50,000 worth of goods seized by the Collector in the store of Mr. Herrick, the stationery importer, have been abandoned to the Government, and will be sold at auction.

A census of the population of Dunkirk has just been taken; the number of inhabitants reached 3,500, while six months since there were not more than 500.

A Cotton Mill, belonging J. Clarke, situated in Smithfield, Rhode Island, was burnt down on Monday night, Oct 13. It had not been in operation in the last three months.

Ten thousand dollars were found in the dead letter office at Washington, during the last quarter.

Rev. Dr. McClintock has been appointed to the Presidency of the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Ct.

A rich mine of lead has lately been discovered on Painter Creek, Clayton County, Iowa.

A Female Institute is to be established by the Presbytery of Minnesota, at the Falls of St. Anthony.

New York Market—October 20, 1851.

Ashes—Pots 4 87; Pearls 5 37.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 4 00 for Canadian, 3 75 a 4 00 for State, Ohio, Michigan, and Indiana, 4 06 a 4 25 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 25 a 3 31. Buckwheat 2 25 a 2 50 per 100 lbs. Corn Meal 3 37 for Jersey.

Grain—Wheat, 82c. for Southern red, 86c. for white Michigan, 90 a 92c. for Genesee. Rye 70½c. Barley 75c. for good two-rowed, 80c. for prime four-rowed. Oats 38 a 39c. for State, 35 a 37c. for Jersey. Corn 56c. for round mixed, 61c. for round yellow.

Provisions—Pork, 13 50 for new prime, 12 25 for new mess. Beef, 4 50 a 5 50 for new prime, 8 50 a 11 00 for new mess. Lard 8½ a 9c. Butter, 8 a 11c. for Ohio, 10 a 15c. for State. Cheese 6 a 6¾c.

Hops—20 a 24c. for Western, 23 a 26c. for Eastern.

Lime—87c. for common, 1 20 for lump.

Lumber—12 50 for spruce, 13 50 for pine. Lath is in demand at 1,75.

Plaster—2 25 in New York, 2 75 up the River.

Seeds—9c. for Clover, 15 00 a 21 00 per tierce for Timothy, 1 25 a 1 28 for 56 lbs. flaxseed.

Tallow—7⅜c. for prime.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the evening after the Sabbath, Oct. 11th, by Eld. C. M. Lewis, Mr. Samuel Champlin, of Westerly, to Miss Martha E. Maxson, of the former place.

DIED,

At the residence of their uncle, Asher M. Babcock, in Westerly, R. I., of typhus fever, on the 13th of October, Rosetta C., aged 23 years, and on the 18th, Maranda M., aged 18 years, daughters of Beriah L. and Clarissa Babcock, of Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y. The former made a public profession of religion during the last winter, at which time she and her sister, who had been for a number of years a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scott, connected themselves with the Pawcatuck Seventh-day Baptist Church in Westerly. In their sickness and death they enjoyed the sustaining power of the Christian hope, and confidingly resigned themselves into the hands of their Saviour, in hope of a blissful immortality. In their death an affectionate father, mother, and sister, have sustained an irreparable loss, in which they share the sympathies of an extensive circle of relatives and friends. A. B. B.

In Westerly, R I., Sept. 14th, of dysentery, Everett Alfred, son of Alfred B. and Lucy C. Burdick, aged 2 years, 1 month, and 11 days.

In Clarkville, N. Y., on the 9th instant, Angeline, wife of R. Leroy Clarke, and daughter of Jeremy and Esther Crandall, formerly of Westerly, R. I., aged 28 years. Mrs. C. had suffered much for several months, with a disease of the heart, liver, and kidneys, accompanied with dropsy, which terminated in inflammation of the lungs. She bore her great sufferings with Christian fortitude, although she was quite anxious to recover, until a short time before her decease, when she expressed entire submission to the will of her Redeemer. Until her fatal disease, she had been favored with excellent health, and a firm constitution; and at the sick-bed of her neighbors, she was ever ready and willing to render efficient aid. Her acts of kindness, her general suavity of manners, and her many virtues, endeared her to her relatives and acquaintances; and such has been the anxiety of her many friends for her recovery, that for some three months past the daily inquiry in our streets has been, "How is Angeline?" But the anxiety of friends and the prescriptions of the best physicians for a dozen miles around were unavailing. H. S C.

In Verona, N. Y., October 10th, of inflammation of the lungs, Sanford Chester, son of John W. and Sophia Greene, aged 10 months and 28 days.

The grass doth wither and decay;
The flower thereof doth fade away;
But in thy word, O God, we'll trust—
So sleep, sweet babe, low in the dust. C. C.

LETTERS.

Charles Potter, C Stilwell, H Whipple, C M Lewis, A B Burdick, C Chester, R W Utter, H B Clarke, H W Stillman, C R Burdick, E B Lewis.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Geo C Lanphear, Westerly, R I	$2 00	to vol. 8	No. 52
B F Burdick "	2 00	8	52
R R Rathbone "	1 00	8	13
Wm Stillman, Jr "	1 00	6	13
Wm Woodmancy, Rockville, R I	2 00	8	52
E B Lewis, Hampton Ct	2 00	8	52
W B Lewis, Mystic Bridge Ct	2 00	8	52
D B Rogers, Plainfield N J	2 00	8	52
Joel Saunders, Adams Center	2 00	8	52
Joseph J Green "	2 00	8	52
Alex Campbell "	2 00	8	52
Benj T Lee "	2 00	8	52
Daniel C Maine "	2 00	7	52
Edward Whitford "	2 00	8	52
Barton Whitford "	2 00	9	6
Erastus Miller, South Otselic	2 00	8	52
Caleb Green, Verona Mills	2 00	8	52
Hiram Sherman, Verona	2 00	8	52
M W Babcock, Little Genesee	2 00	7	26
Squire B Strong, Nile	1 00	9	17
A Steward, New York	2 00	9	17

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 commenced the first Wednesday in September, and continues forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.

Miss RUTH B. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

Receipts for the Missionary Society.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums not previously reported in the Recorder:—

L P Babcock and wife, Homer	$2 00
1st Church at Verona	3 50
B F Chester, Hopkinton, R I	1 00
3d Church at Verona	10 34
Joseph S Rogers, Preston	1 00
Russell Maxson "	1 00
Orlando Holcomb "	75
Elias Burdick "	50
Betsey Crumb, DeRuyter	10 00
Fem Miss organization of 1st ch and soc, Brookfield	6 00
Also 2 bedquilts valued at 10 00, 6 shirts valued at 9 00, 2 shirts valued at 1 00, 2 pair stockings valued at 1 00, 3 pair men's half hoes valued at 87 cts. Total	21 87
Miss Rebecca Platts, Leonardsville	1 00
Ch at DeRuyter to con L H Babcock L M	14 00
Col at Anniversary in Brookfield	68 10
Church at Scott	7 37
Thos Dye, Scott	1 00
Ethan Rogers, Preston	25
John J Maxson "	2 00
E H P Potter, Scott	1 00
J H Cochran, Berlin	28
Wm G Crandall, Lincklaen	50
Eli S Bailey, Brookfield	4 00
Betsey Osgood	1 00
Eunice P Osgood	1 00
Lois Burch	1 00
1st Church in Hopkinton R I	15 00
Clement West, Leonardsville	1 00
Catharine Sisson "	50
Ch at Berlin for publishing tracts in Shanghae	17 92
Clarksville Fem Sewing Soc, for foreign missions, a bedquilt valued at 4 00; 7 pair hose at 31¼c., 2 18; cash, 8 75. Total	14 93
2d Church in Brookfield	4 00

A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

Daguerrean Gallery.

GURNEY'S Daguerrean Gallery, No. 189 Broadway, has been known for years as one of the first establishments of the kind in the United States, and the oldest in the city of New York. He has recently greatly enlarged his Gallery by the addition of more rooms and large skylights, and other improvements, rendering it one of the most extensive establishments in this country. Mr. G. attends personally to his sitters, and from his great experience in the art he is enabled, at all times, to give perfect satisfaction. The large-sized pictures recently taken by his new process are universally acknowledged superior to any heretofore taken in this country. A large collection can be seen at all hours of the day. Ladies and gentlemen are respectfully invited to examine them.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

New York Weekly Times.

A very Large Newspaper for the Country.

EDITED BY HENRY J. RAYMOND.

Price $2 a year; 10 Copies for $15; 20 Copies $20.

On SATURDAY, September 27, the subscribers issued the first number of a NEW WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, in the city of New York, called the NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES, printed upon a very large quarto sheet of eight pages and FORTY-EIGHT COLUMNS, in close, clear type, and in the handsomest possible style.

The NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES will be printed on THURSDAY of each week, and will present THE NEWS OF THE DAY, in all departments and from all quarters; CORRESPONDENCE from all parts of Europe, from California, Mexico, and South America, and from all sections of the United States, written expressly for The Times by intelligent gentlemen permanently enlisted in its support. FULL REPORTS of Congressional and Legislative Proceedings; of Public Meetings, Political and Religious; Transactions of Agricultural, Scientific, and Mechanical Associations; and generally of whatever may have interest or importance for any considerable portion of the community: LITERARY REVIEWS AND INTELLIGENCE, prepared by competent persons, and giving a clear, impartial, and satisfactory view of the Current Literature of the day: CRITICISMS of Music, the Drama, Painting, and of whatever in any department of Art may merit or engage attention: and EDITORIAL ARTICLES upon everything of interest or importance that may occur in any department—Political, Social, Religious, Literary, Scientific or Personal, written with all the ability, care and knowledge which the abundant means at the disposal of the subscribers will enable them to command.

THE WEEKLY TIMES will be under the Editorial management and control of HENRY J. RAYMOND; and while it will maintain firmly and zealously those principles which he may deem essential to the public good, and which are held by the great Whig party of the United States more nearly than by any other political organization, its columns will be free from bigoted devotion to narrow interests, and will be open within necessary limitations, to communications upon every subject of public importance.

In its Political and Social discussion, The Times will seek to be Conservative, in such a way as shall best promote needful Reform. It will endeavor to perpetuate the good, and to avoid the evil, which the past has developed. While it will strive to check all rash innovation, and to defeat all schemes for destroying established and beneficent institutions, its best sympathies and co-operation will be given to every just effort to reform society, to infuse higher elements of well-being into our political and social organizations, and to improve the condition and the character of our fellow-men. Its main reliance for all improvement, personal, social, and political, will be upon Christianity and Republicanism—it will seek, therefore, at all times, the advancement of the one and the preservation of the other. It will inculcate devotion to the Union and the Constitution, obedience to Law, and a jealous love of that personal and civil Liberty which constitutions and laws are made to preserve. While it will assert and exercise the right freely to discuss every subject of public interest, it will not countenance any improper interference, on the part of the people of one locality, with the institutions or even the prejudices of any other. It will seek to allay, rather than excite agitation:—to extend industry, temperance, and virtue:—to encourage and advance Education:—to promote economy, concord and justice in every section of our country:—to elevate and enlighten public sentiment: and to substitute reason for prejudice, a cool and intelligent judgment for passion, in all public action and in all discussions of public affairs.

The subscribers intend to make The Times at once the best and the cheapest Weekly Family Newspaper in the United States. They have abundant means at their command, and are disposed to use them for the attainment of that end. The degree of success which may attend their efforts, will be left to the public judgment.

VOLUNTARY CORRESPONDENCE, communicating news, is respectfully solicited from all parts of the world. THE WEEKLY TIMES will be mailed to subscribers at the following rates:

Single Copies	$2.
Ten copies to one address	$15.
Twenty copies to one address	$20.

THE NEW YORK DAILY TIMES

Will be published at the same office EVERY MORNING and EVENING, and will be sent to subscribers in any part of the United States, at the low price of FOUR DOLLARS a year. All payments for subscription or advertising must be made in advance; and postage on all letters must be prepaid. Communications for the editorial department must be addressed to HENRY J. RAYMOND, Editor of The New York Times; letters upon business or inclosing money, to RAYMOND, JONES & CO., Publishers.

Subscriptions and Advertisements left at the office, No. 118 Nassau st. or sent by mail, are respectfully solicited. RAYMOND, JONES & CO.

New York, October, 1851. o9t4.

Miscellaneous.

The Inhabitants of Lima and their Customs.

There are few places the inhabitants of which present so great a diversity of complexion and physiognomy as Lima. There is every gradation and intermixture of race, from the fair Creoles of unmixed European descent, who pride themselves upon the purity of their Spanish blood, to the jet black negro of Congo, whose unmitigated ebony hue bears testimony equally unequivocal to his pure African lineage. Between these two extremes is an almost innumerable variety of mixed races, each having its own peculiar designation, indicating the precise proportion of European, Indian, and negro blood in their veins, each marked with its own peculiar physical, intellectual, and moral characteristics; and each finding its chief boast in the nearness of its relation to the white race, and looking down with contempt upon those a shade darker than its own.

In 1836, when the population of the city was a little more than 54,000, it was composed of about the following proportion of the different races: White Creoles, all of European, and mostly of Spanish descent, 20,000; Negroes, 10,000, of whom a little less than one half were slaves; Indians, 5,000; mixed races, 19,000; these are of every shade of complexion from the Mestizo, the child of a white father and an Indian mother, whom only a keen and practiced eye can distinguish from a white, and to whom no higher compliment can be paid than to inquire whether he is not a Spaniard, to the Zambo, who can only show claim to a portion of white blood, on the ground that to all the vices of the negro race, he adds others peculiar to the Whites.

The white Creoles are of slender figure, and of middling hight, with features strongly marked, fair complexion, and black hair. Like the descendants of the Spanish race throughout the Western World, they have degenerated from the parent stock. The males have, even in youth, a look of premature age; as though the powers of nature were exhausted, and insufficient to develop a vigorous manhood. Indolence is their predominant characteristic. They are utterly indisposed to any continuous exertion, whether of body or of mind. If poverty compels them to pursue an occupation for a livelihood, they generally select some petty traffic, in which, if the bargains are small, there is ample leisure to gossip, and smoke their perpetual cigars. Those who are able, abandon themselves to idleness, lounging about the streets or in the shops, or at the coffee-houses, or the gaming-table. The education of the Creole of Lima is very defective; the system of instruction pursued does little to develop his powers, and his innate indolence presents an insuperable bar to any efforts of self-cultivation. Riding is a universal custom, and almost every person keeps one or more horses; these are trained by the chalanes or professional horse-breakers to perform feats of every kind; one to which great importance is attached, is to turn around upon his hindlegs rapidly, when in full gallop. Tschudi, a recent German traveler, relates an instance which came under his own observation, which shows the certainty and dexterity with which the feat is performed. A friend of his rode full gallop up to the city wall, which at the spot is about nine feet broad, and made him describe a segment of a circle with his fore feet beyond the edge of the wall, while standing balanced upon his hind feet. The feat was performed a number of times in rapid succession.

The riding costume of a Peruvian cavalier is extremely picturesque and convenient. Its most striking feature is the poncho. This is a large fringed shawl, with an opening in the center, through which the head of the wearer passes; it then hangs gracefully over the shoulder, and falls nearly to the knee, leaving the hands and arms less embarrassed than any other species of cloak. These ponchos frequently display great brilliancy and variety; the color is often a snowy white; sometimes it is richly and fancifully embroidered; but the prevailing taste is for broad stripes of brilliant colors, such as orange, scarlet, blue, green, rose-color, or a combination of all hues intermingled and diversified in every conceivable manner. The spurs used by the Peruvians are of enormous magnitude; old custom ordains that they should contain a pound and a half of silver; the rowels sometimes stand out four or five inches from the heel, with spikes of one or two inches in length, or even more. A broad-brimmed sombrero of fine Gnayaquil grass is usually worn by equestrians. The trappings of the horses are often of the most costly description. Head-gear, bridle, and crupper are sometimes seen formed of finely-wrought silver rings linked into each other. The stirrups are massy blocks of wood of a triangular shape, quaintly carved, and ornamented with silver. The saddle is frequently adorned with rich embroidery in gold, and the holster inlaid with the same precious metal.

A cigar is the almost unvarying accompaniment of a Peruvian of any class. Basil Hall relates an odd expedient made use of to reconcile the free-and-easy habit of smoking in public places, with the stately requirements of Spanish etiquette of olden time, in the presence of the representatives of royalty. In the days when Peru was a Spanish colony, the vice-regal box at the theatre projected out somewhat into the pit, in full view of the Commonalty of the City of the Kings. As soon as the curtains fell between the acts of the piece, the viceroy was in the habit of retiring from the front to the rear of the box. No sooner was his back turned than, by a very convenient figure of thought, he was considered to be constructively absent. Every man in the pit would then draw forth his flint and steel (this was long before the days of Lucifers and loco-focos,) light his cigar, and "improve" the time by puffing away at the fragrant weed. At the tinkling of the bell which announced the rising of the curtain, the representative of royalty returned to the front of the box, his constructive absence was ended, and every smoker paused in mid-puff.

Nothing indicates the decadence of a race more unerringly and decisively than the progressive change which comes over its tastes in its mode of amusement. Indolence and brutality go together. Displays of skill and courage cease to afford excitement to the jaded sensibilities; the stronger stimulus of suffering must be supplied. Thus, as the Roman race declined, the shows of the arena grew more and more brutal. Cock-fights and bull-fights are the favorite amusements of the Limanians. A fondness for the latter is characteristic of the Spanish race every where; but in Peru the chief attraction is not the dexterity and courage of the performers, but the agony of the victims. Bull-fights in Spain may almost be characterized as human exhibitions compared with those of Lima. At one witnessed by Hall in 1821, the matador, who should have given the death-stroke to an animal of extraordinary strength and courage, missed the mortal spot, and merely buried his sword in the body of the bull; in an instant he was tossed, apparently dead, into the air, by the maddened beast, which turned upon a horseman, whom he dismounted, goring the horse so that his bowels hung upon the ground. All this threw spectators into an agoney of delight; which was still further enhanced when the sinews of the bull, having been cut from behind by a crescent-shaped instrument fixed to a long pole, the poor beast dragged himself around the arena upon his mutilated stumps. But their ecstacy amounted to frenzy when a man mounted upon the back of the bull and spurred him around the arena with strokes of a dagger, until he fell exhausted by loss of blood.

Oregon.

From the Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Aug. 10, 1851.

MESSRS. EDITORS:— Perhaps a few lines from a former subscriber and resident of Wisconsin may not be unacceptable to your readers.

The first question that I would probably be asked would be, Do you like Oregon better than Wisconsin? This would be a difficult question for me to answer, prejudiced as I am in favor of the latter. It is hard to compare two regions of country so totally different in almost every respect. But, if I were asked in which country a farmer or mechanic could live the easiest and make the most money, I should, without hesitation, say Oregon.

From what I had heard at home, I expected to find a country of unsurpassed fertility. In this respect I can assure your readers they would be disappointed. I do not think that any portion of America could compare with Wisconsin and Illinois in that respect; but we have here other advantages that far overbalance that. This is undeniably proved by the wonderful prosperity of the farmers generally, and indeed of all classes of men who are commonly industrious.

The great advantage the Oregon farmer has is the long Summer and the short and mild Winter. In Wisconsin the farmer is busy nearly the whole summer in preparing for the long and severe cold season. Here the cold season is so mild and short that but little such preparation is necessary. In the Upper Willamette Valley the grass continues green the whole year round. It is of a remarkably fattening quality. This makes Oregon the greatest stock-raising country in the world; and, with the whole Pacific coast for a market, it is incomparable. Oregon Butter and Cheese have already a name which they well deserves.

In regard to grain-growing, I will mention one fact that will sound strange to Wisconsin farmers. At the time when the gold was first discovered, farms, stores and work-shops were nearly deserted; all rushed for the mines. The dry summer weather at length coming on, and water becoming too scarce, they returned home to harvest the crops of wheat that were sown the preceding season. Of course they would not plow and sow again, as they knew they could return to the rich diggings with the commencement of the rains. The wet season came on, and to the mines they went, returning home as before in the summer. They then found, as before, a fair crop ready for the harvest, growing from the waste of the year before, without one stroke of labor having been applied. This was repeated last season, making three crops from the same ground with but one planting. This, I can assure your readers, is the fact, and shows how little labor is required in Oregon for the sustenance of life.

A variety of soil and timber is offered to the choice of the emigrant; those that prefer the woodland can have it to their heart's content. I see from my desk, at this moment, thousands of straight, tall pines and firs full 200 feet high, with scarcely a branch.

To me the openings and prairies are the most inviting. Many of the prairies contain but a few hundred acres, and are entirely surrounded by the forest; others are much larger, but always interspersed with groves of trees and water-courses. In fact, I look upon them as a perfect farmers' paradise. Above all their other advantages, I look upon their perfect healthfulness as the greatest of all.

JNO. M. BRECK.

The Great Exhibition.

On Saturday last, (says the N. Y. Tribune of Oct. 15,) the Grand Exposition of the World's Industry—the first ever attempted—was closed to the public, and this day the Premiums awarded to Exhibitors will be officially proclaimed, and the Exhibition therewith brought to an end. We presume the repacking and removal of the articles exhibited will commence to-morrow, as the Russian Government is anxious to secure the return of its quota before the Baltic shall have frozen up, and the Turkish and several other Governments, it is known, are subjected to a heavy expense so long as the officers who accompanied and the vessels which conveyed their fabrics are absent. But for this consideration, we presume the Crystal Palace would have been kept open at least a month longer, for the public interest in its contents seems to have experienced no abatement, but rather increased as the day of closing drew nigh. Probably three weeks at farthest will see that unprecedented, unequaled collection of the elements of Production and the marvels of Nature and Art—the total value of which is estimated by competent judges at Five Hundred Millions of Dollars—dispersed and on its way to every quarter of the earth. When shall we look upon its like again?

The Crystal Palace itself, we are confident, will not be destroyed. It is a miracle of capaciousness, economy, strength and grace, and a greater triumph of Art and Genius than any thing it contains. It may be driven out of Hyde Park by local hostility and a desire to restore that magnificent drive and promenade-ground to its original proportions; but if it be, it can scarcely fail to be reërected elsewhere. Such a trophy of the might of Intellect, the world cannot willingly let die.

The Premiums awarded at this Exhibition are all Bronze Medals, of admirable design and workmanship, calculated to perpetuate the memory of the Exhibition and the merit of the successful exhibitors through ages. They are of two kinds—the Jury Medals, awarded by the several Juries to the articles of decided merit exhibited in their respective classes; and the Council Medals, awarded by the Council of Presidents of the several Juries, on the recommendation of those Juries respectively to their several sections, by these to the Council of Presidents, and there approved and ratified. It was intended that this Medal should be given only for Original Inventions or Discoveries of decided utility and merit; but the grounds on which it is conferred have been practically and considerably widened in the course of the investigations and awards. One hundred and sixty-nine only of these 'Council Medals' have been awarded in all—distributed among the several Nations represented in the Exposition as follows:—

To Great Britain,	79	To France,	56
To Germany,	12	To United States,	5
To Austria,	4	To Russia,	3
To Belgium,	2	To Switzerland,	2
To Tuscany,	2	To Holland,	1
To Spain,	1	To Rome,	1
To Turkey,	1;

Total, 169; but one is given for the same article exhibited in both Great Britain and France; so that the actual number issued will be but 168. The five obtained by citizens of the United States are awarded as follows:—

To C. H. McCORMICK, Chicago, Illinois, for his Virginia Reaper.

To DAVID DICK, Meadville, Western Penn., for his Anti-Friction Press.

To CHAS. GOODYEAR, New-Haven, Conn., for his India Rubber Fabrics.

To W. BOND & SON, Boston, Mass., for an Electric Clock.

To GAEL BORDEN, Texas, for his Meat-Biscuit.

Of the Jury Medals, which are awarded by the several Juries, subject to the revision only of the Section or Group of Juries having kindred Classes or Departments, and which are intended to indicate and reward decided merit of whatever kind, we think about Two Thousand are awarded, of which probably One Hundred fall to the share of citizens of the United States.

Kossuth and his Friends.

The following sketch of Kossuth and his friends is given by Walter Gould, in the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser. It can not fail to be interesting now, when the subjects of it are daily expected to reach our shores:—

The next morning after my arrival, the Bey sent me his own interpreter, who said he was ordered to conduct me wherever I pleased to go, and to attend me whenever I should want him to do so. I called first upon Gen. Pertzel, then upon Count Bathiany, Gen. Wysowski (the Pole,) and lastly upon Kossuth himself. I was received very kindly by all of them; by Kossuth, very warmly. He expressed great pleasure at seeing a citizen of America, the only country which had shown any real sympathy for Hungary, and to which the civilized nations of the world looked for example and support in their struggles for independence; the country whose institutions were the freest and best adapted to a free people of any that had been founded within the history of man. I was astonished to find him so familiar with our constitution, laws, and general habits. He has read a great deal upon America, and has evidently thought more. He is versed in our politics, knows all parties, their principles, their leaders, and, in short, understands the genius of the people, perhaps better than any other European living. He seldom mentions America without expressing his gratitude for the interest she has shown for himself, his followers, and above all, for their glorious cause. He last evening sketched me a rough draught of the situation of the Hungarian, Russian and Austrian forces, and of his plan of operations, at the time of the traitor Georgey's surrender. Of course, I am ignorant of military affairs, but his explanations were so clear, and his plans so well laid and matured, that as far as my poor understanding allowed me to judge, they seemed certain to ensure success, not only in driving the Austrian and Russian from Hungary, but in giving freedom to Poland, in securing the independence of Itlay, in crushing the power of the House of Hapsburg, and in giving liberty to the Austrian people. All these brilliant hopes were blasted by the treachery of one man—the man whose fortunes he had made, who repaid his kindness with treachery to his benefactor and his country.

I have been Kossuth's guest for nearly three weeks, have seen much of him during that time, and have had a great deal of conversation with him. I have grown so fond of hearing him talk that the conversation of other men seems almost insipid. He seems to have read and thought a great deal on almost every subject, and yet betrays no pretensions to knowledge. There is more simplicity, frankness, honest, manly bearing and energy in Kossuth, than in any other man I have met. I do not believe he harbors one ambitious thought beyond the deliverance of his native land. "God knows my heart," said he, upon one occasion, "and let Him judge the purity of my intentions. If there be another man ready to act faithfully the part which my country has called upon me to act, let him, in God's name, take my place, and that he may prosper in the good work will be my daily prayer. Let me but once see my country like your own, free, as God intended it should be, and I will willingly give up my poor life—aye, even sacrifice it, if necessary, to attain her independence.'

Kossuth's first political act was an attempt to free the Hungarian press. For this he was imprisoned three years, nearly half of which was passed without a book, pen or paper to relieve his solitude. His kind gaolers then told him he might have one book, but only one. He asked for Shakspeare, and then begged as a great favor that they would include a dictionary. They complied, and he set to work upon the first page of the great poet, and did not leave it for a second, until he perfectly understood every word, and so with the next, and so with the next, until he became fully acquainted with the language. He speaks English with ease, but with a defective pronunciation—always eloquently. In stature, the Governor-President, as his followers still call him, and as he still signs himself—(and if all I hear be true, he is more than ever so, for they say his word, even from here, in the interior of Asia Minor, is law at home.) In stature he is about the medium height. His head is large and massive, and his melancholy face lit up by an expressive, full, quick eye. He wears a large beard and thick moustache, neither of which, however, can hide the energy and firmness expressed in his mouth and chin.

A proposition was made me, this morning, to paint the governor and his suite, the heads grouped around their chief. The suite wish it as a present to Kossuth. It is probable I may lengthen my stay to do it for them. They are all tried friends of his, numbering in all thirteen, and every man of them ready and willing to follow him to the end of the earth. One of them, Ladislas Berzenczy, who was formerly a member of the Diet, has studied English since he came here, with an especial view to a residence in America, and now keeps a school, where English is taught to the scarred and weather-beaten, defeated but yet hopeful exiles. It was very amusing to see these faithful servants of their country, conning their books every morning like so many children at an infant school. They have all occupied themselves with some study or pursuit during the two years of their detention. Some of them draw very well; others, at least one of them, has a great mechanical tact, and is therefore an artificer in general to the rest; while some of them, having a botanical, or floral "turn," have laid out and planted a garden, in which fruits, flowers and vegetables, walks, sun-dials, ten-pin alley, arbors, &c., are attended to with daily care. There the Governor and his family, and immediate friends, spend an hour or two before dark, and chat away upon their prospects of release, until the cool night wind warns them to return to their prison home.

Folly and its Fatal Consequence.

An occurrence, which recently transpired at one of our most popular Female Seminaries, affords another and powerful warning to those who are in the habit of indulging in the thoughtless practice of attempting to frighten others. Two of the young ladies in the institution to which we have referred, were engaged a few days since, in their own room, conversing upon the science of Anatomy, in the course of which one of them proceeded to relate some experience she had formerly acquired in a dissecting room. Just as the conversation reached this point, the door of the room opened and another of the young ladies entered with slow and solemn tread, having a white sheet wrapped about her form, and her face powdered to perfect whiteness, her jet-black hair, eyes and brows, presenting a contrast which gave a startling lividness to her ghost-like countenance. The lady who was relating her experience, as already stated, is said to be mentally superior to any of her classmates, and noted for her strength of mind and freedom from nervousness and absurd sensibility. So sudden, however, was the approach of the figure, just at a moment when her mind was least prepared for anything associated with thoughts of the dead, that upon beholding the apparition she fell senseless to the floor, and awoke to the scenes around her only to show her anxious attendants that reason had fled its throne and left sad tokens of the mental wreck. Everything that professional skill could suggest for the relief of the sufferer was tried, but during forty-eight hours a few flitting moments of intelligence was all that offered hope to her afflicted friends. At those times she spoke of familiar names, recalling them by strong mental effort, which seemed to exhaust her shattered powers; and her reason again wandering, she exclaimed, "But I can't see it again! don't let me see it! it is too horrible!' and hours elapsed before the return of a lucid interval, and the heart-rending recurrence of the paroxysm. The young lady, whose thoughtlessness led to such terrible mischief, is spoken of as a most amiable girl, and one of the warmest friends of the sufferer. Her distress and despair at the consequences of her playful folly, can be better imagined than described. It seems to have been supposed that no device of the kind could be effectual in frightening the lady whose mournful condition we have related. The sad consequences of the error in this case, present a warning to the thoughtless which should not pass unheeded. At last accounts no change was discoverable in the distressing symptoms of the unfortunate and there is little encouragement to hope that reason will ever resume its seat.

[N. Y

Ruins of Carthage.

Stepping out of the walled enclosure, the eye ranged over the whole extent of Carthage. The plain, the shores of the inland lake communicating with the sea, and probably the original harbor, everywhere bear traces of the site of buildings; deep and dangerous vaults yawn beneath the feet of the unwary traveler, and fragments of walls and columns are embedded in a luxuriant growth of wild flowers. Our afternoon was wearing away as we descended to the borders of the sea. The beach of Carthage! It is one of those places that, like the Colosseum of Rome, or the ruins of Thebes, tower up in the memory of a traveler above a host of inferior spectacles. Here, however, it is not the monumental grandeur, but the utter desolation of what was once so great and renowned, that powerfully affects the mind. For more than two miles we follow the shore, everywhere lined with the continuous ruins of the buildings of the city, huge blocks of which, of a sort of conglomerate formed by the mixture of mortar and pebbles, are strewed upon the soil, intermingled with reefs of rocks, and marble columns, and fragments half embedded in the sand; while over what seem to be the traces of piers, as well as the foundation walls of buildings, the waves broke grandly, sometimes covering us with spray as we climbed over some jutting fragment; while their melancholy monotony kept up an incessant requiem over this scene of fallen magnificence. [Bartlett.

Tea on the Himalays.

There is a district in the East Indies called Kemaon, situated among the Himalays, northwest of Nepaul, some hundreds of miles from Assam. It is a portion of the province of Delhi, and extends to the country lately owned by the Sikhs.

Since 1842, Tea Nurseries have been planted and extended in this region, and the plant has thriven wonderfully, the proceeds being regarded as of the finest quality of black tea.

After various experiments, it was found that the plants first imported were not of a character hardy enough for these hights in such a latitude, and a Mr. Fortune was engaged to go to the north-western regions of China and procure plants more likely to thrive. He succeeded, and returned with 12,000 living plants, an endless variety of seeds in a germinating state, and eight tea manufacturers. So that the Himalayan valleys and slops are likely to become tea gardens on a gigantic scale. Some samples of the produce were sent to the Exhibition at London, and the Company hope to offer it in the market soon at the usual prices of good Chinese Teas. [N. Y. Tribune.

Great Salt Lake City.

A letter from Salt Lake City, dated Aug. 5, says: The organization of this Territory is progressing. There are seven counties and one precinct laid out in the Territory, consisting of Great Salt Lake, Davis, Weber, Toole, Utah, San Pete, Iron, and Bridge precinct. There are numerous buildings in course of completion. The Council-House is receiving a coat of plaster Paris; shortly the Temple will be commenced, and the intention is to build a most magnificent and costly building, one that in style of architecture will much surpass the proud Nauvoo Temple, and be a wonder to after ages. It is in contemplation to build a railroad to Iron Mountain, Iron County, about 250 miles, where there is an abunbance of iron ore. Coal (bituminous) also abounds within 60 miles of the city. A railroad will be built to bring that necessary article of fuel to the citizens. Chalk, Plaster Paris, Quick Silver, &c., are plenty near here. Mountains of salt are within 25 miles. A railroad will soon be constructed to the Canons for the purpose of furnishing wood for the consumption of the citizens. The election for State legislators took place on the 5th of August. Settlements are about to be made at Yoab and Paroan Valleys. The emigration to these valleys will be large. The crops are extremely good; the yield of wheat to the acre is unparalleled—as high as one hundred bushels have been raised to the acre; about seventy is the average. Corn grows well, but is not as profitable to raise. The vegetables raised are the finest ever seen; root vegetables remain in the ground all winter without injury. What few fruit trees there are, are doing well. The timber is composed of Balsam, Fir, Pine, Quaking Asp, Cotton Wood, Maple and Box Elder; Lumber is $50 per thousand; Wood $10 per cord; Flour 15 cents per lb.; Sugar and Coffee 40 cents, wholesale or retail; goods of all kinds plenty, but money very scarce. Many miners are expected in from California this Fall. Col. Ben. Holliday leaves here in a few days for that State with 800 head of beef cattle and 100 mules. This is the best grazing country to be seen; the valleys abound in good grass and clover.

DANGEROUS EXPERIMENT.—A boy in Brooklyn, named Caligan, aged about 13 years, all but succeeded in putting an end to his existence recently, under the following strange circumstances: He had, it seems, greedily devoured all the intelligence in the newspapers, giving circumstantial accounts of the late execution of Stookey in the Tombs, the reading of which produced a morbid feeling in the child's imagination, which led him to make an experiment in hanging himself. Accordingly, on Thursday evening, he procured a rope, which he fastened to a beam in the wood-shed, got upon an inverted tub, made a noose, which he fastened round his neck, and after having thus completed all his gloomy preparations, he kicked away the tub—and would certainly have "kicked the bucket" also, but that his position was fortunately discovered in time to save his life. When cut down, his face was considerably discolored, his tongue protruded far out of his mouth, and life was nearly extinct. Proper remedies were immediately applied, and it is probable he may survive his dangerous experiment.

NOW AND THEN.—The opening of the Hudson River Railroad, and the transit from New-York to Albany in the short space of four hours, present a new era in the annals of travel. The steamboats have reigned supreme over the noble waters of the Hudson for forty-four years. It was on September 28, 1807, that Fulton's boat first undertook the arduous task of statedly ascending the river to the capital, for the transmission of passengers. The following advertisement is from a stray copy of "The American Citizen," a weekly paper, published in New-York, and dated October 5, 1807.

THE STEAMBOAT, being thoroughly repaired and arranged for passengers, with a private dressing room for ladies, it is intended to run her as a packet between New-York and Albany, for the remainder of the season. She will leave New-York exactly at 9 o'clock in the morning of the following days, and always perform her voyage in from 30 to 36 hours.

Monday	Sept. 28	Monday	Oct. 12
Friday	Oct. 2	Friday	Oct. 16
Wednesday	Oct. 7

The charge to each passenger is as follows:

	Dollars.	Time.
To Newburgh	$3	14 hours.
To Poughkeesie	4	17 hours.
To Esopus	4½	20 hours.
To Hudson	5	30 hours.
To Albany	7	36 hours.

For places apply to Mr. VANDERFOORT, No. 48 Cortland-street, at the corner of Greenwich-street.

ANOTHER MURDER BY A BOY.—A short time ago, a negro, belonging to Mrs. Mordecai, in Henrico County, was killed by a white boy named Bridgewater. As we have been informed, the facts are somewhat these: It seems that Bridgewater, in company with his cousin, was out a gunning, and passed through a corn field where the murdered negro and another were at work. Some difficulty had previously occurred between them, and was again renewed. According to the testimony of the surviving negro, no violence was offered to Bridgewater; but he becoming incensed at some language used, deliberately raised his gun and lodged its contents in the left side of his victim. The gun was charged with small shot, 155 of which entered his body, several passing through his heart. His left arm was completely shattered. He died in a few hours. Bridgewater was about 14 years of age, and resided in the neighborhood. We have not heard whether he has yet been arrested.

THE JEWEL OF MASSACHUSETTS.—Mr. Winthrop, in an address delivered, recently, at an agricultural dinner at Northampton, thus happily alluded to the Common Schools of Massachusetts:—

"Other nations may boast of their magnificent gems and monster diamonds. Our Kohinoor is our Common School system. This is our 'Mountain of Light,' not snatched, indeed, as a prize from a barbarous foe—not designed only to deck a royal brow, or to irradiate a Crystal Palace; but whose pure and penetrating ray illumines every brow, and enlightens every mind, and cheers every heart and every hearthstone in the land,—and which supplies, from its exhaustless mines, ornaments of grace unto the head and chains upon the neck of every son and daughter of Massachusetts."

There are more landholders in the State of Massachusetts alone than in all England and Ireland together.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J. W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First commences Aug. 27 and closes Dec. 2.
" Second " Dec. 3 " " March 16.
" Third " March 17 " " June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting,	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

BOARD, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. CLARKE, Sec. } of Trustees.

DERUYTER, July 18, 1851.

Election Notice.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, }
Albany, August 27, 1851. }

TO the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: SIR,—Notice is hereby given that at the General Election, to be held in this State, on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Samuel A. Foot.

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan.

A Comptroller, in the place of Philo C. Fuller.

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt.

An Attorney-General, in the place of Levi S. Chatfield.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Hezekiah C. Seymour.

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Charles Cook.

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Alexander H. Wells.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court, for the First Judicial District, in the place of James G. King, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Senator for the IIId, IVth, Vth, and VIth Senate Districts, in the place of Richard S. Williams, Clarkson Crolius, James W. Beekman, and Edwin D. Morgan, whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

County officers to be elected for said County:

Sixteen Members of Assembly.

A Register, in the place of Cornelius V. Anderson.

A Recorder, in the place of Frederick A. Tallmadge.

Two Judges of the Superior Court, in the place of Thomas J. Oakley and John L. Mason.

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Daniel P. Ingraham.

A Surrogate, in the place of Alexander W. Bradford.

A Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, in the place of Jacob L. Dodge.

Two Governors of the Alms-House, in the place of Simeon Draper and Francis R. Tillou.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, there is to be elected a Justice for each of the six Judicial Districts, into which the City of New York is districted, pursuant to Chapter 514, Laws of 1851.

Yours respectfully,
CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, August 28, 1851.—I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of the notice of the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, received this day, from the Hon. Christopher Morgan, Secretary of State.

THOMAS CARNLEY,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

N. B.—All the public newspapers within this County will please publish this notice once in each week, until the Election, and send in their bills for advertising the same as soon as the Election is over; so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors and passed for payment.

Sept. 4.

People's Line of New York and Albany Steamers

THE steamers ISAAC NEWTON, Capt. Wm. H. Peck, and HENDRIK HUDSON, Capt. A. P. St. John, forming the People's Line between New York and Albany, leaving foot of Cortland-st., New York, every evening at 6 o'clock, and Albany evening on the arrival of the Express Train from Buffalo.

The steamer NEW WORLD, Capt. Acker, leaves foot of Chambers-st., New York, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning, at 7 o'clock, and Albany on alternate days.

For passage or freight apply on board, or to A. P. Schultz at the office foot of Cortland-st.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville..Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
[illegible] Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed, till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to
GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

W B Gillett

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 20.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 30, 1851.

WHOLE NO. 384.

The Sabbath Recorder.

"UNIVERSAL RESTORATION" NOT FOUNDED ON THE BIBLE.

A Letter of Admonition from the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Scott, N. Y., to one of its Members.

(Published by request of the Church.)

DEAR BROTHER,—Well do we remember the time when you, in anguish of soul under the consciousness of being a sinner, gave yourself up as a disciple and servant of Christ, and by a public consecration of yourself to God, in compliance with the ordinances of His house, became one of the members of Christ's militant church. That was a season long to be remembered with delight by God's people here, and doubtless also in the annals of eternity, when you, with many others, were induced to "remember your Creator in the days of your youth." And it has been a source of gratification to us, also, that in the maturity of manhood, you have shown an abiding interest in the cause of religion, and a commendable disposition to bear your share of the duties, burdens, and responsibilities of the church of God. Notwithstanding all that we can look upon with pleasure, it has become our painful duty to admonish you for the adoption of a sentiment of a dangerous tendency, and, as we understand it, opposed to the plain teachings of God's Holy Word, viz. the doctrine of the "final restoration of all the wicked to the favor of God." Previous, however, to our entering into any expostulation with you, we would refer you to that "sure word of prophecy," which we have mutually pledged to each other shall be our rule of faith, for the reasons why you ought to abandon a sentiment which we believe to be erroneous.

We would remark, in the first place, that this life is our probationary state. In other words, we are put to the proof, in this life, of our fitness for the life to come; and that fitness is proved by our conduct in this life. Thus the parable of the tares and the wheat, and the destination of each in the harvest, and the parable of the ten virgins, show that our condition in the world to come is determined by the improvement we make of this. The prophet Jeremiah (8: 20) uses the metaphor of the seasons to the same end—"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." And it is said plainly, in Eccl. 9: 10, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest.

Second—The promise of LIFE to the righteous is, as you believe, and as we believe, their final state. So, on the other hand, we maintain, that the threatening of DEATH to the wicked is their final state; and if final, then there is no other state to follow it. This is abundantly proved, as we think, by scripture testimony and logical reasoning. We will now refer you to a few passages which exhibit the final state of men.

Ps. 17: 15—"As for me, I shall behold thy face in rightousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."

Dan. 12: 2, 3—"Many of those who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt; and those who are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and those who turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

Matt. 3: 12—"And will gather his wheat into his garner, but will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

Matt. 7: 13, 14—"Wide is the gate, and broad the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat, because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Matt. 8: 11, 12—"Many shall come from the east and from the west, and will sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom, but the sons of the kingdom will be cast into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Matt. 13: 30—"Gather the tares and bind them in bundles and burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn."

Matt. 25: 34, 41—"Come, ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you. . . . Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire . . . And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

We might multiply like quotations indefinitely, but we deem the above sufficient, with your familiarity with those of like character. The object of these quotations is to show what we deem the state of existence in the coming world. For the righteous, it is LIFE, without end, and consequently their final state. On the other hand, the state of the wicked, in the texts quoted, is the last state mentioned of them, and that is DEATH. A few texts to that point we will quote.

Rom. 6: 24—"The wages of sin is DEATH, but the gift of God is eternal LIFE through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Ezek. 18: 20—"The soul that sinneth, it shall DIE."

James 5: 20—"Let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from DEATH."

Rom. 1: 32—"Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of DEATH."

Ezek. 18: 32—"For I have no pleasure in the DEATH of him who dieth, saith the Lord Jehovah; wherefore, turn yourselves, and live."

James 1: 15—"And sin, being perfected, bringeth forth DEATH."

1 John 5: 16—"There is a sin unto DEATH."

Rev. 20: 6—"On such the second DEATH hath no power;" that is, on such as have a part in the first resurrection.

We would here remark, that death is the termination of all our projects, our works, and our hopes, in this world. And by the above quotations we are taught, that there is a sceond death. We are not told that this is a figure, but plainly told that it is death. But in the question between you and us, it matters little whether it be death in the literal or figurative sense; either way would make the death spoken of in the world to come the termination of all our calculations and hopes of future happiness, as real and as sure as the death we experience here, or else there is no analogy between the death there and here, and that would entirely destroy its figurative import. And we are farther taught, that this death is DESTRUCTION. We will give a few quotations on that point.

Matt. 10: 28—"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him which is able to DESTROY both soul and body in hell."

Rom. 9: 22—"Endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to DESTRUCTION."

Ps. 92: 7—"When all the workers of iniquity flourish, it is that they may be DESTROYED forever."

1 Cor. 3: 17—"If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God DESTROY."

Ps. 73: 17, 18—"I went into the sanctuary of God: then understood I their end; surely, thou didst set them on slippery places; thou castedst them down to DESTRUCTION."

Rev. 11: 18—"And thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward to thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to those who fear thy name, small and great, and shouldst DESTROY those who destroy the earth."

Matt. 7: 13—"Enter ye in at the strait gate, for broad is the way that leadeth to DESTRUCTION."

Prov. 1: 27—"When your fear cometh like desolation, and your DESTRUCTION like a whirlwind."

Ps. 145: 20—"The Lord preserveth all those who love him, but ALL the wicked will he DESTROY."

2 Thes. 1: 8—"Who shall be punished with everlasting DESTRUCTION.

You doubtless admit, that the sinner is destroyed; but hold that there is a recovery. How can this be? If your house is destroyed by fire, how can it be restored? You might build a new one, but that would not restore the one destroyed. If your crops were destroyed by a flood, they never could be restored. You might have the value of them made up to you by the benevolence of friends; but that does not restore the destroyed crops. Even though in the Bible it was not qualified, we deem it a mockery of language to say that that which is destroyed can be recovered from that state. But when it is called "everlasting destruction," the idea of restoration is preposterous. And it would seem as though the Bible was worded so as to prevent all possibility of mistake by strengthening what is conclusive in the above quotations. It goes farther, and tells us that this death and destruction is their END. Ps. 73: 17—"I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their END; surely thou didst set them on slippery places; thou castedst them down to destruction." Phil. 3: 19—"Whose END is destruction." It seems that David was envious of the wicked until, by his attendance on the sanctuary, he learned their END, which is destruction. And Paul speaks to the Thessalonians of Christ's second appearing, "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on those who know not God and obey not the gospel, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," &c., and to the Phillipians he calls this their END. And if this is their end, destruction is their last state, and all hope of recovery must now cease.

But, strange as it may appear, you go with us up to this point; that is to say, you admit that the penalty of sin is death, that this death is destruction, and that this destruction is their end, and say, Here is the point where Christ manifests his pardoning mercy; and through their repentance, and calling upon him, they are restored to his favor. What a conclusion! Although we think the foregoing quotations and arguments thereon are conclusive, how varied and amplified is God's Word on this subject! By way of amplification we will quote one or two more passages.

Job 27: 8, 9—"For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul? Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him?" The form of this sentence is fully equal to an affirmitave declaration, that God will not hear.

Prov. 1: 24, 32—"Because I have called and ye have refused, I have stretched out my hand and no man regarded, but ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof, I will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh like a desolation, and your destruction like a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not hear; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me." Why will He not hear, and why shall they not find Him in this deep extremity? Hear the answer: "For they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord. They would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof." And what is the consequence? "Therefore they shall eat the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices. For the turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them."

So God has expressly told us, that there is a point beyond which if we go mercy shall never reach us. As fearful as this may be, it is nevertheless the language and doctrine of the Bible, and we see not how you can reject this doctrine, in view of all God has said on it, without rejecting the word of God. And if you reject that word, you reject all proof in relation to our future state. How awful, then, must be the condition of that soul who rejects God, or even procrastinates the day of repentance until God takes him from this life! And what an awful responsibility one assumes when he essays to teach, that from the depths of that awful destruction, which is the END of all the finally impenitent there is hope of restoration to the favor of God!

Dear brother, we fear, after all your zeal for God's cause, and your supposed love for the revelation of His truth, you are little aware of the nature of the influence which leads to the adoption of sentiments so much at variance with all He has revealed in reference to the future state. For how it can be possible, that one familiar with the Bible, in the light of all the multiplied evidence on this subject, can adopt such conclusions, without an utter rejection of the Bible as a rule of faith, we cannot understand. And now, dear brother, we affectionately invite you to a candid and impartial review of this subject, in the light of the evidences presented; and we would admonish you, that it is a fearful thing to reject the truth of God; for when we are cut loose from, or reject one truth, we are in danger of rejecting any or all by the same rule. May the God of mercy lead you into the right way, cause you to see your error, and return to the embrace of your brethren; and may He yet give you an inheritance among them that are sanctified, for His Son's sake.

By order and in behalf of the church,

H. C. HUBBARD, Committe.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

The following Report of Missionary Labor performed by Eld. Azor Estee within the bounds of the Virginia Seventh-day Baptist Association, was presented at the recent meeting of that body.

In presenting my Missionary Report at this time, I feel constrained to acknowledge the mercy and goodness of God in the preservation of my life, and in the degree of health I have been permitted to enjoy during the past year. With the exception of a few weeks' sickness, occasioned by an attack of the bilious fever, followed by the intermitting fever, I have been favored with my usual health. And although the sphere of my labors has been extensive, and my preaching appointments numerous, I have been enabled to meet them with few exceptions.

I cannot cheer the hearts of my brethren, by announcing that a large number have given evidence of genuine conversion to God during the past year, within the circuit of my labors. I trust, however, that some good seed has been sown, and that some fruit has appeared. In the course of the past season I have been associated with Elder Samuel D. Davis in conducting two protracted meetings—one in the vicinity of the Lost Creek Church, and the other within the limits of the Salem Church. These efforts were not in vain. We have reason to hope that on each of these occasions several of our youth have been brought from nature's darkness and bondage, into the light and liberty of the gospel. As they have made a public profession of their faith in Christ, and connected themselves with the church, we cherish the hope that they may, by the help of God, continue faithful, and, being instructed, nourished, and protected by the fathers and mothers in Israel, may eventually arrive at the stature of perfect men and women in Christ Jesus.

I have not been able to perform as much labor, in certain localities, as I had intended, and as I might have done, had not my sickness, and the sickness of my family, intervened. I did hope to have had the time and opportunity to have aided in organizing and classifying Sabbath Schools in every neighborhood where a sufficient number of Sabbath-keeping children could be found to render it practicable. I regret that the pressure of other engagements, in connection with the suspension of my labors by reason of sickness, has prevented me from engaging in this department of labor as I had designed. I trust the Association, and the several Churches, will take this subject under serious consideration, and labor to excite such an interest and use such means as may result in the organizing and putting into successful operation of Sabbath Schools in every neighborhood where it may be practicable.

I have had the opportunity of visiting the few brethren who constitute the remnant of the Woodbridgetown Church, in Pa., only once. I was received with great cordiality, and my visit, although limited as to time, was quite agreeable. I saw much to be done, and regretted that other engagements called me away so soon from that inviting field of labor. I was informed, that several individuals had embraced the Sabbath in Fayette Co., Pa., where, several years ago, I distributed tracts, and lectured on the subject of the Sabbath. From the information I obtained, it appears, that one individual, residing not far from Brownsville, Pa., preaches to a congregation which convenes at his house, regularly, for the worship of God on the Sabbath-day. I was exceedingly anxious to form an acquaintance with these persons, and visit their respective neighborhoods. As my circumstances precluded the idea of my doing it at that time, I encouraged the brethren and friends in Fayette Co., that I would visit that section of country again in October, and, if possible, arrange my preaching appointments elsewhere so as to enable me to labor in that region two weeks or more.

The School at West Union.

I presume it is well understood by the brethren generally, that one important consideration, which led the churches to resolve upon employing a missionary the present year was, that through his instrumentality a school might be started at West Union, under Seventh-day Baptist influence, which might assume the character of an Academy. In the letter forwarded me from the Lost Creek Church, making me acquainted with their wish that I should become their missionary, I was particularly requested to obtain a qualified teacher from New York, and with him come to Virginia, for the purpose of uniting our efforts in the accomplishment of this enterprise.

In the prosecution of my missionary labors the preceding year, having passed over several Counties in Western Virginia, and having discovered by personal observation the necessity of having something done to elevate the standard of education among the people, I suggested the idea of starting such a school at West Union, the county seat of Doddridge Co.; and before leaving Virginia, I took some preliminary steps for its organization. The prospective advantages of this section of Western Virginia from such an Institution, and the benefits which it would be likely to confer upon our denomination in particular, connected with the hope that I might be the instrument of aiding to some extent in the accomplishment of this object, were the considerations which finally induced me to return to Virginia the present year. When in New York last fall I introduced this subject to Bro. Stephen T. W. Potter, who had been recommended to me as being qualified to take charge of such a school as we were wishing to organize. After reflecting on the subject, he concluded to meet me in Virginia, and hazard the undertaking. We both reached Virginia about the first of November. Upon our arrival, we found no house provided in which to teach our school. The house occupied by the common school was owned by the teacher, who was determined to keep up an opposition school, unless we were willing to pay him his price for the house and lot. In this emergency, three individuals of our denomination assumed the responsibility and purchased the house and lot for three hundred dollars. Having made this provision for a house, the school started under favorable auspices, and averaged, the first term, thirty-five scholars or more. A different building was required to give the school the character of an Academy. To erect such a building as we needed on the lot purchased, would, with the money already advanced, require a thousand dollars or more. I presented this subject for the consideration of our denomination in Western Virginia, and a commendable interest was awakened. Having circulated a subscription to raise the requisite funds for the accomplishment of this object, I succeeded in this way to raise a capital of more than nine hundred dollars. A meeting was called to consider the question whether we would go forward in the enterprise and erect a building. At this meeting, it was resolved, with great unanimity, to go forward and put up a building, on the lot purchased, 26 by 36 feet, and two stories high. According to the contract made, this building is to be thoroughly finished and well painted on the outside, and one recitation room finished and painted on the inside by the first of November next. We have met our engagements promptly up to the present time. It will be necessary, however, to obtain what is still due on the subscription, as soon as practicable, that we may be enabled to cancel claims that will become due prior to and on the first of November, when we hope the contract referred to may be fulfilled. As the present contract contemplates only a thorough finishing of the exterior of the building, and a partial finishing of the inside, it will be necessary to add several hundred dollars to our capital, that we may have the means to finish the building in a proper manner, furnish it as circumstances may require, and obtain needful apparatus for the benefit of the school. The liberality our friends have already manifested in the progress of this work, inspires us with the hope that the denomination will cheerfully contribute the funds necessary for the successful completion of the enterprise in which we are engaged. As to the prospects of the school, I am happy in being able to say, that I regard them as more encouraging than they have been at any preceding time since its commencement. I see nothing in the way of ultimate success, and a final triumph over all our embarrassments, if we proceed judiciously, and go forward with energy in the accomplishment of our object. AZOR ESTEE.

WEST UNION, Sept. 4, 1851.

FASHIONS OF THE DAY.

"Well, Laura, give me a short sketch of the sermon? Where was the text?"

"Oh, I don't know. I have forgotten—but would you believe it! Mrs. V. wore that horrid bonnet of hers! I could'nt keep my eyes off it all meeting time; and Miss T. wore a new shawl that must have cost fifty dollars. I wonder her folks do not see the folly of such extravagance; and there was Miss S. with her pelisse—it's astonishing what want of taste some folks exhibit."

"Well, if youv'e forgotten the sermon, you have not the audience; but which preacher did you prefer—this one or Mr. A.?"

"Oh, Mr. A.; he is so handsome, and so graceful; what an eye, and what a fine set of teeth he has!"

WHO ARE THE RICH?

Who are the rich? The favored few,
Whose hands their dazzling treasures hold,
With luxury deck their halls, and strew
Their paths with gold?

No! for their wealth, so proudly got,
Is borrowed all—the fatal bond
May grant it to the grave, but not
An hour beyond.

They are the rich whose treasures lie
In hearts, not hands—in heaven, not here;
Whose ways are marked by pity's sigh,
And mercy's tear.

No borrowed wealth; no failing store,
These treasures of the soul remain
Its own; and, when to live is o'er,
To die is gain.

Who are the poor? The humble race
Who dwell where luxury never shone,
Perchance without one friendly face,
Save God alone?

No! for the meek and lowly mind,
Still flowing where its Saviour trod,
Though poor in all things else, may find
The peace of God.

They are poor, who, rich in gold,
Confiding in that faithless store,
Or tremble for the wealth they hold,
Or thirst for more;

Whose hands are fettered by its touch,
Whose lips no generous duty plead;
Go mourn their poverty, for such
Are poor indeed.

THE WIT OF JESSE LEE.

Jesse Lee, the founder of Methodism in New England, was a man who combined unresting energy and tenderness of susceptibility, with an extraordinary propensity to wit. Mr. Stevens, in his new work on the "Memorials of Methodism," gives the following specimen of Lee's bonhommie:—

As he was riding on horseback, one day, between Boston and Lynn, he was overtaken by two young lawyers, who knew that he was a Methodist preacher, and were disposed to amuse themselves at his expense. Saluting him, and reining their horses one on either side of him, they entered into a conversation something like the following:

1st Law. I believe you are a preacher?

Lee. Yes; I generally pass for one.

1st Law. You preach very often, I suppose.

Lee. Generally every day; frequently twice, or more.

2d Law. How do you find time to study when you preach so often?

Lee. I study when riding, and read when resting.

1st Law. But do you not write your sermons?

Lee. No; not very often.

2d Law. Do you not often make mistakes in preaching extemporaneously?

Lee. I do, sometimes.

2d Law. How do you do then? Do you correct them?

Lee. That depends upon the character of the mistake. I was preaching the other day, and I went to quote the text, "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone;" and by mistake I said, "All lawyers shall have their part"—

2d Law. (interrupting him.) What did you do with that? Did you correct it?

Lee. Oh no, indeed! It was so nearly true, I did not think it worth while to correct it.

"Humph!" said one of them (with a hasty and impatient glance at the other), "I don't know whether you are the more knave or fool."

"Neither," he quietly replied, turning at the same time his mischievous eyes from one to the other, "I believe I am just between the two."

Finding they were measuring wit with one of its masters, and excessively mortified at their discomfiture, the knights of the green bag rode ahead, leaving the victor to solitude and his own reflections.

A SUSPICIOUS MIND.

It is difficult to tell who suffers most from suspicion, he who entertains it, or he who incurs it. There are few evils more intolerable in life, than the coldness and distrust of friends and acquaintances. But the pain of discovering an unworthy trait or a vile deed in those whom we have trusted, is hardly less distressing. God has made us social beings, and the social instinct cannot be outraged without pain. There is hardly any habit more unfortunate than that of readily taking up an evil report, or of easily imbibing a suspicion of the conduct or character of our fellow-men. It is a habit which finds many incentives in our evil natures, and the world we live in. Every man has his sinister side, and society is at best but a cracked mirror, in which no man's character or motives get a full and fair reflection. It is easy to find in almost every one, some flaw which may be suspected to be an irreparable leak; or some speck upon the surface, that may sometimes seem to indicate a radical rot at the core. Few, indeed, go through life, not only without wrong, but the appearance of wrong; and if we suffer ourselves to suspect the worst when we see the least, we shall inevitably find ourselves surrounded with rogues, and breathing the very atmosphere of corruption.

Wholly to avoid suspicions of men is impossible, because there is unmistakable occasion for them. But if he is happiest who is freest from them, we should be slow to entertain them. It is better to think well than to think evil of any one. It is better to find a good motive for a doubtful deed, if a good one be possible, than an evil one. It may be nearer the truth; and if not, it will confer a pleasure upon ourselves. Our suspicions often do great wrong to their objects; justice, no less than charity, should make us cautious in indulging them. And if we do not injure them, such is the retributive law of life, we wound ourselves, we drive charity weeping from our hearts, and deprive ourselves of the blessedness of kind thoughts. It is a loss on all sides. We lose our peace, and our friend loses the joy of our confidence. Charity is profitable as well as right—it is due to our own peace of mind as well as to that of others. [Evangelist.

YOU NEED THE PRAYER-MEETING.

If you are neglecting to meet with your brethren for social prayer, they no doubt miss you. They see your seat empty. They remember your exhortations and prayers, and your promises to be faithful; and as they think of the sacredness of your covenant, the influence which you are now exerting against religion, and the peril of your own soul, as well as the jeopardy of your fellow-men, how can it be otherwise than that sadness gathers upon the countenance, and anguish seizes upon the heart! They feel that they need your presence, your prayers, your aid, to carry forward the great work of saving the world.

However much the prayer-meeting needs you, let me say—and I would to God that you could feel it—you need that still more. Every time you neglect it, you are robbing yourself of one of the best gifts of Heaven—you are impoverishing your own soul. The prayer-meeting is a means of grace, which, if improved, would greatly subserve your spiritual progress. Then, as you prize your own advancement, as you value your own happiness, as you love your own soul, so you should estimate it. There you may receive new impulses to faithfulness, and your religious habits may be confirmed. In the midst of the cares and turmoils of business, how refreshing to dismiss the world,

"And spend the hours of setting day,
In humble, grateful prayer!"

It is calculated to calm every turbulent passion, to restrain every truant emotion, to arouse the better feelings of the heart, and to fortify you against the temptations of the world. Far better would it be to neglect your meals, than to neglect it. The most that the former could do would be to injure the body, but this may destroy the soul. You may be getting your hay, or engaged in some other urgent business, and think that you cannot afford to attend. But you are mistaken! Your soul is of paramount importance, and will you imperil it? The hour devoted to social prayer, even amid the hurry of business, is one of the most profitable hours you spend—it is the very thing you need. [Morning Star.

POVERTY OF CHURCHES.

In this country there are many poor churches—too poor to sustain the ministry of the word among them. In some instances this poverty is real; in others it is imaginary or feigned. Some churches do not possess, neither can they obtain, the requisite means to support a pastor. Others do not find it convenient to do so, because all their convenient funds are expended for various luxuries. A prominent deacon of one of these poor churches remarked, in relation to ministerial support, at the anniversary for a recalling of their pastor, "We are all very poor, enthralled, and much in debt, and have hard scuffling to live. We are willing to do what we can for our pastor, but we cannot promise to do any thing—any certain amount." Yet one who was acquainted with them affirms that $200 were annually expended by the members of this poor church for the single article of tobacco.

Many, very many, church members expend more money for tobacco than they give to sustain their pastor—nay, more than they give to all charitable objects combined. Could many of our preachers receive for salary what their churches give for this one article of luxury, they would be under no necessity of resorting to secular employment for support. At the most moderate calculation, the Baptists within the territorial limits of the Southern Convention expend a sum for tobacco sufficient, if equally divided, to pay a salary of $400 per annum to every Baptist minister. Is it right? But "like people, like priest." We know a minister who said he would pay any one $70 annually to furnish his cigars. We know another, a "poor man," who said his tobacco cost from $25 to $30 per annum, and he was at that time a missionary, sustained in part by the voluntary contributions of the churches. These are facts to think about.

Home Foreign Journal.

USEFULNESS OF TRACTS.

"I am fully convinced," says the Rev. Mr Winslow of Madras, "that the sending forth of truth on the printed page, is, at the present day, in almost every land, one of the most important means of doing good. In India, where the number of preachers is so few, and the multitudes to be taught are so great, it is an almost indispensable aid to the minister, and where there is no minister, may even to some extent supply his place. At a meeting last evening, nine cases of the apparent conversion of Hindoos at out-stations were mentioned, in which one was led to reflection by 'Schwartz's Dialogues,' another by reading the 'Indian Pilgrim,' a third by a leaf of a Bible of which he saw some practical exposition in the life of a native Christian, and still another by the gospel of John. Three men of some education in a remote place were brought to reflection by tracts conveyed to them by pilgrims from a distance, who had received them at some fair or festival at a heathen temple. They read the tracts and reasoned with each other on their contents; at length got others, and finally a gospel, and about the same time met a native for a few days, who was inquiring on the subject of religion, and better informed about Christianity than they. These all at one time held a meeting in a heathen temple, and in the very presence of the idol, they kneeled down, and prayed to the Saviour of sinners. What these men knew, was almost entirely from books. They had never seen a missionary except once, and that some five or six years before, when they paid little attention to what he said. Yet when they went a distance to a mission station, and made known their feelings, the missionary says they seemed like Christians of some years standing."

IMMODERATE PLEASURE shortens existence more than any remedies can prolong it.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 30, 1851.

THE TRUE BASIS OF EDUCATION.

Notwithstanding the increased attention given to the subject of education of late years, it is lamentable that so little has been done towards placing it upon its proper foundation. The intellect is carefully trained, while the heart, "out of which are the issues of life," is sadly neglected. In all our schools and colleges, the aim is to render the pupils accomplished in philosophy, mathematics, the languages, &c., while the inculcation of the great principles of religion is scarcely thought of. This is thought to be exclusively the work of parents and of ministers of the gospel. Indeed, it is thought to be no small recommendation of an institution of learning, that it exercises no sort of control over the religious views of the pupils, but leaves each one free to cultivate whatever state of the mind is most agreeable to him, in regard to the Bible, and the God of the Bible.

We, on the other hand, suppose that the Bible should enter largely into the education of youth, from first to last. It is not enough, in a school, that a chapter should be read from the sacred Book once a day, or at most twice, and then left without comment to make its own impression. It should be dwelt upon at length; its doctrines should be explained, its precepts earnestly enforced, and all diligence used to bring the heart under the influence of its high and holy maxims. Were half of each day occupied in training the pupils of a school in the knowledge of the Bible, it would be time well spent.

It may be said, that this would render all our institutions of learning sectarian in their character. For the true doctrine of the Bible could not be inculcated, in many particulars, without coming into conflict with the perverted theology of some. Be it so, then. Let the conflict come; and let those who cannot consent to have their children instructed in what the teachers of a school may, under a solemn sense of their responsibility, feel it their duty to inculcate, remove them to some school where the instruction will be more to their mind. But let not our institutions of learning be so far accommodated to the enmity of the human heart against God, as to reject the Bible from the catalogue of text-books.

To the plea that the duty of looking after the religious education of children devolves upon parents rather than upon the school teacher, we have a word to say. Unquestionably it is a parental duty; and the parent who does not make it his great object to train his children for the service of God here, and for heaven hereafter, does not half appreciate his responsibility. But to keep this great object constantly in view, and at the same time lend his support to the common system of education, are well nigh impossible. His child enters the public school when not more than three or four years of age. He is kept there six hours every day. By the time he is old enough to appreciate religious instruction to any considerable extent, the studies of the school are saddled upon him with increased measure. He brings his books home with him at night. What time he can spend from healthful play, is occupied with grammar, arithmetic, and problems in Euclid. Except on the Sabbath, the parent has but little opportunity to instruct him in religion. To give it to him line upon line, precept upon precept; to teach him diligently the great things of God, and talk to him of them when sitting in his house, and when walking by the way, and when he lies down, and when he rises up, as he is commanded to do, (Deut. 6 : 7,) is in a great measure put beyond his power, the mind of his child being already occupied with about as much as he can attend to. Either in the common school, or in the college, this system is kept up, till the child has merged into the man; his intellect all the time becoming stored with that kind of knowledge which is in repute with the world, while his heart is kept in sad ignorance of true wisdom. What is the result? He goes into the world strong in intellect, it is true, but depraved in heart; and is therefore a more dangerous member of society than the complete ignoramus.

We greatly desire to see a different state of things. We desire to see religious instruction attended to, not only in the family circle and in the church, but made prominent in the daily training of children at school. We wish to see the time come, when parents will aim to educate their children, not merely nor principally for the business of the world, but for the service of God. And, as necessary to this, we wish to see no man entrusted with the training of youth, who is not himself imbued with the holy spirit of our religion.

Far be it from us by these remarks to intimate that a religious education, without the accompanying influence of the Holy Spirit, is sufficient to renovate the naturally corrupt heart. We know that it is not. And we have reason to fear that, even if the system which we propose could be carried out, there would be many fearful cases of hearts continuing in all their hardness, in spite of all that had been done for them. But we know, on the other hand, that religious education is a duty enjoined by God. The preaching of the gospel is not more emphatically enjoined than this is; and if the one has the promise of God's blessing, so has the other. We are confident that our system, could it be reduced to practice, would, in nine cases out of ten, at least, be attended with a realization of the truth of what the wise man said—"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

That schools of the kind we are now advocating could not properly be sustained by the State, we are well aware. And against the system of common schools, as sustained by government, we have nothing to say. Let government do what it legitimately can in this line, and some good, we trust, will be the result. But Christians ought to aim at something higher. God has said to them, "Bring up you children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Ought not the Christian to be wholly religious? Ought he not to conduct his business wholly upon religious principles? Ought he not to do every thing to the glory of God, whether he eats or drinks? Then why should not the whole education of his children be managed with a view to forming their hearts for God?

If our views are sound, if they are according to truth, why should not every church aim to have within its bounds one or more schools, in which shall be taught, as a necessary part of education, the great truths of God's Book? Why should not the pupil be as thoroughly drilled in the Bible, as in a system of arithmetic, or of grammar? Why should not the school be made a hand-maiden to the church, rather than to the world?

T. B. B.

THE NORTH-WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

Agreeable to appointment, the Fifth Anniversary of the North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association was held with the church in Christiana, Dane Co., Wisconsin, commencing on the fourth day of the week before the first Sabbath in October, continuing on to the Sabbath, and closing on the following First-day. Although the Wisconsin State Agricultural Fair occurred at Janesville on the same day, the churches were well represented from the beginning; the servants of the Lord thereby showing that they preferred the things of religion to the things of the world, when a choice was fairly to be made. I suppose there was not a man present at the Association, but would like to have been at the State Fair, under any other circumstances; but they had set their hands to the interests of Christ's Kingdom, and they preferred the good of Zion to their highest worldly gratification. It was a united and happy meeting. The brethren were very much of one mind, and all felt a deep, soul-pervading desire for the advancement of the truth and righteousness of the Lord. There was preaching every day, and six ministering brethren took part in the labors of the occasion. Every church had been increased in numbers, both by baptism and letter, and among them all there was a "sprinkling" of converts to the observance of Jehovah's holy Sabbath. Various topics of public interest were brought forward in appropriate resolutions, which were spoken upon by a number of the brethren besides the ministry with much force, and were acted upon with much vigor and good feeling.

The Church in Christiana is a young and promising body. Their lands are new, and their improvements immature at present; but they are pleasantly and compactly situated, so as to hold their meetings centrally, and where they are accessible to all. They are mostly youngerly people with rising families, and their prompt attention to the interests of the meetings of the association, and the very kind and hearty manner in which they extended the hospitalities of their houses to every visitor to the Association, augurs well for their future prosperity, and indicates a generous regard to the wants of the ministry among themselves. Bro. Z. Campbell, their pastor, has a promising field of labor, and I hope none will ever hear that he or his large and interesting family have been neglected, although they have a home of their own.

The North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society proposed at this meeting to transfer all their interests and labors to the Association, which was accepted, and the Constitution of the Association was so amended as to constitute it a missionary body; and a board of directors was appointed to manage this department of its labors, and to correspond and coöperate with the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society. The next Fourth-day evening the Executive Board met and appointed a local missionary for destitute parts in Wisconsin. On account of the very great and unprecedented scarcity of money among the farming population of Wisconsin, the collections were not as large as usual; but, all things considered, it is presumed that there is no decline in liberal, generous feelings for the various objects of Christian benevolence.

The facts connected with these churches are worth considering. It is scarcely a dozen years since there was not a Seventh-day Baptist known in Wisconsin. Now there are five growing churches in that State, besides those in Illinois. The meetings of the Association were as soul-cheering, and as full of promise to the future prosperity of the denomination, as any at the East. Brethren seemed to be as well gratified with the opportunity, and as much encouraged and revived in their feelings, as by similar associations and opportunities in the older States. As we sung the parting hymn—

> "When shall we all meet again, > Meet ne'er to sever?"

each one joined with a degree of feeling which seemed to say, "It is good to be here." Many a one said to another, "We have had as good an association as we ever had at home." A large proportion of these families were pushed out from their former homes by straitened circumstances or the pressing and daily growing necessities of a rising family. Many a time they sighed and wept over the loss of dearly-cherished privileges and associations of life, and the dreary thoughts that they should never again enjoy the same happy opportunities in the wilderness where they went. Many a sympathizing friend has thought they had better endure and make the best they could of the hard lot they had at home, and blamed them perhaps for rashness in encountering the difficulties and privations incident to a new country at the West. But now they see the wilderness blossoming as the rose; they have homes of their own, with all the joys of families, friends and society, and the ordinances of the Lord's house; and home to their rising families is as dear as home once was to their fathers and mothers in the older communities. It is a solace to their friends, as well as to themselves, to know that the favors of the Lord thus followed them to their newly adopted homes.

These facts are instructive and encouraging to the churches of like faith throughout the land. A few years ago, and all the Christian Sabbath-keepers in the land were located in a few isolated Societies, in two or three Atlantic States; but now a Sabbath-keeper may travel two thousand miles west, and spend every Sabbath on his journey with his brethren. Once they were scarcely known to exist; now their testimony is borne on every breeze from the Atlantic coast to the farthest settlements of the West. Many a worthy man lamented to see so many good brethren leaving the places where they had kept holy day with their fathers; but the result has been favorable to Zion; her cords are lengthened and her stakes are strengthened by breaking forth on the right hand and on the left.

The same process must necessarily go on for future enlargement and prosperity. Various causes will still press hard upon a portion of the people, and they will be compelled to change locations. Families increase, and lands quadruple and centuple their prices, and it is unavoidable that the young and the enterprising will seek enlargement in the yet unexhausted, ample West. Attempt to repress this, and you drive them away among strangers to the Sabbath of Jehovah, and leave them without the salutary influences of friends of like faith with themselves and their fathers. Kindly encourage and direct it, and we may yet see flourishing colonies arise and plant the ancient institutions of Jehovah and Jesus in the midst of every rising State of the West. Thus far we have always been behind other people in the settlements we have made; and in most instances lands are bought at second hand. We have not a settlement at the West that has command of a single hydraulic or navigable depot suitable for a mercantile or manufacturing village. Shall we always drive mercantile and mechanical genius from our midst to seek employment suited to their talents and tastes among those who keep not the Sabbath of the Lord? We have as fair a proportion of them as any other people, and we need but the establishments for their encouragement, to see them rise and prosper among us. The West offers an unmeasured field for such enterprises. Shall they be encouraged among us? or shall their friends be censured and frowned upon till the grave devours their hope? Let the past instruct us to go forward, and try again.

S. D.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Railway Traveling.

GLASGOW, October 3, 1851.

The most important of the Scottish Railways is the Caledonian. It not only, on its main line, connects Edinburgh and Glasgow with England by its two branches, but it has the management of the traffic of a number of smaller lines, to whose shareholders it guaranties certain rates of interest. In this manner it embraces the Glasgow and Bathgate Railway, Glasgow and Hamilton Railway, Glasgow and Barrhead Railway, and Glasgow and Greenock Railway. In regard to Sunday railway traveling, the Caledonian therefore holds an important place, and will probably give large extent ere long of Sunday desecration. At present it runs two Sunday trains on its main line between Glasgow and Edinburgh, and between both cities and England; and having just settled differences which have long existed with its guarantied branch lines, it will have the entire management of their traffic hereafter in its hands. The half-yearly meeting of the Company, which has been held this week in Glasgow, was regarded as an important one by the friends of Sunday sanctification.

Notice had been given of a motion to discontinue Sunday work, and Mr. McMicking, the mover, stated that "a well-reasoned tract," favorable to his views, had previously been circulated among the shoreholders. In addition to the present trains, and two goods trains, which run at night and morning before it is light, he said there was reason to fear that Sunday excursion trains would be added. The Scottish Central Railway, he said, did not book passengers on Sunday at any of its stations, but it carried along those passengers that this (the Caledonian) Company sent forward upon it. From information supplied by the Secretary, he found that the gross amount of receipts for the traffic of thirty Sundays had been £8,202, and that there was an increase of Sunday passenger traffic on the lines. There are, he added, 158 of their servants from whom Sunday labor is required.

Mr. Duncan, the Chairman, in reply to this last remark, said that of the 158 persons alluded to, 74 were gate-keepers, who would be required at their posts whether trains ran or not. They had, he continued, about 3000 servants; and, excluding gate-keepers, only about 2½ per cent. were employed in Sunday labor. He questioned if any gentleman present had so small a proportion of his servants engaged in Sunday labor.

Mr. Douglass Campbell said that the Company had received no complaint from its servants as to Sunday trains; but they had complaints from the public, that they did not give sufficient accommodation, considering that they had superseded the old modes of conveyance—complaints which he considered well founded. If they gave up the £8000 of revenue, so derived, they would not be able to fulfil their obligations to their creditors.

Mr. Brown hoped they would never be forced to hear again "the sort of trash" against Sunday trains they had heard to-day.

In reply to this, Mr. Blackadder talked of their traffic being a breach of the Fourth Commandment, but he did not attempt to show in which clause of the Commandment Sunday is alluded to.

Mr. Thornton then gave notice, that at next meeting, in the event of this question being then again mooted, he would move "that the Directors be requested to consider and immediately to adopt the best mode of affording increased facilities for Sunday traveling." And Mr. G. F. Barbour, having complained that the Directors at present give undue encouragement to Sunday traveling by their having reduced the fare of one of the Sunday mail trains from the usual rate of 50 shillings to 30 shillings, the Secretary replied, that this was necessary on account of their competition with the steamboats between Leith and London, which sailed at such times as enabled them to continue the voyage on Sunday, although they started before it.

On the question being put, the continuance of Sunday trains was affirmed by 28 votes against 24, no proxies having been used, with which we believe the Directors to be furnished in sufficient numbers in support of their present practice, to enable them fully to maintain it. That this is their fixed purpose, we firmly believe; and that before long they will extend their Sunday traffic to some of their branch lines, we also expect. Hitherto these branches have been under the management of their respective Boards of Directors; but henceforth the working of the whole of these tributary lines will be in the hands of the joint Board, the first meeting of which is here referred to. The decision arrived at, as well as the tenor of the remarks made in its support, indicate that this Company will afford those facilities which we have long anticipated as the means of farther reducing Sunday to its divinely-appointed place among "the six working days."

Silently other Railways are aiding in this, even in Scotland. The Midland Junction professes to run only the mail trains with passengers on Sunday, but a correspondent of the Perthshire Advertiser, last month, intimates that they do not confine themselves to these. The Aberdeen Railway; the Dundee and Perth and Aberdeen Junction; the Dundee and Arbroath; the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee; and the North British Railways, all already run Sunday passenger trains. At the last Half-Yearly Meeting of the last-named of these, Mr. Blackadder's standing motion for the discontinuance of this traffic was postponed on account of the absence of that gentleman.

The extent of Sunday traveling in England may be inferred from a statement made at the recent meeting of the Evangelical Alliance. The Rev. J. Jordan said that, according to the Railway books, 1,350 trains are run on that day, besides short trains, which are also very numerous. "Only one line in England," he added, "one in Scotland, and one in Wales, were distinguished by not running" such trains. As regards Scotland, this is incorrect; but he is probably better acquainted with the state of matters in England and Wales; and we do not suspect him of any intentional exaggeration, even although he founded upon his statement a motion that it is the duty of all Christian people to set their face against such desecration, and pledging the Alliance to make renewed efforts for Sunday observance. A proposal "to recommend all ministers, in this and other countries, to preach simultaneously" on the subject, was dropped, as it might seem that the Alliance was "assuming to itself an ecclesiastical character which it does not possess."

J. A. BEGG.

UNIVERSALIST MISSION TO ENGLAND.—A zealous Universalist has addressed a letter to one of the papers of that denomination, proposing a mission to England, and offering to give one thousand dollars towards an outfit for Rev. Abel C. Thomas to go to London and spend one year in laboring in Great Britain, provided a like sum or more is contributed for the same purpose from other sources." The Universalist paper of this city hopes to be "able to announce, before many months, that he is gliding 'o'er the billows' towards Albion's chalky cliffs."

DEATH OF A VENERABLE MINISTER.—Rev. Archibald Alexander, D. D., of Princeton, N. J., died on the 21st inst., in the 81st year of his age. Dr. Alexander was elected a Professor in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, in 1811, when it was first established, and has continued in office to the hour of his death. Dr. A. has left six sons—Rev. Dr. James W. Alexander, Rev. Joseph Addison Alexander, Rev. Samuel Alexander, Henry and William, in the profession of law, and Archibald Alexander, D. D.

LOAN FUND OF DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

By a resolution passed the Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, the Secretary was instructed to forward to you, for publication, the report of the "Loan Fund Committe." It will doubtless be interesting to those who are, or who may become, interested in this matter.

Respectfully yours,
S. S. CLARK, Sec.

To the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute:—

The Loan Fund Committee have had under consideration the matter referred to them, and ask leave to report:

That there has been received on bonds, for purposes specified therein, the sum of	$414,00
Of which there has been paid to the agent authorized to collect and receive the same, the sum of	78,88
Leaving a balance due of	$335,12

to be paid in four annual installments, to the Treasurer of De Ruyter Institute, the last of which falls due in 1854.

The sum received, or any part thereof, has not been appropriated to the purpose for which it was designed. There have been applications by two individuals for the sum of $18,75 in all. Your Committee believe the applicants such as were anticipated to be aided by the donors, and would recommend that the same be allowed, and that their receipts for the same be accepted. These are the only applicants for aid whose names have come before your committee.

They would suggest, that the churches, societies, or individuals, contributing to this fund, be requested to present to your Board the names of such persons as they may deem worthy a share in it.

We further recommend, that young persons wishing to avail themselves of the benefits of this fund, should make application for the same, by the recommendation of persons known to the Board, that they are persons of good moral character, and religiously observe the Sabbath, desirous of pursuing their education in De Ruyter Institute, that they are of industrious habits, and in circumstances that would embarrass their progress without aid.

Your Committee would further recommend, that in the present state of the fund, no individual be encouraged to expect aid from the same, of more than $25 00 annually, and that the same be deemed due in five years from its receipt, free of interest for said five years.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES H. MAXSON,
JAMES R. IRISH,
SILAS S. CLARK,
MATTHEW WELLS, JR.
IRA SPENCER,
} Committee.

DE RUYTER, Oct. 2, 1851.

RHODE ISLAND CORRESPONDENCE.

Spiritual Rappings, &c.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 26, 1851.

It may sometimes be beneficial to turn from the common-place events of life, and for a moment contemplate "the most remarkable events of the age," and look with reverential awe on "the most astonishing developments from the interior." One can scarcely walk the streets of our cities, without being loaded with flaming handbills, announcing some most "astonishing developments," which go in regular gradation from the "ten magnificent lions" of Burnum, "fresh from the Numidian forests," down to the contemptible jibbery of the wandering Gipsy. Of this last class, we have a specimen in this city at present. The handbill announces the momentous event of the "arrival of the greatest wonder of the age, the mysterious lady, who has taken rooms, and is ready to give information on all important events of our past, present, and future lives," and, for an additional fee, "will give charts of heads." O, fortunate mortal! Whence thy wondrous wisdom?

But the "spiritual manifestations" may possibly deserve a more extended notice; not, in my opinion, from any more inherent claim to respectability, but from the more imposing attitude which they are assuming, and the innovations which they are making on the truths of the Bible, as well as the impositions they are practicing on the common-sense of community. May we not profitably devote a chapter to these modern phenomena?

There are in the human mind two opposite tendencies, each in its results fraught with danger to society, as well as to individuals. These tendencies are credulity and incredulity. They are both equally removed from the golden mean of careful, candid, and judicious thought, and both result in a perverted and abnormal state of mind. The incredulous lived in our Saviour's time, of whom it was said, that they would not believe though one should rise from the dead. This class of persons, falling back behind the well-built redoubt of egotism, are always ready to cry "humbug" at the annunciation of every new proposition, which their transcendent genius has not yet elaborated. Their own understanding is the standard of all truth, and to its dread tribunal they summon all the active powers of matter and mind, and pass over to the dreary shades of nihilism every thing not clearly comprehended by it. Thus the steamboat, railroad, telegraph, and most useful inventions, have in turn been clothed with the wings of the "humbug." Such persons seldom think that nature has yet fathomless depths of unexplored laws, and that the non-comprehension of the laws which govern a given phenomenon, is no invalidation of the phenomenon. The class of credulous persons equally forget the countless liabilities of deception which attend every new development, and, seizing upon first appearances, are ready to trumpet forth everything a little novel, as some astonishing discovery, in which the weal of the world centers. If to this credulity be added the common love of the marvelous, we have a fit subject for any delusion, however monstrous. When we observe the prevalence of these last tendencies, one cannot wonder at the success of Mahomet, Jo Smith, Miller, and other mistaken theorists. The most palpable deceptions need never want for adherents, till the human mind is more evenly developed.

Let us now inquire in what light this new pretension is to be viewed. That it be viewed in the spirit of unprejudiced investigation, is no more than every new phenomenon has a right to claim. If it involve good to man, then surely it ought to be brought out and practically developed. If it involve evil, then most certainly it ought to be evolved, and held up to the reprobation of the good. But how can it be fairly judged to be either good or evil, without investigation? What then is the proposition to be investigated? It is proposed, that the spirits of those who have died hold converse with the living—that some few persons have some adaptation for communication, in consequence of which they are chosen by the spirits for media, through which to converse with the living. It is claimed that there are several hundred media in Providence at present. There are now three modes of intercourse by which the dead are said to hold converse with the living. 1st. By slight noises on a table, chair, or elsewhere. 2d. By using the hand of the medium to write with. 3d. By putting the medium into a mesmeric state, and using its tongue to talk with. Now, in every investigation, facts are the first things to be obtained. This is often overlooked, and many a poor philosopher has racked his brain in efforts to explain facts which never existed. Assertions are taken for granted, and investigations are predicated on them. Thus the French philosophers labored long and hard to explain why the water in a full dish would not run over, if the dish be filled also with needles. It is further claimed, that spirits often move tables around the room, that they put their hands on the faces of their friends, and in numerous ways act on matter as matter is accustomed to act. What testimony shall satisfy us of these facts? They must be better attested than ordinary facts. It is a rule of universal application, that testimony must increase in validity, as facts decrease in probability. Thus miracles alone were adequate to prove the improbable event of the Saviour's advent. If he had come in the form of an earthly monarch, he would have had no need of miracles, for it appeared highly probable to the Jews that he would thus come. So, if a person of doubtful veracity affirms, that he saw a dog walk across the room, we give credence on account of its probability; but if he affirm that he saw a table do the same thing, we at once demand more evidence. If a man of veracity affirm that he saw a table jump up to the ceiling of the room, we are still bound to suspend belief till we carefully canvas the chances of mistake. If he be of a nervous, ghost-seeing temperament, though we doubt not his veracity, we may still doubt the fact.

We have under consideration as improbable an event as could be announced. That spirits should converse with the living is opposed to the history of our race, and we must therefore apply the strictest rules of evidence. First, then, are these sounds or raps made? This is beyond a doubt. Many have witnessed them; I have heard many of them. Again, are tables moved about the room, and made to rise up from the floor? This, too, I have seen. The hand of the medium most surely writes. I have some specimens before me. It is also true that the medium talks. These are all common-place events; they all occur every day in almost every family. But when it is affirmed that departed spirits rap, move tables, write and talk to us, these facts assume a new phase. Are these things done by departed spirits? is the question to be answered. Nothing but a desire to be imposed upon will induce us to sit down in a superstitious assent to this claim. A claim so opposed to the experience of ages, can demand credence only upon the most unequivocal, and undisguised testimony. If physical causes can account for these things, the spiritual claim must yield. Nor are we to yield to this claim because we cannot at the time assign the true cause. If those who saw the imitations of the miracles of Moses by the magicians, had been as desirous to be deceived as some in these days, they might easily enough have worshiped the magicians, for they could not tell how those feats were performed. Nor can we tell how the foolish feats of legerdemain, by which lazy vagabonds live upon the public, are performed.

[The remainder of our correspondent's letter, giving an account of visits to three of the most distinguished "rappers," we are compelled to omit until next week.]

STUDY OF HEBREW IN COLLEGE.—The Presbyterian of the West says that by a provision of the Trustees of Miami University, the members of the junior and senior classes, who have the ministry in view, are allowed to study Hebrew. Upwards of twenty from these two classes are now engaged in that study, and in the whole College there are more than fifty who are preparing to preach Christ.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY IN PARIS.—A temperance society, on the plan of those in England, is about to be organized in Paris. A number of persons in high positions, principally in the ranks of the clergy, the magistracy, and the public offices, have, it is said, already joined it. Its object is to do away with drunkenness among the working classes.

"INFANT BAPTISM A PART AND PILLAR OF POPERY."—The famous treatise of John Gill, so entitled, has been re-written by Rev. George B. Ide of Philadelphia, and published by the Committee of the American Baptist Publication Society.

A PAGAN TEMPLE IN THE UNITED STATES.—A correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser writes, that a temple for pagan worship has been opened at San Francisco, by the Chinese. This is the first idol temple, we believe, that has been erected in this country.

NEW-YORK POST OFFICE.—A statement of the operations of the New-York Post Office during the quarter ending Sept. 30, 1851, shows large and gratifying results. There were received and sent by steamships 1,161,923 letters and 584,038 papers. The whole number of letters passed through the office was upward of 7,000,000. The advertised letters numbered 48,000, about one-fourth of which have been delivered to the proper owners, and the remaining three-fourths sent to the Dead-Letter Office at Washington. From the dead-letter office there were received 637 dead letters, containing property of value, such as gold dust, bank bills, exchange, drafts, &c., in various sums, ranging from $1 to $10,000, a large portion of which has been delivered to the writers, and the remainder returned to Washington, subject to the order of the proper parties. There were received by the Postmaster 5,100 letters on official business, and 2,018 official letters were written and dispatched. The business has increased about 10 per cent. under the new law, and 75 per cent. of all letters are prepaid by stamp. The number of stamps sold at this office, under the new law, to the 30th September, was 1,475,555.

PREACHING IN THE OPEN AIR.—The Presbytery of New-York, at their Autumnal Session, held recently, recommended preaching in the open air to those who cannot be gathered into the houses of public worship. Their resolution reads as follows:—

"That the Presbytery views with feelings of profound commiseration the condition of many thousands who are living and dying in this City and vicinity without hearing the Gospel from Sabbath to Sabbath, and in view of the apparent impracticability of bringing them into the houses of public worship, that efforts for the promotion of missionary labor among them ought to be greatly increased, and in the judgment of the Presbytery the pastors and other ministers of our body, who have strength and time for the work, would be usefully employed, and may except the divine blessing, if they would preach the Gospel in the streets and the parks, in the markets and on the wharves, and wherever people can be assembled to hear, in accordance with municipal regulations, to which respectful obedience is due."

WELCH POPULATION AND WELCH PAPERS—Rev. Mr. Chidlaw, agent for the American Sunday School Union, stated recently, that the number of Welsh emigrants in this country is about 200,000. Among them circulate the following religious papers, published in their own strange tongue: The Cyfaill, (Friend,) a Calvinistic, or Whitefield Methodist paper, published in New York. The Cenhadwr, (Missionary,) Congregationalist, published in Remsen, Oneida Co., N. Y where also is published a general newspaper called The Detholydd, (Eclectic;) The Seren Orllewinol, (Western Star,) Baptist, published at Pottsville, Pa.; The Drych, (Mirror,) N. Y. All these are evangelical in their religious influence, pure in morals, and elevating in sentiment.

TEMPERANCE IN CONNECTICUT.—The Connecticut State Temperance Society held a spirited meeting at New-Haven on Fourth-day, Oct. 22. Interesting letters were read from several distinguished advocates of temperance in other States. Among them was a letter from Neal Dow, of Portland, explaining the operation of the law for the suppression of the liquor traffic in Maine. After a free and general expression of sentiment on the subject, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That the law recently enacted by the Legislature of Maine, which in its execution is freeing that State from the terrible and blighting effects of the liquor traffic, is admirably adapted to accomplish the same object in our own State; and we pledge ourselves to use every effort for the production of a similar law upon our own statute book.

MISSIONARY CHART.—Rev William Butler, of the New England Methodist Episcopal Conference, has prepared a chart of domestic and foreign missions, as conducted by the various Protestant churches. We copy from it the following aggregate of foreign missions:—

Foreign missionaries in all parts of the world,	2,944
Assistants, as lay preachers, &c,	11,807
Members in the mission churches,	333,604
Hearers,	1,415,774
Institutions for instruction of native ministry,	31
Printing establishments,	40
Scholars in day and boarding schools,	224,089
Income of all evangelical societies,	$3,201,418

TURNED BAPTIST.—The N. Y. Times says that the Methodists of Baltimore have been surprised by the conversion of one of their ministers, Dr. Cole, to the faith of the Baptists. Dr. Cole was immersed by Rev. Dr. Fuller, of the Seventh Baptist Church, in the presence of several thousand spectators. Dr. Fuller employed the occasion to speak with much force in relation to the general principles of the denomination, and especially with historical reference to their inflexible maintenance of the grand doctrines of free inquiry, and political and religious liberty.

☞ THE ANNUAL REPORTS of our Missionary, Tract, and Publishing Societies are out of press and ready for delivery. Parcels will be put up for each church in the denomination, and sent by the first convenient opportunity. Those for the churches of the Western Association will be sent to Alfred.

☞ A SHIP FOR SHANGHAE, the Horatio, will sail from this port about the 10th of November.

We learn that as fruits of the interesting work of grace recently enjoyed in Bath, N. H., upwards of fifty individuals have united with the church. A large proportion of them are heads of families.

The Governor of New-Jersey has appointed Thursday, the 27th day of November next, as a day of public thanksgiving in the State.

The Halifax papers record the death of Rt. Rev. William Frazers, Bishop of Arichat, in the 72d year of his age.

European News.

The steamer Hermann, with four days later news from Europe, arrived at New York on the 23d inst.

A Virginian bark, with a valuable cargo, has been wrecked in the Channel off Liverpool.

The Aberdeen Journal learns that, in accordance with the opinions of the recent meeting of Arctic officers at the Admiralty, it has been resolved to send a screw steamer to the Wellington Channel, to prosecute the abandoned search for the missing ships Erebus and Terror.

The Exhibition is more crowded and pays better than ever as it approaches its termination. It is thought that before the close the daily attendance will be 100,000. Since the rainy season has set in, the umbrella stand earns from $100 to $150 a day, and might earn more, were its accommodations more nearly infinite.

There is nothing special from France. The refusal of the Government to allow Kossuth to pass through is warmly commented on by the Opposition journals.

The Univers publishes the following from Rome, 30th ult.: "Some more of the proceedings of the demagogues have been unveiled by the vigilance of the police. Some machines of a new invention, intended to throw poisoned arrows, have been seized. There were several models of them; one was invented by Fabri, a mechanician of Parma, who was last year convicted of having prepared and paid for the assassination of Col. Cardoni, and who, after having been condemned to death, had his sentence commuted into hard labor for life. Some of these machines were found at his residence. The other model was very portable, and might be easily concealed from sight; it was merely necessary to blow into a small iron tube to shoot out an arrow, the point of which, having been steeped in a subtle poison, would inflict a mortal wound."

The Cunard Steamer Niagara, and the Collins Steamer Pacific, arrived at New York from Liverpool last Sabbath. The latter made the passage in 11 days, and brought European news to Oct. 15.

The public show of the Crystal Palace closed on the 11th, after being open 5 months and 11 days. The exhibition was opened on the 13th and 14th to the exhibitors and those introduced by them, and on Wednesday the 15th the juries' reports were to be presented, and the whole definitely closed, with a prayer of thanksgiving by the Bishop of London, and the national anthem.

Kossuth had not reached Southampton on the evening of the 14th, and the Mississippi had not arrived at Gibraltar on the 5th. From Gibraltar Kossuth is to go to England by a British steamer, and the Mississippi is to wait there till his return.

The revenue of the United Kingdom for the quarter ending Oct. 10, shows an increase over the corresponding quarter of last year, of £60,000. The total revenue, exclusive of miscellaneous, is £13,220,000.

The Queen had visited Liverpool. She was received with great enthusiasm. Business was suspended for two days.

Hereafter the fare, from Europe to America on the Washington and Hermann will be £28 for 1st cabin, £24 for 2d cabin, and £15 for lower deck. The fare by the Franklin and Humboldt will be the same as by the Cunard and Collins lines, viz. £30.

Count Reventlow, the Danish Ambassador at St. James, died at Glasgow, on the 8th inst., very suddenly. He was there on a visit with his family.

Mr. Alexander Lee, the well known composer of ballad music, died Oct. 9.

In France there is talk of a change of Ministry, and of the policy of the Government, to the extent of repealing the restriction on universal suffrage.

It is reported from Spain that the Prime Minisier has proposed in Cabinet Council to sell Porto Rico and Cuba to England. The report wants confirmation.

The Spanish frigate Guatemala landed at Vigo 116 pirates of the band of Lopez; six others arrived in the corvette Venus, and four in the Isabella Catolica; in all 125 flibustieros, sentenced to confinement in Spanish presidios.

The accounts from Berlin state that more arrests have taken place, and it is believed that a widely extended conspiracy exists to overturn the government.

A frightful accident had occured on the line of railroad between St. Petersburgh and Moscow. A long train, conveying back to the former city a part of the soldiers, officers, and privates, who had attended the coronation fête in Muscow, came into collision with a train on its way from St. Petersburgh. Many persons were killed, and a still greater number wounded, but the exact loss of life had not been published.

Advices from Constantinople of the 25th September report a conflict between the Turks and the Christians resident at Van, arising from the latter being allowed the use of bells to call the faithful to church, which was exceedingly obnoxious to the former. On the 3d of September, as soon as the usual signal was given for service, the Turks broke into the church, and a collision instantly took place, when several lives were lost on both sides.

At a recent public meeting in Liverpool Rev. B. Grant said he intended soon to deliver three lectures, entitled "The Sham Peter, called the Pope; the Sham Church, called infallible; and the Sham Bible, called the Douay, or do 'em Bible!"

THE CHRISTIANA RIOTERS.—In the U. S. District Court at Philadelphia, last Friday, the grand jury returned thirty-seven true bills against the Christiana prisoners.

These bills charge them in the first count with obstructing the officers in arresting the fugitives.

Second: Rescuing prisoners from their custody.

Third: Attempting to rescue prisoners from custody.

Fourth: Aiding the fugitives to escape from the officers.

Fifth: Harboring and concealing the fugitives.

Sixth: Obstructing Edward Gorsuch in arresting the fugitives.

Seventh: Aiding the fugitives to escape from Edward Gorsuch.

Execution of a Missionary in China.

A letter from Hong-Kong, addressed to the Univers, Paris, gives the following details of the execution of a M. Schœffler, a missionary priest:

"On the 1st of May, about noon, by order of the Grand Mandarin, elephants and horses were prepared, and two regiments of satellites were under arms. The muskets were loaded, and every one expected that it was an expedition against the rebels which was being fitted out, or that an attack was to be made on the haunt of some brigands. It was soon, however, understood, that all these preparations had been ordered for the execution of M. Schœffler. The Mandarin, fearing that the Christians would endeavor to rescue their missionary by force, wished to intimidate them by this display of troops. When his intentions were known, all the town showed the greatest affliction. The jailors, the prisoners, and all those who had any connection with the missionary, expressed their sorrow and regret. M. Schœffler, on the contrary, was smiling with delight, and he prepared to walk to the place of execution with greater ease by dressing himself as lightly as possible. The Mandarin was apprehensive of a riot, and he took up his position on the ramparts, surrounded by his troops, all ready for action. The execution took place outside the town. The cortege of the martyr was arranged in the following manner: Before him marched a soldier, carrying a board affixed to a pole, on which was written, 'Notwithstanding the severe prohibition against the religion of Jesus, a European priest named Augustin has dared to come here clandestinely to preach and seduce the people. When arrested, he confessed everything—his crime is evident. Let Augustin have his head cut off, and thrown into the river. Fourth year of Tu Du; First of the Third Moon.' Eight soldiers, with drawn sabres, marched by the side of M. Schœffler; one hundred men, armed with muskets or lances, formed the head of the procession; two elephants formed the rear-guard. The martyr held up his chains when walking; he walked quickly, as if hastening toward his triumph, and continually offered up thanksgiving. He was surrounded by an immense crowd; the greater number of these Pagans were struck with religious admiration; there were some, however, who railed and blasphemed. On arriving at the place of execution, the martyr fell on his knees, kissed the crucifix three times, and, at the request of the executioner, he took off his coat, and turned down the collar of his shirt. The executioner having afterward tied his hands behind his back, the martyr said to him, 'Do your business as quick as possible.' 'No, no,' replied the Mandarin, who was informed of what M. Schœffler had said, 'follow the signal of the cymbal, and only strike at the third sound.' The signal was given. The hand of the executioner trembled. He struck three blows of his sabre on the neck of his victim, and was at length obliged to cut the flesh with a knife, in order to detach the head from the body. In Cochin China those who are present at executions are accustomed to disperse immediately after it is over, but on this occasion, although the greater number present were Pagans, for there are very few Christians at Son Tay, they rushed forward to collect some drops of the blood, and to get some portion of the garments of the martyr. It was remarked, that an inferior Mandarin, a Pagan, before the execution, threw a coat of white silk, and a piece of white linen, at the feet of the martyr, in the hope that it would be stained with his blood. M. Schœffler, thinking, doubtless, that they belonged to some Christian, took them up, and placed them inside his shirt, next his heart. When the Chief Mandarin was informed of what his subordinate had done, he ordered him to receive several blows with a stick; he, however, went off much delighted with the possession of his precious relics. The Christians obtained the body of M. Schœffler, but the head was thrown into the river, and had not been found when the above letter was written."

SUMMARY.

Saturday morning last, as the 7 o'clock train from Harlem passed through the cut between 32d and 42d sts., a horse and cart, with two building stones, each weighing nearly half a tun, fell from the embankment, rolling against the side of the last car of the train, smashing in the side, and breaking down 4 or 5 seats, but, most wonderfully, doing no further damage than wounding one gentleman, we believe not seriously. No persons were on the seats destroyed, or they must have been killed on the spot, or fearfully mutilated.

About 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, while a number of workmen were engaged in raising the flag staff of the new liberty-pole at the foot of Fulton-st., Brooklyn, the rope broke, and the staff, measuring probably 20 feet in length, fell upon an aged gentleman named Richard Cock, who was witnessing the operation, and crushed him to death almost instantly. Three small boys who were sitting on a log beside him were also much hurt.

Intelligence from Mexico to 27th September says that everything about the Government of Mexico appears to be in lamentable confusion, and it is nearly impossible to get together a quorum of Departments, and when a constitutional number is present, they do nothing but submit projects on projects, squabble and fight. The Treasury is reduced to its lowest ebb, and the resources of Government almost annihilated.

A merchant in Fredericksburg, Va., advertises in the Weekly Recorder "Handsome Fall and Winter Goods," urges the ladies, and particularly farmers, to "encourage him," and adds, we suppose by way of inducement, "that not a dollar's worth of his stock was bought of Abolitionists!"

Joshua Shaw, Esq., a distinguished landscape painter of Philadelphia, while on a gunning excursion near Bordentown, N. J., by some mishap, was shot in the face, two of the shot entering his eye, injuring him to such an extent that it is feared he will lose both his eyes from inflammation.

Col. Enos Stone, the first settler of Rochester, died on the 3d inst. He came to Genesee County in 1790, and built the first house in Rochester in 1810. The house is still standing. His son was the first white child born here. Col. Stone was 76 years of age.

Mr. Dexter Ware, a Justice of the Peace, and highly esteemed citizen, was run over by the Express train from New-York, near the West Needham Depot, and was instantly killed.

The Buffalo and Cochocton Valley Railroad, which branches out from the Erie Railroad at Corning, will be in operation for about forty-five miles in November, and is contracted for opening fifty-three miles further, to Batavia, early the ensuing Summer, and thence to Buffalo in November following. Commencing at Corning, it passes up the rich and fertile valley of the Cochocton, and through the beautiful villages of Bath, Avoca, Dansville, Conesus, Avon Springs, Le Roy, to Batavia, and thence direct to Buffalo.

The Boston Journal says that the English clipper ship Chrysolite did not beat the American clipper Oriental, after all the bragging of the English press. The Courier says the Oriental made the passage from China to London in 89 days. The Chrysolite was 80 days from Anjier to Liverpool. Anjier is not in China, but in the island of Java. The difference in the two passages is more than 2,000 miles. The palm, therefore, rests with the Oriental.

The Hudson River Railroad Company and the Central Line of Railroads from Albany to Buffalo, have made an arrangement for ticketing passengers through to Schenectady, Utica, Syracuse, Rochester, and Buffalo. Passengers will also be ticketed to Oswego. Trains for this purpose will leave Chambers-st. at 8½ A. M., 12½ and 5 P. M. The United States mail is now carried on this road.

The brig Chicago, Capt. Napier, which sailed from Buffalo on the 11th inst. for Chicago, was capsized about 4 o'clock on the morning of the 13th, by a sudden squall, when about 90 miles from Buffalo, and nearly in the middle of the Lake, and John Fuloch, first mate, L. W. Reed, second do., and John Carver, seaman, were drowned.

A correspondent of the Baltimore American, writing from Russell county, Virginia, cites two cases, one of a negro man and the other of a boy, in which severe bites of rattlesnakes were cured by the free administration of brandy, half a tumbler full at a time every few minutes until a quart had been taken.

A Committee from Newburyport, Mass., has visited Prince Edward's Island, to learn the extent of damage by the late storm. They estimate that although some vessels have undoubtedly been lost at sea, with all their crew, the whole number of vessels ashore and lost will not exceed 75, and the number of lives will not exceed 150.

About 4 o'clock last Thursday morning the steamer Buckeye State and the schooner Saratoga came in collision above Long Point, on the Canada side of the Lake. The latter was laden with 8,000 bushels of corn, and filled and sunk immediately. Three lives were lost.

At Providence, R. I., last Friday, the Jury in the case of Almira Beazely, who has been under trial for the murder of her brother, came into Court with a verdict of "Not Guilty," on the ground of Insanity.

We notice, just now, considerable activity in various quarters, in getting up meetings to influence our Government to make some movement te secure the release of Wm. Smith O'Brien, John Mitchel, and their fellow prisoners.

There is but one linen manufactory in this country, and that is the mill of Mr. Stevens, at Webster, Worcester county. There is a steady demand for the linen made at this establishment.

Messrs. Livingston & Co. deposited on the 20th inst., at the Mint, for Drew, Robinson & Co., a lot of California gold dust, the largest as well as the finest in quality ever deposited at one time. The weight in ounces was 25,009 90.100, and its value is about $425,000.

The Evening Journal says the contract for the northern railroad from Albany to Eagle Bridge has been given to Messrs. George W. Baker and Richard Hoes. The road will be completed in nine months to Cohoes, and in twenty months to Eagle Bridge.

The steamers Shelby and John Quincy Adams came in collision a few days since below St. Louis, by which the Shelby lost both her boilers, and was set on fire. The flames, however, were quickly subdued, without serious damage being done.

A man named Hiram Wilcox was killed on Saturday in Fitchburg, by the bursting of a grindstone in Crossman's scythe manufactory. His body was thrown up entirely through the roof of the building.

At Philadelphia, Tuesday, Oct. 21, 1851, the jury in the case of James Hoover, against Edmund Weckerly, for the seduction of his daughter, rendered a verdict for $5, 000 damages.

A committee of fishermen sent to Prince Edward's Island to look after the wrecks there, report that about 75 vessels are lost and on shore, and that about 150 lives have been lost, of whom the names of 97 have been ascertained.

The Racine Advocate (Wis.) says that the required sum of five thousand dollars, to insure the location of a University under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, will be secured.

The redemption at the Suffolk Bank for September was $20,300,000. The average for 1850 was $18,000,000 per month.

The Grand Jury of Fairfield Co., Ohio, have found bills of indictment against 135 rumsellers for violations of the liquor law.

A letter from Havana says that the Spanish officers who captured Lopez have been assassinated.

Beef packing has already commenced at Chicago. It is expected that 40,000 will be killed this Fall.

The clipper ship John Bertram, from San Francisco July 5, arrived at Boston, Tuesday, Oct. 21. Her sailing time has been 95 days.

President Fillmore has issued a proclamation warning citizens of the United States against invading the Mexican Republic.

The telegraph reports a duel at New-Orleans in which one of the combatants was shot dead.

Mrs. Seeberger of Terra Haute, Ia., died of fright some days ago, occasioned by the temporary illness of her infant son.

Joseph Blunt, Esq., of New-York, has been appointed U. S. Commissioner to China, in place of Hon. John W. Davis, resigned.

There has been a very destructive fire in Philadelphia. Estimated loss $90,000.

The Packet ship New World sailed last week from New York for Liverpool, with two hundred steerage passengers. Six of the number, who are females, go on a visit to their parents and friends, and intend to return to this country; but the remainder, many of whom have been here from two to ten years, have become dissatisfied with the prospect, and intend to pass the rest of their days in their native land. They are mostly Irish.

The Washington Republic, in giving the substance of a recent conversation with Gen. Concha, the Captain-General of Cuba, says that he expressed his determination to recommend the Queen of Spain immediately to pardon the American prisoners on their reaching Lisbon; that he was only prevented doing so himself by the New-Orleans outrages, which had since been explained to his satisfaction. He believed the President had done all in his power to prevent the invasion.

In Reading, Pa., George Schultz was bitten in the right hand by a rattlesnake. The wounds caused by the fangs of the snake bled freely, and in a short time the hand and arm began to swell to a fearful extent. Remedies were speedily applied—the arm was tightly bandaged, and physicians were called who succeeded in preventing the spread of the deadly poison through the system. The arm was greatly swollen, yet strong hopes are entertained of his recovery.

At the recent Agricultural Fair of Putnam County, held at Carmel, a Miss Haight of Putnam Valley exhibited a pair of White Cotton Hose, very beautiful and fine, which were manufactured by herself from "Cotton planted, picked, spun and knitted by herself." She also exhibited a Shawl, very tastefully colored and knitted, all from Cotton of her own raising.

The Lake Shore Railroad from Cleveland east is being pushed with energy. The Road from Dunkirk west to Erie, it is supposed, will be completed by the 1st of January, when there will be but about 40 miles of staging between Cleveland and Dunkirk. Next summer we shall undoubtedly have a direct railroad connection between New-York and Chicago.

The State Journal (Fort Des Moines, Ia.,) contains an editorial correspondence from Nebraska, which gives a most flattering description of the climate and soil. According to this correspondence, the vast plain of Nebraska and the slopes of the Rocky Mountains are admirably adapted to all purposes of agriculture.

The news from Northern Mexico, now brought down to the 16th ult., represents the Patriots as still successful, and gaining strength, confidence and numbers every day. On the other hand it would appear that hour by hour the Government is sinking into confusion and helplessness.

The Committee appointed by the Georgia Convention to report on the condition and appliances of her educational system, have demonstrated that the present plan is inadequate, and that under it the children of the poor must in many places be reared in ignorance. They strongly recommend the Common School System.

An old soldier of the Revolution, named Pardon Peckham, aged 92, was knocked down by an engine on the railroad near Buffalo, lately, and instantly killed.

New York Market—October 27, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 87; Pearls 5 37.

Flour and Meal—Flour 4 00 for Canadian, 3 87 for common and strait State, 3 87 a 4 12 for Ohio, Michigan, and Indiana, 4 12 a 4 25 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour and Corn Meal scarce at 3 37. Buckwheat 5 25 for bbls.

Grain—Wheat has improved, 83 a 88c. for new Canada, 88c. for white Michigan and Ohio, 92 a 96c. for Genesee. Barley is not plenty; 76c. for two-rowed. Rye 71c. Corn 57c. for western mixed, 61c. for round yellow.

Provisions—Pork, 13 75 for prime, 15 25 for mess. Beef, 4 50 a 5 37 for old prime, 8 50 a 10 50 for old mess. Dressed hogs 5½ a 7c. Butter, 8 a 11c. for Ohio, 10 a 16c. for State. Cheese 6 a 6½c. for good dairies.

Beeswax—26c. for good yellow.

Feathers—39c. for prime Ohio.

Flax—8½c. for Jersey.

Hay—49 a 50c. for 100 lbs.

Hops—25 a 32c.

Lumber—12 50 for pine, 13 50 for spruce.

Seeds—1 25 a 1 30 for Flaxseed. Clover 9 a 9½c. Timothy 15 00 a 21 00 per tierce.

MARRIED.

In Cambridge, N. Y., on the 20th inst., by Eld. A. G. Bowler, Mr. DAVID C. GREEN, of Alfred Center, N. Y., to Miss EUNICE G. PRATT, of Cambridge, N. Y.

In Alfred, Oct. 18th, by Eld. N. V. Hull, Mr. THOMAS ELLIS to Miss ABBY LOUISA STILLMAN, all of Alfred.

In Hartsville, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1851, by Eld. H. P. Burdick, Mr. WILLIAM M. POTTER to Miss SOPHRONIA R. PALMITER, all of Hartsville.

In Genesee, N. Y., Oct. 19, by Elias I. Maxson, Esq., Mr. JAMES CHAMPLIN to Miss FANNY BAKER.

DIED.

In Villenovia, Chautauque Co., N. Y., Sept. 16th, Mrs. MARY DAVIS, wife of Joshua Davis, aged 76. Sister Davis embraced religion in early life, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Berlin, and continued her standing with that church, until she removed to Brookfield, and there united with the church. Thence she removed to Alfred, and joined the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in that town, with which she continued until called to join the church above, as we hope.

In Alfred, N. Y., Oct. 3d, 1851, Mr. SPICER SAUNDERS, in the 47th year of his age.

In Genesee, N. Y., Oct. 18th, 1851, of diarrhea, terminating in croup, GILBERT LUELLYN, youngest son of Albert and Fanny Crandall, aged one year and three months.

Though prattling babes have gone to rest,
Their spirits are among the blest. COMM.

LETTERS.

Daniel Coon, Bethuel Church, B. G. Stillman, H. P. Burdick, S. Davison, E. I. Maxson, A. B. Crandall, N. V. Hull, Jared Kenyon, W. P. Langworthy, G. R. Maxson, H. Lanphear, B. Hall, C. Spicer, Venus Coon.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Susan J. Clarke, Hopk'n, R. I.	$2 00	to vol. 7	No. 52
Elizabeth Stillman "	2 00	8	52
Amos Langworthy "	2 00	8	52
Samuel Alleng "	1 00	8	26
Hez. Lanphear, Perryville, R. I.	2 00	8	52
S. F. Randolph, Plainfield. N. J.	2 00	8	52
Bethuel Church, Tallmadge, Mich.	2 00	8	52
Abel Babcock, Milton, Wis.	4 00	7	52
A. D. Worden, Millport, Pa.	1 00	8	46
Barton Hall, Eagle Mills	2 00	8	52
D. S. Monroe, Alfred	2 00	9	10
Isaac Fenner, Alfred Center	2 00	8	52
R. L. Burdick, Leonardsville	2 00	9	16
Venus Coon, Sterlingville	3 00	8	40
W. D. Wilcox, DeRuyter	2 00	6	52
Henry C. Coon	2 00	7	52
Jabez Burdick, Little Genesee	2 00	8	52
Amos Green "	2 00	8	52
E. R. Crandall "	2 00	8	52
David C. Gardner "	4 00	5	52
Of H. P. Burdick, Alfred, for Sab. Sch. Visitor	$1 00
" C. Stillwell, Daggett's Mills, Pa.	25

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

A Proclamation,

By WASHINGTON HUNT, Governor of the State of New York.

The goodness of Almighty God has been signally manifested towards the people of this State during the present year. The blessings of liberty, national tranquility, and public health, have been enjoyed without interruption. The fruits of the earth, in overflowing abundance, have rewarded the labors of the husbandman. Public improvements have been advanced. The truths of knowledge and religion are more widely diffused, and our republican institutions have been preserved and strengthened.

A just sense of these beneficent dispositions should inspire universal gratitude toward our Divine Benefactor, and call forth appropriate demonstrations of homage and adoration.

Therefore, in compliance with usage, I respectfully recommend to the People of this State the observance of THURSDAY, the TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY of NOVEMBER NEXT, as a day of Prayer, Thanksgiving, and Praise.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto affixed my hand and the privy seal of the State, this sixteenth [L. S.] day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

By the Governor. WASHINGTON HUNT.
JAMES F. RUGGLES, Private Secretary.

Morning Line for Albany.

THE new and elegant steamer REINDEER, Capt. Albert Degroot, will leave New York from pier foot of Murray-st. every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday morning, at 7 o'clock, and returning, leave Albany every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at the same hour, making the usual landings each way. ☞ Meals served on board. For further information apply to JAMES BISHOP & CO., 3 Beaver-st.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of WM. DUNN & CO., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 commenced the first Wednesday in September, and continues forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.
Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

New York Weekly Times.

A very Large Newspaper for the Country.
EDITED BY HENRY J. RAYMOND.

Price $2 a year; 10 Copies for $15; 20 Copies $20.

On SATURDAY, September 27, the subscribers issued the first number of a NEW WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, in the city of New York, called the NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES, printed upon a very large quarto sheet of eight pages and FORTY-EIGHT COLUMNS, in close, clear type, and in the handsomest possible style.

The NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES will be printed on THURSDAY of each week, and will present THE NEWS OF THE DAY, in all departments and from all quarters; CORRESPONDENCE from all parts of Europe, from California, Mexico, and South America, and from all sections of the United States, written expressly for THE TIMES by intelligent gentlemen permanently enlisted in its support. FULL REPORTS of Congressional and Legislative Proceedings; of Public Meetings, Political and Religious; Transactions of Agricultural, Scientific, and Mechanical Associations; and generally of whatever may have interest or importance for any considerable portion of the community: LITERARY REVIEWS AND INTELLIGENCE, prepared by competent persons, and giving a clear, impartial, and satisfactory view of the Current Literature of the day: CRITICISMS of Music, the Drama, Painting, and of whatever in any department of Art may merit or engage attention: and EDITORIAL ARTICLES upon everything of interest or importance that may occur in any department—Political, Social, Religious, Literary, Scientific or Personal, written with all the ability, care and knowledge which the abundant means at the disposal of the subscribers will enable them to command.

THE WEEKLY TIMES will be under the Editorial management and control of HENRY J. RAYMOND; and while it will maintain firmly and zealously those principles which he may deem essential to the public good, and which are held by the great Whig party of the United States more nearly than by any other political organization, its columns will be free from bigoted devotion to narrow interests, and will be open within necessary limitations, to communications upon every subject of public importance.

In its Political and Social discussion, THE TIMES will seek to be CONSERVATIVE, in such a way as shall best promote needful REFORM. It will endeavor to perpetuate the good, and to avoid the evil, which the past has developed. While it will strive to check all rash innovation, and to defeat all schemes for destroying established and beneficent institutions, its best sympathies and co-operation will be given to every just effort to reform society, to infuse higher elements of well-being into our political and social organizations, and to improve the condition and the character of our fellow-men. Its main reliance for all improvement, personal, social, and political, will be upon Christianity and Republicanism—it will seek, therefore, at all times, the advancement of the one and the preservation of the other. It will inculcate devotion to the Union and the Constitution, obedience to Law, and a jealous love of that personal and civil Liberty which constitutions and laws are made to preserve. While it will assert and exercise the right freely to discuss every subject of public interest, it will not countenance any improper interference, on the part of the people of one locality, with the institutions or even the prejudices of any other. It will seek to allay, rather than excite agitation:—to extend industry, temperance, and virtue:—to encourage and advance Education:—to promote economy, concord and justice in every section of our country:—to elevate and enlighten public sentiment: and to substitute reason for prejudice, a cool and intelligent judgment for passion, in all public action and in all discussions of public affairs.

The subscribers intend to make THE TIMES at once the BEST and the CHEAPEST Weekly Family Newspaper in the United States. They have abundant means at their command, and are disposed to use them for the attainment of that end. The degree of success which may attend their efforts, will be left to the public judgment.

VOLUNTARY CORRESPONDENCE, communicating news, is respectfully solicited from all parts of the world. THE WEEKLY TIMES will be mailed to subscribers at the following rates:

Single Copies	$2.
Ten copies to one address	$15.
Twenty copies to one address	$20.

THE NEW YORK DAILY TIMES

Will be published at the same office EVERY MORNING and EVENING, and will be sent to subscribers in any part of the United States, at the low price of FOUR DOLLARS a year. All PAYMENTS for subscription or advertising must be made in advance; and postage on all letters must be prepaid. Communications for the editorial department must be addressed to HENRY J. RAYMOND, Editor of The New York Times: letters upon business or inclosing money, to RAYMOND, JONES & CO., Publishers.

Subscriptions and Advertisements left at the office, No. 118 Nassau st. or sent by mail, are respectfully solicited. RAYMOND, JONES & CO.

New York, October, 1851. o9t4.

Miscellaneous.

The Chinese in California.

By a San Francisco Correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune.

The Chinese are destined to exert an important influence in California. For the last six months they have supplied a larger number of immigrants than any other country—not excepting the Atlantic section of the Union. I mean to say, the excess of immigration has been more in their favor. Scarcely a week elapses without the arrival of 150 to 250 Celestials. Very few of them abandon the country. They appear to shape their course for permanent residence. The greater number equip themselves for mining and set off in search of gold. But many have settled down in trade or business in San Francisco. The various grades of society are well represented. Many of them are laborers and rustics, while some appear to be educated and polished. They all hail from Canton. It would not be creditable to come from any other place.

It is a curious fact, that although there are from ten to twenty thousand of these people in California, very few of them are females. The women do not come. I know of only two or three Chinese women in this city.

You can scarcely look into the streets but you see troops of Chinese. Here are a dozen marching in single file, irregularly, and making a tour of observation, noticing with curiosity everything around them. Here is another troop, twenty or more, laden with tin pans, boots, and various preparations for the mines. Still larger bodies may be seen with sacks of sugar and rice on their backs, carrying them to their storehouses, after the manner of ants. Or, if the load be too heavy for one, two of them tug it on a pole. There is a chap with a huge basket of clothing, at the heels of an odd-looking genius who wears odd-looking spectacles, and who reads his book as he goes, to find the proper stopping places. Occasionally you behold fifty or a hundred in one gang, just arrived, and starting with amazement at everything, getting along about as fast as children going to school on a parade day.

The Chinese are slow in assuming the American costume. Their clumsy shoes first come off, and are replaced by boots, often much too large. They are fond of big boots, and will seldom submit to a good fit if they can get a pair of boots of greater capacity for the same money. Their feet are generally small. A friend of mine had a stock of small boots which he did not know what to do with—a Chinaman, attracted by their cheapness, bought a pair, and soon returned with swarms of his countrymen, who exhausted the supply before night. After sticking their nether extremities into leather boots, the revolution attacks the head. The black woolen skull-cap, or the big cane umbrella-hat, heavy as Charlemagne's crown, gives place to the California slouch. Further than this the Chinaman seldom advances; about one in fifty takes the next step, which is to don the entire American costume; but the mass continue to exhibit their wiry, elliptic shanks enveloped in tight flannel or nankeen, or each one sticking through a petticoat which ventures scarcely below the knee.

The most distinguished man among them is Norman Assing, one of the first emigrants, who dresses in the American style, and speaks the language tolerably well. Assing is a sort of prince or priest among his countrymen. He has identified himself fully with his adopted country and feels as much interest in it as a native born. On the occasion of celebrating the admission of California into the Union, he entered into the proceedings with enthusiasm, and appeared intoxicated with joy. He distributed fire-crackers by handfuls to the boys, refusing to sell them, and declared it was the happiest day of his life.

The Chinese are great gabblers, and their dialect strikes you as singular. You can scarcely catch a distinct sound. It is nearly all vowel, the consonants being almost undistinguishable. Americans rarely attempt to learn it.

When employed as cooks and servants, they find it convenient to assume an American name; but under other circumstances they make no change. A cook who had some outlandish Chinese name, made a choice of Thomas Tuck as his English synonym. A card lately published in our papers, recommending a certain ship in which the authors had arrived, was signed San Man, Chung Yee, Pew Chung, Lee Chin, and Long Fun. Their signs are becomming quite numerous on our streets. We have—Laundry Establishment, by Pow Cheong; Afive, Canton Goods; Ton Woo, Chinese Goods; Ying Ho, Canton Wash-house; Chinese Laundry, by Hong Hing; Chong Sing, Wash-house; Wang Shing, Chinese Silk Store; On Chong, Washing and Ironing.

One of their grand depots is at the head of Clay-st., where they have erected a very handsome storehouse. The sign is painted in their own tongue, though the characters are placed horizontally, and not in perpendicular columns, as is their custom. The house is crammed, like their other quartering places, with hundreds of trunks and bundles, and with various kinds of merchandize. In the adjoining lot are between twenty and thirty tents, all occupied. About this one establishment two or three hundred persons are congregated. The merchants mostly remain in their stores, waiting for the visits of customers. Some small traders hawk their wares from door to door. They are equal to the Yankees in driving a bargain, and their economy is undoubted. It is said that they can out-trick the Yankees in trade, in proof of which, specimens of tea made of dead wood are exhibited. It is even said that they can transform linen shirts into excellent muslin ones, in the process of washing and ironing. When a customer calls, they exhibit wonderful expertness in comprehending his wants and arranging a bargain. But the tax collector avers that he cannot by any possible means make them understand the object of his visit.

They are very temperate, and a Chinaman is scarcely ever known to be drunk or noisy in the streets. In their houses they make merry with music and dancing. They are fond of smoking cigaritos, and are growing in civilization fast enough to smoke in the streets.

On a Sunday morning lately, I entered their establishment in Clay-st., and found some twenty of them sitting on the boxes, quietly occupied in sewing bags of buckskin for gold dust. They were evidently unskilled in the art. One of the party wore a thimble, and others had a rag tied on the finger instead. I was showing one of them how to do his work better, when another stepped up to show me his work, which was neatly done He was highly gratified with my approbation.

Their ironing is done with a smooth-bottomed skillet, filled with live coals, which is moved over the fabric by means of the handle. One of them found a vest that he was ironing to be too dry. Taking into his mouth a sup of water, he sputtered it over the garment with wonderful dexterity. Each ironing table is supplied with a bowl of water for this purpose.

Diet and Habits of the Hungarians.

An intelligent correspondent of The Independent, giving an account of his observations in Hungary, speaks of the uniformly strong and athletic appearance of the inhabitants. He goes on to speak of their habits of eating as follows:—

I took considerable pains in Hungary to notice the diet and habits of eating of the people, as connected with this remarkable vigor of the race, hoping some useful hints might be derived for America on the subject. This seemed more desirable, as there is no country of Europe so resembling our own, or at least the Middle States of our own, in climate. The same extremes of heat and cold; the same sudden, violent changes of temperature; the same clear, stimulating atmosphere, which mark the American climate, and distinguish it from the usual European. There are districts in Hungary which produce the most delicious grapes and melons and peaches in the summer, which are buried in snow in winter, precisely like the inland counties some years in New-York. And in traveling over the best part of the land, I might have thought, as far as productions were concerned, I was journeying through the plains of inner New-York or Pennsylvania; the only exception being the vine, for the want of which in America I am disposed to think the cause is not to be sought in the climate.

In respect to the habits of the people, the great peculiarity seemed to be their temperance in eating and drinking, and at the same time their making of the meals a pleasant social occasion, and not merely a means of filling up the stomachs. When I say they are "temperate," I mean they indulge in no excess; as, in respect to wine-drinking, there is scarcely a man in the land who does not drink the light wine at his dinner and supper. But with the Hungarian the meal-time is a time for social intercourse, when friends meet; or when the children and relatives all gather with the parents, and have almost their only merry, familiar conversation, during the day. They sit a great while at table, and taste of a great variety of dishes, at least among the better classes. Still they are not by any means as hearty eaters as the Americans or English. Indeed, to a traveler with a keen appetite, or to one accustomed to the vigorous exploits of the English at the table, the Hungarians seem really abstemious. They make much more use of fruits, and salads, and curious puddings, and the light pure wines, than we of the Anglo-Saxon race. Indeed, a Hungarian would consider himself in danger of becoming a sot, if he should drink every day the strong brandied wines which every Englishman has on his table. The English in Hungary, too, say it is impossible in that clear, oxygenated climate, to keep up their habits of beef-eating and drinking.

The first meal among the Hungarians is taken at seven or eight in the morning, and consists only of a glass of coffee with rich milk and some meagre cuttings of cold toast broken up and eaten in the coffee.

This is the universal breakfast for all classes except the poorest Bauer. Between this and the dinner at one or two, nothing is usually eaten or drank. The dinner, as I have said, is long, with a great variety of dishes, not essentially differing from our own, except that it is lighter, and a greater use is made of light wines. This meal is always followed by a cup of coffee. The only other meal is the supper at eight o'clock in the evening—a long meal again, with soup, fish, pudding and wine. Tea is very little drank in the land; sugar and sweetened articles, too, are seldom used.

What especial theory of diet, to draw from all this, I am at a loss to determine. Still, the facts may be useful to some who are investigating the matter. The principal things, worthy of imitation, seem to be the moderation and sociability of the meals, and the distance of time at which they are separated—the last being, no doubt, very conducive to health. The principal cause of their vigorous health, and well-formed bodies, must be found, without doubt, in their open-air pursuits and manly exercises, to which they are ardently attached. They are a nation of herdsmen and farmers, and are enjoying the benefits of their pursuits.

No account of their habits would be complete, without stating that the whole population, from the nobleman and clergyman, down to the lowest Rauer on the Puszta, smoke incessantly, from morning till night.

The Syracuse "Patriots."

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of Auburn, Monday, Oct. 20th, gives the following conclusion of the "treason" cases before Judge Conkling:—

The persons under arrest for aiding in the rescue of Jerry, accompanied by their friends to the extent of about 150, including many prominent ladies and gentlemen of Syracuse, came to this city this morning to receive the decision of Judge Conkling. The utmost good feeling and harmony prevailed throughout the whole party. At 11 o'clock the Judge called the Court to order, and announced that he was ready to decide upon the case before him. He then delivered a written opinion. He alluded to the fact that the evidence, although slight, and particularly in the case of Porter, was still sufficient to establish prima facie the guilt of the parties implicated It was not in proof, however, that the parties had armed with a view of levying war against the United States, so that treason could not be construed. The proceedings in the case of the fugitive appeared to be entirely regular, and any interference with the proper administration of the law must be punished. The defendants must all give bail for their appearance in Court at Buffalo, on the 2d Tuesday of November next, or be committed to prison. The Judge next urged the people to obey all the laws of the United Sates, and counseled strongly to refrain from any act of violence. He then deprecated the course of the Syracuse "Patriots," and urged that we must rely upon the repeal of an unjust law, rather than open violence to it. He said all good and wise men would obey this law, and only fanatics resist it. He alluded to the fact that this particular law had been prolific in the creation of those who counseled opposition, and who were more injudicious than wise.

The defendants' counsel stated that they were ready to give bail. District Attorney Lawrence said the bail required for the white men would be $2,000 each, and for the colored men $500. The persons thus held for trial are: Ira H. Cobb, merchant; Moses Summers, of The Onondaga Standard; James Davis, a nephew of Gov. Davis of Mass.; Stephen Porter, butcher; William L. Salmon, (Granby, Oswego Co.) farmer; Harrison Allen, (colored) hired man; William Thompson, do. school-teacher; Prince Jackson, do. farrier. The sureties for Mr. Cobb are Wm. H. Seward and Alfred Cobb—For the other prisoners, Charles B. Sedgwick, O. T. Burt, H. Hoyt, Lyman Clary, Henry Gifford, Charles Leonard, Alanson Thorp, Willian E. Abbott, Hiram Putnam, R. W. Washburn, E. A. Yoe, D. McDougal, Abner Bates, John Ames, J. W. Leavenworth. Samuel Mead, George Barnes, Chas. A. Wheaton and Wm. H. Seward respectively became sureties.

Thus ended, for the present, the first act of the Fugitive Slave Law in Syracuse.

Allow me to annex a brief recapitulation of the charges established in evidence against the prisoners; remembering that some of it is most suspicious and doubtful evidence.

Mr. Cobb is proved to have been in the room, before the rescue, and one witness swears that he saw him turn off the gas-light.

Mr. Summers is proved to have jostled an Alderman while the crowd were taking Jerry through the streets, and subsequently to have said "we've got him."

Mr. Davis is proved to have been near the plank and had hold of it at the time it was battering down the doors of the office.

Mr Porter is proved to have been on one of the bridges over the canal, and to have stood near some one who cried "bring him out."

Mr. Salmon is proved to have taken some interest in the affair, and requested that the people should see that the Fugitive had justice, and afterward, when telling his neighbors what had occurred, and what the people had done, he unfortunately said "we" and "us" instead of "they."

The three colored men are proved to have been in or near the crowd; and that is about the extent of their crime.

Hints to Farmers' Boys.

There is one thing I would like to impress upon the minds of the farmers of this country. To all you that have boys that can write, get each one a memorandum book; a few sheets of paper will do, if nothing better can be had; and in that have each one keep an account of every day's work done in the year, the kind of work employed in, and the day of the month and date of the year. If in sowing, mention the kind of grain, and the amount of seed per acre, the time of planting and of reaping. In fact, I should have them note all the passing events of the farm; and as they grow older they will find more of importance to note. Six cents will buy a book that will last one year, to commence with. My word for it, if the farmers will adopt this course, their sons will be much better farmers than their fathers. It may seem like dry business to commence with the first of January, but as the spring opens, the green grass appears, and bright prospects are in our paths, the tasks will be more pleasing every day until the close of the year. Who would not give twice what the paper and ink cost, could they but obtain a memorandum book written by a grandfather a hundred years ago? Try it, farmers, young and old; keep a journal of every day, and you will become a race of scientific book farmers, not to be imposed upon. George Washington, one of the best farmers of America, kept a journal of the farm. Much might be written to prove the benefit of such a course, if adopted; but I leave it for the present, hoping some one more capable will write upon the subject hereafter.

An Emerald Mine.

The Overland Chronicle contains the following interesting account of an emerald mine in Eygpt:—

"It appears that the existence of an emerald mine on Mount Zabarah, situated on an isle in the Red Sea, has long been known. It had been worked by the Pacha of Egypt, but the operations had been stopped in the latter years of the reign of Mehemet Ali. A short time ago an English company obtained permission to carry on the digging, which promised to yield them immense wealth. Recently their engineer, Mr. R. Allan, discovered at a great depth traces of a great gallery bearing about it evidence of extreme antiquity. Here he found ancient instruments and utensils, and a stone with a hieroglyphic inscription on it in a great measure destroyed. It appears that in his time, Belzoni, to whom the world is so much indebted for its knowledge of the wonders of Egypt, had given it as his opinion that this mine had been worked by the ancient Egyptians, and this discovery establishes the soundness of his remark. The configuration of the galley, and the nature and shape of the tools found in it, it is said, exhibit great skill in the art of engineering. From the inscription on the stone, so far as it can be read, it is believed that the laboring in the mine of Zabarah had commenced in the reign of the great Sesostris (living about 1650 before Christ) whom antiquity describes as combining the character of a conquerer with that of a prince of vast enterprise in the arts of peace."

The Lunatic Captain.

The fifth report of the Inspectors of Lunatics in Ireland states that one man confined at Dundrum Asylum, Capt. S., on his return from the West Indies, murdered seven of his crew at sea. On leaving Barbadoes he labored under depression, and in a day or two accused his mate of exciting the sailors to mutiny. During the night he scarcely ever took rest, and for the last two nights lay on a sofa, with two loaded pistols and a cutlass by his side, apprehensive of being attacked. When in sight of the Cork coast he threatened on arriving at Cork to prosecute the whole crew. The mate remonstrated, when Capt. S. replied, "Show your obedience by allowing me to bind you down on deck." The man consented. He then called on the second mate, pointed out what had been done, and desired him to follow the example. He did so; in fact, seven or eight individuals permitted themselves to be fastened to the deck with ropes. When thus incapable of defense, he deliberately murdered them in various ways; the eighth escaped into the hold, and was wounded there by a pistol-shot. At the moment, a pilot-boat ran alongside, Capt. S. jumped overboard, was saved, and brought into Cork harbor with his vessel. He is now a religious monomaniac, generally very tranquil and rational, subject, however, at intervals, to maniacal paroxysms, the forerunner of which is an excess of piety, with a recurrence to the phraseology of his former profession. He is still impressed with the belief that the crew meditated mutiny. [Dublin Journal.

Money in the British Post Office.

Some interesting British Post Office returns have been printed. It seems that in two years, from the 5th of January, 1849, to the 5th of January last, £18,870 10s. 4d., including bank notes, was found in letters, returned to the dead-letter office, and £1,226,283 18s 1d. in bills, checks, money orders, &c., nearly the whole of which, including the money, was delivered to the writers of the letters. It is stated that no letters are forfeited; if all methods taken to effect the delivery of letters fail, they are brought back, opened, and returned to the writers. Letters refused by the writers, and those for whom no owners can be found, are destroyed for the want of space to preserve them. Letters containing cash are never destroyed, but the amount, when the writer cannot be found, is paid into the revenue at the expiration of three years. A registry and index are kept of the letters and their contents, which are restored to any claimants proving themselves to be entitled to them. Dead letters, containing bills and property other than money, are kept three years; at the expiration of that period they are destroyed, and the property is sent to an auctioneer and sold by public auction. The proceeds are paid to the account of the revenue.

Weeds, Voracious Feeders.

Constant and unceasing warfare against every species of noxious weeds, is one. of the prime duties of the thorough farmer. No one who has not given careful thought to the subject, can imagine how much the productiveness of even the best tilled farms is abridged by their presence. A writer in the Germantown Telegraph, speaking of this subject, remarks:—

"All plants which come legitimately under this name are great feeders; they require a very much larger amount of pabulum to perfect their several systems, and carry them successfully forward to complete perfection, than the cultivated plants of equal weight and size, and are consequently vastly more emasculating to the soil. A single 'pig weed' will abstract from the soil in the course of its vegetative career, as much as is required to give perfection to four spires of productive wheat. Many other weeds are equally voracious in their habits, and where numerous and unrestricted, abstract from the soil to an extent almost too great to be believed. All weeds, therefore, should be destroyed. Not a worthless plant should be allowed to tenant the farm; nothing that will not make some valuable return for the food and nourishment it consumes. This is the true policy for the farmer."

Disposition of Cattle to Fatten.

Many people act on the supposition that all cattle are alike in their disposition to fatten. No greater mistake can be committed, since half the feed will bring forward one animal, required to produce another, and the economy of fattening cattle depends in no small degree in selecting the right animals. Mr. Stephens gives some rules for selecting animals disposed to early maturity. He says:—

"The most prominent indication of this disposition is a loose, thick, mellow skin, as if floating upon a stratum of fat below; and such a skin is invariably covered with long, soft, mossy feeling hair, bearing a decided color. A firmness of texture over the whole body is essential to a disposition to fatten; no fat encumbers the bones of the legs and of the head. All the extremities, the limbs, head and tail are small, fine, and tapering from the body. The eye is prominently set in the head, and with a placid expression. The forehead is broad. The ears are sensible to every new sound. The muzzle is sharp, the nostrils distended, and the jaws distinct and clean. The muscles broad and flat. The blood-vessels large and full. The chest is broad, and the tail flat at the top, and broad and tapering to the tuft of hair. The line of the back is straight and level, and the ribs round. A back high above the level is narrow, and is accompanied with flat ribs and a long narrow face, which are both indicative of a want of disposition to fatten. When the back is below the level, the fat and flesh are mostly upon the lower part of the carcase, and the tallow increases in the interior. The flanks and cod are then thick and fat. In such a configuration the fore-quarters are larger than the hind. Such an animal evinces a disposition to fatten, but lays on coarse pieces. When the curved lines abound over the body, and play into one another, giving a brilliancy to the surface, while the sweeping lines of the contour, with the tapering fineness of the extremities, the pleasing countenance, and the joyous spirit, a symmetry, a state of health, and disposition to improve are conjoined, they afford the highest satisfaction and profit to the breeder.

Fruit Trees by the Roadside.

The practice of setting out fruit trees by the roadside cannot be to highly recommended. In many parts of Europe this practice is general, and the fatigued traveler acknowledges the well-timed hospitality thus afforded him. The excuse is often made, that the fruit will be stolen; but if the practice were general, the amount of fruit taken by wayfarers would only be what common hospitality would freely grant; and in Germany every third tree, by custom, may be tabooed, (the owner of the adjoining farm ties a piece of rag to one of the lower limbs of the tree,) and no traveler will touch it. Travelers inform us that no reward will tempt a German stage-driver to regale his passengers with fruit from a marked tree—two out of the three being left to their use, if desired, renders the selected tree free from the chance of being used. The amount of fertilizing material continually wasted upon roads would be available by such a practice, and nothing but extreme selfishness will prevent the use of these materials for public benefit. Many of the larger sort of fruit trees, which are highly ornamental and afford fine shade, like the display of costly mansions, only excite the poor to envy, without adding materially to their comfort or health.

FASCINATION.—The Uniontown (Pa.) Democrat, speaking of the power of fascination attributed to snakes, says:—

Two gentlemen of this vicinity, descending the road to the Ohiople Falls of the Young river, a few days ago, discovered a grey squirrel sitting in the middle of the road. At the side of the road lay a large black snake. The squirrel seemed perfectly stupified—made no effort to escape. The snake approached it so cautiously and slowly, that no motion was perceptible, except by a gradual diminution of the distance between them. At length the snake reached the squirrel—passing its mouth over its head as if licking it, for the purpose of covering it with slime or saliva. This done, then it commenced swallowing it,—when the gentlemen killed both the snake and the squirrel."

CURIOUS PEAR TREE.—A very curious pear tree is to be seen in a garden within a block or two of the entrance to the Greenwood Cemetery, near New York. Every alternate year one of the two sides blossoms and bears fruit. This year, for instance, one side will bear an abundant crop of sweet fruit; the other nothing. The side that does not bear this year, will blossom and yield a good crop of sour fruit next year, and so alternately. This has been the case ever since the tree first yielded fruit. Altogether it is a great curiosity.

Variety.

The London Morning Chronicle praises some Brussels Carpets exhibited at the fair, and which were woven upon power-looms at the manufactory of Mr. Bigelow, the inventor, in Massachusetts. The Chronicle says: "Although various attempts have been made to adapt the power-loom to carpet weaving in England, there is not, we believe, at this moment, any machinery perfected for that object. Our American brethren have therefore gained another step ahead of us, and have won another laurel on this well-contested field of the industrial arts."

A merchant tailor of Warsaw, named Michaelowski, obtained from the Russian Government permission to go to Paris on business, stipulating formally not to go to London. The temptation of seeing the Crystal Palace, however, proved too strong for him, and he went in spite of his promise On his return to Warsaw, he was sent for by Gen. Abramowitch, the Chief of Police, who knew his transgression, and punished for it by being flogged with a cane.

The Dakota Tawaxitku Kin ("Dakota Friend") informs the public that in the Dakota or Sioux language, the names of the buffalo and the deer are derived from that of the moose; the names of the horse, wolf, and fox, from that of the dog; and the names of the swan, brant, and duck, from that of the goose. When the Dakotas hunt large animals, (as deer,) they call it hunting food; when they hunt only small animals, they call it shooting; and when they hunt any and every thing, they simply call it hunting.

Of the 31 earldoms created by James I., of England, only 9 are now in existence. King Charles created 33, of which only 7 remain. Of the 29 created by King William and Queen Anne, 19 are extinct. The present Duke of Buccleugh derives his title from the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth, while the ducal rights of the Richmond family trace their origin to the son of Nell Gwynne, by Charles II.

From a printed return of trials for poisoning or attempting to poison in England, Scotland and Ireland, during the last eleven years, we learn that the total number is 264; the whole number of parties whose lives have been taken or attempted to be taken by poison is 243; the number of convictions is 74. The total of Scotch cases is 15, of convictions 7. The total of Irish cases is 56, of convictions 13.

The Governor of N.H., has appointed Thursday, the 27th of November, as a day of public thanksgiving and praise. The same day has been appointed in Massachusetts; and it is stated that there is an understanding among all the Governors in the Union to appoint that day for the observance of this annual festival.

There is a Colony of 12,000 Germans at San Leopold in the South of Brazil. They are neutral in the present contest with Buenos Ayres. Their fixed idea, or rather their dream is of a German Republic from Rio Padro to Santa Catharina. They have only 400 slaves. All are workers, and in this they are far superior to the natives, the latter being dependent on slavery.

When Dr. Francis, of New York, visited the birth-place of Robert Burns, he said to the widow of the immortal bard, "Your husband, madam, was a magnificent poet; his name is well known and honored throughout America, he was truly a great genius." "I have been told so since his death," was the reply.

It was amongst the loveliest customs of the ancients to bury the young at morning twilight, for as they strove to give the softest interpretation to death, so they imagined Aurora, who loved the young, had stolen them to her embrace.

In the city of Aberdeen (Scotland) the streets are swept every day, at an annual cost of £1,400, and the refuse brings in £2,000 a year. In Perth the scavenging costs £1,300 per annum, and the manure sells for £1,730.

The Bank of England uses in her accounts no less than 60 folio ledgers, filled up completely every day! 28,000 bank-notes are thrown off daily, and all so registered that the abstraction of a single note is followed by immediate detection.

A late writer says, "Nobody bears adversity like a woman. Remove her from the parlor to the garret, and instead of taking arsenic, as a man would, she actually becomes more cheerful."

The Gardiner (Me.) Transcript says the crop of winter wheat in that State this season will yield over one million bushels—far exceeding the wheat crop of any preceding year.

Of the one hundred and fifty-one railroads which have been chartered by the Legislature of the State of New-York, says Mr. A. C. Flagg, but thirty have been constructed.

A GREAT CHANGE IN LIFE is like a cold bath in winter—we all hesitate at the first plunge.

A full report of the Michigan Railroad Conspiracy trial has just been published at Detroit; it forms a volume of 1,000 pages.

John Perkins has been convicted of manslaughter at Utica.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J. W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First	commences	Aug. 27	and closes	Dec. 2.
" Second	"	Dec. 3	" "	March 16.
" Third	"	March 17	" "	June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

BOARD, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws. &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. CLARKE, Sec. } of Trustees.

DERUYTER, July 18, 1851.

Election Notice.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Albany, August 27, 1851.

TO the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: SIR,—Notice is hereby given that at the General Election, to be held in this State, on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Samuel A. Foot.

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan.

A Comptroller, in the place of Philo C. Fuller.

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt.

An Attorney-General, in the place of Levi S. Chatfield.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Hezekiah C. Seymour.

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Charles Cook.

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Alexander H. Wells.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court, for the First Judicial District, in the place of James G. King, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Senator for the IIId, IVth, Vth, and VIth Senate Districts, in the place of Richard S. Williams, Clarkson Crolius, James W. Beekman, and Edwin D. Morgan, whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

County officers to be elected for said County:

Sixteen Members of Assembly.

A Register, in the place of Cornelius V. Anderson.

A Recorder, in the place of Frederick A. Tallmadge.

Two Judges of the Superior Court, in the place of Thomas J. Oakley and John L. Mason.

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Daniel P. Ingraham.

A Surrogate, in the place of Alexander W. Bradford.

A Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, in the place of Jacob L. Dodge.

Two Governors of the Alms-House, in the place of Simeon Draper and Francis R. Tillou.

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, there is to be elected a Justice for each of the six Judicial Districts, into which the City of New York is districted, pursuant to Chapter 514, Laws of 1851. Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, August 28, 1851.—I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of the notice of the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, received this day, from the Hon. Christopher Morgan, Secretary of State. THOMAS CARNLEY,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

N. B.—All the public newspapers within this County will please publish this notice once in each week, until the Election, and send in their bills for advertising the same as soon as the Election is over; so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors and passed for payment. Sept. 4.

People's Line of New York and Albany Steamers.

THE steamers ISAAC NEWTON, Capt. Wm. H. Peck, and HENDRIK HUDSON, Capt. A. P. St. John, forming the People's Line between New York and Albany, leaving foot of Cortland-st., New York, every evening at 6 o'clock, and Albany evening on the arrival of the Express Train from Buffalo.

The steamer NEW WORLD, Capt. Acker, leaves foot of Chambers-st., New York, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning, at 7 o'clock, and Albany on alternate days.

For passage or freight apply on board, or to A. P. Schultz at the office foot of Cortland-st.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville. Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinten—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.
Terms:
$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.
☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.
☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.
☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to
GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

VOL. VIII.—NO. 21. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1851. WHOLE NO. 385.

The Sabbath Recorder.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

NIAGARA FALLS.

As we passed a bend in the river, some eight or ten miles from the FALLS OF NIAGARA, we heard the sound of their waters for the first time. Niagara, in the expressive language of the Iroquois Indians, signifies Thunder of Waters; yet its voice did not have, either here as it came rolling up over the surface of the river, or at most other places, that deep thunder tone which we had anticipated. It was an irregular, watery flutter, similar to that produced by the rapid motion of the wheels of a steamboat, accompanied, every now and then, by a crash, as if some additional stream, or pent-up fountain, had broken forth, and taken the fearful leap. The sun hung suspended obliquely over the falls, in the tender golden sky of the afternoon. The mists of the cataract arose from the sparkling bed of the river, and floated off towards the sun, breaking into fleeces of silver, flecked with gold, and gradually melting away into transparent air. We bathed in the swiftly-rushing waters, and felt the pressure of their gathering force preparatory to the desperate plunge soon to be made.

As we drew near to the falls, there frequently came flitting across our spirits an emotion half hesitating, half shuddering, as if we were approaching the visible personification of grandeur and sublimity. I stood by the cataract with uncovered head—the Word of God in my hand—His works before me. I wished the impression to be not only of the beautiful, but also of a higher nature—the religious. I felt no sudden thrill of delight or enthusiasm. Everything was too grand, too majestic, to thrill and agitate. It calmed, subdued, and chastened the spirit to a degree at times almost oppressive. I ran not from place to place—looked not after the curious—made no inquiries—but remained nearly stationary, hour after hour, changing just enough, now and then, to raise a new fold in the curtain that hid a part of the full scene from my view. The first day insensibly stole away as I thus sat or stood, alternately reading some truth from the page of revelation, then turning and reading a responsive truth from the page of nature spread out before me. As the sun sank in the west, and tipped with gold the spray that continually arose like sweet perfumes from oblations poured by nature's self to nature's God, I hid my face in my hands, and let my mind run back to the time when Niagara first began to chant the bass in the peans of the universe—thence followed down the slow and solemn tread of years, and listened, in imagination, to the cataract's roar, echoing through the silent forests, unheard by man. Time passed on. Man in a savage state came, and listened, and wondered. Now, the savage and the civilized, the uncultivated and the cultivated, mingle their emotions of delight and admiration. Again, my imagination darted forward to the time when Niagara's voice shall be worn out and hushed with age, or drowned amid the roar and crash of consuming worlds. It climbed the steps of man's immortality, and viewed him when the remembrance of this world shall be but a dim speck in his retrospective vision—when the impressions of Niagara shall have faded from the minds of all—even the most impressible that ever beheld its matchless majesty. Faded, did I say? No—that can never be. The slightest impression made upon the soul will ever remain—the slightest touch upon its chords will cause them to vibrate to all eternity. Niagara! may thy impressions upon my spirit be those of eternal beauty—mayest thou touch chords that will vibrate in unison with eternal love, and joy, and harmony!

Although the river is quite rapid for a few miles after leaving lake Erie, yet for several miles above the falls it appears as quiet as a lake; but as it approaches the rapids, it becomes narrow and violent, and for about one mile before reaching the falls, it rushes down a declivity of some fifty feet to the edge of the precipice, over which it leaps into the chasm one hundred and sixty feet below. There are several islands in the center of the river, that divide the falling sheet of water into three cascades. The largest of these is Iris or Goat Island. It runs down to the verge of the precipice, forming a division between the American and Canadian sheets of some seventy or eighty rods in width. The smaller islands, Luna, Ship, Brig, Bath, Bird, the Three Sisters, &c., cluster above Iris Island, and between it and the American shore. A bridge leads from the shore to Bath Island, and from it to Iris Island. This, in turn, is connected with others, making a safe passage to some of the most enchanting of nature's scenery. These bridges were built by running out from a pier timbers balanced by heavy weights. From the ends of these timbers stones were dropped into the water till they appeared above its boiling surface. This process was repeated until the islands were reached.

As we walked these bridges, or gazed down into the waters that wildly dashed beneath, we instinctively trembled, as trembled the foundation on which we stood at the shock of the stream. How impressive to be thus suspended over waters which no mortal dare enter!

We made the tour of the islands, for the first time, just as the moon began to shed its misty light on our pathway. The grasshopper and cricket were singing their vesper songs. The trees of the islands stood in quiet joy, bathed in moonlight; while all around us there was a sound as of tempests, congregating their watery legions, or sending them forth on missions of destruction. Beauty and grandeur, repose and tumult, are here blended as naught but the hand of Omnipotence could blend them. It is desirable that these retreats, sacred to sublimity, should be preserved in their primeval state, unscathed by the hand of man; but such is not their destiny. The Yankee, the shavings of whose whittlings are wafted by every breeze, whose whistle is heard in every clime, has evidently been long puzzled here—not knowing exactly what to do with the waters thus running to waste. As he has paced these shores and islands, whittling and whistling, or stood with hands thrust into the depths profound of his pockets, gazing upon the thundering cataract, he has frequently exclaimed, "What a glorious mill privilege." He has the idea at last. The clink of his hammer is heard in these wild retreats. Mills are going up on these islands, and doubtless ere long the hum of spindles, the clatter of shuttles and looms, and the clank of machinery, will form a very important and enlivening accompaniment to the thunder of Niagara.

From Iris Island, you pass by a bridge to a tower which is built upon the brink of the Horse-shoe Fall, and as far out on a rocky islet as the current of waters will permit. From the top of this tower is presented one of the most imposing views to be obtained at the falls. Here we stood and looked into the boiling abyss below, sending up sounds and mists, as if a thousand Vulcans were at work by their flaming forges beneath. But the fancied fumes of Vulcan furnaces, fell upon us in cool, refreshing spray. We turn and look up the stream. The moon is hanging with pale and misty light directly over the rapids, whence the waters, foaming and tossing, rush towards us, glittering in the light, like fields of moving snow, spotted with rocks that raise their dark heads as barriers to the threatening destruction. On the one hand, is the deep-toned, humid voice of the cataract, speaking steady and solemn; on the other, the rapids, wild, impulsive, and exhilerating, while the moon smiles full in our face, and the stars twinkle mildly overhead. Thus shut out from every human being, and surrounded by emblems of Omnipotent Power, foaming, and tossing, and hurling, and thundering about me, I felt a sense of vastness and sublimity sweep over my spirit—agitating and thrilling—accompanied with a sense of separation from humanity. I was alone and unsheltered, amid the visible manifestations of the power of Deity. It was too oppressive and overwhelming for the spirit to bear. I hastened down, and away from the spot, but with an image upon my mind of that moonlight scene, which I wish never to efface or alter.

Let us go over to the Canada side, by way of the Suspension Bridge. This bridge is situated one and a half miles below the Falls, and was built in 1849, under the direction of Mr. Ellet. It is some eight hundred feet in length and two hundred and thirty feet above the river, and capable of sustaining two hundred and fifty tons. It is a glorious achievement of human skill. As you stand by the river below, and see it, like a wiry thing of life, spanning the gorge above, and behold men, women, children, horses and carriages, passing and re-passing—their forms apparently moving along on the distant sky, your curiosity and admiration will be excited. The excitement will be greatly increased when you come to walk it yourself. It trembles and quivers at your tread, as if walking upon living nerves, yet you walk secure far above waters upon which the craft of no mortal can sail. Standing upon it, you have a striking and magical view of the works of both nature and art. Up the river, full in view, the cataract pours—beneath you the river, just arousing from the shock of the plunge, roars in maddened rapids, which drown even the voice of the cataract—down the river is the whirlpool, towards which the angry waters are hastening.

We made the tour of Lundy's Lane—ascended the Tower—took a view of the scenery around, and listened to the old soldier's story of the bloody battle fought here—questioned him about the position and appearance of the two armies—the manner of their approach and retreat, &c.; but all of these things sounded harsh and sorrowful, and we soon returned to listen again to nature's voice.

Standing upon Table Rock, you have one of the best views to be obtained of the falling sheet. On the American side, the falls stretch off from you, so as to present the view more in perspective—the river, in the direction of the falling sheet, being nearly three fourths of a mile wide. But the falls forming an acute angle with the Canada shore, they are here brought more directly before you, seeming to pour at your feet. As the falling waters break over the edge of the wall of rocks, they divide into inverted cones, and pyramids of living green, tipt with foliage of purest white, but are lost in foam, and mist, and spray, long before reaching the bottom. Going down to the foot of the falls, you tremblingly pass under the remains of Table Rock, hanging sullen and threatening over your pathway, as if just ready to fall and cover you. If you wish, you can procure a guide and pass under the falling sheet, on a little shelf or rock three feet wide, and about mid-way between the top and bottom of the cataract.

> "What august scenes salute the wondering eye!
> Floods that seem gushing through the unriven sky,
> Plunge madly down from glory into gloom—
> Flash up in spray, and thunder from the tomb."

We took the ferry for the American side. The waters over which we passed bubbled, and boiled, and surged, and foamed, with a wild, green, frothy aspect, as if bewildered by the shock. The cataract appears like one vast amphitheater of falling water, half hid by the ascending spray. We hastened up the ferry stairs, across on to the islands, and descended the Biddle stair-case, for the purpose of passing under the middle or Crescent Fall. Dressed for the occasion, we followed our guide down behind the falling sheet into the Cave of the Winds, where the atmosphere is unceasingly tossing the spray in every direction, and twisting it into every variety of form. The winds and large watery fragments of the falling flood, strike you with such force as to cause you frequently to gasp for breath, and making it almost impossible to retain your foothold without clinging to the railing that has been provided for your support. On looking upwards, the wild waters plunging over our heads, with the rays of the sun falling full upon them, and mingling with their snowy fleeces, presented a glittering scene of gorgeous grandeur. As we passed on, and partly out from under the falling sheet, we found ourselves in the presence of rainbows, forming complete circles, varying from ten to twenty feet in diameter. These bows, whenever the sun shines, are in constant play. As we stood here amid the dashing waters, the rising spray, the rainbows, all in activity,

> "Eternal, beautiful, serene, sublime," we felt for the first time the oppressive sense of vastness and sublimity lifted from our spirits, and we gave one long, hearty shout of delight and enthusiasm. No one can have fully seen and comprehended the beauty and power of Niagara Falls without having passed behind them, either at this place or on the Canada side. Having done this, we took our departure, feeling that it formed a most appropriate closing scene in the great panorama.

The Whirlpool, about three miles below the falls, is a large circular basin formed by perpendicular cliffs that rise to the hight of three hundred feet. Artificial steps lead down to the water's edge. In passing into this vast cauldron, the waters leap and bound to the hight of some ten or twelve feet, then whirl and toss about as if rendered furious by the shock lately received at the falls. They present a scene wild and and furious, too much so to contemplate with pleasure. There is nothing here, as at the falls, to attract and captivate, but rather awes and shocks with its savage fury.

A mile or so below the Whirlpool, there is another place of note. There is a deep and dark chasm in the high and rocky banks of the river. Into this chasm a stream leaps from the cliffs above, termed, from the tragedy connected with the spot, Bloody Run. Here, in 1759, the Seneca Indians, then in pay of the French, surprised a body of English soldiers, rushing upon them, tomahawking, and hurling them with their horses and wagons over the precipice, and dashing them to pieces on the rocks below. The stream was crimsoned and swollen with blood, and as we stood below, and felt its waters falling upon us, we could but fancy that it was still dripping with human gore.

After passing through the Whirlpool, Niagara river begins to assume more of mildness, and the high, perpendicular banks begin to subside. At Lewistown, navigation again commences. The banks are gently sloping, with delightful woodlands and fields running down to the river. The river itself has assumed its accustomed quiet, seeming to enjoy its peace and repose after the hurry and tumult of the rapids and falls. Seven miles farther on it expands into one broad and continued smile—Lake Ontario. ALLEGAN.

"SEED LONG IN DUST."

Some time ago, a man of a hundred years old, who lived near Boston, sat down one day alone, and meditated on the past. Like Noah's dove, memory

> "Flew o'er the dark flood of his life,
> Nor found one sunny resting place,
> Nor brought him back one branch of grace.'

He found little else but a waste of sin and guilt. But as he called to mind departed seasons, he thought of a solemn Sabbath he spent when a sailor, in one of the seaports of England, his native country. He recollected a sermon which he heard that day from the lips of the eloquent Flavel; and how the preacher paused as he was about to pronounce the benediction, and exclaimed, "How can I invoke God's blessing on many in this assembly, to whom my text applies, 'If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema, maranatha?'" He was reminded of the fact, that as the preacher uttered these words, an English nobleman present sunk to the floor, overcome with the convictions and alarms which wrought on his soul. As the aged man dwelt on the preaching and the scenes of that Sabbath, his heart was melted; he prayed for pardon, and casts himself into the arms of the Lord Jesus Christ, whom he at his peril he had so long refused to love. Seventy-five years had fled since he had heard that sermon; much of that period he had been careering over the ocean amid all the thick temptations of sailor's life, and the frosts of a century had settled upon his head. But now in a calm hour, memory brings back the eloquent, soul-piercing words of one, who, for many years, had been lying in the embrace of death. The aged man is converted; and God prolonged his life sixteen years, one year more than he prolonged the life of Hezekiah!

THE FOLLY OF PRIDE.

The very witty and sarcastic Rev. Sydney Smith, for many years one of the contributors tn the great English Reviews, thus discourseth on the folly of pride in such a creature as man:—

"After all, take some quiet, sober moment of life, and add together the two ideas of pride and man; behold him, creature of a span high stalking through infinite space in all the grandeur of littleness. Perched on a speck of the universe, every wind of heaven strikes into his blood the coldness of death; his soul floats from his body like melody from the string; day and night, as dust on the wheel, he is rolled along the heavens through a labyrinth of worlds, and all the creation of God are flaming above and beneath. Is this a creature to make himself a crown of glory; to deny his own flesh; to mock at his fellow, sprung from that dust to which both will soon return? Does he not suffer? Does be not die? When he reasons, is he never stopped by difficulties? When he acts, is he never tempted by pleasures? When he lives, is he free from pain? When he dies, can he escape the common grave? Pride is not the heritage of man; humility should dwell with frailty, and atone for ignorance, error, and imperfection."

MEETING AN INFIDEL.

Walking one day in the village where I was laboring, I met a man who I knew openly avowed himself an infidel. After the usual salutations, I said to him, "Well, Mr. B., what is the condition of your soul this morning?"

His answer was, "O, I am an infidel."

"I know that, Mr. B., but as a man of reflection, who understands what infidelity is, you will not pretend to me that you know the Bible is not the word of God." After a few moment's reflection, he replied, "I acknowledge that I do not know it is not, but I do not believe it is." "Well, Mr. B., if the Bible should not be the word of God, can you be sure that there will not be such a state of retribution beyond the grave as the Bible describes?"

"No, I am sure of nothing beyond the grave, but I do not believe there will be any retribution."

"Then, Mr. B., your reason compels you to admit, that you can not know, but living and dying as you are, you will go to hell, and be as miserable there to all eternity, as the Saviour represented the rich man to be."

"It is true, I can be certain of nothing beyond the grave, whether I shall exist at all there, or if I do, what will be my condition, is a mere matter of conjecture."

"Keep this in mind, Mr. B., when you lie down and when you rise up, that you do not know but you shall go to hell when you die, and if you can rest with the possibility of such a dreadful end, your mind is differently constituted from mine."

We parted, and he went about his business, but as I afterward learned, never enjoyed any peace until he indulged a hope in Christ. In a few weeks, he united with the Baptist church.

Infidels do not reflect how baseless their scheme is. It keeps them from the consolations of a hope of a blessed immortality, and gives them nothing in return. Surely their rock is not like our rock, our enemies themselves being judges. [Dr. Wisner.

TEACHING HEATHEN CHILDREN.

Dr. Dawson, in the Christian Chronicle, thus describes the methods employed for the education of the heathen children at the station where he labors:—

The school-house in which the children are collected, is situated on the premises of the Karen Mission, called "Newton." The grounds are beautifully arranged into garden plats, semi-circular walks, studded with majestic trees—many of them being the graceful palm—forming an elegant front to the premises; and extending in a line, stand the houses of Brn. Binney, Vinton, and Harris. On the west side of Mr. Binney's residence is the frame building occupied by the school. It is a plain teakwood house, with large windows for ventilation, and has a thatched roof. It is conveniently adapted to teaching, and in a good location. The boys and girls that meet there, are in appearence a bright set of children. They look healthy and clean, and behave very orderly. They are teachable and attentive to their lessons. They are taught reading, writing and arithmetic, geography, grammer, compisition, and Bible history, and they sing some sweet hymns. The whole of their instruction is communicated in the English language by the teachers, Miss Vinton and Miss Wright—both of whom are excellent missionary sisters, in fractions and scripture history. I listened to the examination with deep interest. The questions in fractions were answered with an apparent promptness and accuracy that somewhat surprised me in children so young. The little ones did not work out their sums on a slate or black-board, but in their heads, and showed that they were accustomed to think, and that they unravelled them in the mind. Some of the questions were puzzling, but they did not think them difficult. They study a small work printed in America, entitled "Intellectual Arithmetic." In regard to their knowledge of Bible history, it was evident that they had made very commendable advancement in this important study. I had no expectation that they would exhibit such proficiency as they did. Over two dozen questions were asked them about subjects and persons described in the Bible.

I will mention some of them, that yon may see what they are learning and treasuring up in the mind. The little Karen children were asked, "Who made the world?" Answer—"God." "In how many days did God make the world?" Ans.—"Six." "On what day did God rest from his work?" Ans.—"The seventh." "When God created Adam and Eve, where did he place them?" Ans.—"In the garden of Eden." "What command did God give to Adam respecting the garden?" Answer—"Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shall not eat of it." "Did any one eat of the fruit of the forbidden tree?" Ans.—"Yes; Eve did." "What did Eve then do?" Ans.—"She gave it to Adam." "Did not some one tempt Eve?" Ans.—Yes; the Serpent." "Who was the Serpent?" Ans.—"Satan." "What was the consequence of disobeying God?" Answer,—"Sin entered the world, and with it sickness, sorrow, and death." "Who are sinners?" Ans.—"All men." "Was any provisions made of mercy for the forgiveness of sin?" Ans.—"Yes, God so loved the world." &c. "Will all men be saved?" Ans.—"No." "Who then will be saved?" "Believers." "Who are believers?" "They who feel sorry for their sins, and turn unto Christ." "How is sin pardoned?" "By the shedding of blood." "Who shed his blood?" "Christ, the Saviour of mankind."

Such are the questions, and many others, which, without any reference to a book, were put to them, and, as near as I can recollect, were answered as I have written them. I was delighted with their answers. It displayed a clear knowledge of the outline of human redemption. Some questions touching the history of David, of Solomon, the Queen of Sheba, and other persons mentioned in the word of God were asked, and elicted prompt and intelligent replies. You will, I am sure, feel glad to hear that the Karen children in the mission schools of Burmah are making such praiseworthy progress in their studies. Besides the improvement of their intellect in sound knowledge, and of their hearts in benevolence and love, to which much attention is paid, the children are trained up to habits of industry, and to understand the true principle of domestic economy, viz., never to be idle, and never to be wasteful. At daylight the bell rings for all to get up. After washing and dressing, they hold morning worship, and then turn out to work. They sweep the garden, make the walks, carry water, haul sod, and assist in kepping the premises clean. Some of the older ones grind rice to husk it. Others clean cotton, spin it into thread, and weave it into cloth; others cut it up and stitch it into garments. They thus learn to cook wash, spin, weave, stitch make gardens, walks, dig, and become valuable members of society. Instead of growing in idleness, ignorance, and in wickedness, they are industrious, frugal, intelligent, and happy. In Maulmain there are three Sunday schools—one connected with the English Baptist church, one with the Burmese church, and the third is among the Karens. Besides these, there are several with the churches in the jungles. O, let us pray that they may be abundantly multiplied.

From the Puritan Recorder.

PERMANENCY IN PASTORAL OFFICE.

HOW CAN IT BE SECURED?

At the semi-centennial celebration in Brookfield, Mass., a few months since, the following sentiment was offered, alluding to the Rev. Dr. Snell, of North Brookfield.

"The Jubilant Patriot of the Brookfield Association; who of the sons shall catch his falling mantle?"

Doctor Snell replied:

Mr. Chairman, I can not make a speech; but still I will give utterance to a few undigested thoughts.

Four things, Sir, I wonder at.

I wonder that I have lived so long when so unprofitable, and when most of my cotemporaries are in the grave, and the residue leaning upon their staves.

I wonder that I have lived to preach the gospel more than fifty years, with so few and slight interruptions.

I wonder that I have continued the sole pastor and religious teacher of the same church and people more than half a century.

I wonder that three pastors, who started in the ministry about the same time, located in three contiguous towns, have each continued to preach the gospel half a century, and are still here present to-day; and what may well increase my wonder is, that they are all now living with the companions of their youth. It is presumed that another such instance can not be found in the United States. Not, however, that I would ascribe it to their superior wisdom, but to the kind providence of God, who holds all hearts and events in His all controlling hand.

A greater permanency in the pastoral office appears very desirable, whether we consider the item of expense, solicitude, and danger of church and people, or the moral and religious influence of a long and faithful ministry. More than fifty pastors have been settled and dismissed within the present limits of the Brookfield Association since my ordination in 1798; and but one has died in office.

How such increased permanency can be given te the pastoral relation, is no easy question to solve. But, Mr. Chairman, were I allowed to throw myself back half a century, and being anew, I will tell you some things I should attempt to do which might have an influence in my own case.

One is, I would attempt to marry the very best young woman I could find in the community—a person possessed of a good share of common sense, with a good English education, without the fripperies of the age—one acquainted with domestic concerns, and that understands the principles of economy—one who knows how to treat all sorts of company, and who would overcome evil with good, by her propriety of conduct, and by her decision and consistency in religion would secure the respect and favor all. About the time I commenced housekeeping, some restless sceptics attempted to raise a commotion. One of the Deacons of my church said to me, "I hope you will bring a lady among us that will unite us all;" and I believe she has done her part in the good work of union and peace, and may have done more in continuing my pastorate than myself.

Another thing I would do is, I would acquaint myself with all the people, and treat every person as my friend and acquaintance without any crustiness.

Another thing, I would belong to every generation as they rise up around me—to the aged, to the active, to the young, and to the children—in a sense I would be the old man, the man of business, the young man, and the child, that none of them may grow away from my acquaintance. And I would notice little children because of their prospective worth, and to secure their affection and confidence. Mothers, too, love to have their children noticed, and fathers have no serious objection to it.

Another thing, I would punctually attend all my appointments, and fulfill all my little money and business promises, and thus keep good my credit, and let people know on what they can depend.

Another thing, Mr Chairman, for I know not when I shall get through; I would visit the sick and afflicted, according to my acquaintance with their wants and circumstances, without a formal message or special request. I would bring forth to my people studied sermons, unless I should be compelled, from scantiness of support, to spend a large portion of my time and energies to study how I should live.

WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

Travelers who wander in the footsteps of the children of Israel, among the rocks of Sinai in the "howling wilderness," find the rocks covered with thousands of inscriptions, and rude drawn figures of camels, goats, lizards, serpents, horses, mules, dogs, ostriches, tortoises; men standing, in motion, lifting the hands to heaven, looking down, sitting on camels, horses, and mules—armed with spears, swords, shields—fighting, hunting, &c. These inscriptions were first noticed by a traveler thirteen hundred years ago; and more recently copies of some of them have reached Europe, but have till now defied all efforts for their deciphering. The discoverer of the key to this language is the Rev. Mr. Forster, of Canterbury, Eng., who has recently issued a work entitled, "The Voice of Israel from the Rocks of Sinai." He proves that the writing is old Egyptian, from which the Arabic language is principally derived; and that the inscribers were the children of Israel, during the forty years they sojourned in the wilderness. They knew the Egyptian language, as they had been for a long period, before their exodus, in the land of bondage.

SCATTERING AND INCREASING.

A young mechanic, some thirty-five years ago, commenced business in a country town, with little capital and small prospects of success. He put up a dwelling-house, but it remained long unfinished. His worldly affairs were any thing but prosperous. Suddenly his neighbors were startled to find that he had pledged fifty dollars a year to the American Board of Missions. People shook their heads. Some said he ought not to pay it. Others said there was no danger, it never would be paid. But it was, and paid punctually. And then similar or larger sums were pledged to other benevolent enterprises, which were afterwards increased and multiplied. In the mean time, that unfinished dwelling got gradually completed, the grounds around it were made tasty and inviting, and other grounds and other buildings added. In short, when the man died a few years since, he was one of the most wealthy men in town, and the most influential in society, as well as benevolent. But what is observable is, and it was often remarked by his friends, that the determination of this man to pay fifty dollars a year to the Board of Missions, gave a new impulse to his life and character. It taught him to be economical, and made him "diligent in business" in the best sense of the word. It excited his business talent, and made him a man of wealth. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."

THE WIDOW AND HER SON.

An aged widow had an only son, who had repeatedly transgressed. His mother, rendered unhappy by his misconduct, tried numberless methods to reclaim him, but without effect. At last, with great difficulty, she prevailed on him, when he committed a bad action, to drive a nail into the wall of his chamber; and when he had done a good act to take one out. In a short time the wall was nearly covered with the marks of his guilt.

After a long time had elapsed, he began to refrain from his evil courses, and conducted himself with so much propriety that the nails gradually diminished, and were at last all drawn out. Of this circumstance he exultingly informed his venerable parent, who with the greatest composure addressed him as follows:—

"My son, you have dutifully attended to my advice, and entered into the pleasant path of virtue; but be not so proud that the nails are drawn out, for the marks where they have been still remain; so, likewise, the odium of your former misconduct will not be erased from your character, unless you continue to pursue the path of virtue, and never replunge into the pollution from which you have fortunately escaped."

THE BLIND BOY AND HIS BIBLE.

A blind boy, about twelve years of age, was very desirous to learn to read the Bible with raised letters prepared for the use of the blind. In a very short space of time, he learned to run his fingers along the page, and to read with ease and propriety. The highest object of his wishes seemed now to be to possess a complete copy of the Bible for the blind, which consists of several large volumes. His parents were unable to buy one, but his pastor obtained one from a benevolent society.

Not long after the little boy received the books, his pious mother saw him retire to the room where they were kept, and she stepped softly to the door to see what he would do. And why do you think the dear little boy went alone to his room? His mother saw him kneeling by the side of these precious volumes and lifting up his hands in prayer to return thanks to God for this blessed gift of his Holy Word. He then rose from his knees, and taking up one of the volumes in his arms, hugged and kissed it, and then laid it one side and proceeded to the next, and so on, till he had, in this simple but pleasing manner, signified his love for each of those blessed volumes, which, through the medium of touch, had spread before his mind the wonders and the glories of God's revelation to man.

"The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey, and the honey-comb."

A WISE ANSWER.—A wicked man said to his son, who attended the Sabbath-School, "Carry this parcel to such a place." "It is the Sabbath," said the boy. "Put it into your pocket," said the father. "God can see into my pocket," the little boy answered.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 6, 1851.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME.

This earth is not the home of the Christian. All the endearing associations which cluster around this sweet word, pertain to another place—the place where Jesus dwells. Here the Christian is but a sojourner—a stranger—a pilgrim.

Is the wife at home, when she is absent from her husband? Certainly not. It argues badly for her love, if she ever feels herself to be. The Church is the Lamb's wife, the bride of the Lord Jesus. "Thy Maker is thy Husband." Isa. 54: 5. Of course, the Church is not at home, till she reaches the abode of her Lord.

Is a child at home, when away from his father's house? One is our Father, who is in heaven. Children, who have a proper affection for their parents, always feel that "there is no place like home." Where their parents live, there they would be also.

Is the citizen at home, when absent from the country where his citizenship is acknowledged? "Our conversation [in the Greek, CITIZENSHIP] is in heaven." Phil. 3: 20. By the New Birth the Christian has his name enrolled as a citizen of the heavenly world. The patriot loves his country; the Christian loves his heaven, and longs for it.

Is the heir at home, when far distant from the spot where his inheritance is located? The incorruptible, undefiled and unfading inheritance is reserved in heaven for the saints. 1 Pet. 1: 4. Christ is the Heir, being the First-born, and has gone to take possession of the inheritance. But all the children of God are made joint-heirs with him. Rom. 8: 17. When they take possession of the estate, they will feel that they have got home; and not till then.

The earth, in its present state, is not fit to be the home of those who pant after holiness. As God made it, it was good enough; it was "very good." Gen. 1: 31. But as sin has un-made it, it is very bad. Once it might have served very well as the permanent abode of man. Not so now: it is "defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they have transgressed God's law." Isa. 24: 5. It lies under the curse. A usurper has dominion, styled in the expressive language of Scripture, "the god of this world." Exercising his power by working in the hearts of kings, magistrates, and all others in authority, he afflicts those who pray and labor for the restoration of the lawful Sovereign. In thousands of instances he has afflicted even to death. The earth has been made drunk with the blood of the saints. Is such a place fit to be their home? Verily, they can be nothing but strangers and pilgrims here.

Should the earth be renovated; should it be purified from the curse; should the usurper be dethroned, and shut up to deceive the nations no more; should Jesus Christ be universally acknowledged, and reign as Prince of the kings of the earth; should it become a world, "wherein dwelleth righteousness," then might Christians look upon it as a desirable home while such a state of things lasted. According to the promise of God, we look for such a state. The first resurrection will be the commencement of it, in which "blessed and holy is he that hath part." Rev. 20: 6. It shall last a thousand years. But as Satan and his legions shall come upon the breadth of the earth again, the saints must regard their permanent and everlasting home as still in reserve. It cannot be in any place which Satan is permitted to invade. It can be only where Jesus Christ makes his eternal abode, and displays his glory, (John 17: 24,) wherever that may be.

The Scriptures tell us nothing of the locality of heaven, and it were vain to inquire into it. But that it is a place, and not merely a state of existence, is evident from what is testified concerning the entrance of Jesus Christ into it. Acts 3: 21, Heb. 9: 24, Acts 1: 11. For though, as God over all, his presence is not limited to any particular spot, but fills the universe, (Ps. 139: 7—10;) and though his human soul, (being, not a material, but a purely spiritual substance, destitute alike of extension and solidity,) may be conceived of as dwelling simply in a state or condition of happiness, without regard to place, the same cannot be said of his body. That is located in some part of the universe or other; and the place of its location is the heaven to which the saints are destined.

The good Book represents the pious as longing after that place. Heb. 11: 16, 1 Cor. 5: 2. Of course. Why should they not, if it is their home? It is not strange that the Christian should earnestly desire to go to a place, where he will no more feel himself a stranger. True, he may not repine at the Providence which lengthens out his time here. He has no right to become fretful, as if his lot were unreasonably hard. Nevertheless, if he truly loves Christ, he will desire to be with him. He feels that it will be "far better" than to continue in a world so full of wickedness. Phil. 1: 23. He wishes to remain here only while his Master has work for him to do. When that is finished, he wishes to depart for home.

But how can one be expected to long after a place which he has never seen, and the locality of which he knows nothing about? How can he be expected to long for it as his home, if he has never before had any experience of it as such? In ordinary cases, the child longs for the home which he has before enjoyed. He remembers its comforts, its advantages, and all the pleasant things which pertain to it. But of heaven the Christian has no personal knowledge. He was never there. He never felt its bliss; he never mingled in its services. May it not be posible that, when he gets there, he may not be suited with it?

It is true, he never saw that blessed spot, but faith supplies all the deficiency. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Heb. 11: 1. The husband leaves his wife for a season, to seek out a permanent home. He sends word back that he has found it. She knows that it is just such a home as will suit her: she feels not the smallest doubt about it. She knows that he perfectly understands her taste, and she confides in his love to do the best he can for her. And as he has already fixed himself there, and is preparing the place for her entertainment, she longs to be there too. She longs for her home, for it is home nowhere without the society of him whom she loves

So Jesus Christ has left his betrothed for a season. He is gone to prepare a place for her. John 14: 3. Does he not know what kind of a home will suit that holy heart which he has given her? Is he not able to render it secure, beautiful, and every way desirable? The Church, if she has faith, knows that she will be satisfied. Nay, she has tasted already some of the fruits of that blessed land. Rich clusters of the grapes of Eshcol are found in the writings of the Apostles, those spies who have brought us a good report of the heavenly Canaan. Can she help longing after a country so prolific in the fruit which is sweet to her taste? Can she help praying, "O bring me to thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles?"

T. B. B.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Observance—Tractarianism, &c.

GLASGOW, October 17, 1851.

The Swiss correspondent of the Christian Times, of last week, states that at Newchatel, "a great Radical meeting was announced to take place on a Sunday, in a valley of the canton—procession, speeches, banquet, &c., occupying church hours, and nearly the whole day." "M. Cruchand preached against this; the prefect of the district, who was one of the chief promoters of the meeting, immediately left the church, during the sermon, and dispatched a complaint to Government. The Established Church of Newchatel is supposed to govern itself, but it is not allowed in reality to do so. The Council of State suspended the exercise of M. Cruchand's ministry, and ordered him to be prosecuted for a breach of public order. The civil tribunal, however, declared itself incompetent, and referred the matter to the Synod, which is to meet in a few weeks." It seems, therefore, that in Switzerland, where once the civil power was evoked by the church for the maintenance of Sunday, that power is now exercised for its desecration.

At one of the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance, Sir C. E. Eardley also stated that intelligence had arrived that the missionaries in the South Seas, having taken active measures to prevent Sunday desecration, the Governor of Tahiti ordered that a fete, with certain games in honor of the establishment of the Republic, should be kept on the Sunday, which was the Anniversary of the Republic. The missionaries had warned the people against this desecration, and one of them had, in consequence, been thrown into prison by the Governor.

In Glasgow, however, our Police Courts have repeatedly of late fined eating-house keepers for entertaining customers on Sunday. It is not indeed probable, that this will be of long continuance while hotels are permitted to be open, where those of the wealthier classes may procure the same articles. In England, a Preston paper notices that, at Wigan, the Botanical Society had an Exhibition of Flowers on Sunday last month; and in Edinburgh, the Town Council have resolved that their new East Prince's Street Gardens, which are most attractively laid out, and will be a great promenade, are to be open on Sundays. And in the immediate neighborhood of that city a pedestrian has for several Sundays been continuing his walking exploits, as on other days, before large crowds. The London Record, however, informs us that measures are being prepared for farther vigorous agitation in behalf of Sunday observance during the winter; and gently hints that the unnecessary Sunday cabs and coaches to church, which afford such ground of opposition to their opponents, should be restrained.

It was lately intimated that the Archbishop of Canterbury had taken the initiatory legal steps against a number of the Tractarian clergymen, who still persisted in Romanizing rites and practices. This would have brought them before the Arches Court; but it is now stated, that all of them have in consequence discontinued their histrionics. And the Oxford Herald intimates, that several of the Episcopal clergy who are now abroad, having left England in great discontent as to their own church, are sending home statements of their strong dissatisfaction with the church of Rome, after having seen her system in operation in Italy and elsewhere. But such of the Tractarians as have not possessed the advantage of seeing Popery at head quarters, continue from time to time to pass over the slight boundary line which separates from it the genuine Episcopacy of England. Another instance of this kind has just occurred in the case of a "Sisterhood," which was originated by Mr. Bennett of St. Barnabas, before his removal by the Bishop of London. These women publicly avowed their farther apostacy from the truth on Sunday week in the Romish Chapel at Islington. In the first instance, at least, we believe they will discover little difference; they may perhaps find it easier to give the guidance of their faith and conscience to men, who themselves yield similar subjection to other men in another land equally of ecclesiastical profession, rather than to men avowedly subject to a secular Government, some of the members of which, at least, they regard as little attached to the liturgical observances of their church. This is indeed felt as a grievous yoke by the Tractarian clergy. At a Diocesan Synod held at Derby on the 8th instant, the right of the church to self-government was insisted upon, while the necessity under which the clergy lie of submitting to the dictum of even bishops with whom they do not agree, was affirmed. The Rev. Canon Trevor enlarged upon this, and the "enormous divisions" in the church, and the hardship to the laity, in having one year "high" and another year "low" church principles inculcated upon them. Amid all this groaning under the yoke of human authority, and the maintenance of human tradition, there is nothing said of the true remedy of submission to Christ only, and to Scripture testimony as the expression to us of the divine mind.

The Great Exhibition in the Crystal Palace has this week been brought to a close. Two days ago the Bishop of London offered up prayer and thanksgiving within the building, in the presence of assembled thousands, after which the Hallelujah Chorus was given by the choir; and already large quantities of the articles have been removed. Yesterday's Times has four of its pages filled with the "Prize-Lists." It also states that the honor of knighthood is offered to Mr. Paxton, by whom the building was designed; to Mr. Cubit, the engineer; and to Mr. Fox, the contractor. The number of persons employed, in all departments, attending to the Exhibition, was 1182. The money drawn during the last week, was £29,794, the exact amount received during the whole period £505,107.-5.7. Of this, £831 3.3, was obtained from the small fee charged for taking care of umbrellas and sticks, and much larger sums for other accommodations essentially necessary. 250,000 copies of the Official Catalogue were sold. The largest number of persons admitted in one day was close upon 110,000, and of these 92,000 were present under the roof at one time.

J. A. BEGG.

RHODE ISLAND CORRESPONDENCE.

Spiritual Rappings, &c. [Concluded.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 26, 1851.

By the request of a friend, I have visited three of the most favorable places in the city for witnessing the "rappings." Others had supposed that these manifestations were as satisfactory as the miracles of Christ. The most soul-stirring stories were told of these "wonderful appearances." It was deemed little worse than infidelity to doubt; and, indeed, it was said the spirits would not work well in the presence of skeptics. It was necessary to believe beforehand. I of course could not do that; so they set about to convince me. At my first interview, we had a few faint sounds on the table, which we were required to sit close around. The medium had both hands on the table, and her feet partly under it; nor could any sounds be produced if she were not in that position. The sounds were such as she could easily have made, and which I can perfectly imitate now at my table. It were the consummation of credulity to attribute such sounds, under such circumstances, to any superhuman agency. I then had to depend on the intelligence manifested in the answers for proof. The spirit of Washington professed to converse with us; but not one iota of intelligence above that of the medium, (a girl of twelve years,) could be elicited. It indulged in just such answers and freaks of passion as were fitting a little spoiled girl. Her writing was just such as any little girl could do, and we yet lacked any evidence whatever of spirits. It was then proposed that the table should move. They said no ten men could hold it when the spirit of Washington got hold of it. They got him hold of one end, and I took hold of the other. The girl made several ineffectual efforts to move it, and I was requested to let go. She then tipped the table up towards her, by bearing down upon the end next to her, and then shoved it about the room. No living mortal could ever have dreamed of attributing it to anything but her, if he had not "believed beforehand." The moment she let go of it, it fell to its natural position; nor did it move an inch except she had her hands on it. On this foolish performance had been predicated many of those "remarkable demonstrations." The only thing remarkable about it is, that any one of sound mind will be fooled by such silly attempts at something wonderful. It was next proposed that the spirit should open the Bible, as "it had often done." The Bible must be laid under the table, in the dark; we must all draw our feet under our chairs, and blindfold our eyes, for such was the request of the "spirit." The medium could now lift up the lid of the Bible with her toes unobserved. But after several unsuccessful efforts, she looked under and found my foot on top of the Bible. Hereupon she retired in confusion from the room. The spirits then wished to put the medium to sleep, and she went to sleep, and then walked about the room, exhibiting no evidence of spiritual influence whatever. Thus, in my first effort, I failed to witness the least particle of evidence in favor of spiritual intercourse. Every effort to make a test of intelligence was avoided, and every act bore the unmistakable evidence of deception.

Being unwilling to form an opinion on a single effort, I visited another of the most celebrated media. This medium was assisted by Dr. Webster, who acted as interpreter and expounder of the mysteries and marvels of her profound wisdom. She requested that the room should be dark, and then went into the spirit world. A classmate of mine, who was present, asked with mournful accents if the spirit of his mother was present. She replied, Yes. The spirit then held converse with her son, and the medium described her as being fleshy, with dark eyes, and dark hair. This, with some other guessing equally erroneous, was all of that wonderful manifestation. Dr. W. was much confirmed, although he had "believed beforehand." But the mother, whose departed spirit had visited her son, still lives, and possesses not a single feature assigned to her.

I was still unwilling to believe that so many men had been hoodwinked by such miserable deceptions as these, and consented to visit the "most remarkable medium in the city." Three of my companions went with me. We found Doctors Martin and Davis (believers already) on hand to expatiate upon the wonders to be developed. The medium sat with her feet against the table leg, but her hands did not touch it. The raps commenced; they seemed to be on the under side of the leaf of the table, as we sat close to the table, (for so we were requested to sit.) But on putting the ear below the leaf of the table, they appeared where her foot was; and on proposing to institute a proper investigation, it was at once opposed by the spirit, which took the hand of the medium and wrote, "You grieve me—men cheat." This astonished the learned Doctor, who very gravely suggested, that the spirits were easily offended. Here, as at both the other places, every effort at a careful investigation was evaded and resented. The medium moved to the side of the room, and to convince us that the raps were not made by her, told us to hear them on the wall; we heard them, but on going to the wall they came from her foot on the floor. We called for them on the table, while she stood at the wall, but this could not be had. She sat down in the chair, and told us to hear them on the chair back. We heard them, but they were still made down where her foot was in contact with the chair. There was thus every reason to believe them made by her own agency, and no reason whatever to believe them made by spirits. We now proceeded to ask questions. I asked if the spirit of my departed father was there, when a shower of raps answered, Yes. He said that he was very happy to meet me, that he was always with me, and was very happy. I asked how long he had been out of the body; he could not tell. I asked if he remembered of being afflicted with lameness in his left foot; he said, Yes. I asked if he remembered being deaf with his right ear; he did. He said his name was Isaac, which is not correct. I asked his age, and he gave a number differing seven years from my father's age. My father had never had any of these ailments. I changed my mode of inquiry, and asked in relation to my father's eyesight; to which he replied, that it had always been good. He has been blind nearly twenty years—and I suppose him living in the flesh at the present time. So much for the "wonderful intelligence" which had "astonished the natives." The answers were all equally incorrect, with one exception, when a correct name was given, which the medium had no means of knowing; but it gave nothing else correct concerning the person whose name it had given, nor could it give the whole name or age. The person named was an infant, which fact was indicated to the medium by being asked how many months old it was. The medium then wrote a beautiful little verse, such as we often see on the gravestones of infants. Nothing like superhuman intelligence was evinced in the above case, nor did the answers rank medium in guessing. If my father has gone to the abode of blessed spirits, and forgotten his name and age, and the affliction which has weighed upon him so heavily for years, and yet remembers afflictions which he never had, surely the spirit world is rather a strange place. I was also informed that my eldest sister, "Fanny," was in the spirit world, and also my youngest sister. But unfortunately for the intelligence of the spirits, I never had a sister Fanny, and at last accounts both my oldest and youngest sisters were living in this world. The spirits were perhaps led into these mistakes by my manner of interrogation. I asked then as I had observed that believers asked, in such a way as to indicate the answer. I could thus elicit almost any answer I pleased, so long as the medium thought me a believer. Next came the hoisting of the table. We must sit so close to it that we could observe nothing underneath, while the feet of the medium and those of the believing Doctor were under it. I laid hold of a projection under the table, and kept my eye upon the medium. The table moved not. At length I let go, and the Doctor was interesting us all very much, so that our attention was all on him, when up came the table about six inches. Wonderful! I then took hold of it, and held it with one hand, and it stood still the rest of the time. We were told that if we would sit back a little, and sing, the table would jump again, but the spirit neither moved us to sing nor the table to jump. If you ask what made the table jump, I answer, that I don't know. But I do know, that I can make one jump higher than that did, and escape detection, guarded as they were against investigation.

Such are the "greatest wonders of the age" in Providence—and such the ridiculous manifestations over which sage men go into enthusiastic rhapsodies, and in view of which they ask us to believe in spiritual intercourse. I only speak of my own convictions from what I have seen. Let others judge for themselves.

But there is yet a shade of darkness over this thing which I have not mentioned. I find that nearly the whole of the affair in this city is under the special care of Universalism. All the leading advocates of it are Universalists. The Doctor whom I have already mentioned is the Universalist minister of this city. They say, "The spirits never teach anything else but universal salvation." I questioned the spirits on this point, and they were very definite in teaching that all souls are happy after death. I am told that this is the case in other places. This last consideration is enough to stamp the whole scheme with reprobation. I believe that the spirit of darkness is the prime mover, and that Universalism is the prime medium. That surely must be a desperate cause, that calls to its aid such a shameless outrage on the common-sense of mankind. Such are my candid views, after a candid and careful investigation, under the most favorable circumstances. I ask no man to adopt them, but as he may have opportunity, look at the working of this thing, and see if it has the least tendency to godliness. So far as I have observed, it exerts a narrowing and withering influence, and is calculated to bring the word of God into disrepute. As such, I now cast it behind me, asking my readers to pardon me for dwelling so long upon it. Let us look to nobler themes of thought.

D. E. M.

THE OHIO ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Ohio Association held its first Annual Session with the Church in Jackson, Shelby Co., O., commencing on Fifth-day, Oct. 9th, 1851, at 11 o'clock A. M.

The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. Rowse Babcock, from Zechariah 12: 8.

At the close of the discourse, the Association was called to order, and ROWSE BABCOCK was chosen Moderator, and ELI FORSYTHE and F. BABCOCK were chosen Clerks.

The following Committee was appointed to Nominate Standing Committees, viz., E. P. Stout, J. G. Babcock, and John Babcock; after which the Association adjourned until 3 o'clock P. M.

Afternoon Session.

Met pursuant to adjournment. After prayer by B. Clement, an invitation was extended to all members of the denomination who were or might be present, to take part in the deliberations.

The report of the Committee on Standing Committees was then called for, read, and adopted, as follows:—

On Resolutions—Eld. R. Babcock, Eld. S. Babcock, John Davis, B. Clement, C. Davis, and F. Babcock.

On Preaching—James Simpson, Jacob Maxson, and Joel Babcock.

On the State of Religion—Eld. S. Babcock, John Forsythe, Job Kennedy, M. Ailes, and B. Clement.

Executive Committee—Eli Forsythe, I. G. Babcock, Maxson Babcock, I. R. Babcock, I. D. Maxson, B. Clement, and E. P. Stout.

On Petitions—Eld. S. Babcock, Eld. R. Babcock, and John Forsythe.

Letters were then presented and read from the different Churches of the Association, from which the following statistics and list of delegates were prepared:—

Jackson—Simeon Babcock, pastor; B. Clement and M. Babcock, licentiates; John Forsythe and J. G. Babcock, deacons; I. G. Maxson, clerk. Deceased 1. Excluded 1. Total 52. Constituted 1840. Communion third Sabbath in February, and once in three months. Delegates, Eld. S. Babcock, M. Babcock, I. G. Maxson, B. Clement.

Port Jefferson—John Davis, elder; M. H. Ailes, deacon; E. V. Ailes, clerk. Total 20. Communion third Sabbath in January, and once in three months. Delegates, John Davis, E. Ailes, M. H. Ailes, E. P. Stout.

Stokes—William Furrow, deacon; James Simpson clerk. Added 4; dismissed 10; total 17. Constituted 1842. Communion first Sabbath in March, and once in three months. Delegates, Job Kennedy, Jas. Simpson.

Northampton and Scoto—no returns.

Communications from corresponding bodies being called for, a letter was presented from the Virginia Association. Eld. R. Babcock being present, was recognized as a delegate from the Western Association.

Resolved, That B. Clement be our Corresponding Secretary for the ensuing year.

Resolved, That Eld. S. Babcock be our Treasurer for the ensuing year.

Resolved, That E. P. Stout be our delegate to the Virginia Association; also any other brother or brethren, who may be present at that Association.

Resolved, That Bro. Samuel Randolph be the Solicitor for the Port Jefferson church; I. P. Forsythe for the Jackson church; Job Kennedy for the Stokes church; Alonzo D. Graham for the Scioto church.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock A. M.

Sixth-day—Morning Session.

Met pursuant to adjournment. After prayer by Deacon J. Forsythe, the report of the Committee on the State of Religion was called for, read, and adopted.

Report on the State of Religion.

The Committee on the State of Religion respectfully report, that according to the evidence presented by the Letters from the Churches, and other evidence in their possession, they are fully convinced that religion does not have that place in our affections as a people that it should; that the standard of Piety and Morals is much below what it should be. Not that we are so much behind other denominations in this particular, but that we are very delinquent when compared with the standard of truth and our high and holy calling. When we remember the relation we sustain to other denominations, and to the world of mankind, in claiming to have the truth to present to the world, we feel that it is necessary that we should be devoted and consecrated to the work of the Lord. And perhaps one great reason why our sentiments on the Sabbath question are not more frequently adopted by others, is the want of that moral power which is consequent upon holy living and fervent devotion. And, brethren, it is much to be feared, that the patience and long-suffering of our God will be exhausted, and he swear in his wrath that we shall not inherit the promise made to his Church of being instrumental in destroying the kingdom of darkness, planting the blood-stained banner of redemption on the enemies' ramparts, and shouting victory through the blood of the Lamb. The fact that it is a time of general declension only calls on us the louder to be fervent in spirit, devoted to the cause of our Master, that our watchword be onward and upward, and our motto holiness of heart and life.

Dear brethren, we beseech you, by the mercies of God, the love of Jesus Christ, and the value of immortal souls, that you give the subject a place in your warmest affections and most ardent petitions at a throne of grace, and that you may be enabled to adopt such measures as shall work out a revival of pure and undefiled religion, that the Lord may give us moral power to do good and add to our numbers many that shall be eternally saved.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be instructed to confer with Eld. R. Babcock for the purpose of obtaining his labors for the ensuing year as a missionary.

On motion, B. Clement and Eli Forsythe were appointed delegates to the Western Association.

The Committee on Petitions reported, that no petition has come before them except the one from the Port Jefferson Church, stating their condition and asking advice with regard to disorganizing. The Committee recommend that they should not disorganize, but continue their meetings on the Sabbath.

Adjourned till 3 o'clock.

Afternoon Session.

Prayer was offered by Joshua G. Babcock.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions being called for, the following resolutions were presented, discussed, and adopted:—

1st. Whereas the fields of missionary labor within the bounds of and contiguous to this Association are white unto the harvest, therefore, Resolved, That it is our duty to enter into a much more efficient and vigorous effort to procure and sustain among us a man or men devoted to the work of preaching the Gospel.

2d. Whereas we, members of the Ohio Association, do consider the law recently enacted by the Legislature of the United States, commonly called the Fugitive Slave Law, as unconstitutional and conflicting with the "higher law," the law of God, therefore, Resolved, That we do not consider this law as binding upon us.

3d. Whereas Slavery, as it now exists, is the vilest sin against God, and the grossest outrage upon the rights of man, darkening all his prospects, and blighting all his hopes, in this world, and the world to come, therefore, Resolved, That we hereby register our testimony against this God-dishonoring, inhuman practice.

4th. Whereas, the different denominations of professed Christians in this nation possess sufficient moral power, if properly exercised, to bring slavery to a speedy termination, therefore, Resolved, That in the opinion of this Association God, our country, and the poor slave, hold them responsible for its existence.

Resolved, That the Clerks be instructed to revise and prepare the minutes of this Association for publication in the Sabbath Recorder.

Resolved, That when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet with the Church in Jackson, Shelby Co., O., on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October, 1852, at 10 o'clock A. M.; and that Eld. R. Babcock preach the Introductory Discourse, B. Clement alternate.

The Report of the Executive Committee was then presented, read, and adopted, as follows:—

"That we have had the labors of Eld. L. A. Davis a part of the time during the past year, but owing to ill health he has not been able to preach as much as could have been desired had his health admitted. He received for his labors $90 33, and expended in removing to this place $25 50."

Adjourned to meet at the call of the Moderator.

At the call of the Moderator, the Association convened on First-day, Oct. 14th. Eld. S. Babcock was chosen Moderator pro. tem., in the absence of the Moderator of the Association.

Resolved, That there be a Committee of three appointed to take up a subscription for the purpose of securing a site and building a parsonage, and when, in their judgment, there shall be sufficient subscribed to build a comfortable house, they shall proceed according to their own discretion to build said house. If there cannot be sufficient means raised, then the money is to remain with the subscribers.

Resolved, That Davis Babcock, J. G. Babcock, and B. Clement be that Committee, and the Trustees of the Parsonage.

ROWSE BABCOCK, Moderator.
ELI FORSYTHE, } Clerks.
F. BABCOCK, }

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Boston correspondent of The Independent says that Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher has been supplying the chapel pulpit at Andover, Mass., during the Seminary vacation, and that his labors have been blessed to the hopeful conversion of some fifty of the young men in Phillips Academy.

From the same source, we learn that at Lawrence, Mass., much greater religious interest than usual has been existing for a few weeks. The two churches there, which are without pastors, are receiving the peculiar blessing of the Holy Spirit.

The Prairie Herald notices several interesting revivals occurring in that vicinity. In Quincy, Ill., the meetings have been continued four weeks, with preaching usually in the evening. Some 24 persons have been hopefully converted.

An interesting revival has been enjoyed in Round Prairie and Plymouth churches. The work is described as having been very powerful. One hundred persons are regarded as hopeful converts. Of these, forty have united with the Congregational and Presbyterian churches, and sixty with the Methodist.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA.—In a missionary sermon preached in one of the Moravian churches in New York on the 26th ult., the preacher stated that the mission in South Africa had suffered severe disasters by the Kaffir War, and that some of the missionary laborers, after long and dangerous journeys in the desert, had reached settlements where they were obliged to do day labor for their subsistence, being stripped of every earthly possession.

AWARDS OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE.—In the list of premiums awarded at the late Fair of the American Institute, we notice a Gold Medal to J. P. Stillman & Co., of Westerly, R. I., for a Card-Stripping Machine, and a Silver Medal to John Maxson, of DeRuyter, N. Y., for a Door-Spring.

General Intelligence.

European News.

The U. S. Mail Steamer Franklin, with European news to Oct. 22, arrived at New-York on Sunday last.

The political news is not of much importance.

Kossuth had not arrived in England up to the sailing of the Franklin.

From Italy we learn that the celebrated tenor, Fraschini, was murdered at Bologna on the 16th ult., while sitting at his breakfast. The murderer is said to be his colleague, the baritone Colini, and the motive professional jealousy. Colini succeeded in escaping, according to the same account. The murdered man has left a widow and four children.

A fatal catastrophe occurred at Gneixendorf, about 35 miles from Vienna, Austria, on the 15th ult. A large powder magazine, containing at the time half a tun of powder, blew up. whether by accident or design is not known. The sufferers whose bodies have been found are a major, a lieutenant, and an auditor of artillery, the inspector of the magazine, and the two sentries on duty. A young girl, the daughter of a subordinate laborer, is also missing. The officers of artillery, who met their death in consequence of the explosion, had only that instant reached the entrance to the magazine in a carriage and pair, having been ordered by the military authorities to inspect and report upon the quantity and condition of the powder in the magazine. Their deaths must have been instantaneous, as the bodies were found completely crushed by the enormous masses of brick-work hurled form the building by the force of the explosion. Strange to say, the carriage horses escaped entirely unhurt; the driver, however, is said to have received mortal injuries. Of the magazine itself not one stone remains standing; large portions of the brick-work, tiles and beams, were hurled to a distance of more than 2,000 yards.

From South Africa there are accounts to Sept. 10. Affairs were more gloomy than ever. While the enemy have sustained no important check in Caffreland, they have continued to lay waste extensive tracts, sweeping off thousands of head of cattle, sheep, &c, while the loss of life on the part of the colonists in the different skirmishes has been considerable.

A Bohemian journal has the following from Constantinople, without date: "The Wechabites have attacked the cities of Mecca and Medina, massacred a great number of the inhabitants, burned the mosques, and pillaged the cities."

From Manilla we have dates to July 1, with accounts of further operations against the Malay pirates. In one engagement four pirate boats were destroyed with 100 men, the Spaniards losing 25 killed and wounded.

In China the rebellion still gains ground. The Imperial Governor in Kwang-si is put to his trumps, and about ready to give up in despair. We have several reports of the merciless manner in which the rebels treat the Imperialists, when they once fall into their hands. A datachment of 500 men sent from Heang Shan, near Macao, together with 3,000 men from Kwei-lin-foo, were enticed into an ambuscade, and out of the 500 Heang Shan men, only 10 escaped to return to their homes alive. Recently we heard that, falling in with a Commissary-General, with a large quantity of grain, they decapitated him, and made booty of the whole of the stores he was conveying.

Two Weeks later News from California.

The Chagres Steamer Cherokee arrived at New York last Sabbath, bringing San Francisco dates to Oct. 1, and upwards of $2,000,000 in gold dust.

We are informed by this arrival of the death of Captain D. G. Bailey, of the steamship Pacific, at San Juan del Sur. He was formerly commander of the Liverpool packet ships Orpheus and Yorkshire.

A terrible affray has taken place at Chagres between the American and native boatmen on the river, which resulted in the loss of some twenty lives on both sides. It grew out of an attempt, on the part of the American boatmen, to drive off the native boatmen, because they would carry passengers at less than the fixed rates.

In Oregon, the Indians continue to commit outrages upon emigrants, several parties of whom had suffered severely.

The following summary gives the principal items of interest from the gold regions.

From all parts of the State we receive the most encouraging intelligence of the success of the miners, and we hazard nothing in saying that the present yield of the mines exceeds that of any former period. The season, so far, has been very favorable to the success of the various damming companies throughout the State, and the result has been large yields in that department of mining. The prospects for the approaching rainy season are still more encouraging.

San Francisco is quite healthy, and almost free from crime. Not an outrage of an aggravated character has been committed for a long time past. Peace and security are enjoyed to the fullest extent. The band of criminals has been terror-stricken, and has fled to the four quarters of the globe. Encouraged by this the Vigilance Committee have suspended their sessions of the entire body, and have appointed an Executive Committee of forty-five to exercise watchfulness, and see that such an organization of crime as once existed here, does not again come to a head.

Society is undergoing great and gratifying changes. Every steamer brings an accession to the number of American ladies, and school houses and romping children have already ceased to be novelties.

In the line of amusements, theaters, bull-fights, horse and foot races, are the order of the day. Indeed, the Olympic games are revived, and men are likely to resort to these amusements until the superior charms of home attractions intervene as a substitute.

Horticulture and agriculture are engaging the attention of the people throughout the State. The products of the soil (with the exception of grain) the present year will nearly equal the wants of the people. The choicest vegetables, in every variety, are produced in almost every section of the State, and the tables in this respect, as well as others, present a variety not surpassed by any other State of the Union.

The Boston Tragedy.

The following particulars of the late tragedy in Boston are abridged from The Boston Journal:—

It appears that some months since Elizabeth A. V. Davis, a sister of Thomas Davis, married Mr. Jas. D. L. Van Wagner in opposition to the wishes of her brother, who has been absent in California and returned home last Spring. Since his return he, together with his three children, (he being a widower,) has lived with Mr. Van Wagner and his wife, both of whom bear the reputation of being very respectable people. Davis has frequently been known to beat and abuse his sister, Mrs. Van Wagner, in a most outrageous manner, for the reason, as is supposed, that she married against his wishes.

On Sunday. Oct. 19, the family dined together, as usual, and after dinner Davis left the house. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon Davis returned to his house and inquired of one of his children where his sister was. The child replied that she was up stairs, immediately upon which Davis went up stairs. He very soon returned and went to the sink, where he washed his hands and then went out into the street. He had been gone but a few minutes when one of his own children, who had been up stairs, came running down into the sitting-room, exclaiming, "Aunty's dead—Aunty's dead!" The screams of the children were heard by Mr. Baker, a neighbor, who immediately entered the house, and on going up stairs found Mrs. Van Wagner lying dead upon the floor, with her throat cut in a most shocking manner, the windpipe being entirely severed. A razor, covered with blood, was found near her, and drops of blood were found on the stairs, as well as spots of blood on the ceiling at the side of the stairway, apparently made by bloody fingers.

The Coroner's Jury, after a patient and thorough investigation of the case, returned a verdict of willful murder against Davis.

Indian Treaties.

"The Minnesotian" says that Governor Ramsey has succeeded in making a most favorable treaty with the Chippeways at Pembina The whole valley of the Red River of the North, a tract of country about three hundred miles from North to South, and one hundred and fifty miles from East to West, has been acquired for an annuity of ten thousand dollars per year, and which entirely ceases at the end of twenty years. The Indians receive thirty thousand dollars upon the ratification of the treaty, to pay their debts, and divide among their half-breed relatives.

The St. Louis Intelligencer of Oct. 23d, gives the following outlines of the Laramie Treaty:—

A covenant of perpetual peace and amity is made between the several tribes of Indians represented, and between the Indian tribes and the United States Government. Any disputes that may hereafter arise between any of the different tribes, are to be settled by a reference to the United States authorities.

Should any depredations be hereafter committed by any of the whites upon the Indians, the United States shall make good all losses occasioned thereby, and indemnify the injured parties as far as possible.

If Indians commit any depredations upon whites, the tribe to which the former may belong shall be responsible in like manner, and the amount of damages occasioned may be retained by the United States out of the annuities to be paid, or in whatever other way may be found most convenient.

The right of making roads and establishing military and other posts throughout the territory, is guarantied to the United States, and all hunting privileges are reserved to the Indians as they have hitherto enjoyed them.

The boundaries of the territories to be occupied by the Chayennes, Arapahoes. Sioux, Blackfeet, Crows, Asiniboins, Grovonters and Mandans, respectively, being all between the Missouri and Arkansas River, settled and defined.

The United States Government is to pay an annuity of $50,000 in goods or agricultural and other implements of civilization, at the option of the President, during the maintenance of good faith on the part of the Indians, for fifty years.

The Plague in the Canary Islands.

Advices have been received from Palmas, Canary Islands, giving further particulars of the terrible pestilence at that port, and confirming the accounts recently published of the frightful mortality which it had occasioned. The dates are to Sept. 4, three weeks later than the last advices.

Since the disease first broke out, one-fifth of the whole population of 18,000 have been swept off, and the fever is still raging, though somewhat abated. It is not thought to be the cholera, for it is very contagious; but it resembles it, in the quickness with which death succeeds the attack. It is supposed to have been brought to the island in a small vessel from the coast of Africa. The family of the American Consul (Mr. Torres,) together with himself, are all dead with the exception of one child. He was a very worthy man, and had several handsome and interesting daughters, who were great favorites with the officers of American ships that touched there. Mr. Torres sent them all into the interior upon the first appearence of the pestilence; but hearing afterward that some of them were sick, he started off to join them, and on his arrival found them all dead, servants included, with the exception of the child here mentioned. In less than five hours after, he himself was a corpse. The panic and distress on the is inconceivable. No communication is allowed with the island from the adjacent islands, except from Teneriffe, whence a small vessel sails twice a week for letters, to a port that has as yet escaped the malady. Every precaution is taken, by smoking the letters that are sent with brimstone, and dipping them in vinegar, and by putting the vessel in quarantine so soon as she arrives, in order that the disease may not be communicated to that island.

Biography of Dr. Judson.—We learn from The Macedonian, that Rev. Dr. Wayland, of Brown University, has consented to become the biographer of the late Dr. Adoniram Judson. Mrs. Judson is to spend some months in Providence, aiding in the collection and preparation of materials, and the work is to be brought out with all convenient dispatch, and it is the only one in which Dr. Judson's family have any pecuniary interest.

Extensive Custom-House Seizures.—The officers of the revenue at New-Orleans seized, about the 20th ult., thirty pianos, which had been feloniously entered. The invoice handed in by the importers represented the value of some fine piccolo pianos at 600f., while other importers and dealers in the city declared their cost to be more than twice that amount. It is said that one importer, who had just received a lot of these instruments, had stated the cost price to have been 600 francs, but very fortunately, before entering them at that rate, he heard a whisper about the proceedings being taken with regard to those already entered. He accordingly hurried to the Custom-House with his original invoice, which fixed the cost at 1300 francs each. About the same time there was a seizure of about $5,000 worth of furniture and damasks, imported by an extensive dealer in those articles. The fraud was detected by the accident of finding the original invoice of the goods in a roll of damask forming part of the contents of a box sent to the Appraiser's office. This invoice was compared with that previously handed in by the importer, and though the marks, numbers, measures, &c., were identical, the prices were very different.

Wreck and Loss of Life on Lake Erie.

The propeller Henry Clay, Capt. George Callard, reported lost on Lake Erie, had on board thirty persons, including the crew, and one female passenger. At 12 o'clock on the night of the 23d Oct., when off Long Point, and lying side up in the trough of the sea, the captain lashed himself and the female to the jib stay, and the crew all lashed themselves to the rigging. In twenty minutes after, the boat went to pieces, the deck and cabin came off, and the hull turned bottom upward. The captain could not unlash in time, and went over with the hull. David Keefe, wheelman, the only hand saved, jumped off the wreck and got hold of the pilot-house deck, with nine others, and held on till daylight, when he found all but the first mate and second wheelman washed off. They afterward secured a pole and a piece of carpet, which they raised for a sail, and held on till 8 o'clock, (the wind and sea still high,) when the brig John Martin bore down and threw ropes to them. Keefe caught one, and was dragged a quarter of a mile before he was got on board the brig. His two companions could not catch the ropes, and nothing more was seen of either them or the raft. Captain Callard was formerly an officer of the Texan Navy, and the inventor of the signal lanterns now used for distinguishing vessels at sea.

Rescue of a Fugitive.—At Ottawa, Ill., on Sunday week, two negroes came into the city in a buggy, driving a white horse. They inquired the way to some known place, and were directed across the river. They had, however, not got far from town, before they were pursued and overtaken by Mr. Constable Skinner and several others, who, alleging that they were fugitive slaves, were about to arrest them, when one of them showed his free papers, and was allowed to go his way, but the other was taken by force and brought back to town, where he was placed on a canal boat and started toward La Salle, with a view of being there placed on a steamer and conveyed to his master at St. Louis. At Lock No. 11, however, the negro was taken from the officers, who were somewhat roughly handled by the people, and the boat went on without him. [Chicago Dem.

SUMMARY.

The St. Louis Union, of the 17th, says that Col. Fremont has completed and confirmed the sale of his Mariposa tract of gold land in California. The sale was made to a company in London, for one million of dollars; one hundred thousand of which (that being the first installment) is to be paid to Col. Fremont in the City of New-York, on or about the 15th of this month. Col. Fremont may now be considered among the wealthiest millionaires of the United States. He has, besides the Mariposa tract just sold, a vast amount of property in San Francisco.

The completion of a monument to the memory of Davis, Hosmer and Hayward, who fell at Concord Bridge, the 19th April, 1675, was celebrated in Acton, Mass, Oct. 29, with imposing ceremonies. An address was delivered by Governor Boutwell, and speeches were made by Hon. R. C. Winthrop, Hon. M. Thompson of Charleston, Hon. Robt, Rantoul, and others. A poem was delivered by Rev. John Pierpont. About 1,300 dined together under a mammoth tent.

Attorney-General Crittenden, Acting Secretary of State, has written a letter to the District Attorney of Northern New-York, declaring it to be the President's wish that no efforts be spared to bring the Syracuse offenders to justice—that the supremacy of the laws must be maintained at every hazard and sacrifice, and that the officers must be protected. He expresses his belief that the majority of citizens will aid the officers charged with the execution of the laws.

From Syracuse, N. Y., last Fifth-day, a fugitive slave, the wife of a colored man named Wandell, whom the Marshal had a warrant for, made her escape by the aid of some friend who had acquired a knowledge of the intended arrest. The next morning placards were found posted about the city warning the people against the kidnapper.

At Syracuse, on Sixth-day last, the Grand Jury of Onondaga county found an indictment against James Lear, of Missouri, and United States Deputy Marshal Allen, for an attempt to kidnap the negro Jerry.

The steamship Falcon, about which some anxiety began to be felt, arrived at New Orleans last Friday, in 18 days from Chagres, via Havana, in a disabled state, an accident having occurred to her machinery. She brought 300 passengers and $230,000 in gold dust.

The news from Mexico the last week is not definite or decisive, but it indicates the unchecked progress of Caravajal, whose troops had nearly taken Matamoras by surprise, but were compelled to retire with the loss of three men.

At Philadelphia, last Sixth-day, the Grand Jury of the United States District Court, brought into Court 39 true bills against the 39 persons who were arrested in Lancaster County, charged with participating in the Christiana murder and resistance of the officers of the law.

Daniel Webster is said to have received $5,000 for his argument in the great India Rubber Case, at Boston, week before last.

On Saturday night, Oct. 25, about six miles from Cape Cod, while blowing a gale, the steamship William Penn came in collision with the schooner. Bellisle, of Provincetown, just returning from a whaling cruise of seven months, with about 30 bbls. sperm oil. The schooner was struck on the starboard bow, so that she keeled and rolled over. There were 20 on board the schooner, seven of whom jumped on board the William Penn; nine were taken from the wreck, and four were lost.

The City Temperance Society of Albany has published the statistics of liquor retailing in that city, by which it appears that on Oct. 1, Albany boasted 756 rum sellers, of whom 139 were born Americans, 433 were foreigners, 3 colored, and 181 not ascertained. The proportion of groggeries to inhabitants is one to each 67 persons, including women and children. There are in the city seven breweries, manufacturing 167,000 barrels of beer yearly, and two new ones have been built capable of producing 100,000 barrels each.

A terrible collision took place between two trains on Saturday evening, Oct. 25, on the New Haven railroad near New Rochelle, by which two men were instantly killed, and several others were severely wounded. The cause was, the conductor of the freight train obstinately running out of time, and the neglect of the switch man to give the proper signal of a train this way being behind time.

A passenger in the train going West on the evening of Oct. 25, was found dead on the arrival of the cars at Syracuse. The man lived in Rochester, and was insane. He was taken to Utica on the afternoon of the same day, to go into the Asylum; but his friends, on arrival there, decided to take him home again. He sat upright in the seat, and his death was not discovered until the train arrived in the depot.

C. H. McCormick, inventor and patentee of the Virginia Reaper, has been prosecuting Seymour & Morgan, Brockport, N. Y., for an infringement of his patent. The case has just been tried before the U. S. District Court, at Albany, Judge Nelson presiding, and has resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff—damages $17,606 66.

Edward Russell was convicted at Warsaw, Wyoming Co., of the murder of Robert McCann, a foreman on the Attica and Hornellsville Railroad, and sentenced by justice Taggart to be hung on the 19th of December next. Russell struck his victim several blows upon the head with a heavy stick, which caused his death the next day.

The National Era has the largest circulation of any paper in the city of Washington, numbering upwards of 13,000 weekly; the Southern Press has about 8,000, the National Intelligencer over 7,000, and the Union a few hundred more.

Burlington, which is the most populous town of Vermont, has 7,585 inhabitants; Bennington has 3,923; and Brattleboro 3,816. Only five other towns in the State have more than 3,000 inhabitants, namely: Rutland, 3,715; St. Albans, 3,557; Middlebury, 3,517; Woodstock, 3,041, and Castleton 3,016.

A dispatch dated Utica, Wednesday, Oct. 26, 1851, says: The sum of $587 in $3 bills, all counterfeit, on the Essex County Bank, Keeseville, was found in the mail train that arrived here from the West, this morning. It was probably thrown away by some one fearing detection.

The elegant mansion of Hon. S. M. Burroughs, near Medina, N. Y., was discovered to be on fire Wednesday morning, Oct. 29, about 2 o'clock, and the interior of the building is now a complete ruin. The furniture was much damaged, and the total loss is over $5,000.

The Board of Directors of the New York and Erie Railroad, have adopted the resolution: "That all persons hereafter employed in running the trains on the road, be required to abstain entirely from the use of intoxicating drinks."

The New-London Chronicle says that all the fishing vessels from that port have now been heard from, and no serious accident has occurred to them, with the exception of the casualty on board the T. L. Holstrom.

Thirty-three steamboats have been built at the Cincinnati docks during the present season. The larger part are designed for the Ohio and Mississippi trade, and a few for the Florida region.

This fall is fruitful in marine disasters. No year within the memory of man has within the same period, and so early in the season, given so fearful an amount of loss, both of life and property.

At St. Louis, on Sunday, Oct. 26, Ellsworth, the pedestrian, completed his great feat of 1,000 miles in 1,000 consecutive hours, in the presence of a large assembly.

A Gold Medal was awarded at our late Institute Fair to F. N. Farnham & Co., of the Cohoes Linen Thread Faotory, Cohoes, N. Y., for the best specimens of "plain and satin finished Linen Thread."

Counterfeit five dollar bills of the Claremont Bank, New-Hampshire, are in circulation. The letter A, payable to N. Farewell, is in red ink, dated April 9, 1849, signed Urial Deane, Cashier, Ambrose Cosset, President.

The Pennsylvania State Agricultural Fair, which came off at Harrisburg, last week, is represented as a very grand affair. It was estimated that ten thousand strangers were in Harrisburg at one time.

The Hartford Courant says, that in the factory of Messrs. McIntyre & Co., at Hartford, eight men and four girls make 100,000 percussion caps in one day.

M. de Savigny, the French naturalist, died at Versailles, on the 5th ult. He distinguished himself during the expedition to Egypt by his researches on the anatomy of insects.

A Spanish paper calculates there are 3,064 languages spoken throughout the world—587 in Europe, 937 in Asia, 276 in Africa, and 1,254 in America.

At Hillsborough, N. H., a man has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment for maliciously killing an ox.

The snow on the hills of West Stafford, on Monday morning, was four inches deep.

The Hartford Courant says that the hills round that town are covered with snow.

Thanksgiving in Connecticut, Thursday, Nov. 27.

A woman named Heufinel is on trial in Maryland, charged with poisoning Mrs. Eagle, who married a man who paid some attentions to the prisoner some two years ago. She is described as a fine looking woman of 53, and, as is usual in such cases, is suspected of having put away her two husbands by the same means. The evidence is entirely circumstantial.

The Russian Government have made war against beards. Very few are now seen at Warsaw, but there are still a great number in the Provinces. It is said that travelers with beards, who arrive at the gates of Warsaw, are immediately turned over to military barbers, who cut off their beards.

A son of Mr. Benedict, the composer, who was here with Jenny Lind, was badly wounded on the Rhone by the funnel of a steamboat on which he was passenger with his father, being knocked over by a bridge under which the boat was passing. The unfortunate boy died the same day, in spite of the efforts of the physicians.

A ship with 390 Chinamen lately arrived at Callao, when they were sold out for three years at an average of $407 a piece. At the end of that time they have their freedom, three years' service being the consideration for their passage. Chinese domestics are much sought after at Callao.

At four o'clock on Thursday morning, Oct. 23, the steamer Buckeye State came in collision with the schr. Saratoga. She struck her eight feet from the stern, and she at once filled and sunk. She was laden with over 8000 bushels of corn. Three of her hands perished. The collision took place above Long Point, on the Canada side.

The engine of the freight train upon Passumpsic Railroad on Thursday night fell through a bridge at Thetford, Vt., instantly killing Mr. Butterfield, the engineer, and Mr. Thomas, fireman. The bridge was weakened and being carried away by the flood at the time.

In the very flourishing village of Cleveland, Oswego Co., N. Y., containing a population of over 1,200 inhabitants, there has not been a death of either old or young since Nov. 4. 1850; nor has there been a fire, nor a case of assault and battery, nor any open breach of the peace.

In that section of Long Island commencing thirty miles east from Brooklyn, there is a region forty miles long and from six to eight miles wide, in which there is neither church nor school, although there is a considerable sprinkling of inhabitants scattered over the country.

The Daily Times announces, on the authority of a private letter, that Dr. Harris, the well known author of "Mammon," "The Pre-Adamite Earth," and other popular works, will probably visit this country in the ensuing spring.

The Governors of New Hamshire and New Jersey have appointed Thursday, the 27th day of November next, as a day of public thanksgiving.

The Sunday-school of the Washington-street Methodist Church, New York, has undertaken the support of a missionary among the Norwegians, in the West.

New York Market—November 3, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 94; Pearls 5 37.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 68 a 3 70 for common State, 4 18 for pure Genesee; fancy brands from 4 12 to 4 50. Rye Flour 3 25 a 3 31. Corn Meal 3 37 for Jersey. Buckwheat 2 50 a 2 75 for 100 lbs.

Grain—Wheat, 85 a 86c. for Canadian, 88c. for white Michigan, 96c. for prime Genesee. Rye 74c. Barley 83 a 85c. Corn 57c. for western mixed, 61c. for round yellow. Oats 35 a 38c.

Provisions—Pork, 12 12 for prime, 14 87 for mess. Beef, 4 50 a 5 25 for prime, 8 00 a 10 50 for mess. Dressed hogs, 6 a 6½c. Lard 8½ a 9c. Butter, 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 10 a 16½c. for State. Cheese 6 a 6¾c.

Beans—1 50 a 1 62 per bush. for white.

Feathers—38c. for Ohio.

Hay—45 a 50c. for 100 lbs.

Hops—28 a 35c.

Lumber—13 00 for Spruce, 14 00 for Pine.

Lime—1 00 a 1 06 per bbl.

Seeds—Clover 9 a 9½c., Flaxseed 1 30, Timothy 18 00 a 21 00.

Wool—There is a better demand, but no improvement in price. A lot of full-blooded Merino fleece brought 42c.

MARRIED,

At Alfred, Oct. 27th, by Eld. N. V. Hull, Mr. James Pitts, of Friendship, to Miss Viola O. Green, of Alfred.

In Genesee, N. Y., on the 18th ult., by Eld. James Bailey, Mr. Franklin R. Wescott, of Alfred, to Miss Harriet A. Langworthy, of Genesee.

On the 23d ult., by the same, Mr. Francis M. White to Miss Amy Jane Edwards, both of Genesee.

DIED,

In South Kingston, R. I., on the 22d ult., very suddenly, Hannah B., youngest daughter of Sylvester Robinson, Esq., in the 19th year of her age. The deceased had been an invalid for several years. All that fond and doating parents could do to save a child had been done. The ablest medical advice in the country had been sought. Every attention and kindness which a happy home and loving friends could grant had been bestowed. On the day of her death she gave greater evidence of returning strength than usual; and while friends were cherishing the hope that she might yet be spared to them, the destroying angel came, and she passed in a moment from all she loved on earth to the world of spirits. Her disposition, naturally gentle, "through suffering was made perfect." But why descant upon her virtues? They are enshrined in the memory of many a weeping friend.

In Westerly, R. I., Oct. 7th, Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Welcome and Harriet M. Stillman, aged 16 months and 12 days.

LETTERS.

H. W. Babcock, R. A. Cutler, N. V. Hull, W. C. Lanphear, D. Perrin, W. Stillman, J. Bailey, V. Dike, D. E. Maxson, Eli Forsythe ($1.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Wm. Vanhorn, Lewiston, O.	$3 00	to vol. 8	No. 26
John Davis, Montra, O.	2 00	8	52
Rowse Stillman, Alfred Center,	3 00	8	26
Leonard Woolworth, "	2 00	7	46
D. J. Burnett, New York,	2 00	8	52
Wm. Intheway, "	50	8	31

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ The eighth volume of the Sabbath Recorder is now nearly half completed; and yet, we are sorry to say, only a small part of the subscriptions for the year have been paid—a circumstance which threatens to prove embarrassing. We hope it is only necessary to call attention to the fact, to secure a prompt and general remittance of what is due. A very little effort on the part of each person indebted to the establishment would save a great deal of trouble to those who transact its business.

Bro. Hiram W. Babcock, late agent for the Recorder at Watson, N. Y., has removed to Hebron, Pa. Bro. Halsey Stillman is requested to act as agent at Watson. We hope Bro. Babcock will serve us as agent in the region where he is at present located.

A Proclamation,

By Washington Hunt, Governor of the State of New York.

The goodness of Almighty God has been signally manifested towards the people of this State during the present year. The blessings of liberty, national tranquility, and public health, have been enjoyed without interruption. The fruits of the earth, in overflowing abundance, have rewarded the labors of the husbandman. Public improvements have been advanced. The truths of knowledge and religion are more widely diffused, and our republican institutions have been preserved and strengthened.

A just sense of these beneficent dispositions should inspire universal gratitude toward our Divine Benefactor, and call forth appropriate demonstrations of homage and adoration.

Therefore, in compliance with usage, I respectfully recommend to the People of this State the observance of THURSDAY, the TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY of NOVEMBER NEXT, as a day of Prayer, Thanksgiving, and Praise.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto affixed my hand and the privy seal of the State, this sixteenth [L. S.] day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

By the Governor. WASHINGTON HUNT.

James F. Ruggles, Private Secretary.

Hudson River Railroad.

CARS for Albany, on the Hudson River Railroad, leave New York at 7 and 8½ o'clock A. M., and 12¼ and 5 o'clock P. M. Cars for New York leave Albany at 7½ and 11 A. M., and 3½ and 8½ P. M.

New York and Erie Railroad.

DURING the Winter, trains will leave New York for Dunkirk as follows:—Mail Train at 8 A. M. Day Express Train at 12 M. Emigrant Train at 5 P. M. Evening Express Train at 5 P. M

Central Railroad of New Jersey.
Winter Arrangements.

LEAVES New York at 9 A. M. and 4½ P. M., foot of Cortlandt-st.; at 11 A. M. (freight) and 4.10 P. M., Pier No. 1 North River—for Elizabethport, Elizabethtown, Westfield, Scotch Plains, Plainfield, Boundbrook, Somerville, Raritan, White House, Easton, &c.

New York and Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE, via Stonington, for Boston, Providence, New Bedford, Taunton, and Newport, carrying the great Eastern U. S. Mail, without change of cars or detention. The secure and elegant steamers C. VANDERBILT and COMMODORE leave on alternate days (Sundays excepted) Pier No. 2 North River, (first wharf above Battery-place,) at 5 o'clock P. M. For passage, state-rooms, or freight, apply at Pier No. 2 or at the office, No. 11 Battery-place.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.
WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

New York Weekly Times.
A very Large Newspaper for the Country.
EDITED BY HENRY J. RAYMOND.
Price $2 a year; 10 Copies for $15; 20 Copies $20.

On SATURDAY, September 27, the subscribers issued the first number of a NEW WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, in the city of New York, called the NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES, printed upon a very large quarto sheet of eight pages and forty-eight COLUMNS, in close, clear type, and in the handsomest possible style.

The NEW YORK WEEKLY TIMES will be printed on THURSDAY of each week, and will present THE NEWS OF THE DAY, in all departments and from all quarters; CORRESPONDENCE from all parts of Europe, from California, Mexico, and South America, and from all sections of the United States, written expressly for The Times by intelligent gentlemen permanently enlisted in its support. FULL REPORTS of Congressional and Legislative Proceedings; of Public Meetings, Political and Religious; Transactions of Agricultural, Scientific, and Mechanical Associations; and generally of whatever may have interest or importance for any considerable portion of the community: LITERARY REVIEWS AND INTELLIGENCE, prepared by competent persons, and giving a clear, impartial, and satisfactory view of the Current Literature of the day: CRITICISMS of Music, the Drama, Painting, and of whatever in any department of Art may merit or engage attention: and EDITORIAL ARTICLES upon everything of interest or importance that may occur in any department—Political, Social, Religious, Literary, Scientific or Personal, written with all the ability, care and knowledge which the abundant means at the disposal of the subscribers will enable them to command.

THE WEEKLY TIMES will be under the Editorial management and control of HENRY J. RAYMOND; and while it will maintain firmly and zealously those principles which he may deem essential to the public good, and which are held by the great Whig party of the United States more nearly than by any other political organization, its columns will be free from bigoted devotion to narrow interests, and will be open within necessary limitations, to communications upon every subject of public importance.

In its Political and Social discussion, The Times will seek to be Conservative, in such a way as shall best promote needful Reform. It will endeavor to perpetuate the good, and to avoid the evil, which the past has developed. While it will strive to check all rash innovation, and to defeat all schemes for destroying established and beneficent institutions, its best sympathies and co-operation will be given to every just effort to reform society, to infuse higher elements of well-being into our political and social organizations, and to improve the condition and the character of our fellow-men. Its main reliance for all improvement, personal, social, and political, will be upon Christianity and Republicanism—it will seek, therefore, at all times, the advancement of the one and the preservation of the other. It will inculcate devotion to the Union and the Constitution, obedience to Law, and a jealous love of that personal and civil Liberty which constitutions and laws are made to preserve. While it will assert and exercise the right freely to discuss every subject of public interest, it will not countenance any improper interference, on the part of the people of one locality, with the institutions or even the prejudices of any other. It will seek to allay, rather than excite agitation:—to extend industry, temperance, and virtue:—to encourage and advance Education:—to promote economy, concord and justice in every section of our country:—to elevate and enlighten public sentiment: and to substitute reason for prejudice, a cool and intelligent judgment for passion, in all public action and in all discussions of public affairs.

The subscribers intend to make The Times at once the best and the cheapest Weekly Family Newspaper in the United States. They have abundant means at their command, and are disposed to use them for the attainment of that end. The degree of success which may attend their efforts, will be left to the public judgment.

VOLUNTARY CORRESPONDENCE, communicating news, is respectfully solicited from all parts of the world. THE WEEKLY TIMES will be mailed to subscribers at the following rates:
Single Copies . . . . . $2.
Ten copies to one address . . . $15.
Twenty copies to one address . . . $20.

THE NEW YORK DAILY TIMES
Will be published at the same office EVERY MORNING and EVENING, and will be sent to subscribers in any part of the United States, at the low price of FOUR DOLLARS a year. All payments for subscription or advertising must be made in advance; and postage on all letters must be prepaid. Communications for the editorial department must be addressed to HENRY J. RAYMOND, Editor of The New York Times: letters upon business or inclosing money, to RAYMOND, JONES & CO., Publishers.

Subscriptions and Advertisements left at the office, No. 113 Nassau st. or sent by mail, are respectfully solicited. RAYMOND, JONES & CO.
New York, October, 1851.

Miscellaneous.

The Great Exhibition.

The great Exhibition of the World's Industry in London was closed on the 11th of October. The Times speaks thus of its results:—

In looking back over the career of the vast enterprise which has thus auspiciously been terminated, the consideration which first and most strongly impresses itself on the mind, is the unprecedented popularity which it has attracted. Of this we quote some striking facts as illustrations. In the month of May 734,672 visits were paid to the building; in June 1,133,116; in July 1,314,176; in August 1,023,435; inSeptember 1,155,240; and in the first 11 days of Oct., 841,107. These figures give a total of 6,201,866 as the sum of visits to the Exhibition. Every one will calculate according to his particular fancy the proportion between visits and visitors, but at least it is obvious that several millions of people have had their minds enlarged, and their respect for industrial pursuits increased, by a portion of their time, more or less considerable, being spent in the Crystal Palace. The greatest number of people ascertained to have been in the building at any one time was at 2 o'clock on Tuesday last when 92,000 persons were present. On the same day the number of visitors reached its maximum, and was 109,915. Between 11 and 12 o'clock on Monday last 28,853 persons entered the building in one hour. When it is remembered that these extraordinary figures, which can be thoroughly relied on for accuracy, illustrate popular movements that only a few years ago would have been pronounced on the highest authority most dangerous to the safety of the State, we have the more reason to wonder that they should have taken place not only without disorder, but also almost without crime. The total number of charges made at the police station at the Prince of Wales' Gate relating to offenses within the building is, we are informed, 25, of which nine were for picking pockets, six for attempts to do so, and ten for petty larcenies at stalls.

Looking at the popularity of the understanding in a monetary point of view, the facts are equally extraordinary. The largest amount taken at the doors on any of the 5s. days was £5,078 on the 24th of May. The greatest half-crown day was Saturday last, when £4,845 13s. 6d. was received. The greatest shilling day was Tuesday last, when the sum taken amounted to £5,283 3s. In May the highest receipts were on the 24th, when upward of £5,000 was taken, the lowest being the pound days. In June the greatest was a shilling day, when upward of £3,000 was taken; the lowest being the first day. In July, the highest (a half-crown day was the 18th, when nearly £4,000 was received; the lowest being the 19th, a 5s. day. During the month of August the harvest operations told visibly on the receipts, the greatest being on the 5th, a shilling day, when more than £3,000 was taken, and the lowest being on the 2d and 30th. During the month of September the average take was still smaller, but the 29th and 30th were great shilling days, and brought in £3,000 each.

A Curious Case.

A letter to the New York Tribune dated Philadelphia, Tuesday, Oct. 30, says:—

In the Court of Common Pleas, this morning, a very interesting case was commenced. The parties are Peltier S. Rowland vs. Harris Coleman and Isabella, his wife. This is a feigned issue to try whether the late John Rowland was indebted to the defendant in certain amounts set forth in the pleadings, amounting in all to about $10,000. The questions to try are two—1st, whether John Coleman, at the time of his decease, was indebted to his brother; and, 2d, whether a certain release, alledged to have beengiven by the widow of John Rowland, was fraudulently obtained? The question will brobably arise, whether a claim made by an executor of an estate is a valid one?

The circumstances out of which this suit grew, are novel, and will no doubt be interesting to the community, as a very few persons are aware that a part of the Jewish ceremonial law, in relation to the marriage of a widow, is still in force in this country. All the parties in the suit are Jews, and the facts are as follows:—

About the year 1837, John Rowland, the deceased, came to this city from Poland, in poverty. He found his brother, P. S. Rowland, in a flourishing liquor business. He received assistance at the hand of P. S. Rowland, and shortly afterward was put into business by him, through his means. In 1840 he died, leaving a will and a widow behind him, and making his brother, P. S. Rowland, his executor. An inventory of his estate was made, which consisted chiefly of his stock in trade, namely, liquors—he also having been in the liquor business. The executor filed his several accounts and struck a balance, which he claimed as a creditor, and the widow seems, for a time, to have acquiesced. A short time afterward, however, the widow made claim to the balance, and several suits were the consequence.

In 1847, it seems, the widow had an engagement of marriage with the defendant, Harris Coleman; but under the Jewish dispensation she could not marry without the approval of her deceased husband's brother. This ceremonial appears to be strictly observed. It is a rule prescribed in the Old Testament, and is considered obligatory. It will be recollected by the reader that, under the Jewish dispensation, the widow had a claim of marriage upon her deceased husband's eldest brother, where her husband died without issue; and in the event of his refusal, she might claim each of his brothers, in succession of seniority; but it was not obligatory upon any but the eldest to take her to wife. If he refused, the law compelled him to submit to the degrading process of having his shoes taken from his foot by the widow, who had the right to spit in his face, with the exclamation—"Here is a man who refuses to build up his brother's house." If he still refused to marry her he was then free to marry another. This part of the ceremonial law, is not now complied with; but the Jews still adhere to the required sanction of the deceased husband's brother before the widow is permitted to marry again. This ceremony of release is strictly observed.

Previous to the consummation of her marriage with Mr. Coleman, the widow applied to her deceased husband's brother for such a release as the Jewish ceremonial law requires. This he refused to give until she would acquit him of all claims she had against him, and stay all legal proceedings then pending. This the widow at first refused to do; but subsequently relented, and agreed to give the necessary acquittal. After such release by her, the husband's brother gave the ceremonial release, and the widow became the wife of Harris Coleman. One of the questions in the case will be, whether the release obtained from the widow by the deceased husband's brother, was a fraudulent one. The case will take several days.

Philosophy of Eating.

Use but two or three kinds of food besides bread and butter, at a single meal, and never eat anything between meals. You should eat at reguler hours, and but three times a day, with two intervals of not less than five hours each, nor more than six.

Cold water retards digestion, and so does any liquid, if much is taken during or soon after a meal; half a glass at a meal is enough. From an hour and a half after a meal, until within half an hour of the next one, you may drink as much water as you desire; it is best, however, to drink but a swallow or two at a time, with an interval of half a minute or more; otherwise, you may take more than nature requires before you know it, just as in eating fast. If too much fluid is taken during meals, it dilutes the gastric juice, thus weakening its powers of digestion, and retaining the food too long in the stomach, producing heart-burn, fullness, belchings, and bad blood.

All errors as to diet arise from quantity or quality, and I propose one safe rule to each, applicable to all persons, and under all circumstances.

As to quality, the general rule is to eat that which you like best, and which you find by close observation and experience is followed by no uncomfortable feeling about the head, hands, feet, or stomach.

As to quantity, take as much at one meal as will allow you to become decidedly hungry by the next meal: this can only be determined by consecutive observations; but remember, never swallow an atom of food unless you are hungry; never force a particle of food on yourself; the brute creation cannot be induced to eat or drink, if slightly ill or excited, guided only by their poor blind instincts; and we, who are much higher than they, by the reason that is within us, ought to feel ashamed to act less wisely; and yet, nine-tenths of all our ailments, acute and chronic, enter here; and nine-tenths of them all might be cured thus, if taken in seasonable time, and if properly persevered in.

The finer all food is cut with a knife, before put into the mouth, the sooner and easier it is digested, on the same principle that a large piece of ice placed in a vessel set in water will require a longer time to melt, than if it were first divided into many small pieces. The gastric juice dissolves solid food from without inward; hence food, especially all kinds of meat, should be cut in pieces, not larger than a pea, before it is placed in the mouth, taking in as many pieces at a time as is convenient. This precaution would not be needed were persons to eat slowly, and masticate their food properly; but our national habits are otherwise, nor is there much hope of a speedy change in this respect.

For an hour after dinner, and half the time for other meals, do not lie down, do not sit to sew, nor maintain any stooping position; do not ride on horse-back, nor study, strain, lift, nor perform any labor, bodily or mental; a leisure stroll in the open air is best; or reading a newspaper; these require no mental effort. While walking, keep your hands behind you, and your chin on or above a horizontal line, and endeavor to feel in a good and cheerful humor with yourself and all the world. [Dr. Hall.

Assyrian Discoveries.

The last number of the London Athenæum contains a communication from Col. Rawlinson, announcing an important historical discovery. He has deciphered some of the cuneiform inscriptions brought from Ninevah by Mr. Layard, and found them to contain some remarkable verifications of Bible history. They are records of one of the Assyrian kings, who proves to be the Sennacherib of Scripture. They notice his war against the king of Sidon; and describing the battle between the Assyrians and Egyptians, in conformity with the accounts of Josephus and Herodotus, notice the proceedings of Sennacherib against Hezekiah, King of Judea. The names of Hezekiah, Judea, and Jerusalem are given in the inscriptions as Khazakiyah, Ursilimma, and Jehuda; "and the tribute which the Jewish king pays, in order to free himself from his enemy," is stated almost in the very words of Scripture. The annals of Sennacherib in this inscription extend over seven years, and a cylinder has been met with which gives the events of two years more. Other points of identity between these annals and the Greek and Biblical notices of Sennacherib likewise occur; but the chief point of interest is the establishment of the identity of the king who built the great palace of Koyunjik with that sovereign. A secure starting-place is now obtained for historical research, and a rapid progress will be made in fixing the Assyrian chronology.

The French Assembly, by a vote 319 to 232, has made an appropriation of 78,000 francs to continue M. Botta's explorations at Ninevah, and the scientific expeditions to Mesopotami and Media. The explorations at Ninevah were abandoned on the suppression of the French consulate at Mosul after the revolution of February, 1848; and it was stated in the Assembly that, in consequence of that event, many antiquities which M. Botta had discovered now enriched the museums of other countries. [Advocate and Journal.

Cool Retort.

When the allied army was in possession of Paris, it was no unusual thing for the Emperors of Russia, and Austria, and the King of Prussia, to walk out incog. In one of these rambles they were accosted by a countryman of rather superior address, who asked them to point out the way to the Tuilleries: to which the reply was, that they were going that way, and should be glad of his company. The familiar tone of conversation of the Emperor Alexander soon induced the stranger to converse, who, after some time, asked to whom he had the pleasure of talking; and the answer was: "I am the Emperor of Russia!" This seeming to stagger his belief, he asked another, "And pray who are you, sir?" "I am the Emperor of Austria?" another, "And you, sir?" "I am the King of Prussia!" This seeming the climax of absurdity, he burst into a loud laugh, and was going away, when the Emperor of Russia begged he would tell them who he was. "O," said he, "I am the Emperor of China!" and then walked quickly away, evidently under the impression that he was "not to be outdone"

From the Scientific American.

Lerow and Blodgett's Sewing Machine.

Last week we visited the tailoring factory, No. 33 Gold street, this city, and were much surprised to find thirty of the above machines running on clothing, and twenty sewing up bags. These machines are attended by girls, and have been in active operation for a year. They are driven by steam power, and so rapid is their operation, that the thirty machines turn out 300 pairs of pantaloons in one day, and they could, if driven turn out 600 pairs. The superiority of the rotary machine over the reciprocating one, consists in the continued and uniform action and motion of the shuttle. There is no stopping its motion to make a return stroke, consequently no jarring and less liability to get out of order; and for this reason its speed can be greatly increased. No less than 60,000 caps were made in this factory in six months. We saw fine coats, every stich, except the button holes, put in by this machine, and the work could not be surpassed. The sewing is stronger than by hand, and wholesale goods made by the machine are better and command a higher price than the hand-made clothes. The stitching is beautiful, and is alike on both sides of the cloth.

The cloths are pressed by men, and here this heavy hand labor is relieved by a pressing machine, which consists of a single lever operated by the foot of the presser acting upon a stirrup, which brings down the lever to act effectually on the seams of the clothes. Mr. Lerow has been in Europe and secured patents in England, Scotland, France, and from what we have seen, it is our opinion that the time is not far distant when all sewing, excepting artistic ornamental work, will be done by machinery. At present there is another factory in Eleventh street, this city, where there are 50 of these machines running, and there is a factory in Boston, running 100 machines; such are the triumphs of inventive skill and labor. The profits of running these machines, we have learned, are enormous, and no wonder, when one girl by such a small machine will sew six overcoats in one day, and a very expert hand 20 pairs of pantaloons.

Important Discovery.

A Dr. Turnbull, of London, professes to have discovered a certain cure for deafness and blindness, and is now in New York where he proposes to illustrate his practice. He explains his treatment openly, and pretends to no exclusive skill or knowledge. The N. Y. Evening Post gives the following account of his discovery:—

"Some years ago, according to his own account, having observed that the eyes of persons who had died of hydrocyanic or prussic acid, became dilated and unusually clear just after death, it occurred to bim that the acid must exert some specific action upon the eyes. He consequently made a number of experiments, and was delighted to find that his conjectures were not without truth. The sight of those who were near sighted was immediately improved by it, while the eyes of persons totally blind were gradually opened. The vapor of the acid—for it was the vapor alone that was used—seemed to act both as a stimulant and a sedative. By exciting the small blood vessels, the circulation was quickened, and the eye soon relieved itself of all morbid affections. Subsequent experiments showed that the practice might be varied to suit different maladies, by employing other, but kindred agents, such as cloracynic acid, sulphuretted chyazic acid, and chlozaret of iodine. They are simply put into a glass vial and the vapor applied to the eye, but as these are very destructive agents, the utmost care must be taken in the application."

Curiosity of Children.

The curiosity of the child is the philosophy of the man, or at least, to abate somewhat of so sweeping a generality, the one very frequently grows into the other. The former is a sort of balloon, a little thing, to be sure, but a critical one nevertheless, and pretty surely indicative of the heights, as well as the direction to be taken by the more fully expanded mind. Point out to me a boy of orignal, or what would generally be called eccentric habits, fond of rambling about, a hunter of the wood-side and river-bank; prone to collect what he can search out, and then on his return to shut himself up in his room, and make experiments upon his gatherings—to inquire into the natural history of each according to its kind—point such an one out to me, and I should have no difficulty in pronouncing him, without the aid of physiognomy, to be of far better and happier augury than his fellow, who does but pore over his books, never dreaming that there can be any knowledge beyond them. Of such stuff as this were all our philosophical geniuses, from Newton to Davy, and so, from the nature of things, they must generally be. And no wonder. The spirit that is powerful enough to chose, aye, and to take its own course, instead of resigning itself to the tide, must be a very powerful spirit indeed—a spirit of right excellent promise.

Pocket-Picking in the Crystal Palace.—During the last week of the Exhibition, the high sheriff of a city in the South of Ireland was accused in the Crystal Palace, to his great amazement, of picking pockets, and upon this transferred to the care of the police. The worthy gentleman repudiated the charge with horror and indignation; nevertheless, a purse of 18 sovereigns was found in his pocket, which he avowed did not belong to him. The protestations and assurances of the high sheriff, who gave his address, set the local authorities upon the alert, and after a sharp scrutiny of the visitors, the detectives recognized a noted member of the swell mob, who, it appears, a few minutes before had relieved a visitor of the identical purse, which was instantaneously missed, and the scoundrel fearing exposure conveyed the purse with singular dexterity to the pocket of the Irish high sheriff, who was in his vicinity, and as quickly disappeared in the crowd. Explanations and oppologies followed quite satisfactory, and the innocent gentleman was restored to the society of his sister and her daughter, whom he accompanied from Ireland to see the wonders of the Exhibition.

The Last Triumph of Pride.—"Proteus," of The Newark Daily Advertiser, in a letter from New-York, says:—

"The wife of a man of means, and the daughter of a wealthy citizen of this City—people, too, fond of show—recently died. She had been called beautiful before a family of children had gathered round her, and she had not renounced her claim to that title. She died, and a large concourse was invited to the funeral. The coffin was made of rosewood, inlaid with silver, lined with plaited satin. The whole top was removed, and the deceased lay in state in her narrow home. She was dressed in a white merino robe, made like a morning gown, faced with white satin profusely quilted and ornamented. The sleeves were open, similarly lined and wrought—a stomacher of the richest embroidery covered the breast, whence all life had forever fled. The head was covered by a cap of choice lace, and a wreath of fresh flowers arranged around. The hands were crossed upon the breast, with the fingers covered with expensive jewelry, which seemed to sparkle as if in glad pride that the bright eye was dim for ever. Thus bedizened, poor food for worms, she went down into the grave, there to await her God!"

Bloody Affray in Texas.—On the 24th of September, an attempt was made by the Sheriff of Smith County to arrest one Bob Pearce for a breach of the peace, when Wood Pearce, assisted by Isaac Moore and Peter Crawford, attempted to rescue his brother Bob. The Sheriff summoned a posse of six or seven men. Wood Pearce then fired upon them, wounding Holden, one of the guard. Several of the posse then fired, killing Isaac Moore. Wood Pearce then fired his remaining barrel, and then seized Isaac Moore's gun and fired it, wounding two more of the guard, when he was shot down by one of the guard named Neil. Peter Crawford then fired twice, killing Neil and another of the guard. He then made his escape, although several shots were fired at him as he ran. In the mean time the prisoner, Bob Pearce, was in the house using a broadaxe upon the Sheriff, seriously injuring him and one of his men. He was, however, disarmed and carried to the Tyler jail. The Sheriff snapped every barrel of a six-shooter at his head, but without any effect. At our last advices a party of fifteen or twenty (mostly Pearces) were following the prisoner, supposed with an intention of rescuing him at every hazard.

Agitating Scene in Church.—Our correspondent at Hanover, N. H., informs us, says the Boston Traveler, that last Sabbath, (Oct. 12th,) at the morning service at the College church at Dartmouth College, as the clergyman had proceeded a little way in his sermon, the front door was suddenly opened and a person in night clothes entered and and walked rapidly up the broad aisle some distance, when he was arrested and carried out. His ghastly countenance and delirious look at once revealed the truth, that Thomas B. Mack, of the Senior Class, from Gilmanton, sick of typhoid fever, had escaped from his sick chamber in the momentary absence of his attendants, and was on his way to his accustomed seat in the church. The agitation of the audience may easily be conceived. Order, however, was restored, and the services were finished in the usual course. The young man died on Monday night at 11 o'clock, having been sick but five days.

Russia and Poland.—The journal of the Russian Minister of the Interior brings some statistical facts respecting the population in 1846. It states that in that year the population of Russia in Europe numbered 52,565,324 souls, excluding the kingdoms of Poland, Finland, and Trans-Caucasia. The four western governments of Siberia numbered 2,153,958; the kingdom of Poland, 4,800,000; Finland, 1,600,000; Trans-Caucasia, 2,500,000; or, altogether, 63,000,000 souls. If the inhabitants of Kamschatka, Ochotz, and Jakut, and the Armenia possessions and the army be added, the total will not probably be exaggerated at 65 millions. Of these 49,000,000 belong to the Eastern Church, 7,300,000 are Catholics, 3,500,000 are Protestants, 2,400,000 are Mahometans, 1,850,000 are Jews, 1,000,000 are Armenians, and 600,000 are heathens.

Despise Nothing.—A certain man who was very much deformed, saluted a Rabbi, saying, "Peace be unto thee." The Rabbi, did not return the salutation, but said, "Raca, how ugly this man is! Perhaps all thy townsmen are as deformed as thou art." The other replied, "I do not know; but go thou and say to the Workman who made me, How ugly is this vessel which thou hast made!" Upon which the Rabbi dismounted from his ass, knowing that he had sinned, and fell down on his face before the man he had despised, and said unto him "Forgive me, I beseech thee!" But the deformed answered, "I cannot forgive thee until thou hast been to the Workman who formed me, and said, "How ugly is this the vessel which thou hast made!"

Egyptian Corn or Millet.—We learn that one of the seeds found in the hand of an Egyptian mummy has been made to vegetate in Boston, as well as in a southern city. The seed is of the estimated age of 3,500 or 4,000 years. The last time the plant was green, Abraham or Joseph may have seen it! The vitality of the seed is truly wonderful. The appearance of the head of grain which it now bears, betokens the great antiquity of the original seed. Such corn was not many ages removed from wild corn, or common grass, while the stalk and leaves are precisely those of Indian maize, under a limited removal from its natural or wild growth.

Distance from the Sun.—Imagine a railway from here to the sun. How many hours is the sun from us? Why, if we were to send a baby in an express train, going incessantly a hundred miles an hour, without making any stoppages, the baby would grow to be a man—the man would grow old and die—without seeing the sun, for it is distant more than a hundred years from us. But what is this, compared with Neptune's distance? Had Adam and Eve started by our railway, at the creation, to go from Neptune to the sun, at the rate of fifty miles an hour, they would not have got there yet; for Neptune is more than six thousand years from the center of our system. [Household Words.

The most recent invention in England is a new seat for tailors, to obviate the necessity for their sitting cross-legged.

Variety.

Among the lost things found at the Crystal Palace, and advertised, is one lady's bustle, one pair lancets, one petticoat, four eye-glasses, twenty-two bags of various colors, twenty-eight bunches of keys, one hundred and sixty-eight parasols, one pistol, one flask, sixty-seven bracelets, two hundred and seventy-five shawl brooches and clasps, three hundred and nineteen pocket handkerchiefs, any quantity of purses with sums of money varying from 6d to £5, and finally ninety children, boys and girls. From eighteen to twenty children have been forwarded to various parts of the town, by the constables going off duty, and no less than sixty have been claimed by parents at the stations.

A scamp in Henry county, Ky., recently slandered a young lady, who sued him and obtained a verdict of $10,000. The lady scorned to receive the money—her only object being the vindication of her name from the calumnious aspersions of the defendant—she directed her counsel to enter a remittitur for the amount of the verdict, save what would be sufficient to compensate them for their services. Upon consultation they consented to be satisfied with five hundred dollars, and in accordance with the instructions of their client, released the defendant from the payment of the nine thousand five hundred dollars.

A monument to Wordsworth has been erected at Grasmere with this inscription: "To the memory of William Wordsworth, a true philosopher and poet, who by the special gift and calling of Almighty God, whether he discoursed on man or nature, failed not to lift up the heart to holy things. Tired not of maintaining the cause of the poor and simple; and so, in perilous times, was raised up to be a chief minister, not only of noblest poesy, but of high and sacred truth. The memorial is placed here by his friends and neighbors, in testimony of respect, affection and gratitude."

One Berdue, in California, has the best reasons in the world for exclaiming, with "the ugly man," "O my unfortunate stars! why was I born with such a phiz." First, he narrowly escaped hanging by the mob at San Francisco; then was sentenced to death by a legally constituted court; again was sentenced to fourteen years imprisonment; and lately, again, came near being hung by the vigilance committee, and all because of his close personal resemblance to the convict, Stewart.

The Boston Transcript states that the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Shaw, in session in Middlesex County, have received the decision of the Court of Common Pleas, Chief Justice Wells, who ruled in the case of a suit brought against the city of Charleston for the exclusion of a female pupil, not bearing a virtuous character, that such cause was not sufficient to authorize the exclusion. The decision of the Supreme Court threfore is, that the school authorities have the power of regulation in this respect.

An inreresting crimnal trial is in preparation at Berlin. Franz Timatschek, a tailor, insured his brother's life for 10,000 thalers. The brother soon after died and was buried, and the insurence was paid. The police have lately discovered that the death and burial were fradulent. The treasurer, and the physician certifying to the death, are arrested at Berlin, and the supposed dead man is said to have been seized in the foreign country whither he had fled.

The White Mountains of New Hampshire were, until recently, regarded as the highest land in the United States, east of the Rocky Mountains; but it has been ascertained that there are higher peaks in Yancy Co., N. C. Mount Washington, which is the highest peak of the White Mountains, is 6234 feet above the level of the sea, Black mountain, in Yancy County, is 6476 feet—thus beating Mount Washington by 252 feet.

The Wesleyan Methodists in Mansfield, England, now occupy as a chapel the mansion which was for many years the residence of the celebrated Lord Chesterfield, whose dining-room now forms the vestry, and the wings are occupied as the residence of the Wesleyan ministers. Its interior has recently undergone a thorough remodeling and renovation.

As an illustration how easily life may be sustained in the Polar latitudes, Surgeon Kane mentions that he fell in with a Dane over seventy years of age, who had spent fifty-five years of his life north of 73 degrees, subsisting during that period entirely on birds, fish, bears, and other animal food. He had not seen a vegetable in the whole time.

A cure for warts, is to take a leaf of a plant called the house-leek, which is quite common around households, peel it, and bind it on the wart, when you go to bed. In the morning the wart will be softened to such an extent that you may pull half of it off. Repeat the application for two or three nights, and the excrescence will disappear, leaving no mark behind.

At a meeting of the Catholic Union of Germany, held at Mayence on the 9th ult., the alarm of fire was raised, and in the rush seven women were killed, and other persons were badly injured. Quiet was restored, the sufferers removed, and the proceedings continued.

The master of a school at Bishopswearmouth has introduced the electric telegraph into his establishment, to carry his directions to his associates and servants in the different rooms of the building.

While two lads were gunning near Camden, N. J., they stopped a short time and amused themselves with fencing with their guns, when one of them was discharged, lodging the contents in the abdomen of the other boy, whose name was Stewart. He died the next day.

A supply of New-England Ice has been secured to San Francisco and Sacramento City, through the enterprise of the Boston and California Ice Company. A large cargo of ice has already been shipped, and another is soon to follow.

In Philadelphia, Friday, Oct. 24, before U. S. Commissioner Ingraham, Henry Poque, an alleged fugitive slave of Noble Pennington, of Cecil County, Md., who was arrested at 7 o'clock that morning, had a hearing, and was remanded to his master.

A statistical writer in the Boston Daily Advertiser shows by an examination of the Harvard College catalogue for 200 years, that clergymen have a greater chance for long life than laymen.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 commenced the first Wednesday in September, and continues forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.
Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J. W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First commences Aug. 27 and closes Dec. 2.
" Second " Dec. 3 " " March 16.
" Third " March 17 " " June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term. Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

Board, in private families, per week, from $1·25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. Clarke, Sec. } of Trustees.
DeRuyter, July 18, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
No. 13—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
No. 14—Delaying Obedience. 4 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention isinvited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pp.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to George B. Utter, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New-York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville - Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.
Terms:
$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.
☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.
☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.
☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to
Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

W B Gillett

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 22.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1851.

WHOLE NO. 386.

The Sabbath Recorder.

SERVING OUR GENERATION—NO. 1.*

BY ELD. W. B. GILLETT.

Acts 13: 36—"For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep."

The apostle uttered these words in his argument at Antioch, while attempting to prove to the unbelieving Jews, that Jesus, whom God had raised from the dead, was the true Messiah. The passage has allusion to a man sustaining a religious character, and living to do good to his fellow men. May we never lose sight of the great responsibilities resting upon us in view of our personal relation to Almighty God. We have, in the language of the apostle, an illustration of a useful life and a peaceful death. One of the ancients, at least, served his own generation by the will of God. David recognized his life as a state of active service; and that he might act well his part, he took his position in society as providence directed. A skillful commander places his men as in his judgment will be for the best, and no one has any right to change without permission, though the station allotted him may not be as conspicuous or commanding as he might desire. Is there not a lesson here that will apply to all Christians? David felt a tie linking him to his fellow men—to all men; and while he served them, he felt most deeply that his highest relation was a divine one. He was truly sincere in all his acts. Though imperfect in his life, he was perfect in his purposes; and by infallible wisdom he was declared to be "the friend of God"—"a man after God's own heart." He desired the prolongation of life only that he might be useful. Perseverance, that great element of usefulness, entered into all his movements, both in public and in private. Having served his own generation during a long life, he made his death-bed a perpetual admonition to all his successors. The position he occupied gave publicity to his acts, being the one that providence assigned him, and the one in which he could best serve God.

As Christians, we are engaged in a great work, not to accomplish any selfish end, but for noble purposes. We are citizens of one common country, professors of one common faith, and descendants of a race who never deemed it irrelevant to inquire into the process by which successive generations have been served, and by which coming ages may be blessed. If we would serve our generation, it is needful that we should know its wants. The wind must come in contact with the ocean before the billows will roll, or the waters be purified thereby. As soon might we expect that the spicy breezes of Arabia would cause the waters of the Atlantic to swell and dash upon her western shore, as that the mass of people in this age will be moved, elevated, and impelled towords one great point by the conflicting whims "of those whom luxury has emasculated of strength, and ignorance has incapacitated for counsel." We must begin to understand the age as soon as we feel its claims. Men of active sympathy are among us. Our fathers in the church are such, and have learned wisdom in the best school; and by God's help they are capable of guiding the destinies of the church—of guiding the old ship of Zion to the safest and best port.

The predominant characteristic of our age is action. Who, then, are fitted to serve such an age? Men who are like unto it, active; men who are not theorizers only, but active and practical men, and in every avocation working men. The time has come when, if we would be useful to our generation, we must be active in acquiring, and equally industrious in applying all we acquire in noble and magnanimous acts, that may be conducive to the general good. Strong souls, in sound bodies, men of good qualities and of close application, are demanded now; the world has need of them, and God calls for them. The present age, though distinct, yet is not separate from the ages which have preceded it. We are bound to generations past by a most sublime connection. Our age is all antiquity compressed—as the majestic river, widening to the sea, is the result of every tributary stream, however obscure, and of every fountain, however remote and small. How necessary, then, in order that we may serve the present generation, for us to explore the past. To remain ignorant of what has been, will keep us indifferent to what needs to be during the present age. Who can look over the past, even in our own denomination, and then forbear to act? We may not be able to spread before the world such a history of the past as would be interesting, but enough may be learned to teach us, that though there has been a great want of men to think and act, yet we have been blessed with some noble spirits, some heroes, who are immortalized in the affections of the people of their generations and of succeeding generations. Providence has appointed us our position in an age and country most favorable for the illustration of truth. In ruder ages, the arm of despotism has ruled; not so now; mind is brought in contact with mind.

Action—energetic, comprehensive action—is the condition of our lives. There must be something to excite to labor and toil; there must be some noble object, in order that it may beget noble action. In the history of the past we have some noble examples. Passing by the inspired apostles, we may come to modern times. Martin Luther found a New Testament, unencumbered by tradition, and read it in secret, earnestly panting after truth, until bright visions burst upon his enraptured heart, making his cell in the lonely convent more glorious than the palaces of kings. And he immediately felt that that should not be hid which God designed all men to know; and a desire to serve his generation took possession of his soul, until he had kindled a flame that lighted up the surrounding atmosphere. The work was not carried on by him alone. A Latimer and a Ridley must labor and suffer in its onward progress. "Fear not, Master Ridley," said Latimer, as both were going in chains to the stake, "for, by the blessing of God, we will this day kindle such a flame as shall never go out." No—it has not gone out, and it will not go out while salvation is proclaimed through Christ. Sir Edward Coke, a distinguished lawyer, saw a lad one day taking notes at meeting. Being pleased with his appearance, he asked his parents to let him educate their son. He was sent to Oxford; he drank from the fountain of knowledge, "and in those draughts, the sober certainty of waking bliss." He summoned around him the renowned sages of antiquity, and with them made a feast of fat things. But his soul was too free for those chosen associates; his principles were too philanthropic for the selfishness of that age; his doctrines were too liberal for old England; he therefore sought a home among the granite hills of New England. But his spirit was too noble for the people in that land; he was driven from the society of white men, through winter storms, and hordes of uncultivated savages, to plant the first free colony in the new world. That boy was Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island, and of religious liberty in the world.

[To be continued.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c." [Continued.

The unquestionable fact, thus established, of the death of Christ having been on "the preparation day," proves those to be in error who refer this term to the day preceding the eating of the Passover Lamb. That ordinance had already been observed by Christ and his apostles the preceding evening, and we doubt not, by the Jews generally; but we read of no "preparation day" before it. This is the more remarkable, as a preparation was really necessary for that ordinance; and the search for leaven has a conspicuous place among the Jews, on the day preceding the night of Passover. We must not, however, confound such preparation, and what was necessary to be done in making ready the lamb, with that preparation day for the Sabbath which followed the eating of it. "The preparation day, that is, the day before the Sabbath," (Mark xv. 42,) is a connection which intimates to what it pertained, and for what it was the preparation. Luke, also, having narrated the circumstances of the interment, adds, "And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on." Luke xxiii. 54.

Others of those, who vindicate the church's practice, observing that it is expressly stated to be the day before the Sabbath, and overlooking the fact stated with equal explicitness, that that Sabbath-day was "an high day," arbitrarily and without authority, speak of this "preparation day," as meaning merely the three hours immediately preceding the setting of the sun, which ushered in the weekly Sabbath. It was not, however, a preparation of so limited a nature. It is spoken of as a "day;" for "that day was the preparation." Luke xxiii. 54. Even Greswell, (on the Parables) admits that "the preparation of the Passover, according to John xix. 14, had begun either so early as six in the morning, or not later than twelve at noon." There is, indeed, no reason why we should seek to limit "that day." Why must we suppose that the 14th day, being "the day of preparation," was not an entire day like every other, beginning at sunset the preceding evening, although upon it the lamb was eaten.

No one, however, supposes that the ordinary Sabbath weekly had preceding it, a "day of preparation." Besides, it is not more true that this is stated to be "the day before the Sabbath," than it is that "that Sabbath day was an high day." It is thus distinguished, therefore, from the weekly Sabbath. And, again, it is not more true that it was "the day before the Sabbath," than that it was "the preparation of the Passover." It is quite evident, therefore, that it was connected only with, and immediately preceded the annual festival,—the Passover Sabbath.

It is farther to be observed that this "preparation day" corresponded with the day immediately preceding the Israelitish Exodus. Although from the manner in which here also the 14th and 15th days are often mingled and confounded, the fact is not generally perceived, yet the Scripture statements in reference to the redemption from Egyptian bondage show that an entire day, consisting of "the evening and the morning" did elapse between the killing of the Passover lamb and the Israelites' departure from the scene of their oppression.

The eating of the Passover lamb was on the 14th of the month, while their departure took place on the 15th—not in the morning of that day, but as we shall show, in the evening or night, a whole day thus intervening between the two events. As the 14th day, like other days, began with the evening, (the principle of computation being from "even to even,") so the 15th day must also be reckoned from the evening. The Passover day, being the 14th, continued, therefore, to run till the corresponding time of the following day, that is, till the following evening, when the 15th day began. Till that evening arrived, it would not, and could not, be the 15th, "the morrow" after the 14th. The whole feast of unleavened bread was to continue seven days, from the 14th to the 21st day of the month, of which both the beginning and termination were at even. (Exodus xii. 18.) Each of these days, therefore, including the 15th, are thus expressly declared to begin with the evening. Not only, then, is there no necessity, from the immediate succession of the 14th and 15th days, for imagining the Exodus to have followed the eating of the Passover on the same night, but we are shut up to the very contrary, by the fact, that the 14th day, so commencing in the evening, continued till the next evening; and the 15th then commencing, continued, in like manner, till the evening following. "They departed from Rameses in the first month, on the 15th day of the first month; on the morrow after the Passover, the children of Israel went out with an high hand, in the sight of all the Egyptians." Numb. xxxiii. 3.

It is to be inferred, therefore, that a whole night and day must have intervened between the Passover and the departure of the Israelites; we shall now endeavor to confirm this view by a consideration of circumstances mentioned in the context. From evidence contained there, we shall find that, however great the haste, not until the close of the day whose sun arose on Egypt's first-born slain, the liberated bondsmen left the land of their captivity. On "the morrow after the passover," is one of the Scripture declarations concerning it; "on the fifteenth day," is another. And, now, we proceed to prove that their departure was in the season of the night—and, being on the 15th day of the month, necessarily the night following the night of the Passover, the Passover having been on the 14th. "Observe the month of Abib," it is commanded, (Deut. xvi. 1.) "and keep the Passover unto the Lord thy God, for in the month Abib the Lord thy God brought thee forth of Egypt, BY NIGHT." Not in the morning, therefore, but "by night," on the 15th, were they brought forth.

In farther confirmation of this, let us look back upon the account given by Moses of the Exodus. It is said, "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass, at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt. It is a night to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out from the land of Egypt; this is that night of the Lord, to be observed of all the children of Israel, in their generations." Exod. xii. 40—42. But their departure having been on the fifteenth, if it was at night at all, it could not be the night on which they ate the passover, that being the 14th. Attention to the circumstances narrated, independently of this testimony, would, indeed, make it exceedingly probable, that their departure was on the night following their eating of the passover; and these circumstances connected with this testimony of its having really been at night, puts it beyond all question.

That the Israelites had made very little preparation for their departure till immedi-before their Exodus, is evident from the whole of the inspired narrative. This may, perhaps, have been partly occasioned by doubts as to their immediate deliverance, and partly by the distractions of such an awful and eventful time. The only appearance of preparation is the earlier command to borrow (literally to ask) from the Egyptians, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, (Exod. xi. 21;) and it is doubtful whether even this command was obeyed, or was at all intended to be obeyed till the very day before their departure. (Exod xii. 35.)

We read, indeed, that they had not "prepared for themselves any victual;" but "took their dough before it was leavened;" and the reason for this was, "because they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry." Exod. xii. 34, 39. But their having remained over the fourteenth day, till the evening of the fifteenth, would have afforded them no opportunity of carrying with them leavened bread. This would have required their detention a full week, at least. It is to be remembered, that they had just begun to observe the Passover—during which time they were wholly forbidden to make, or to have, leavened bread in their houses. (Exod. xii. 19.) The Feast, which was of seven days, had just begun, and whatever opportunities they might otherwise have enjoyed, they would not, at that season, under any circumstances, have leavened their bread for other six days, and, accordingly, it was "unleavened cakes" which they did at length bake "of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt. (Exod. xii. 39.) The reason, therefore, of their taking the dough in its unleavened state, was not, as has sometimes been supposed, their not being permitted to remain a few hours longer in Egypt, but that, in the haste of the Egyptians to send them forth, "they were thrust out of Egypt and could not tarry" till the days of unleavened bread were over. It was yet but the 15th day of the month, and they could neither have or eat leavened bread "until the one and twentieth day of the month at even." (Exod. xii. 18, 19.)

With such evidence, we are surely entitled to conclude that those who interpret "between the two evenings" as referring to the hour of midnight, in the case of the Israelites' departure from Egypt, are altogether wrong. Indeed, this supposition is demonstrated to be a mistake, by the form of the institution of the Passover itself, and is perfectly set at rest by a consideration of that eventful night. For, while the lamb of the Passover was only to be killed on the 14th "between the two evenings," its blood to be sprinkled in the manner enjoined—the lamb itself was prepared to be eaten; its flesh was not "sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof"—and thereafter it was to be eaten with appointed ceremonies—and after all this, it was only "at midnight, the Lord smote all the first born in the land of Egypt"—between which time and the evening, therefore, all the preceding circumstances were attended to; and, even after midnight and the destruction of Egypt's first-born, it is still not yet called morning, but "Pharaoh rose up in the night, [of the 14th,] he and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt, for there was not a house where there was not one dead." Exod. xii. 30.

[To be continued.

The longer I live, the more certain I am, that the great difference between men, the great and the insignificant, is energy—invicible determination—an honest purpose once fixed, and then victory. That quality will do anything that can be done in the world: and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunity, will make a two-legged creature a man without it.

[Goethe.

THE PLEDGE.

BY JOHN PIERPONT.

Thou sparkling bowl! thou sparkling bowl!
  Though lips of bards thy brim may press,
And eyes of beauty o'er thee roll,
  And song and dance thy power confess.
I will not touch thee, for there clings
A scorpion to thy side, that stings!

Thou crystal glass! like Eden's tree,
  Thy melted ruby tempts the eye,
And, as from that, there comes from thee,
  The voice, "Thou shalt not surely die!"
I dare not lift thy liquid gem—
A snake is twisted round thy stem!

Thou liquid fire! like that which glowed
  For Paul upon Melita's shore,
Thou 'st been upon my guests bestowed;
  But thou shalt warm my house no more,
For, wheresoe'er thy radiance falls,
Forth, from thy heat, a viper crawls!

What, though of gold the goblet be,
  Embossed with branches of the vine,
Beneath whose burnished leaves we see
  Such clusters as poured out the wine?
Among these leaves an adder hangs!
I fear him; for I've felt his fangs.

The Hebrew, who the desert trod,
  And felt the fiery serpent's bite,
Looked up to the ordained god,
  And found that life was in the sight;
So the WORM-bitten's fiery veins
Cool when he drinks what God ordains.

Ye gracious clouds! ye deep cold wells!
  Ye gems, from mossy rocks that drip!
Springs that from earth's mysterious cells,
  Gush o'er your granite basin's lip!
To you I look;—your largess give,
And I will drink of you, and live.

GUTZLAFF THE MISSIONARY.

The death of this distinguished missionary to China is announced by the last arrivals from Europe as having taken place at Hong-Kong. Mr. Gutzlaff was born in the Prussian province of Pomerania, in 1803. He early displayed a strong thirst for knowledge, and wished to receive a liberal education, with a view to entering the Christian ministry. The poverty of his parents, however, compelled them to bind him as an apprentice to a trade. A poem which he wrote at this period attracted the attention of the King of Prussia, who procured his admission into the Missionary School at Berlin. After remaining here for two years, he was taken under the patronage of the Dutch Missionary Society at Rotterdam, and was destined to a mission on the island of Sumatra. He continued his preparations for this difficult and dangerous service until 1826, when, starting for the field of his mission, he was prevented from entering it by a war which had broken out, and took up his residence in Batavia. Here he commenced the study of the Chinese language, and in a short time made so great proficiency that he was induced to devote himself to the establishment of Christianity in the Chinese Empire. His first efforts were directed to Siam, where he labored with eminent success for some time. He then took up his abode at Macao, and, in connection with Dr. Morrison, engaged with great energy in the duties of his mission. He established schools, circulated tracts, and commenced a new translation of the Bible into the Chinese language. Under his auspices, a society was formed for the diffusion of useful knowledge in China, a monthly magazine was issued, and a large number of presses employed in printing his own writings. At the same time he was assiduous in preaching, making frequent journeys for that purpose, of which we have an interesting account in his "Journal of Voyages." He met with a good deal of success in his labors, until at length he incurred the suspicion of the Chinese Government, who accused him of being in the interests of England. From that time he was unable to pursue his missionary operations, and was employed in the service of the English expedition, to which his knowledge of the Chinese language and customs made him highly useful. He took an active part in the negotiations of peace between England and China in 1842. Gutzlaff was a man of remarkable steadfastness of purpose, combining an ardent zeal with sound discretion, and a sagacious observer of men and things. Although his endeavors to promote Christianity in China have proved a failure, his contributions to our knowledge of Chinese life, are valuable, and deserve to be held in respectful remembrance.

[N. Y. Tribune.

PREACHING IN CHINA.

"The rooms for my chapel and school," says a missionary of the American Board, writing from Fuh-Chau, China, "are small and very humble in appearance." They are not the churches of Boston, nor the session-rooms of Presbyterian churches in New Jersey, nor yet the school-rooms of thriving 'western hamlets.' They were Chinese shops, and are so still in general appearance. The chapel is about eleven feet wide and thirty feet in length, with no windows, as a substitute for which wooden slats occupy a portion of the front at the side of the door. The doors turn on wooden hinges, the sides of the room are partly of bamboo plaster-work, and partly of boards, and the seats are mostly pine benches without backs. Here the word of life is held forth, and here he hopes to see the ignorant and degraded made wise unto everlasting life.

The congregation is not American. The missionary finds that "he must invite and urge persons to sit; request them to be still during prayer; strive to check levity and laughter; and make known his great design in coming here. He must do these things again and again, and at the same time be in danger of becoming confused and disturbed, on finding that the discharge of his supernumerary duties is apparently in vain." Preaching is not what it is in a Christian land. It is generally rather talking to the people, without notes, and often with many interruptions. Yet "many listen attentively and respectfully." It is difficult to make a Chinese understand the spirituality of Christian worship. Their worship is all form and ceremony, and almost the first question will be what ceremonies do you perform before Jesus or his image? A man coming in at the close of service, when Mr. Baldwin was taking down a map which he had used to illustrate his remarks, inquired, "What divinity or idol is that." On visits to the chapel during the week, the time is often spent in familiar conversation rather than in extended remarks, and in this way the missionary "discovers more fully the many misconceptions of the people, in respect to Christianity. He hears, for instance, such questions as these: 'You speak of believing in Jesus, of reverencing him; how is this to be done?' 'Do you burn incense, or light candles before him?' 'Where is he?' 'When you pray to him, can you see him?' 'When you beg favors, or call him, does he come and appear to you?'"

[Jour. of Missions.

THE LAPLAND MISSIONARY.

The poor Laplanders are without many of the things which we consider quite necessary to life; and, what is worse, they have not a knowledge of the true God, and his son Jesus Christ; and no one, for a long time, thought of going to tell these poor Laplanders about Jesus Christ, who died to save them.

It was about seventeen years ago, that a Swede, named Tellstrom, had been reading a book which told of the sad state of spiritual darkness of the Laplanders, and he felt a strong desire to go and preach the gospel to them. This man, Tellstrom, had himself lived without God; but he was convinced of sin while hearing the Rev. George Scott preach in Stockholm; and he anxiously put the question, "What must I do to be saved?" He was a journeyman painter, and had been used to work on the Sunday; but that he might be able to go to chapel on the Sunday, he gave up one seventh of his scanty food and and wages. His growth in grace after he had found peace with God, was most encouraging. He was soon engaged in various efforts to do good; and when he read of the wants of the Laplanders, he told Mr. Scott he very much wished to go to them.

But there were many difficulties in the way. "How can you learn the language?" said Mr. Scott to him, "it is very difficult." "I have thought of this," he replied; "and I heard there was a Lappish Grammar published many years ago; and after a great deal of trouble, I found one amongst the lumber of an old book shop. I found, also, a Lappish New Testament. I have been trying the language, and I firmly believe I shall be able to master it." "But," said Mr. Scott, "the cold is so much greater in Lapland than in Stockholm, and you cannot get the same shelter and comfort as you do here." "I have thought of that, too," he said "and during the late severe weather, I have gone up and down the stone-stairs, that I might try whether I could bear the cold. I have not suffered at all; and I am convinced that, in this respect, I am especially fitted for Lapland." "What will you do for food? You will get no bread or vegetables; all that you will have will be the flesh of the reindeer, smoked or otherwise prepared." "This," said he, "has not given me a thought. I have been none the worse for fasting once a week that I might secure my precious Sundays; and if God sends me to Lapland, he will support me there." "But how will you bear the solitude? You may sometimes be placed where for many dreary miles you could not meet a spiritual friend." He was moved at this, and said, "I seem too young a convert to be removed from the careful nursing of the Christian church. I feel how much I need this; and yet if God be directing my steps to Lapland, my soul may certainly rely on that word, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world;' and if Jesus be with me, is not this enough?"

[The Commission.

A MAN COMPELLED TO COME IN.

There lived in my congregation a lawyer of eminence in his profession, and of strictly moral habits; but who was wholly devoted to his business, and heedless about the things which belonged to his eternal well-being. In a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, while a number of us were engaged in a prayer-meeting, I observed that one of my elders rose up suddenly and left the house. His mind, as he afterwards told me, became deeply impressed with the guilt and danger of the lawyer of whom I have been speaking, and he resolved to make one effort for his salvation. In accordance with this resolution, he went directly to the office, where he found the man whom he sought, at the writing-table, deeply engaged in preparing for court. The elder, after the common salutations, said, "Mr. I., I want you to go with me to Mr. H.'s." "What for?" inquired the man of the bar. "We have a prayer-meeting there," said the elder, "and I want you to attend it." "Oh," said the lawyer, "I cannot possibly do that, my business is crowding me, and I must attend to it." "Your business," said the elder, "is of no importance in comparison with the salvation of your immortal soul, which you are exposing to the miseries of hell, by every moment's delay." This plain address, with the solomn and earnest manner in which it was delivered, overcame the lawyer's resolution to continue at his business, and in a few moments they both entered the prayer-meeting. We were engaged in prayer when they came in, and as soon as there was an opportunity, the elder said to me, "Mr. I. has come to this meeting, and I request an interest in the prayers of this assembly for the salvation of his soul. As it was evident from the appearance of Mr. I. that he had no objection to the proposal of his friend, we knelt down and united all our hearts in one voice, to plead for the soul of a man who hitherto had no disposition to pray for himself. The Lord heard our prayers, and before the close of the meeting the lawyer indulged a hope in the grace of God, through his long-neglected Saviour.

At the next communion he, with more than seventy others, united with the church. He was subsequently chosen, and ordained, to fill the office of a deacon, in which capacity he served the church till the day of his death, which occurred about twenty years subsequent to the time of his attending this prayer-meeting.

Reader, here is another instance of the blessing of God attending the faithful and affectionate efforts of an individual to save a soul from death. Are you in the habit of making such efforts? or does your cold heart wish to be excused from such a service? Those whose hearts are as cold as your own will very readily excuse you now, but will your lost friends and neighbors, when they meet you at the judgment-seat, excuse you for not making every possible effort to save their undying souls from the lake that burns with fire and brimstone for ever?

[Pastor's Life.

DAILY CONTRIBUTIONS.

A Wesleyan minister makes the following communication to the Secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. The principle involved in it, that of stated and frequent contributions, is of the utmost importance. It would not only secure a great increase of funds, but also a continued and earnest remembrance of missions in our prayers.

DEAR SIRS,—I have of late given very careful attention to the statistics of our great Missionary Society, and have been much struck with the comparatively small amount raised by our members for this "best of all causes." As I am persuaded that, if a more systematic and general support were given to it by the entire body of our people, we should very soon more than double its income, I respectfully venture to solicit your attention for a moment, while I refer to the manner in which I have felt it to be my privilege to contribute to this great cause for many years past.

I am not a wealthy man; my income having never yet brought me within the claims of the income-tax. But it is a rule in my house, that each member of the family should contribute something every day to the missions. And I find that the regular observance of this duty makes it, not only an easy but an exceedingly delightful one also. Our Missionary Box is placed upon the breakfast-table every morning, and my little girl is appointed to the charge of it. You will perhaps smile when I name the amount of this daily contribution; but I find that it tells up in the course of the year, and that the total is by no means despicable. Each member of my family, then, contributes a farthing a day. We are six in number; so that we raise, in this way, 10½d. a week, or £2. 5*s.* 6*d.* in the year. To this sum I add, at the close of each quarter, 5*s.* as a thank-offering for mercies during the quarter; and if any occurrence takes place, which discovers to us more particularly the care and protection of Providence, I make that also the occasion for another "offering." Should friends visit us, we tell them of our plan, and generally find that they conform to it. So that, from these sources, our missionary-box realizes about £4 in the course of the year.

EFFORTS TO SPREAD THE GOSPEL.

The following facts, taken from a paper read before the Evangelical Alliance by Rev. Joseph Angus, show, in a nutshell, what British Christians are doing to bring the world under the dominion of the Gospel:—

"The income of all the missionary societies appropriated to evangelical labor among the heathen amounts to £345,000. The number of European agents whose time and labor are devoted to the heathen is about 1,050, and of native teachers and preachers about 3,000, scattered over Asia, Africa, America, and the islands of the sea. Adding to the income of these societies the amount contributed by the Bible, tract, and other educational societies, we have for the conversion and education of the heathen a total expenditure of £359,000 a year. Adding to this amount the expenditure of the various societies for our Colonies, for Europe, and for the Jews, we have a grand total £554,300; the number of ministers supported being about 1,860, and of teachers and native helpers about 3,400. Adding again to this sum of £554,300, the benevolent income of the Bible and tract societies devoted to home objects, we have a total of £597,710, or say of £600,000 ($3,000,000) a year.

"The Bible, or parts of the Bible, have been published by the various Bible societies (translated for the most part by missionaries) in about 170 different languages or dialects: 180 versions have been made, and of these 130 were never printed before. The total number of copies of the Scriptures issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society for Europe has been within the last fifty years, about 20,000,000."

THE ARMENIANS.

Armenia was once a powerful kingdom of Asia, occupying the region which bounded on the north by Mount Caucasus, lies between the Black and Caspian Seas, with Mount Ararat in its center. As a distinct kingdom it has long since been broken up, and divided between Russia, Persia, and Turkey. The Armenians are a nation "scattered and peeled." They are to be found, not only in the countries immediately adjoining what was once the dwelling-place of their forefathers, but in India to the east, and westward as far as Italy, Hungary, and Austria.

Christianity was introduced amongst them in the beginning of the fourth century, at a time when the "silver had become dross, and the wine mixed with water." Ceremonies, and relics, and pretended miracles, appear to have occupied their attention much more than the pure and undefiled religion which the Apostle sums up when he says, "In Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love." Yet such as it was amongst them, they were satisfied to endure for its sake many and grevious persecutions, at one period from the heathen Persians, then from Christians, and lastly from the Mohammedans; until at length, toward the latter end of the sixteenth century, they were broken up as a nation by the Persian conqueror, Shah Abbas, who, that he might defend himself the more easily against the Turks, laid waste a great part of Armenia.

[Ch. Miss. Gleaner.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 13, 1851.

DESTITUTION OF CITIES.

That there are multitudes in this favored land, who seldom or never hear the sound of the gospel, is as true as it is deplorable. It is true especially of our large cities. We know not what proportion of the half million of souls in this wicked Sodom are in the habit of attending on the ministry of the word; but we are much mistaken, if it is as great as one half. It becomes a question of profound interest, therefore, what can be done by way of remedying this state of things.

Some, perhaps, would propose street preaching. Well, "Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets; she crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors." The politician harangues the multitude in the streets. Why should the minister of Christ not do so, whose theme is of ten thousand times greater importance?

We would inquire, however, whether church members are doing all in their power to induce the perishing multitude to attend the places of worship already established? Does the Christian make it his business to kindly invite others to the house of God, and pledge them a comfortable seat when they get there? How much might be accomplished in this simple way, if Christians would only do their duty! But no; they have no time for such small work. They have the business of this world to attend to, and it engrosses their time night and day. They attend public worship themselves very devoutly. Some of them are ready enough to contribute their money, when any thing is to be accomplished that requires it. But seldom, or never, are they known to exert themselves to bring others with them to the sanctuary. Let reform commence here. Almost every day, the business of the merchant, manufacturer, or mechanic, brings him in contact with those who never darken the doors of a church edifice. How easy it would be to give them a kind invitation to attend, the next Sabbath, to hear their preacher! Indeed, they might offer to call for them at their houses, and wait on them personally to the church, and see that they are saved from all embarrassment in procuring a seat. Nay, more—they might then put up a fervent prayer that God would bless the word to their conversion.

But no sooner is reform attempted in this respect, than a difficulty is at once presented of another kind. Many of those who habitually absent themselves from the house of God, belong to the poorer classes of society. They are not able to dress well. They cannot equip themselves so as to make a sufficiently respectable appearance among the worshippers of God, many of whom are richly adorned. At all events they think so. And if they should be persuaded to attend church for once, they are straightway made to feel that there is a broad line of distinction between themselves and the rest of the assembly—a feeling so uncomfortable, that the chances are ten to one against their ever being found there again. Now, whatever may be said in palliation of the practice, on the part of wealthy Christians, of glittering in jewelry, wearing plumes and "whistling silks," the house of God is the last place on earth where such a display should be made. If they must adorn themselves with such things, let them do it on other occasions, and in other places. But in the house of God they should level themselves with the poor, as far as possible.

It may be said, that the poor ought not to be embarrassed by such things; that there is no design to hold them at a distance; that they are perfectly welcome to make their appearance in the religious assembly in their poor attire; that it is a foolish and an unnecessary feeling on their part to be awe-struck in the presence of those who are more gorgeously arrayed. Nevertheless the fact cannot be disputed, that among the humbler classes such feelings do exist, and, in spite of all the logic that may be used to the contrary, they will continue to exist. Is it not the duty of Christians to commence a reform in this matter? Ought they not, when repairing to the sanctuary, to leave their glittering ornaments at home, and put on such apparel as will not show too great a distance between them and those who grapple with hard poverty?

Our opinion is, that the splendid and costly edifices, which it has become common to erect for church purposes, have much the same effect upon the impoverished classes of society. Their tendency is to exclude from hearing the gospel those who are not every day habituated to such display. The poor may be invited to such places; they may be told, that they are perfectly welcome; but when they come, and see a huge pile of hewn stone, finished with costly carvings, windows of stained glass, and other ornaments in which luxury loves to revel; and when they see a retinue of carriages at the door, dislodging their rich owners "clothed in purple and fine linen," and then take a peep through the aisles at the assembly, large numbers of whom are adorned with all the insignia of wealth and grandeur, they involuntarily shrink from entering. They cannot, notwithstanding all the proffers of welcome which they may receive, feel that it is a suitable place for them. They turn away, to seek some other place more congenial to their habits, and the sound of the gospel is perhaps shut out from their ears forever.

In common with others, we are impressed with the importance of doing something to bring the truths of the gospel into closer contact with the minds of the great multitude. We have no doubt that preaching in the streets would do good. We have no doubt that a system of visiting from house to house, preaching to every family who might be willing to listen, would also be of great service, and perhaps save a multitude of souls. But as those who might be converted by such instrumentality must eventually be taken to some established place of worship, the evils we have spoken of cannot be safely neglected.

These remarks, however, do not touch the condition of the great numbers of the wealthy, who pay no respect to the preaching of the gospel. How shall they be reached? Alas! "how hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!" T. B. B.

MANY CHURCHES—POOR PREACHING.

The City of Brooklyn, near New York, has long been designated as "the City of Churches." Recently, however, doubts have been expressed as to its title to such designation, by persons who claimed for Rochester, N. Y., superiority in this respect. A comparison showed that they had each a church for every thousand inhabitants. Since this fact was announced, a claim has been set up in behalf of Norwich, Ct., a city which, with about six thousand inhabitants, has nine houses for public worship. Doubtless some other places might show a larger supply than even Norwich. Indeed, we have now in mind a village in New Jersey, which, with less than three thousand inhabitants, has eight churches—one more than there were in Asia when John wrote his revelation. But boasting of such superiority strikes us as in very bad taste. To those who are addicted to it, we commend the following sensible remarks of a secular cotemporary:—

"It is very desirable that every city, village, and township should have churches enough to seat comfortably all its inhabitants, so that none shall excuse themselves for non-attendance on public worship by the plea that there is no room for them or no Church within reach. But, beyond this, we deem it rather a matter of regret than of exultation that so many Churches should exist as in Brooklyn, Rochester, or Norwich. Far better increase the size of existing Churches than add to the number. The means of the people are exhausted in Church-building; they are unable to pay decent salaries to their ministers; the consequence of 'poor pay' is often 'poor preach;' and so the ordinances of the sanctuary become irksome, and fair-weather Christians are multiplied. Thus a multiplicity of churches becomes a source, not of strength, but of weakness. We know poor townships of twenty-five hundred inhabitants which have five or six churches, and the result is that while the people are overtaxed the clergy are inadequately supported. Now we are opposed to exorbitant salaries for any service, but we consider starving ministers a poor way to advance the interests of Religion. We wish our people would think less of minor points of difference, have fewer churches, and make those they have more inviting by thorough ventilation, efficient warming in cold weather, good preaching fairly remunerated, large effective choirs, and all the proper incidents of strong societies. Many a one will attend church with a prospect of meeting half the town there, who would stay at home if he could only hope to see an eighth of his neighbors. Let us think a little before boasting of having the most churches."

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Desecration in Germany.

GLASGOW, October 24th, 1851.

In the Evangelical Alliance, a paper on Sunday desecration in Germany was read by the Rev. T. Plitt, of Bonn. As is usual, he assumed that Sunday is the Sabbath, applied to it the Sabbath sanctions, and lamented over the prevailing state of feeling regarding it. Desecration, he says, has always gone to a greater length in the Popish than in the Protestant districts, and is most marked in that part of Germany which the Emperor Maximilian used to call "my great priests' row," Mayence, Treves, and Cologne. Forgetting that the Church of Rome pretends to no scriptural authority for the observance of the first day, (but, on the contrary, declares that Protestants have it as a holiday through their traditions,) Mr. P. complains that the Romish clergy bear no testimony against its desecration. But even in the Lutheran Church, it is but little otherwise, although a few sanctify it as they believe the Sabbath should be. But since the revolutionary movements, commencing in 1848, the British Sunday prize essays had been received, and some of them translated. The Church Conferences discuss the subject; that of Stuttgard, in 1850, also issued an address calling attention to it, and addressed a letter to the Governments, seeking legislative enactments, which, also, has been published. The address to the people draws largely on English arguments in favor of Sunday—and sometimes errs in the excess of credit it gives us as Sunday-keepers, as when it speaks of "the harbors" and "the railways" as exhibiting "the quiet of the Sabbath day," and when it affirms that on the Sunday evening "nothing is heard of the noise of inns and gin-shops."

In Leipsic, in the kingdom of Saxony, he states, not only is working and hammering in the public squares quite common, but "the police sell, for sixpence, tickets licensing to work in public" on Sunday. In Dresden, the gin-shops are opened in the morning, and during divine service, public dancing and music are permitted, ("the same being the case in most parts of Germany,") and a so called Tivoli theater is allowed to be open. In the Grand Duchy of Hesse, even the Ecclesiastical Board makes allowances much as Constantine did in his law which first gave civil sanction to Sunday observance. A rescript of the Consistory, in 1843, intimates that "as often as the weather, or other circumstances, make it necessary to continue agricultural labor on Sundays, after the morning service, the burgomaster of the village may give permission for it." The Legislature have been solicited to interfere for Sunday sanctification, and a Committee of the Second Chamber, on the 24th of March of the present year, reported to reject a motion for suppressing "public dancing parties, and all worldly amusements in public places," which was confirmed by 42 votes against 2. A subsequent motion for shutting the theaters and restricting public dancing parties, was also rejected, except in so far as these are prohibited till after service. In other of the Governments, however, Sunday sanctification has been promised more encouragement.

The Submarine Telegraph, which was carried across the Channel three weeks ago, to within a mile of the French coast, has this week had that extension of the cable, and is now carried up out of the sea to Sangatte on the Calais coast. It is now being united with the telegraph at Dover, from which South Foreland, where the crossing has been made, is distant about 3 miles. It is stated to have cost £20,000. J. A. BEGG.

RHODE ISLAND CORRESPONDENCE.

Spiritual Rappings before the Supreme Court of R.I.—Infant Sprinkling, Baptism, &c.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 2, 1851.

This community has been much interested in the trial of a girl for the murder of her infant half-brother, by the Supreme Court of the State. It was brought to a termination, by a verdict of "Not Guilty." The trial lasted three days, and was conducted with some ability on the part of the Attorney General for the State, and much on the part of Messrs. Porter and Dickerman for the prisoner. The evidence against the girl was very strong. She had procured arsenic, and was left alone, with the child in her care, on the day of its death. She had confessed that she gave the child arsenic, and seven grains of arsenic were found in its stomach. I think that no one doubted that she committed the awful deed. She was saved by the plea of insanity, which was ingeniously made by her counsel, although probably no one believed that she was insane. No evidence was adduced to show that she had been insane. It was plead, however, that the act itself indicated insanity, and that several circumstances rendered her peculiarly susceptible to monomania: first, her age (thirteen years;) second, the vicious life of her mother, who had been divorced from her husband, and was living with another man. But the most important part of the plea was based on the fact that she had been for a long time a medium for the "rappings." It was urged, that such an avocation was greatly conducive to mental aberration; that it tended to estrange the mind, and lead the subject to irresponsible acts. The prisoner confessed that all her wonderful feats, which had astounded so many ghost-seeing subjects of delusion, had been performed by herself, unaided by any spirit, save the spirit of deception. She explained how she made the knocks, and other "wonderful phenomena." It also appeared in evidence, that many other prominent media in the city had made the same confession. An effort was made to invalidate her confession, by showing that she had done what she could not do unaided by the "spirits." One of the believers was summoned to the stand, who said he lifted her table, and it was about "four times as heavy as he expected!" Very properly did the learned bench lose its gravity for a time at this "astonishing development." The poor deluded man could attribute it to nothing but spirits, although it appeared that he had taken no adequate means to determine why the table was so heavy.

Quite a sensation is felt among the spirits, at being exposed before a judicial tribunal, and it is quite disastrous for them, that their magic tales have thus for once been subjected to the strict rules of legal testimony. At such a tribunal of criticism, they vanish into airy nothings, like the phantoms of a dream.

It is interesting to notice how delusion seeks to perpetuate itself. This new manifestation has found numerous adherents, from the ranks of believers in the exploded theories of Miller. The appointed time for the final reckoning came, preparations were made, ascension robes were fabricated, (some of which are kept in this city at the present time.) But the eventful 1843 came and passed. The earth still rolls on in her majestic course. Now what said our advent friends? Why, "something will soon happen." All stood aghast to catch the first glimpse of that something. It has come. "A new era has dawned." True, we have not gone to the spirit world, as we predicted, but the spirit world has come to us. Let us all bow with uninquring credulity at the shrine of this "new dispensation." I have mentioned the above facts, in order that the opinions which I expressed in my last article, may appear less liable to the charge of prematurity. I should now be justly entitled to be called a monomaniac, did I believe the rappings to be anything else than contemptible efforts at deception. I charge nothing upon my numerous friends and brethren who yield to these pretensions, and call the pretenders "spirits." They are honest, but have not my mode of investigation, nor rules of evidence. They cannot, therefore, be expected to form the same conclusions.

A few Sundays ago, I attended the Methodist Episcopal Church. At the opening of service, a baby a few weeks old was brought forward, and the minister, after dipping his finger in a basin of water, put it on the head of the child, and said, "I baptize you," &c. Lest there should be a lingering doubt in the minds of the audience, that he had performed the solemn and significant rite of baptism, he proceeded to convince us by reading as follows, "Jesus took little children in his arms and blessed them." It would seem very hard to charge that man with a willful perversion of God's Word. But he evidently read the passage to confirm the act he had just performed. That act he called baptism. If the act of Christ authorized his act, the reasoning would be thus: Jesus blessed little children; therefore, I baptize this little child. Now the terms bless and baptize are synonymous, or this reasoning is a burlesque on common sense. That these terms are synonymous, no sane man pretends. If now the candidate had been an adult, this text would have been inappropriate, and some other example would have been sought. Probably the reasoning would have been as follows: "Jesus was baptized in Jordan;" therefore, I put my wet finger on this man's head. This reasoning applies equally well to elucidate the character and office of baptism. It runs thus: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? · · · · that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the father, even so we also should walk in newness of life;" therefore, this little child, which never sinned in all its life, having my wet finger put upon its head, should "walk in newness of life." What a perversion of the high and holy import of baptism! Paul represents it as beautifully significant of the washing of the repenting sinner in the blood of Christ. What becomes of this import, then, when baptism is applied to a sinless infant?

To-day I have attended the First Baptist Church, and seen two young ladies baptized. The baptistry is an artificial one, built in front of the pulpit, so that the audience need not leave their seats. The water can be let in and out at pleasure, and can also be raised to any desirable temperature. All this seems to be so highly convenient, that the ordinance requires but very little sacrifice. A very able and truthful discourse was preached by the Rev. Mr. Granger, pastor of the church. His discourse was an admirable portraiture of the sufficiency of the Scriptures to teach us the duties and ordinances of religion. The arguments of Pedobaptists were ably reviewed. The oft-repeated question, "Why are Pedobaptists so numerous, if they are not right?" was treated as it deserves. The reference of infant baptism to the authority of the church and sanction of the fathers, was sternly repudiated. It was said, that no ordinance, however sanctioned by Christians and promulgated by the church and the fathers of the church, can claim obedience, if wanting a definite sanction in the Bible. The church has suffered countless evils, and millions of unregenerate souls have been admitted to it, in consequence of seeking other than a thus saith the Lord, upon which to build her ordinances. Many pious people, seeing the practice of infant baptism, and failing to find its appointment in the Bible, had run into the other extreme, and affirmed that no baptism, save a spiritual one, was required. The whole discourse was full of Bible truth, and seemed like cold water to a thirsty soul.

If the broad principles aimed at pedobaptism in Mr. Granger's discourse, were applied to the practice of Sunday-keeping, it would no longer find a sanctuary in the church. I wonder if that same minister has never asked "If Sunday be not the Sabbath, why do so many observe it?" I wonder if that same Rev. Mr. Granger, who so truly teaches that a change in the mode of baptism can have no valid authority aside from the unambiguous teachings of the Bible, did not once, when publicly discussing the Sabbath question, search the musty records of the church, and the doubtful teachings of the fathers, to find a sanction for Sunday-keeping? Why must baptism rest on its original foundation, unmoved by the decrees of councils and the opinions of elders, if the Sabbath may be made the plaything of emperors and the flexible tool of convenience? We were truly told, in the sermon to which I have alluded, that no amount of convenience in sprinkling can give it any sanction, so long as the Bible demands immersion. And can convenience sanctify the first day, so long as it remains a truth, that "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it," and so long as the solemn injunction remains unrepealed, "In it thou shalt not do any work?" If we allow the various theories for Sunday-keeping to resolve themselves into their simple elements, we shall find a jargon of words as unmeaning as already found in relation to infant sprinkling. Let us take the theory of a large class of divines, who predicate this practice on the fourth commandment. "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God;" therefore, the first day is the Sabbath of the Christian church. Or, again, The Lord rested the seventh day; wherefore, the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it; therefore, the Christian church ought to rest on the first day. The reasoning of another class runs thus: The Bible requires one day in seven to be observed as a Sabbath; therefore, the first day is the Sabbath. Again, Christ rose from the dead on the first day; therefore, the first day is the Sabbath. Still another adds: The apostles shut themselves in an upper room on first-day evening, for fear of the Jews; therefore, the first day is the Sabbath. Once more: Paul met with the disciples to break bread, and preached to them till midnight, and then broke bread, and went on his journey on Sunday morning; therefore, the first day is the Sabbath. The above constitutes nearly all the reasoning by which this practice is supported; and yet, whatever truth there may be in the propositions, there is no more affinity between these and the conclusions, than between a polar bear and the Arabian desert. If I mistake not, there is but one mode of reasoning in relation to the seventh day. It is as follows: God says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God;" therefore, the seventh day is the Sabbath. Pedobaptism is not alone in leading men to repudiate one of Heaven's ordinances. The unsatisfactory evidence in favor of Sunday-keeping, has made many an anti-sabbatarian. They see no authority for Sunday, and being taught to despise "Judaism," they gravely conclude that there is no Sabbath, except such as convenience may dictate.

D. E. M.

BAPTIST MISSION AT SHANGHAE.—The mission of the Southern Baptist Convention, has an out-station, with a flourishing school, which is regularly visited by the brethren, who preach to the people the blessed gospel, at Oo-Kah-Jak, ten or twelve miles by water from Shanghae. One of the missionaries, Rev. J. L. Shuck, writes: "The people out there are very friendly and quiet, receive us cordially, and not an iota of hinderance or trouble have we had. The pretty building, with its white turrets, stands there the most prominent object in a great, and densely populated, and fertile plain." He reminds his brethren that their Board was the first Protestant Board of missions in the world which held property and gained a permanent footing in the interior of China, and thinks they are now loudly called upon by Providence to locate missionaries in the interior cities of the Empire.

A MISSISSIPPI STEAMBOAT DISASTER.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Oct. 22, 1851.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

On the morning of the 20th inst., I witnessed one of those painfully interesting occurrences called a "Steamboat Disaster." It was one hundred miles below this place, near "Hat Island," about 1 o'clock A. M. The Shelby steam packet, on her upward passage, on which I was passenger, was run into by the steamer John Q. Adams, coming down under full headway. The shock was terrible, throwing the passengers out of their berths, cutting the Shelby down to the water's edge, breaking up the furnaces, and carrying the boilers near the larboard side, which circumstance alone prevented the boat from sinking. At this the cry arose from different parts of the boat, "She is sinking—we are going to the bottom;" and from the river the cry came, "Send out the yawl—for God's sake, save us." The shock had been such as to prevent the state-room doors from being easily opened, and the breaking of panels, and the rattling of glass, with the cries and shrieks of women and children, who were with difficulty restrained from throwing themselves into the river, was succeeded by still greater confusion and consternation from the cry, "The boat is on fire—we are all lost." The boat that had disabled us now refused to come to our aid, fearing she should also be burned, as we should doubtless have been, but for the explosion of the steam-pipe on the upper side, which sent such a tide of steam completely over the cabin floor below, that the flames were instantly arrested in that quarter, while the explosion threw the engineer (and no one knows how many others) overboard. Seeing the fire brought under, the Adams came up, and pushed us to the bank, and we were soon made fast to trees. By this time the engineer, and a lad about 16 years old, had been rescued from the water, the fires were instantly extinguished, and we began to look among our number to see who were missing. There having been a great number of deck passengers, who were near where the guards were carried away, and there being no register of their names, it is presumed there were a large number of them lost; the certainty will never be known. Three deck hands were not to be found, and the Captain thinks the man who was passing wood at the time was killed when the boat struck us. As the Adams struck us, she shipped our starboard chimney, which struck her Captain, knocking out his front teeth, besides burning and otherwise injuring him. On the whole, the scene was an awful one, and one the like of which I pray I may never again witness.

The horrors of the scene were equaled by the extreme recklessness of many who, as soon as the danger was past, rushed to the "Bar," and drank so deeply that they were unable to rise in time for breakfast the following morning, and by the indifference to truth which characterized the telegraphic dispatch published the next morning, which stated that "no lives had been lost." It is due to the officers of the Shelby to say, that they conducted with the utmost coolness after the collision, and evinced a disposition to do all in their power for the comfort of the passengers. The Captain, who was at the wheel at the time of the collision, never left till the boat was secured; the clerk and mate being very active and efficient in subduing the flames, and saving the lives of those most exposed. The boats were in plain sight of each other for several miles before they struck, and to call it criminal carelessness is the most charitable construction the matter is susceptible of. It is generally believed, that the collision was intentional, as the same pilot has been long known as an "unlucky" one. He has run a boat into and demolish a dwelling-house, and a steam mill, in the time of high water, and the Shelby's pilot was the principal witness by whose testimony he was convicted. Had he been in reach one hour after the danger was past, he would probably have been a sacrifice to the indignation of the passengers who knew his character as a pilot.

On the whole, our escape was purely Providential, and one which should be followed by constant and devout thankfulness to Him to whom belong the "issues from death."

Yours, &c., J. GREENE.

POLITICAL TROUBLES IN CHINA.—Mr. Williams, of the Canton mission, in a letter to the American Board, dated July 22d, remarks: "The troubles in the adjacent province of Kwángsi are waxing worse and worse; and one cannot but regard them as very serious. Thus far the insurgents have gradually proved successful, and the whole province, of 70,000 square miles, is almost wholly under their control. They have set up a head whom they style the emperor Tien-teh, or Heavenly Virtue. Money had been issued in his name, and edicts are promulgated under his authority. We can hardly say whereto this will grow. Rumor says this week the Kwei-lin-fu in the north-west of the province, the capital, has been plundered by them, and all the imperialists routed. Our information is doubtful at all times, and this needs confirmation. No melioration can be looked for, in this movement, for there is no principle, no attempt to redress grievances in it. Yet it is singular how wide-spread are the reports that the leaders in it have shown a great contempt for the popular idols, having torn their images from their shrines, and acted as iconoclasts in many ways. They are reported here to worship only Shangti; and our tracts and Scriptures containing this term for God have been refused on account of their being supposed to be connected with these miscreants. I hardly know what credence to give to the rumor."

BAPTIST MISSIONS IN BURMAH.—Several weeks ago we copied a statement that the Baptist missionaries Kincaid and Dawson were meeting with considerable opposition in their efforts to establish themselves at Rangoon. The following extract from a letter written by Mrs. Calista H. Vinton, of Maulmain, dated May 19th, shows that a very happy change has taken place in the conduct of their persecutors:—

"Yours of February 21st was received last evening, and I hasten to answer it by this mail. You will be rejoiced to hear what the Lord has done for brethren Kincaid and Dawson. When they first went round to Rangoon every thing seemed to wear a forbidding aspect; they could hardly get a house to put their heads in, and the Governor abused them shamefully. But a few days since the Governor sent his royal Secretary to Bro. Kincaid's, saying that he had just received an answer to his letter to the King at Ava, concerning Bro. K.'s arrival in the country, and that 'he was glad that the foreign teacher had returned, that he went away from Ava in a former reign, with the King's permission, on account of ill health, and that as he had returned he must be allowed to stop, and have a place to live in.'"

MADISON UNIVERSITY.—After all the sparring and ill-feeling about the removal of Madison University from Hamilton, and the establishment of a new University at Rochester, the cause of education among the Baptists is likely to be promoted by the discussion. Rochester University has long been reported as in a flourishing condition; and a correspondent of the N. Y. Recorder, writing from Hamilton, says that Madison University has opened this year with most cheering prospects. Forty-five new students, and between sixty and seventy of last year's students, are already on the ground. Thirty-three of the new students have the ministry in view, which number, added to those who were there already with the same design, makes at least eighty. The endowment fund has reached $70,000, and will, ere long, it is hoped, be raised to $100,000.

SPIRITUAL DESTITUTION IN NEW YORK.—On the afternoon of Second-day, Nov. 3d, a meeting of pastors and clergymen was held at the Tract House, in New York, to take into consideration the condition of that portion of the population of New York and vicinity who are in the habitual neglect of public worship. After a free discussion of the methods of reaching the neglected classes by street preaching and free places of worship, a committee from each denomination represented was appointed, to report some plan of action at an adjourned meeting to be held at the Brick Church Chapel, on the 10th inst.

FEMALE SCHOOL IN CHINA.—A letter from the Rev. Mr. Cummings, missionary of the American Board in Fuh Chau, states that Mrs. Cummings has opened a day-school for girls in that city, and that fifteen pupils attend it very regularly; a beginning with which the missionaries feel greatly encouraged. Mr. Cummings also commenced, in April last, a preaching service in the court of his house, at which forty persons were present on the first Sunday, besides the members of the school, and others connected with the mission; and on the succeeding Sundays the attendance was still larger, about one-half being females.

DECISION ON DIVORCE.—At a recent meeting of the New School Presbyterian Synod of New York and New Jersey, a committee previously appointed made a report on the subject of Divorce, maintaining that a minister of the Gospel has no right to solemnize the marriage of any person who has once been divorced on the ground of his own wrong doing. The report was adopted by the Synod.

BAPTISM OF JEWS.—The Jewish Intelligencer of July contains an account of the baptism of a Jew at Frankfort-on-the-Main; of another at Jerusalem; of a father with his three children at Cairo; of a Jewess at Warsaw; of a father with his six children at Amsterdam; and of a Jew at Doncaster, England.

PAPAL ACTIVITY.—A Catholic Missionary Society, formed at Lyons in 1822, received the first year £600 only, while in 1845–6 its receipts amounted to £156,000; and in five years immediately preceding 1846, 718 missionaries, catechists, and nuns, were sent by the Romish Church to various parts of the world.

EXTRAORDINARY LONGEVITY.—A Catholic priest, 110 years of age, preached at Dayton, Ohio, a few days ago; and we find it stated in the London Christian Times of Oct. 13 that the pulpit of the Wesleyan chapel at Oxford was occupied the previous Sunday by a gentleman named Fletcher, of the great age of 105 years.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—There are now 75 Protestant missionaries in China, connected with fifteen different missionary societies; being an increase of 55 in nine years. Of these, 48 are Americans, 25 English, 3 German, 2 Swiss, 1 Swedish, and 1 unconnected.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE MEDICAL TOPOGRAPHY AND DISEASES OF THE SACRAMENTO VALLEY, California, in the years 1849-50. By J. D. B. STILLMAN, M. D. 20 pp.

Few persons have enjoyed better opportunities than Dr. Stillman of becoming acquainted with the diseases of California. In this pamphlet, (the matter of which first appeared in The New-York Journal of Medicine for November,) he has embodied the results of extensive observation in a large medical practice, both general and hospital. As a help to ward of disease, or to treat it when seated, these "Observations" must be of great value to intelligent tourists or medical practitioners in California.

General Intelligence.

European News.

Two steamers—the Canada and the Baltic—arrived at New-York last Sunday, bringing European news to Oct. 29, one week later.

The Africa should have come instead of the Canada, having left Liverpool on Saturday, Oct. 25, but at 10 o'clock P. M. she struck on a reef of rocks near the Copeland Islands, off Belfast Lough. She put back to Liverpool, arriving at 7 A. M., Oct 27. She is said to be seriously injured, having been at one time high and dry upon the reef 17 feet from the water. Had she been running at full speed, she would inevitably have been lost. The Canada left Boston only 24 days previous to her arrival at New-York.

The news by the Canada and Baltic is not commercially very important, but is rather unfavorable. Cotton and Breadstuffs were a little lower, but there was a fair business doing.

Kossuth arrived in England on the 23d of October. Accounts of his reception and speeches occupy a large place in the foreign papers. The Mississippi sailed from Gibralter, with the Hungarians remaining on board, for New-York, on the 15th ult. There is nothing decisive about Kossuth's coming to the United States.

A new Ministry has been formed in France, but its chance of a long life is very small.

Last year, it will be remembered, the Pope, in an impulse of gratitude to Mr. Cass, the American Chargé d'Affaires, granted special permission to the Americans in Rome to celebrate divine worship in the National Chapel; but, in order to deprive all other Protestant congregations of a ground of complaint, the Papal Cabinet has decided to withdraw the privilege.

Rumors are in circulation of a newly discovered conspiracy among the nobility at St. Petersburgh, and of the arrest of several considerable persons standing very near the throne. The discovery, it is said, was made by officers of the body guard of the Emperor, whom the conspirators endeavored to bring over to their party, but who revealed the whole matter to the Emperor.

FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.—On the trial of Brown, the colored lawyer, at Boston, charged with aiding in the rescue of the fugitive Shadrach, the following preliminary questions were put to each juryman, on appearing to be sworn in the case:—

First: Have you expressed or formed any opinion relative to the matter now to be tried.

Second: Are you sensible of any prejudice or bias therein?

Third: Have you formed an opinion that the law of the United States, known as the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850, is unconstitutional, so that you cannot convict a person indicted under it for that reason, if the facts alledged in the indictment are proved, and the Court hold the statute to be constitutional?

Fourth: Do you hold any opinion upon the subject of the Fugitive Slave Law, so called, which will induce you to refuse to convict a person indicted under it, if the facts set forth in the indictment and constituting the offense are proved against him, and the Court direct you that the law is constitutional?

Six jurors were found who could not conscientiously perform this simple duty imposed by the Constitution and laws of the United States. One of the jurors sworn, a man from Charlestown, had expressed opinions averse to the Fugitive Slave Law, and was oposed to it, but thought it would not prevent him from rendering a true verdict on the evidence, and was sworn.

THE UNITED STATES AND JAPAN.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Times, writing from Washington under date of Nov. 1, says that in pursuance of the policy of the Government to cultivate friendly relations with Japan, some Japanese, who were picked up at sea on a wreck, and brought into San Francisco, were sent home in a national vessel. At the same time, Commodore Aulick was charged with a friendly letter from the President to the Emperor, and with propositions for a liberal commercial treaty. Sufficient time has not elapsed to receive an account of Commodore Aulick's reception. In the mean time, a party of fifty Japanese, having been picked up at sea on a wrecked junk, have been brought into San Francisco by an American vessel. This fact was reported to the Government, and, thereupon, an order has been issued for their hospitable entertainment, and to bring them, if willing, to Washington, with a view to show them, as we do the chiefs of our Aboriginees, our power and glory. They will be treated as guests here, and after viewing our principal cities, they are to be sent home to the Emperor.

EXHIBITION OF THE INDUSTRY OF ALL NATIONS IN NEW-YORK.—An advertisement in the London Morning Chronicle and other Londen papers, announces that "the most valuable and attractive portion of the articles exhibited" in the late London Exhibition, are to be transferred to New York. The details of the plan are to the following effect:—A company has been formed, represented in Europe by Charles Buschek, Austrian Commissioner for the Exhibition of 1851, and in the United States by Edward Riddle, U. S. Commissioner, to whom the entire management has been intrusted. Arrangements have been made for the erection of a building on an extensive scale, in a central situation in the city of New-York, contiguous to the various railway termini, which, when completed, will be made a bonded warehouse for the period of the Exhibition. The Exhibition will open on 15th of April. The duration of the Exhibition will be a period of four months.

ANOTHER FUGITIVE CASE.—The U. S. Deputy Marshal arrested an alledged fugitive slave, named Henry, said to belong to Dr. Duval, of Prince George Co., Maryland, at Columbia, Pa., on Friday night, and brought him to Harrisburg for examination. The proceedings before Commissioner McAllister were secret and summary. Counsel for the fugitive applied for a postponement, but were refused. Two witnesses swore positively to the fugitive's identity, and the Commissioner delivered him over to his owner, who placed him in a closed carriage and drove rapidly away.

THE CROTON MILLS.—Hecker & Brother's Flour, Farina, Wheaten Grits, Samp, and Hominy, are known the world over. From the American Institute they have received first premiums, medals, cups, &c., for the last four years; from the Franklin Institute a medal; and "last, though not least," in competition with the skill of all nations, they have received the Prize Medal of the World's Fair in London, for the best Flour, with Honorable Mention of their Farina. In view of this they had a grand gala day and illumination last week, when the Mills were visited by a large number of distinguished citizens, for whom a liberal collation was provided. The following statistics will give some idea of the operations of the Mills:—

About 70 men are employed in the establishment.
The annual consumption of
Wheat is about 475,000 bushels.
Oats " 45,000 "
Corn " 30,000 "
From which are manufactured
65,000 bbls. of Flour,
800,000 lbs. Farina,
250,000 lbs. Wheaten Grits,
175,000 lbs. Samp and Hominy.
About 180,000 yds. muslin are consumed in a year.
80,000 " coarse bagging.
750 reams white, colored, and fancy paper.

SUMMARY.

A young man named Griffith, formerly a clerk in Philadelphia, was arrested in Cincinnati on the 24th ult., on the charge of having, on the 2d, purloined from the New-York way pouch, at the Post-Office in Philadelphia, a letter containing a draft for a thousand dollars, and obtaining payment of it, on a forged endorsement, at one of the city banks, next morning. Eight hundred dollars of the stolen money was found upon him, with the original letter in which the draft was mailed; and also a second letter containing another draft for nearly six hundred dollars, supposed to have been obtained in the same way.

At Baltimore, on the 4th inst., a bloody affray occurred at the IIId Ward Polls between Charles James and Francis Connoly. The parties had some harsh words together, when James drew a knife and stabbed Connoly, inflicting a frightful wound in his lungs, which will prove mortal. James than ran a few steps, but stumbled and fell. When picked up, a severe wound was found in his breast, from which he died instantly. His own knife was found under him, and it is a matter of doubt whether he was stabbed by Connoly, or the injury was caused by falling on his knife.

A dispatch dated St. Louis, Oct. 4, says:—B. O. Harris, Secretary of the Utah Territory; G. K. Brandenburg, Chief Justice; P. E. Bracchas, Associate; H. R. Poy, Indian Agent, and Messrs. Sillen and Young, are expected to arrive here soon, they having been forced to leave the territory in consequence of the seditious sentiments of Brigham Young, the Governor. The $20,000 appropriated by Congress has been squandered by Young, who has also made an attempt to take $24,000 from the Secretary.

The St. Louis Republican notices the death of a young girl, by swallowing a quantity of opium, and afterwards taking a large quantity of arsenic. It appears that, at the desire of her friends and relatives, she had contracted an engagement of marriage with some gentleman, and that subsequently, she formed an attachment for another person, with whom, however, she was prevented by circumstances from becoming united.

The Leggett's Gap Railroad, (says The Binghamton Republican,) extending 58 miles from the Lackawana coal beds, at Scranton, Pa., to Great Bend, on the Erie Railroad, was opened on Monday last. The completion of this spur to the great thoroughfares presents a new era in the experience of Western New-York. Coal will now, in all probability, supersede wood, as the ordinary article of fuel, throughout the whole of that valuable market.

At Boston, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 5, J. Rufus Eaton, ship chandler in Commercial-st., connected with the house of De Wolf & Co., New York, left the wharf in a small sail-boat, accompanied by two boys, to board a vessel in the harbor near Governor's Island. The boat was run down by a schooner, and all three were drowned.

The British residents of New York last week gave a dinner to Henry Grinnell, of New York, the father of the American expedition in search of Sir John Franklin. It came off at the Astor House, and was attended by about one hundred and fifty gentlemen.

The ceremony of presenting to the crews of the Advance and Rescue the Medals subscribed for by the British residents in New York to commemorate the Expedition, took place in Brooklyn last Thursday, on board the U. S. Receiving Ship North Carolina, lying off the Navy Yard.

The average daily quantity of milk brought to the City of New York by the Harlem Railroad Company during the first two weeks of July, 1851, was 51,372 quarts, or 12,843 gallons. Number of cans that contained it, 1,360.

"A friend to Colonization," through Messrs. Corcoran & Riggs, of Washington, has made a donation of $400 to the Colonization Society. The total contributions to the society, during the month of October, amounted to $1,049 35.

A quantity of diamonds, emeralds and rubies, which were sent to the consignees in letters through the Postoffice, to avoid paying duties, have been seized in New York and condemned.

Some workmen engaged in boring an Artesian well in Camden Co., N. J., having reached a depth of 82 feet, came upon a stratum of charcoal, which burned with a blue gaseous flame.

A little daughter of W. G. Perley was killed at Lebanon, N. H., by falling upon a penholder which she had in her mouth, and driving it into her throat.

A popular vote was taken last week in the State of Illinois, on the question of Free-Banking. The majority is very large, so far as reported by telegraph, in favor of the system.

The Western Bank of Warren County has resumed its position among the good banks of the State. Its notes are bought or received in business the same as the other Free Banks.

A most distressing occurrence took place at Winchester, Va. on Friday Nov. 31, which resulted in the death of Mr. Nathan Mulliken, from a shot fired by his own son. The particulars are as follows: Mr. Joseph P. Hemster went to the house of Mr. Mulliken, with whom he had had a previous quarrel, when Mulliken met him with a loaded gun. The quarrel was renewed, and in a struggle Mulliken was thrown to the ground. While in this position he called to his son, a lad of 17 years of age, to fire upon Hemster. The boy did so, but missed, and the charge entered his father's side, causing his death in a few hours.

It is announced by The Dubuque (Iowa) Express, that the Chauteau family, heirs of M. Dubuque, have just commenced a suit in the United States Circuit Court, with a view to recover an immense tract of land along the Mississippi River, extending eighteen miles above and below Dubuque, running back nine miles, and including within its limits the city of Dubuque, the entire mineral region, and several of the best improved farms in the State. The claim is under a title in Dubuque, antecedent to the possibility of any title resting in Congress.

A man named Wilson, a citizen of Canonsburgh, Pa., was killed on Wednesday by a student of Jefferson College, from Emmetsburgh, Md. It appears that Wilson used insulting language to the student, who retaliated, when Wilson knocked him down and beat him on the head with a club, saying that he would kill him. The student warned him to desist, but getting no other answer, obtained a knife, by some means, and plunged it into the abdomen of Wilson five or six times. The student made his escape, and several others have been arrested as accessories to the deed.

The Savannah Republican says that an extraordinary phenomenon, in the way of "horse-flesh," was recently brought to that town by the steamer Gordon. It is a mare, captured on the plains of Venezuela by a party of American hunters, headed by the well-known traveler, Juan Percy, and Captain Hall. She is 15½ hands high, of great beauty and symmetry, and without one particle of hair on any part of her body! The skin resembles India rubber, and is as soft almost as velvet.

On Saturday, Mr. and Mrs. White, of Deerfield, N. H., were returning from Wilmot, when, at the end of a bridge in Andover, the road having been undermined by the rain, the weight of the horse caused the ground to slide, and they were precipitated in their wagon down a precipice. Mrs. White's skull was broken, and there was no probability of her recovery. Mr. White was but slightly injured.

Alexander von Humbolt publishes in The Gazette de Spener, some particulars of his interesting discovery, at Athens, of the Council Chamber where the Five Hundred held their deliberations. At a depth of one foot below the surface, he had come upon a large mass of inscriptions, columns, statues, ect., which forbid a doubt that there had been the seat of that building.

A Mr. Damon was recently shot dead by a brother hunter named Spear, in the woods, near Hinckley, Ohio. They were shooting turkies, and, both imitating the cry of these birds, each believed the cry of the other the genuine one of the bird. Damon crept on the ground, and Spear, seeing his head through the brambles, thought it a bird, and fired. The ball passed through his brain, and he never stirred afterward.

The total number of miles of railway now in operation is 25,000, of which there are in the United States 10,200 miles; in Cuba 360 miles; in Great Britain 6,500 miles; in Belgium 360 miles; in France 1,800; in Spain 60, &c. Comparing these nnmbers with the population, there are for each inhabitant in the United States 51 feet of railroad, and in Cuba 12 feet; in Great Britain 12 feet; in Belgium 4 feet; in Spain 3 inches.

The Literary Echo of Oct 30, says: The staunch clipper-built ship "Caroline Tucker," will be launched from the ship-yard of Messrs. Geo. Greenman & Co., at Greenmanville, Ct., on Monday, Nov. 10, at about 5 o'clock P.M. The C. T. is designed for the merchant service, but for no particular line; she is to be commanded by Capt. Joseph W. Tucker. She has three decks, and is of about 700 tons burthen.

We are to travel by electricity, after all. The Tribune describes a new discovery, which consists in reducing the friction of the cars on the rails to a mere nothing, by an electric battery, so arranged as to raise and very nearly suspend them in the air—a perfect suspension being only prevented by the necessity of slight pressure to maintain the cars upon the track.

Mr. Atherton W. Tildon, of Weymouth, Mass., aged about 55, reached home from Calafornia on Tuesday, at about 11 o'clock, and at 7 o'clock was dead. He arrived in the Cherokee, on Saturday, and was taken sick on board after leaving Chagres. He had been absent about twenty months, and leaves a wife and four children.

Three young men in Mentor, Ashtabula County, Ohio, were recently engaged in serenading a newly married pair, and to make the treat more than usually musical, they got a cannon and shot it off several times. At last it exploded, and a fragment passed through the head of a young man named Elliston, who applied the match. The top of his head was torn completely off.

A young man named John Webster, a pupit in Mr. Aildreth's Seminary, in Derry, N. H., was accidentally shot through the head, and instantly killed, by a fellow-pupil named Willisen. The youths were engaged in preparing a gun to go a shooting, when the piece went off on half-cock. Webster was between 15 and 16 years of age.

Wm. Tunnel was convicted of forgery in Halifax county, N. C., recently, and sentenced to stand in the pillory one hour, to receive thirty-nine lashes on the bare back, and be confined in jail six months. He is the adopted son of Mr. Isaac Scarborough, of Edgecombe County, on whom the forgery was committed.

The Boston Transcript publishes a letter from Signor Guidi, an accomplished vocalist, well known in this country, and especially in Boston, where he has participated in musical concerts. He has been sentenced to the galleys for ten years for toasting the United States at a supper.

M. Montheulin, a Frenchman, recently deceased, has left a legacy of $2000 to any person who shall succeed in inventing a method of guiding balloons in a straight line.

It is said that the United States District Attorney has received instructions from the Collector of the Port, to institute proceedings for the condemnation of the goods seized in the stationery store of Mr. Herrick, for being falsely invoiced. The goods thus seized have been appraised, and are valued at about seven thousand dollars.

The Tyler Telegraph, referring to an affray which took place some time since at Canton, in Cass County, Texas, announces the death of J. W. Paperson, from wounds received on the occasion. This makes, in all, four death from the affray—three persons having been killed on the spot, or dying very soon after being removed.

A negress named Betty died in Schoharie village last week at the advanced age of 110 years. She was brought from Africa when very young. Her faculties remained unimpaired till the last, and she was able to thread the finest needle without the aid of spectacles.

Thomas Colyer has laid the keel of a steamer which is intended to run on the route from New York to Albany. She is to be two hundred and fifty feet long, and it is expected she will be the fastest steamer ever run on the river. The boat will be ready by the opening of navigation in the sping.

The law prohibiting negroes and mulattos from coming in and residing in Oregon has been decided to be constitutional and valid, by Chief Justice Nelson, of that Territory, in a case brought before him recently. The defendant (colored) was directed to leave the Territory within thirty days from the date of the decree.

The submarine telegraph between Calais, France, and Dover, England, will be inaugurated by a fete, celebrated simultaneously at London and Paris. It is said that on this occasion the cannon at the Invalides, Paris, will be fired by a spark communicated to the wire at London by Prince Albert, and those of the Tower in London will be kindled by Louis Napoleon at Paris.

It is stated that, as the result of a correspondence of the Governor of Ohio with the Governors of the different States of the Union, relative to a uniform observance of the annual thanksgiving, twenty-eight of the thirty-one States have fixed upon November 27.

In New York, last Sunday morning, Gardener G. Howland, Esq., of the firm of Howland & Aspinwall, was seized with sudden illness while at church, was assisted to his house, and died in the course of an hour or two afterward.

In Boston, last Sunday morning, Rev. Dr. Croswell, pastor of the Episcopal Church in Green-st., was taken suddenly ill in his pulpit. He was conveyed home and expired about 6 o'clock that evening.

The Secretary of the Academy of Sciences gives the following as the average yearly number of storms in the different places mentioned:—Calcutta, 60: Rio Janeiro, 50: Guadaloupe, 37: Buenos Ayres, 20: Smyrna, 19: Paris, 13: Athens, 11: St. Petersburgh, 9: London, 8: Pekin, 3: Cairo, 3.

The notes of the Bank of New-Rochelle secured by public stock, are redeemed at par at the Mechanics and Farmers' Bank, Albany. Those secured by Bonds and Mortgages are not redeemed at present.

The steamer Prometheus, from San Juan de Nicaraugua, arrived at New York on the 6th inst., with 500 passengers, and $600,000 in gold dust. The U. S. M. steamship Carolina put into Realejo, in distress, and landed 250 passengers, Oct. 4.

Land Warrants are in small supply, but dull. The approach of the session of Congress, when the new warrants will be made assignable, has checked the purchases of the old ones. The new warrants are selling to some extent at $80 for 160 acres.

About four years since, a wealthy farmer, named Roberts, was murdered and robbed near Camden, N. J. No clue could, at that time, be obtained of the perpetrator of the deed, but circumstances have led to the suspicion of a person now confined in prison for another crime.

The New Orleans Delta has a description of the sale at auction of 200 articles of jewelry (including several pairs of spectacles) which it says were contributed by Cuban ladies to aid the Lopez expedition.

In Philadelphia, Grace Quin, a servant girl employed by Edward C. Andrews, has been arrested for causing the death of his infant child by administering a dose of laudanum to keep it quiet during the absence of its mother.

A young man named Webb was shot on Thursday while hunting turkies in the woods, in Pittsfield, Lorain County, O. Three or four persons were hunting at the same time, and imitating the "call" of turkies, when Webb was mistaken by another for a turkey, and shot.

In a personal conflict some time since, Judge Thornton, of Alabama, struck Chancellor Clarke on the mouth, wounding his fingers against his teeth. The Judge's hand had to be amputated, and the mortification has notwithstanding extended to his arm, which will have to be removed or death is inevitable.

A Colored Citizens' Convention will be held in Cincinnati in the middle of January next, for the purpose of taking such measures as will be deemed calculated to promote the interests and welfare of the colored citizens of that State who are allowed to pay taxes but denied the right to vote for those who impose them.

The Washington Union states that Gen. Van Antwerp, Commissioner of Public Works for Iowa, has obtained from the Secretary of the Interior, a decision extending the Des Moines River grant to the utmost limit demanded, thereby reversing Mr. Ewing's decision on the same subject.

It is stated that parties in Boston have raised $100,000, with which an effort is to be made to obtain the repeal of the Maine Liquor Law at the next session of the Legislature of that State; and $400,000 more are pledged, if necessary, to insure success.

One hundred colored free people left Baltimore on board the bark Morgan Dixon, Sunday morning, for Liberia. The parting scene is described as one of deep interest. The poor emigrants set sail in the midst of prayers and blessings.

The New York Times says: "The Fugitive Slave Law may be constitutional, but it is not part of the Constitution; and of course, resistance to the Constitution."

Twenty thousand persons, it is estimated, have traveled to the top of Bunker Hill Monument within the past year. At the price charged for admission, (12½ cents,) the receipts during the above-mentioned time must have amounted to the sum of $2,500.

The Maysville (Ky.) Post understands from reliable authority that an extensive and productive mine of silver ore has been discovered in the lands of Mr. Dora, in Bracken County. It is now being worked with great success.

On Sunday, a German hunting-club had a shooting-match for a silver cup, near the Harlem House, St. Louis. Sunday target excursions, the St. Louis Intelligencer says, are so frequent as hardly to attract attention.

The Hutchinsons, while at tea at the Mansion House in Greenfield, Mass., on Sunday evening, were robbed of about $100 in specie, by a lad in their employ, about 14 years of age.

There are sixty-five cities and towns in the United States, of which thirteen are in the State of New York, the population of which, by the census of 1850, is 10,000 or upwards.

Enoch Pillsbury has been sent to the New Hampshire State Prison for two years, for cutting the throat of an ox belonging to Joseph Noyes, of Franklin.

California has a law providing that illegitimate children shall be heirs equally with children born in wedlock, of both father and mother.

It is said the Government has decided to accept Mr. Gorge W. Riggs' Farm at $50,000, as a site for the Asylum for disabled and superannuated soldiers.

The murder of two Americans in the vicinity of Santa Fé, New Mexico, has created considerable excitement there among the American population.

On Wednesday of last week quite a commotion was created in Broadway, New York, by the appearance of a light wagon drawn by two beautiful deer.

A house and lot on the corner of Franklin street and Broadway, New York, was sold last week at auction for $62,500. The building was old, and of little value.

Dr. Jesse Kirby, of Grimes County, has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, for treating his wife brutally.

The Governors of Kentucky and Indiana have appointed the 27th inst. for a day of thanksgiving.

A team of elks harnessed to a buggy made their appearance in Buffalo a few days ago.

Pork, delivered in Chicago, is selling at $3 72 to $4 per hundred.

The Bank of Wells & Co., Boston, has suspended payment. Liabilities between $50,000 and $100,000.

The Stonington steamers now leave New York at half past 4 o'clock P. M.

The ship Oregon, from New York for Jamaica, was wrecked and sunk on the 27th ult.—three of her passengers lost.

Father Mathew sailed for Liverpool last Sabbath in the steamship Pacific.

Mrs. Sherwood, authoress of "Little Henry and his Bearer," and a great many other works for children, died lately in England, at the age of 77.

Major Tochman has received a letter, announcing the death of Governor Ujhazy's wife, at New Buda, Iowa.

A ship from Calcutta arrived at Charleston a few days ago—the first on record direct from India to South Carolina.

The Western Bank of White Creek has resumed payment, and is bought by brokers at the usual rate of State money.

Christy, the leader of the Negro Minstrels in New York, states that his receipts last year were $57,000.

The number of emigrants arriving at New-York within the year is close on a quarter of a million.

There has been a destructive fire in Buffalo, and one on a smaller scale at Troy.

MARRIED.

In Genesee, N. Y., on the 31st of October, by Elias I. Maxson, Esq., Mr. GREEN CHAMPLIN, of Alfred, N. Y., to NARCISSA L. CRANDALL, of the former place.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 2d inst., by Eld. H. Clarke, Mr. ALFRED G. VARS, of Westerly, R. I., to Miss JANE P. HERVEY, of South Kingston, R. I.

In Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y., Nov. 6th, by Eld. Joshua Clark, Mr. AURELIUS D. FITCH to Miss HOPE L. FITCH, both of the above place.

In Shiloh, N. J., Nov. 3d, by Eld. Wm. M. Jones, Mr. SAMUEL D. PETTY, of Fairfield, Ill., to Miss EUNICE W. HALL, of Shiloh.

In Pleasant Spring, Dane Co., Wis., on the 20th of Sept., by Eld. Z. Campbell, Mr. FRANCIS M. MILLS, of Pleasant Spring, to Miss CATHARINE D. CRUMB, of De-Ruyter, N. Y.

In Albion, Dane Co., Wis., by the same, Oct. 30th, Mr. R. D. SAUNDERS to Miss ABIGAIL E. BURDICK, both of Albion.

DIED.

Near Shiloh, N. J., Oct. 23d, Mrs. NAOMI DAVIS, consort of Mr. David Davis, deceased, aged 82 years, 3 months, and 1 day. Sister Davis was blind for about 25 years previous to her death. She has long maintained a very consistent and intelligent piety. Her love to her Saviour was unabated. In her last sickness, she seemed anxious to depart and be with Christ. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints. Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

In Durhamville, Oneida Co., N. Y., on the 13th of October, in full hope of a better world, SUSANNAH NORTON, wife of Hebron Norton, and daughter of William Truman, deceased, of Preston, N. Y., aged about 50 years.

LETTERS.

W. B. Maxson, J. R. Irish, E. I. Maxson, D. Coon, H. W. Stillman, W. M. Jones, S. A. Palmiter, L. Clarke, J. B. Kenyon, H. Clarke, T. Perry, E. Maxson, G. Evans, S. S. Griswold, E. Burdick, E. Maxson, D. E. Lewis, Z. Campbell.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Sophia Maxson, Westerly, R. I.	$2 00	to vol.	9	No. 52
Elias Saunders, "	2 00		8	52
J. T. Thurston, "	2 00		8	52
Horace Potter, "	2 00		8	52
Gideon Hoxsey, "	1 75		9	6
O. Langworthy, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00		8	52
Lester Crandall, "	2 00		8	52
Sands Palmer, "	2 00		8	52
Henry Clarke, "	2 00		8	52
Daniel Millard, West Edmeston,	2 00		8	52
Daniel Coon, "	2 00		8	52
Joseph Dennison, "	2 00		8	52
S. Crandall, South Brookfield,	2 00		8	52
Silas A. Palmiter, Alfred,	2 00		9	13
Martha Saxford, West Genesee,	1 00		8	26
Jer. B. Davis, Berlin, Wis.	2 00		9	16
Erastus Brown, Milton, Wis.	2 00		8	43

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

New York Market—November 10, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 87 a 4 94; Pearls 5 37.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 75 a 3 81 for common State; 3 81 a 4 06 for Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio; 4 00 a 4 12 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 37. Corn Meal, 3 37 for Jersey, 3 50 for Brandywine.

Grain—Wheat, 85 a 88c. for white Michigan, 85c. for white Canadian, 94 a 96c. for Genesee. Rye 78 a 74c. Barley, 85c. for two-rowed. Oats 36 a 37c. for Jersey, 38 a 39c. for State. Corn, 58c. for Western mixed, 61c. for round yellow.

Provisions—Pork, 13 50 for prime, 14 87 a 15 12 for mess. Beef, 4 00 a 5 00 for prime, 8 00 a 10 00 for mess. Lard 8 a 8¾c. Dressed Hogs 6 a 7c. Butter, 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 11 a 16½c. for Western New York, 18 a 22c. for Orange County.

Beeswax—26½c. for prime Western.

Flax—8½c. for Jersey.

Feathers—39½c. for prime Ohio.

Hops—35 a 37½c.

Lumber—13 00 for Spruce and Pine as it runs.

Tallow—7⅞c. cash, for city trade.

Wool—35 a 42c. for Domestic Fleece; 29 a 30c. for pulled superfine.

A Proclamation,

By WASHINGTON HUNT, Governor of the State of New York.

The goodness of Almighty God has been signally manifested towards the people of this State during the present year. The blessings of liberty, national tranquility, and public health, have been enjoyed without interruption. The fruits of the earth, in overflowing abundance, have rewarded the labors of the husbandman. Public improvements have been advanced. The truths of knowledge and religion are more widely diffused, and our republican institutions have been preserved and strengthened.

A just sense of these beneficent dispositions should inspire universal gratitude toward our Divine Benefactor, and call forth appropriate demonstrations of homage and adoration.

Therefore, in compliance with usage, I respectfully recommend to the People of this State the observance of THURSDAY, the TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY of NOVEMBER NEXT, as a day of Prayer, Thanksgiving, and Praise.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto affixed my hand and the privy seal of the State, this sixteenth [L.S.] day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

By the Governor. WASHINGTON HUNT.
JAMES F. RUGGLES, Private Secretary.

Hudson River Railroad.

CARS for Albany, on the Hudson River Railroad, leave New York at 7 and 8½ o'clock A. M., and 12¼ and 5 o'clock P. M. Cars for New York leave Albany at 7½ and 11 A. M., and 3½ and 8¼ P. M.

New York and Erie Railroad.

DURING the Winter, trains will leave New York for Dunkirk as follows:—Mail Train at 8 A. M. Day Express Train at 12 M. Emigrant Train at 5 P. M. Evening Express Train at 5 P. M.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Winter Arrangements.

LEAVES New York at 9 A. M. and 4½ P. M., foot of Cortlandt-st.; at 11 A. M. (freight) and 4.10 P. M., Pier No. 1 North River—for Elizabethport, Elizabethtown, Westfield, Scotch Plains, Plainfield, Boundbrook, Somerville, Raritan, White House, Easton, &c.

New York and Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE, via Stonington, for Boston, Providence, New Bedford, Taunton, and Newport, carrying the great Eastern U. S. Mail, without change of cars or detention. The secure and elegant steamers C. VANDERBILT and COMMODORE leave on alternate days (Sundays excepted) Pier No. 2 North River, (first wharf above Battery-place,) at 5 o'clock P. M. For passage, state-rooms, or freight, apply at Pier No. 2 or at the office, No. 11 Battery-place.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of WM. DUNN & CO., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.
WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Hoe's Cast Steel Circular and Long Saws.

THE subscribers manufacture from the best cast steel, Circular Saws, from two inches to five feet diameter. These Saws are carefully hardened and tempered, and are ground and finished by machinery designed expressly for this purpose, and are therefore much superior in truth and uniformity of surface to those ground in the usual manner. They require less set, less power to drive them, and are not so liable to become heated, and produce a saving in timber.

They also manufacture cast steel MILL, PITT, and CROSS-CUT SAWS and BILLET WEBS, of superior quality, all of which they have for sale at their Ware-Rooms, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st., or they may be obtained of the principal hardware merchants in the United States. R. HOE & CO., Printing-Press, Machine, and Saw Makers, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st.

The following extract is from a report made by a Committee of scientific and practical gentlemen, appointed by the American Institute:—

"Your Committee are of unanimous opinion, that in the apparatus invented by Mr. R. M. Hoe, for grinding saws, he has displayed great ingenuity and tact in the adaptation of machinery to the production of results in the manufacture of Saws, which may with propriety be denominated the ne plus ultra of the art."

Publishers of newspapers who will insert this advertisement three times, with this note, and forward us a paper containing the same, will be paid in printing materials, by purchasing four times the amount of their bill for the advertisement. nov13 3t

Chambers' Works.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. A selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time. Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Forming two large imperial octavo volumes of 700 pages each, double-column letter-press; with upwards of 300 Illustrations. Edited by ROBERT CHAMBERS. Embossed cloth, $5.

The work embraces about one thousand Authors, chronologically arranged, and classed as Poets, Historians, Dramatists, Philosophers, Metaphysicians, Divines, etc., with choice selections from their writings, connected by a Biographical, Historical, and Critical Narrative; thus presenting a complete view of English Literature, from the earliest to the present time. Let the reader open where he will, he cannot fail to find matter for profit and delight. The selections are gems—infinite riches in a little room; in the language of another, "A whole English Library fused down into one cheap book!"

☞ The American edition of this valuable work is enriched by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint Engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron; a full-length portrait of Dr. Johnson; and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson. These important and elegant additions, together with superior paper and binding, render the American superior to all other editions.

CHAMBERS' MISCELLANY OF USEFUL AND ENTERTAINING KNOWLEDGE. Edited by WILLIAM CHAMBERS. With elegant Illustrative Engravings. 10 vols., cloth, $7 50.

☞ This work has been highly recommended by distinguished individuals, as admirably adapted to Family, Sabbath, and District School Libraries.

"It would be difficult to find any miscellany superior or even equal to it; it richly deserves the epithets 'useful and entertaining;' and I would recommend it very strongly, as extremely well adapted to form parts of a library for the young, or of a social or circulating library, in town or country."—George B. Emerson, Esq., Chairman Boston School Book Committee.

The above works are bound in various styles, prices varying accordingly. A liberal discount made to Booksellers and Agents. GOULD & LINCOLN, Publishers, 59 Washington-st., Boston.

Miscellaneous.

Destruction of a Ship by a Sperm Whale.

From the Panama Herald, Oct. 16.

We have just received the following thrilling account of the destruction of the whaleship Ann Alexander, Cap. John S. Deblois, of New-Bedford, by a large sperm whale, from the lips of the captain himself, who arrived in this city from Paita, on Sunday last, in the schooner Providence. A similar circumstance has never been known to occur but once in the whole history of whale-fishing, and that was the destruction of the ship Essex, some twenty or twenty-five years ago, and which many of our readers fully remember. We proceed to the narrative as furnished us by Capt. Deblois, and which is fully authenticated by nine of the crew in a protest under the seal of the U. S. Consul, Alex. Ruden, Jr., at Paita.

The ship Ann Alexander, Capt. S. Deblois, sailed from New-Bedford, Mass., June 1st, 1850, for a cruise in the South Pacific for sperm whale. Having taken about 500 barrels of oil in the Atlantic, the ship proceeded on her voyage to the Pacific. Nothing of unusual interest occurred, until, when passing Cape Horn, one of the men, named Jackson Walker, of Newport, N. H., was lost overboard in a storm. Reaching the Pacific, she came up the coast and stopped at Valdivia, coast of Chili, for fresh provisions, and on the 31st of May last, she called at Paita, for the purpose of shipping a man. The vessel proceeded on her voyage to the South Pacific.

On the 20th of August last she reached what is well known to all whalers as the "Off-Shore-Ground," in lat. 5 deg. 50 min. South, lon. 102 deg. West. In the morning of that day, at about 9 o'clock, whales were discovered in the neighborhood, and about noon, the same day, they succeeded in making fast to one. Two boats had gone after the whales—the larboard and starboard, the former commanded by the first mate, and the latter by Captain Deblois. The whale, which they had struck, was harpooned by the larboard boat. After running some time, the whale turned upon the boat, and rushing at it with tremendous violence, lifted open its enormous jaws, and taking the boat in, actually crushed it into fragments as small as a common-sized chair! Capt. Deblois immediately struck for the scene of the disaster with the starboard boat, and succeeded against all expectation in rescuing the whole of the crew of the boat—nine in number!

There were now eighteen men in the starboard boat, consisting of the Captain, the first mate, and the crews of both boats. The frightful disaster had been witnessed from the ship, and the waste-boat was called into readiness and sent to their relief. The distance from the ship was about six miles. As soon as the waste-boat arrived, the crews were divided, and it was determined to pursue the same whale, and make another attack upon him. Accordingly they separated, and proceeded at some distance from each other, as is usual on such occasions, after the whale. In a short time they came up to him, and prepared to give him battle. The waste-boat, commanded by the first mate, was in advance. As soon as the whale perceived the demonstration being made upon him, he turned his course, suddenly, and making a tremendous dash at this boat, seized it with his wide-spread jaws, and crushed it into atoms, allowing the men barely time to escape his vengeance by throwing themselves into the ocean.

Cap. Deblois, again seeing the perilous condition of his men, at the risk of meeting the same fate, directed his boat to hasten to their rescue, and in a short time succeeded in saving them all from a death little less horrible than that from which they had twice narrowly escaped. He then ordered the boat to put for the ship as speedly as possible; and no sooner had the order been given than they discovered the monster of the deep making toward them with his jaws widely extended. Fortunately, the monster came up and passed them at a short distance. The boat then made her way to the ship and they all got on board in safety.

After reaching the ship, a boat was dispatched for the oars of the demolished boats, and it was determined to pursue the whale with the ship. As soon as the boat returned with the oars, sail was set, and the ship proceeded after the whale. In a short time she overtook him and a lance was thrown into his head. The ship passed on by him, and immediately after they discovered that the whale was making for the ship. As he came up near her, they hauled to the wind, and suffered the monster to pass her. After he had fairly passed, they kept off to overtake and attack him again. When the ship had reached within about fifty rods of him, they discovered that the whale had settled down deep below the surface of the water, and as it was near sundown, they concluded to give up the pursuit.

Capt. Deblois was at this time standing in the night-heads on the larboard bow, with craft in hand, ready to strike the monster a deadly blow should he appear, the ship moving about five knots, when working on the side of the ship, he discovered the whale rushing towards her at the rate of fifteen knots! In an instant, the monster struck the ship with tremendous violence, shaking her from stem to stern! She quivered under the violence of the shock as if she had struck upon a rock! Capt. Deblois immediately descended into the forecastle, and there, to his horror, discovered that the monster had struck the ship about two feet from the keel, abreast the foremast, knocking a great hole entirely through her bottom, through which the water roared and rushed impetuously! Springing to the deck, he ordered the mate to cut away the anchors and get the cables overboard to keep the ship from sinking, as she had a large quantity of pig iron on board. In doing this, the mate succeeded in relieving only one anchor and cable clear, the other having been fasted around the foremast. The ship was then sinking rapidly. The Captain went to the cabin, where he found three feet of water; he, however, succeeded in procuring a chronometer, sextant and chart. Reaching the decks he ordered the boats to be cleared away, and to get water and provisions, as the ship was keeling over. He again descended to the cabin, but the water was rushing in so rapidly that he could procure nothing. He came upon deck, ordered all hands into the boats, and was the last himself to leave the ship, which he did by throwing himself into the sea and swimming to the nearest boat! The ship was on her beam-end, her topgallant yards under water. They then pushed off some distance from the ship expecting her to sink in a very short time. Upon an examination of the stores they had been able to save, he discovered that they had only twelve quarts of water, and not a mouthful of provisions of any kind! The boats contained eleven men each; were leaky, and night coming on, they were obliged to bail them all night to keep them from singing!

Next day, at daylight, they returned to the ship, no one daring to venture on board but the captain, their intention being to cut away the masts, and fearful that the moment that the masts were cut away the ship would go down. With a single hatchet, the captain went on board, cut away the mast, when the ship righted. The boats then came up, and the men, by the sole aid of spades, cut away the chain cable from around the foremast, which got the ship nearly on her keel. The men then tied ropes round their bodies, got into the sea, and cut a hole through the decks to get out provisions. They could procure nothing but about five gallons of vinegar and twenty pounds of wet bread. The ship threatened to sink, and they deemed it imprudent to remain by her longer, so they set sail in their boats and left her.

On the 22d of August, at about five o'clock, P. M., they had the indescribable joy of discerning a ship in the distance. They made signal, and were soon answered, and in a short time they were reached by the good ship Nantucket, of Nantucket, Mass, Capt. Gibbs, who took them all on board, clothed and fed them, and extended to them in every way the greatest possible hospitality.

On the succeeding day, Capt. Gibbs went to the wreck of the ill-fated Ann Alexander, for the purpose of trying to procure something from her; but, as the sea was rough, and the attempt considered dangerous, he abandoned the project. The Nantucket then set sail for Paita, where she arrived on the 15th of September, and where she landed Capt. Deblois and his men. Capt. Deblois was kindly and hospitably received and entertained at Paita by Capt. Bathurst, an English gentleman, residing there, and subsequently took passage on board the schooner Providence, Capt. Starbuck, for this port, arriving here on Sunday, last, the 12th inst.

Passing through an Iceberg.

Extract from a Journal kept by a Seaman who served in the Arctic Expedition of 1850-51.

SUNDAY, June 30, 1850.

Moored to an iceberg; weather calm; sky cloudless, and "beautifully blue; surrounded by a vast number of stupendous bergs, glittering and glistening beneath the refulgent rays of a mid-day sun.

A great portion of the crew had gone on shore to gather the eggs of the wild sea-birds that frequent the lonely ice-bound precipices of Baffin's Bay, while those on board had retired to rest, wearied with the harrassing toils of the preceding day.

To me, walking the deck and alone, all nature seemed hushed in universal repose. While thus contemplating the stillness of the monotonous scene around me, I observed in the offing a large iceberg, completely perforated, exhibiting in the distance an arch, or tunnel, apparently so uniform in its conformation that I was induced to call two of the seamen to look at it, at the same time telling them that I han never read or heard of any of our Arctic voyagers passing through one of those arches so frequently seen through large bergs, and that there would be a novelty in doing so, and if they chose to accompany me I would get permission to take the dingy, (a small boat,) and endeavor to accomplish the unprecedented feat. They readily agreed, and away we went.

On nearing the arch, and ascertaining that there was a sufficiency of water for the boat to pass through, we rowed slowly and silently under, when there burst upon our view one of the most magnificent specimens of nature's handy-work ever exhibited to mortal eyes; the sublimity and grandeur of which no language can describe—no imagination conceive.

Fancy an immense arch of 80 feet span, 50 feet high, and upward of 100 in breadth—as correct in its conformation as if it had been constructed by the most scientific artist—formed of solid ice of a beautiful emerald green, its whole expanse of surface smoother than the most polished alabaster, and you may form some slight conception of the architectural beauties of this icy temple, the wonderful workmanship of time and the elements.

When we had got about half way through the mighty structure, on looking upward I observed that the berg was split the whole breadth of the arch, and in a perpendicular direction to its summit, showing two vertical sections of regular surfaces. "darkly, deeply, beautifully blue," here and there illumined by an arctic sun which darted its golden rays between, presenting to the eye a picture of ethereal grandeur which no poet could describe, no painter portray. I was so enraptured with the sight that for a moment I fancied the "blue vault of heaven" had opened, and that I actually gazed on the celestial splendor of a world beyond this. But alas! in an instant the scene changed, and I awoke as it were from a delightful dream to experience all the horrors of a terrible reality. I observed the facture rapidly close, then again slowly open. This stupendous mass of ice, millions of tuns in weight, was afloat, consequently in motion and apparently about to lose its equilibrium, capsize, or burst into fragments. Our position was truly awful; my feelings at the moment may be conceived, but cannot be described. I looked downward and around me; the sight was equally appalling; the very sea seemed agitated. I at last shut my eyes from a scene so terrible, the men at the oars, as if by instinct, "gave way," and our little craft swiftly glided from beneath the gigantic mass.

We then rowed round the berg, keeping at a respectable distance from it, in order to judge of its magnitude. I supposed it to be about a mile in circumference, and its highest pinnacle 250 feet.

Thus ended an excursion, the bare recollection of which at this moment awakens in me a shudder; nevertheless, I would not have lost the opportunity of witnessing a scene so awfully sublime, so tragically grand, for thousands sterling, but I would not again run such a risk for a world.

We passed through the berg about two P. M., and at ten o'clock the same night it burst, agitating the sea for miles around.

I may also observe that the two men who were with me in the boat did not observe that the berg was rent until I told them, after we were out of danger, we having agreed previously to entering the arch, not to speak a word to each other, lest echo itself should disturb the fragile mass.

The World's Exhibition—Awards to Americans.

The National Intelligencer, gives a complete list of the Awards in favor of American contributors to the great Exposition of Industry at London—as officially communicated by our Commissioner, Edward Riddle, Esq., to Joseph G. C. Kennedy, Esq., Secretary of the Central Committee at Washington.

Council Medals.

To Joel Borden, Jr., Texas, for his preparation called Meat-Biscuit.

To David Dick, Meadville, Pa., for his Anti-Friction Press and various engineer's tools and presses.

To C. H. McCormick, Chicago, Ill., for his Reaping Machine.

To William Bond & Son, Boston, for the invention of a new mode of observing Astronomical Phenomena, &c.

To Charles Goodyear, New-Haven, Conn., for India Rubber Fabrics.

Prize Medals.

Hiram Powers, for Statue of a Greek Slave.

Brooklyn Flint Glass Co., for Flint Glass.

Day & Newell, Parautoptic Permutating Locks. (With special approbation.)

Silas C. Herring, New-York, Salamander Safe.

North Wayne Scythe Company, Maine, for Scythes.

D. Simmons & Co., Edge Tools.

Brown & Wells, Tools.

Chilson, Richardson & Co., Boston, Hot-Air Furnace.

Cornelius & Co., Philadelphia, Chandelier.

Chas. Howland, New-York, Bell Telegraph.

Adams & Co., Bank Lock.

McGregor & Lee, do.

G. A. Arrowsmith, Permutation Locks.

C. Childs, a Slide-top Buggy or Phæton.

W. C. Watson, a Sporting Wagon, very neat.

Blodgett & Lerow, Sewing Machine.

W. Hayden, Drawing Regulator for Cotton.

Lowell Machine Shop, Self-Acting Lathe, and a Power-Loom.

Prouty & Mears, Plow.

C. Starr, Book-Binding Machine.

J. P. Woodbury, Wood-planing, Tonguing, and Grooving Machine.

T. K. Earl & Co., Card Clothing.

Ryder's Patent Iron Bridge, N. Y. (Model.)

National Institute, Washington, Models of Ships.

J. R. St John, N. Y., Nautical Compass.

A. Dallas Bache, (U. S. Gov't,) Balances.

M. B. Brady, New-York, Daguerreotypes.

J. A. Whipple, do. M. N. Lawrence, do.

J. R. St. John, Detector Compass.

W. A. Burt, Solar Compass, Surveying Instruments, &c.

S. Ercisson, Sea Lead, Pyrometer, &c,

J. Chickering, Boston Square Piano-forte.

R. Nunns & Clark, a seven-octave do.

C. H. Elisenabrant, Clarionets and Flutes.

G. Gemunder, Violins. C. Meyer, two Pianos.

J. K. Herrick—Superior Ruling of account Books.

S. G. Howe, Boston—Alphabet for the Blind.

W. H. Jeffers—Ladies' Boots and Shoes.

W. H. Addington—Shoes for Mining.

Mrs. W. Haight—A Shirt. C. Duffield, Hams.

Adirondac Company, N. Y.—Steel and Iron.

Morris, Jones & Co.—Plate Iron.

New Jersey Exploring and Mining Company—Zink Ores, Franklinits, and Smelting Process.

Trenton Iron Company—Fine Iron, Ores, &c.

W. Barns—Maple Sugar. L. Dean, do.

Dill & Mulchaey—Cavendish Tabacco. J. H. Grant, do.

Thos. Bell, Westchester Co., N. Y.—Soft Wheat from Genesee.

Hecker & Brother, N. York—Genesee Flour.

B. B. Kirtland—Indian Corn, Thirty-five varieties.

E. T. Herriot—Carolina Rice.

Schooley & Hough—Hams.

N. York State Agricultural Society—Varieties of Wheat.

Raymond & Schuyler—Flour, (thirds.)

P. Robinson—Cavendish Tobacco.

Power & Weightman, Chemicals.

S. Bond—Cotton. Wade Hampton—do.

G. L. Homes, do. J. R. Jones, do. J. V. Jones, do.

W. W. Macleod, do. J. B. Meriwether, do.

J. Pope, do. W. B. Seabrook, do. J. Nailor, do.

J. H. Ewing, Wool. Cockerill, do. Perkins & Brown, do. A. M. Kimber & Co., do.

W. Colgate & Co., New-York, Starch. Oswego Factory, do.

State of Maryland—A Collection of her Produce.

Rev. Zadock Thompson—Vermont Woods.

H. G. & L. B. Hotchkiss—Oil of Peppermint.

George Hicks—Tillandsia Usnoides.

Amoskeog Manufacturing Co., N. H.—Drillings, Tickings, Sheetings and Cotton Flannels.

Willimantic Duck Co., Conn.—Cotton Sail Cloth.

Gilbert & Stephens, Mass.—Flannels.

Laurence, Stone & Co.—Tartans from Native Wool.

B. Baker—Light Harness, superior workmanship.

H. M. Crawford—Calf-Skins tanned in Oak Bark.

Wisdom, Russels & Whitman—Curled Hair, for furniture.

Hickey & Tull—Two Portmanteaus.

Lacey & Phillips—A case of Harness.

Harward Co.—India Rubber Shoes.

J. Fenn—Comb.

S. C. Moulton—India Rubber Goods.

G. Loring—Water-Pail.

Julius Pratt & Co.—Ivory Veneer.

M. J. Louderback—Preserved Peeches.

State of Maryland—A Collection of Produce.

Bazin, Xavier & Co.—Fancy Soaps.

J. R. St. John—Soap.

H. P. & W. C. Taylor, Phila.—Toilet Soap.

BIG BRIDGE.—A bigger bridge than was ever constructed is now contemplated to cross the Severn and connect Monmouthshire and South Wales with Bristol and the West of England. It is to be of granite, 140 feet wide, with arches of 324 feet span and 120 feet above the highest spring tides, so that the largest ships will be able to sail under. On each side of the bridge will be shops, the rent of which will pay a good part of the interest on the cost. There will be room for a double railroad track and a carriage road, besides covered colonades for foot passengers.

Boats of the Northern Indians.

The New York News gives the following account, from an officer of the American Arctic Expedition, of the boats used in that region:—

"Kyacs" are a kind of boat used by this people, and are, certainly, very curious affairs, four of which were brought in the Advance. They are made by stretching seal skins over a light frame work of wood, shaped very much like a flattened cigar, both ends being very sharp, with a hole in the top about 14 inches in diameter. The whole length of a boat is about 12 feet, by 14 inches in width, and 8 inches deep at the center. The boatman slides his legs and hips through the aperture in the top of the boat, extending his legs lengthways, while from his hips up are outside. This part of the body is covered with a seal skin, made the same as a "Jumper," and lashed with drawing strings at the bottom, to a rim round the aperture in the boat. The boatman propels his craft with a double bladed paddle, about seven feet in length, made of light wood, and slightly made; the main part about 1½ or 2 inches in diameter, and the blades 4 inches wide, and ornamented with ivory. With this he moves his boat through the water at a very rapid rate. By a dexterous movement with his oar, an expert boatman will completely turn his boat over and come on the opposite side, still retaining his accustomed situation.

In this fragile vessel he pursues his avocation of spearing seals in the roughest weather, for which purpose he has a barbed spear several inches long, made of steel, and very sharp, which is attached to an ivory point about eight inches in length and two and a half in diameter; to the steel is attached a line, forty feet in length, made of the hide of the Walrus, and this is fastened to a bladder made of the skin of a seal and filled with air, lying on the after part of the boat. When the spear enters the seal, it is arranged so that it disengages itself from the ivory point, by slipping at the same instant from the staff, but is attached by a string and floats with it, while at the same time the bladder to which the line is attached is thrown overboard, preventing the seal from sinking any farther than the length of the line; the staff and seal are then recovered at his leisure. For killing water-fowl, of which there are but few, a sharp round spear is used, attached to a staff seven feet in length. These spears are thrown with astonishing accuracy, rarely if ever missing their mark. Another manner, and the easiest by far of spearing the seal, is through a hole in the ice when they come up to breathe; they will frequently scratch holes through the ice from the under side, there it is several feet thick, to get fresh air; the natives are accustomed to the noise made by the scratching, and will hear them, and as soon as they make their appearance they are at once killed and secured.

Meneely's Bells.

A correspondent of the National Intelligencer, writing from New York and giving some account of the Fair of the American Institute at Castle Garden, notices the specimens of Meneely's Bells on exhibition, and gives some information respecting the process of their manufactory:—

"G. H. Swords, hardware and cutlery merchant, 116 Broadway, New York city, exhibits a magnificent chime of bells, nine in number, manufactured by Andrew Meneely at West Troy, New York, who has been in the church, factory and steamboat bell foundry business for twenty years. It is worthy of note that bells from this establishment have taken the highest premium of fifteen consecutive fairs in different sections of the Union. The chime for Trinity Church was completed at this foundry, it being found deficient in two bells on its importation. Within the last two years they have cast and sold from the agency of Mr. Swords nine hundred and twenty-five large bells, some of them weighing as much as fifty thousand pounds. Most of them are manufactured with 'improved cast iron yokes,' by which they can be raised or depressed, and adjusted to ring easily and properly; and they also generally affix springs to the clapper to prolong the sound, and to avoid the disagreeable effect produced by the clapper resting on the bell. The beautiful chime now on exhibition in this fair is worth four thousand dollars, and was cast, every bell, so accurately as to come from the mold without requiring the touch of a cold-chisel to perfect a single note of the collection. This, which is the common achievement at Mr. Meneely's works, has never been accomplished in Europe.

From long practice and thorough knowledge of his metal, Mr. M. is able to get accurate tones by gauging and 'sweeping' his molds with great care, calculating, not only to an ounce what will be the weight of the bell when coming from the mold, but the exact tone it will give forth. Mr. Swords sends these bells all over the United States, and also supplies Canada with them, to the entire exclusion of English competition; selling them here at twenty-eight cents per pound, the lowest price at which the English could be brought here being fifty cents. The finest of these beautiful castings are decidedly superior to that of any other bells found in the United States, whether made at home or abroad; while their tone is uniformly rich, mellow, clear, and ringing, as testified in the certificates of the examiners in all the exhibitions in which they have been shown."

A New Power.

Prof. Page, of Washington, has been exhibiting at the Tabernacle in New-York, a a new motive power that promises to supersede, in many instances, the use of steam. This power is that of electro-magnetism, generated by a galvanic battery and concentrated in helices that constitute the cylinder in which the piston plays. The principle is very simple, and the wonder now is that this application of it had not been made years ago. Two coils of wire are arranged in the same line, but at some distance from each other; in these is inserted a cylindrical bar of iron, and to this machine the wires connecting the poles of a galvanic battery are attached. The passage of the magnetic fluid through one coil makes it a temporary magnet, which of course attracts to its center the iron bar; the current is then transferred to the other coil, which in turn attracts the iron to its center, and thus by shifting the current from one helix to the other a piston movement is secured, which of course can be made available for rotary motion, or for any other purpose to which the steam-engine is now applied. The current is shifted by the motion of the piston itself, just as in the steam-engine valves are alternately opened and shut. The motion is steady, beautiful, and powerful; the only practical question is wether it can be increased to an extent adequate to the demands of the heaviest engine work, and produced as cheaply as steam-power. Of this there seems to be little doubt. From eighty to one hundred horse-power has been attained by the batteries and helices already constructed, and the cost is about twenty cents for twenty-four hours for one horse power, or less than a cent an hour. [Independent.

New Work by Powers.

The Italian correspondent of The London Daily News says:—While on the subject of the fine arts, I must not omit stating that Mr. Powers, the American sculptor, whose studio I visited yesterday, and whose name will be familiar to your readers as the author of the Greek Slave, which forms such a point of attraction in the Great Exhibition, is now engaged on a statute of great beauty and of great allegorical interest, both as regards his own country and the prospects of the world at large. It represents California, under the form of a beautiful female figure, of the Indian type of feature, pointing with a divining rod to a mass of auriferous quartz, which is skillfully disposed so as to form the support of the statue. The voluptuous beauty of the figure, the smiling expression of the face, and the richness of her cap, bracelets, and armlets of native gold, are sufficient to awaken the enthusiasm of those who, through avarice or through adventurous spirit, leave all in search of the tempting metal; but here, indeed, we may say "all is not gold that glitters"—the too often deluded hopes of the adventurers, and the "deceitfulness of richness," are well typified by a bunch of thorns, which the enchanting California holds behind her back, in her right hand, and which, in the first burst of admiration, is not visible to the gaze of the dazzled spectator.

Canine Instinct.

We know nothing in the story line that is better than a good dog story. The following, if not the very best of the kind, is certainly a very excellent one, and may be relied on as strictly true. We give the well known names of the parties as vouchers.

Some three weeks since, Mr. Theo. Holbrook, of Milk-street, broke up housekeeping in Roxbury, and sent three of his children to South Hadley, Mass., to attend school. On leaving home the children took with them their favorite spaniel dog, that had been their companion and playmate for eight years. He rode in the car with them to Hadley, and remained with the children during the afternoon, but the next morning was missing, and could no where be found. The only trace that could be found of him was, that he had been seen crossing a toll bridge. Twelve days after the dog left Hadley, he arrived at his old home in Roxbury. But not finding his old friends there, he next called at Mr. William Whiting's, his master's next door neighbor, and sought admittance by scratching on the door. Mr. Whiting's family at once recognized him, and admitted him. He was very much exhausted, and poor in flesh, and very hungry. Mr. Whiting's little girl immediately undertook the work of a nurse to the poor travel-worn spaniel. He rapidly improved under her care, and in a day or two commenced following her, and would not allow her to go ten steps without him. He insisted on following her even to school, and lying at her feet during school-hours. And it was not until his old master came for him that he could be induced to leave his little friend.

The great question now for the curious to answer is: How could this dog find his way to Roxbury from South Hadley, a distance of 105 miles? He was carried all the way in the cars, and of course had no opportunity to see the road. And then, again, it is evident from the length of time consumed in the journey (twelve days,) that he did not come directly, for he probably would have traveled that distance in a day. He must have wandered many hundred miles before he struck some trail by which he could make his way homeward. [Boston Traveler.

The Earthquake at Naples.

The recent earthquake in the kingdom of Naples, proves to have been much more awful and destructive than was at first reported. A list of more than 50 towns and settlements is given, which were seriously injured. Melfi, which contained about 10,000 inhabitants, was nearly destroyed—three-quarters of the place being in ruins. The Archbishop's palace, the college, and other rich public edifices, were leveled to the ground, The number of the killed exceeds 700; and 200 wounded persons are now in the neighboring hospitals, including whole families of high rank. It is not said that the ground opened, but that all the ruin was done by the repeated shocks, which demolished the buildings. Some of them were so rapid that people had not time to escape from their houses. The Commune of Barile was completely laid waste, all the buildings being destroyed except the Foundling Hospital. In Rionero nearly all the buildings are also prostrate, and many of the people perished. One female was disinterred alive, and an infant was recovered from the ruins, two days after the disaster. Six towns, in the province of Bari, were destroyed, in whole or in part, and thousands of the people perished.

The present Grain Crop of Spain is 120,000,000 of fanegas or 171,000,000 of bushels, of which three-fourths is Wheat and one-fourth Rye. But one-half the country is under cultivation; of this four-fifths is devoted to Grain, and one-fifth to other crops. The production of Wine is estimated, by an able and well informed writer in the French Moniteur, at 240,000 of gallons.

Of one hundred accidents on railways occasioned by imprudence of passengers, twenty-four—or nearly one-quarter, are occasioned by getting off when the train is in motion. The apparent speed is very deceptive, and the real speed is always much geater than it appears. One-sixth, 16, are caused by jumping on when the train is in motion, and one-eighth, 12, by crossing the track heedlessly, making upwards of 50 by this single miscalculation as to the speed and force of the motion.

Rev. Mr. Andrews, lately sent out by the Associate Synod as a missionary to Trinidad, has written home, requesting to be recalled, for the reasons that the Mission is not likely to accomplish any good, and that to continue it would be a useless expenditure of service and money.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 commenced the first Wednesday in September, and continues forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.
Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First commences Aug. 27 and closes Dec. 2.
" Second " Dec. 3 " " March 16.
" Third " March 17 " " June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

BOARD, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. CLARKE, Sec. } of Trustees.
DERUYTER, July 18, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

- No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
- No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
- No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
- No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
- No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
- No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
- No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
- No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
- No. 9—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition. 4 pp.
- No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
- No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
- No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
- No. 13—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
- No. 14—Delaying Obedience. 4 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention isinvited:—

- A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pp.
- The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.
- An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.
- Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New-York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to

GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 23.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1851.

WHOLE NO. 387.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c." [Continued.

If now we attend to what was commanded the Israelites concerning this memorable night, and what was done during it, and subsequently before their departure, we shall find that they could not leave Egypt so early as has been supposed; for, as many matters had to be attended to, whatever their haste, much time must have been consumed. It was not till midnight, that the destroying angel executed his dread commission; and when, afterwards, Pharaoh rose up, he and all his servants, and all the Egyptians, some time would probably be consumed in unavailing regrets over their several bereavements, and in consideration of what should now be done. When it had been resolved to send for Moses and Aaron, still, we must remember, that they, with the children of Israel, were dwelling in a district appropriated peculiarly to them, at some distance from the palace, and on the opposite side of the Nile. And, however urgent the Egyptians might at length have become for their departure, the Israelites were absolutely prohibited from leaving their houses. A higher authority, and one which now, amid the terrors and the desolation of their enemies, the preserved of the Lord must have been more than ordinarily disposed to respect, had solemnly enjoined, so recently as the night previous, "And none of you shall go out at the door of his house, until the morning." (Exod. xii. 22.) They were farther commanded, that whatever of the paschal lamb remained uneaten "until the morning," was then to be "burnt with fire;" (Exod. xii. 10;) and are we to suppose that Moses and Aaron, or even any of the children of Israel, on an occasion of such an awfully solemn nature, would disregard these injunctions? We cannot but believe that they were all strictly attended to, and that the whole community did remain every one in the house in which he partook of that supper, "until the morning;" and that, then, whatever of it was left was burnt with fire, according to the divine command—so that midnight was long past, and the morning come, before a single movement could be made towards their departure. And, it is also to be observed, that the necessary preparations for their departure must have been still farther delayed, when we remember that where a family was insufficient for the eating of the lamb, they were to join with their neighbors, so that many must have remained till the morning in houses not their own, and afterwards have to attend to all that was necessary to be done, before finally departing from the land which hitherto had been the place of their abode.

Next, we must observe, they were to be led out "according to their armies," implying an organized and orderly arrangement, (Exod. vi. 26; vii. 4,) which also was carefully attended to; "and it came to pass the self-same day, that the Lord did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, by their armies," (Exod. xii. 51,) or, as in the following chapter, "the children of Israel went up harnessed, out of the land of Egypt;" (in the margin, "went up by five in a rank.") (Exod. xiii. 18. So that, in addition to the time requisite to congregate an assemblage of at least fifteen hundred thousand, men, women, and children, with whatever they esteemed of greatest value, as well as their flocks and herds, "even very much cattle," besides "a mixed multitude," that went with them, (Exod. xii. 38,) all done after morning, there was farther a regularly organized arrangement to be made, with qualified and appointed officers, when brought together, after they had got themselves otherwise prepared, whatever the necessary preparation may have been, in leaving a land they were not to revisit. And we must here observe, that it is not likely that Pharaoh, so much enraged against them, would permit any open prepartion previously, but might have fallen upon them with his army, had they attempted it. (Exod. x. 28, 29.)

All these circumstances, then, must have taken up, at the very lowest estimate, several hours, and all after "morning," when the remains of the paschal lamb had been consumed with fire—till which time, as we have seen, not a movement was permitted to be made,—not only after the night of the 14th, but after the following morning. When the Scriptures inform us that the Exodus took place at night, it must, therefore, have been the night of the 15th, and not the night of the 14th of the month.

This indeed, then, was truly a "preparation day," (though not, at this time, expressly named so,) immediately preceding, as it did, that mighty intervention of God for His people. Our attention, however, is mainly to be fixed on that event to which it led. With an high hand, God brought Israel from under the oppressor's rod. On the 14th, the Passover blood was sprinkled for a protection, and the efficacy of that blood they enjoyed, in their full preservation when the first-born of Egypt were laid low. Still, however, this was but preparatory to the ransom God designed to effect, and, accordingly, "on the morrow after the Passover, the children of Israel went out, with an high hand, in the sight of all the Egyptians." Numb. xxxiii. 3.

This, we are expressly told, was "on the 15th day of the first month." For this reason, and also as prefigurative of the enjoyment of that mightier redemption which Christ should afterwards come to effect, that day was established as a Feast unto the Lord. "On the 15th day of the same month, is the Feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord; seven days, ye must eat unleavened bread. In the first day, ye shall have an Holy Convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein." (Lev. xxiii. 6, 7. The first day of this seven days' Feast, being the fifteenth day of the month, was thus solemnly set apart as a Sabbath unto the Lord, in commemoration of what He had wrought for Israel's deliverance now upon it.

Of itself, that deliverance was worthy of commemoration; but Israel's bondage was typical of man's slavery to sin, and Israel's redemption from Egyptian thraldom by the alone power of God, was also typical of that work which Christ condescended to leave His glory and become man that He might effect. While, therefore, we review the circumstances connected with Israel's Exodus, we receive instruction concerning that salvation wrought for a fallen world.

The annual Passover Sabbath, on the very day when the unarmed Israelites went forth in sight of their oppressors, was appointed to be observed as a festival commemorative of it. It referred to a glorious manifestation of divine grace, and was esteemed "a high day," in Israel. It was a Sabbath, on which no servile work was to be done; it was a Holy Convocation, equally with the weekly Sabbath—but was not confounded with, or at all to be mistaken for it. It had its own appointed and appropriate period of observance; not determined by the days of the week, but regulated by the month, and the day of the month. This month is called, (Exod. xii. 2,) "the beginning of months," which Boothroyd translates, "chief of months," adding, "so Matthews rendered; and I cannot think the Hebrew will even bear any other sense. It is so called on account of the Passover Feast." The Passover Sabbath had its own appropriate object; not God's having finished creation work, but His having wrought redemption for Israel, thus foreshowing also the work of Him who should afterwards, by His death upon the cross, spoil principalities and powers, "making a show of them openly."

The enactment of this Passover Sabbath is repeated, Numb. xxviii. 16, 18, "And in the fourteenth day of the first month, is the Passover of the Lord. And in the fifteenth day of this month, is the Feast; seven days shall unleavened bread be eaten. In the first day, shall be an Holy Convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work therein."

The Jews still recognize this Sabbath as an institution peculiar to the Passover; but some of our own Commentators grievously confuse the inspired statements, while others, who enlarge on matters of less importance, have very little to say upon it—and that little, altogether unsatisfactory to the earnest inquirer. Whether this may have arisen from their perception that an exhibition of its true import, in all its relations to the Messiah's work, would be calculated unfavorably to affect the reception given to their interpretations of the Sabbath day which is spoken of at the period of Christ's death as "an high day," we seek not to determine. But, after such frequent occasion of complaint in this respect, it is with peculiar satisfaction that, on this part of our investigation at least, we are enabled to present a brief summary, embodying, very nearly, the several points, which we have endeavored to prove at length, the result of much consideration, in an extract from a recently published work of Biblical reference:—

"On the fourteenth day of the first month, (Nisan,) between the evenings, the Passover was to be celebrated; and on the fifteenth day commenced the seven days' feast of unleavened bread. The term Passover is strictly applicable only to the meal of the paschal lamb or the fourteenth day; and the feast of unleavened bread was celebrated on the fifteenth onward, for seven days, to the twenty-first inclusive. This order is recognized Josh. v. 10. 11. But, in the sacred history, the term Passover is used to denote the whole period; the fourteenth day and the festival of the seven days following. (Luke ii. 41; John ii. 13, 23; vi. 4; xi. 55.)

"This mode of expression is recognized by Josephus, the Jewish historian, who uses the expression, 'the festival of unleavened bread, which is called the Passover.' (Luke xxii. 1.)

"As to the time of the celebration of the Passover, it is expressly appointed 'between the evenings,' or, as it is elsewhere expressed, 'at even, at the going down of the sun.' (Deut. xvi. 6.). This is supposed to denote the commencement of the fourteenth day of Nisan, or at the moment when the thirteenth day closed and the fourteenth began. The twenty-four hours reckoned from this point of time to the same period of the next day, or fourteenth, was the day of the passover. At sunset of the fourteenth day, the fifteenth began; and with it the feast of unleavened bread. The lamb was to be selected on the tenth day, by each individual or family, and kept up till the fourteenth day, in the evening of which day it was to be killed. (Exod. xii. 3, 6.) Then followed the feast of unleavened bread, occupying seven days; the first and last of which were peculiarly holy, like the Sabbath. (Exod. xii. 15, 16.)

"The 'preparation of the Passover,' (John xix. 14,) or 'the day of the preparation,' (Matt. xxvii. 62,) was the fourteenth day, or the day preceding the first day of unleavened bread."—Eadie's Biblical Cyclopedia, Art. "Passover."

Now this Passover Sabbath, on the fifteenth day of the month Nisan, is clearly that Sabbath day which followed the day of the Saviour's death. Just as surely as the Passover itself arrived, so surely did the Holy Convocation unto the Lord necessarily follow, on whatever day of the week it might fall. Those, however, who vindicate the church's change of the Sabbath, uniformly assume, and their whole theory rests on the assumption, that the Sabbath thus spoken of by the Evangelists, was the weekly Sabbath. But, as already remarked, every statement tends to show that it was rather one of the two Great Annual Sabbaths, having their place in, and deriving their significance from, the relation which they bore to the Paschal sacrifice. We never read of a "preparation day" preceding and connected with the weekly Sabbath; while, as we have seen, the "preparation day" spoken of in one Gospel as "the day before the Sabbath," is, in a parallel text of another Gospel, connected with the Passover; "the preparation of the Passover." We have seen the institution of that Passover Sabbath. It continued the same, and the Evangelists refer, therefore, not to the weekly Sabbath, but to the fifteenth day of the month of Nisan, the appointed Sabbath, according to the Law, an Holy Convocation. Of the seven days' Feast of Unleavened Bread, both the first and the last days were Sabbaths, Holy Convocations, concerning each of which the injunction of the Law is, "Ye shall do no servile work therein." Lev. xxiii. 7, 8. The allusions in the Gospels distinctly are to the first of those seven days, that immediately following the Passover day.

This Sabbath was, therefore, an important festival, and is accordingly so distinguished from an ordinary weekly Sabbath, by the Evangelist John, when he informs us that "that Sabbath day was an HIGH day," or, as in the Greek (megale,) "a great day." John xix. 31. The same Evangelist, using the same Greek word, calls another appointed Sabbath, of similar nature, though pertaining to the Feast of Tabernacles, "the last day, that GREAT day of the feast." John vii. 37. In a note appended to the account of the death of Polycarp, in Valesius' edition of Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, this fact is thus stated: "The day of solemn Assembly in any Feast, (and such were the first day and the last of the Feast of Tabernacles, the first and seventh of the Feast of Unleavened bread, and the Day of Pentecost,) is, by the Jews, writing in Greek, called 'a great day.'" [To be continued.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

EDUCATION:

WHAT IT IS DOING FOR THE WORLD.

BY PROF. WM. C. KENYON.

And first it may not be amiss to glance a moment at what education is doing for this earth. This goodly heritage of ours, puts on fair and beauteous forms, and yields her supplies to man's physical necessities, in rich abundance. But all this is secured most successfully, where the lords of the soil are the most highly educated. The pastures carpeted with green, the fields waving with the golden harvest, the cottages of pearly whiteness, all where the poor Indian roamed in his wilderness home, but a few suns ago, owe their existence to the white man's superior intelligence, and not to his superior physical strength. It is intelligence that subdues and beautifies the earth; strikes down the forests; tears up the stumps; smooths off asperities; makes the barren places fruitful; opens drains for the passage of pestilential miasma from swamps and marshes; tames the grasses and grains, vegetables and fruits; subjugates beasts and birds, and drives the venomous and noxious to distant glens and jungles; plants splendid palaces upon the hill-sides and in the vallies, upon the mountains and on the plains; builds villages and cities, changes their night into day, and stirs up in them the din of mechanical and commercial industry; constructs roads and bridges; clears obstructions from the channels of rivers; opens passages to connect inland seas with broad oceans; raises beacon lights upon dangerous shores and reefs; unfurls the canvas to the breeze; applies the water to the wheel, and the steam to the piston; levels down hills, and bores through mountains, and beneath the beds of rivers; belts the earth with iron rails; supplies nerves and breath to the "iron horse;" and makes the lightning ride post round the world.

It is mind, that is transforming into a paradise this continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Hudson's Bay to the Rio Grande. Other portions of the world may have a brighter sun, a more genial clime, a deeper and more fertile soil; but the mind that freighted the May Flower is not there. Nature, with a lavish hand, has sown the element, of national and individual wealth in richer profusion in portions of Asia, and Africa, and upon the islands of the seas, than in the northern half of North America; but where the native energies of the soil have not been waked up—where the mind is barren, dark, and desolate—there grow thorns and brambles; there crawls the serpent, whose tooth is filled with death; there prowls the panther; and there issue pestilential vapors. Scotland, ice-bound, bleak, barren, and rocky Scotland—the land of school and church edifices—the birth-place of mathematicians and philosophers, of poets and theologians—the home of the brave and free, and the resting place of philanthropists and patriots—what Scotland is, and more, Ireland might have been, could she have been blessed for generations with a population of the high intelligence of the Scots, instead of her mass of festering, putrid, withering ignorance.

"MIND IS WEALTH," is a familiar aphorism, much older in its origin than our own vernacular language. But it is mind developed, aroused, energized, conscious of its own innate powers, that is powerful in developing the resources of a country. Bring out an increased amount of intelligence, and agricultural and mineral wealth, mechanical and commercial enterprise, are brought out in equal ratio. When intelligence guides the plough, or directs the spade, the fields yield a richer harvest; the grass grows taller and thicker, and contains more nutriment; the fruits of the orchard are larger, fairer, and better flavored; the cattle are larger, handsomer, and more spirited; the lambs yield a finer wool, and a heavier fleece. When intelligence guides the helm, works the steamer's levers, or lets the water on to the wheel, life is safe, and invested capital yields large dividends. If it be ascertained that a people saw up their ponds of ice, hew down their granite mountains, and dig the coal and iron from the bowels of the earth, and then transport these by tens of thousands of tons, on iron rails, to the sea-board, and spread them upon the "wings of the wind," to distant markets, it need not be asked whether such a people have school-houses and churches. These they must have, or their industry and enterprise they could not have. It is intelligent mind that can shape and polish the marble, and pile it up in noble structures; that can multiply useful inventions, and hasten and cheapen communication between different and distant countries. Where are the canals and railways of Spain and Italy, the light-houses upon their coasts, and their commerce and their machinery? Ask their ignorant, bigoted, and superstitious millions. How would these fair and sunny lands be changed, if their ignorant masses could have for a single century the rousing, energizing, stimulating potency of such educators as Paul and John the Revelator were, or even such as Luther and Knox!

It is an unmistakable fact, that among an intelligent and moral people, everything is more healthful, cheerful, and beautiful, from the smallest to the greatest, from the chicken to the noble steed, from the flower-garden to the harvest-field, from the stable to the mansion, from the frail canoe to the majestic steamer. Mind is wealth; and tell a political economist the intellectual and moral condition of any people, and he would have all the necessary data for estimating their national wealth and prosperity. Or, on the other hand, pass through any country, and estimate the prosperity and enterprise indicated by the villages, farm-houses, and their appurtenances, and it will not be difficult, from such data, to estimate the intellectual and moral development of the inhabitants.

Indeed, God, in his infinite wisdom, seems to have admirably constructed this earth's surface for developing man intellectually. For what else were the native apple, pear, and plum, made so stinted, knotty, gnarled, and insipid, but to induce men to adopt means of improving them, and thereby improving themselves? Why else are the grains and vegetables, in their native state, so ill suited to the comfort and sustenance of men in an advanced state of society? The native sheep, ox, and horse, would much better compare with the lean kine of Pharaoh, than with the herds on the plantations of a Vail or a Prentice of New York. See also the mineral treasures planted in beds and veins, at small depths below the earth's surface—the iron and the coal, the copper and the zinc, the tin and the lead, the gold and the silver, the mercury and the platinum, the lime and the clay, the granite and the marble, the salt and the gypsum. How admirably are these arranged to call into exercise the perceptive and inventive powers of the mind, and induce habits of persevering industry! The brilliant pearls and sparkling gems, of little value to the great masses of the human race, are buried deep beneath the waters, or in sunless caverns. All these things point to the plans of beneficent Wisdom, for securing the intellectual and moral good of the human family. If, then, it be true, that the productiveness of the earth, agricultural and mineral, depends upon human intelligence, how absurd the opinion sometimes entertained, that men, in the ordinary pursuits of life have little need of thorough mental discipline! It is not too much to say—and the displays at our agricultural fairs sustain the assertion—that large classes of our agriculturists, could double the productiveness of their farms, in a very few years, by the application of more scientific principles in farming. Let it not be said, then, that the youth designed for the farm or the mechanic shop, can derive little advantage, so far as relates to their intended pursuits, at our best seminaries—that their Greek and Latin, their Mathematics and their Logic, can do nothing for them that shall enable them to raise the more corn to the acre, and to produce better machinery. The history of the progress in agriculture, and improvements in the mechanic arts, prove the opposite.

November 10, 1851.

CHRIST IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

In the extract below, from a letter by Mr. Lauria of Cairo, it is seen how strongly the Old Testament would witness to the Jews that Jesus is the Christ, if the utmost pains were not taken to blind their eyes:—

A Jew from Asia Minor, not ignorant in Talmudical lore, came here on some business, and called on me to buy a Bible. After paying for it, he said, he hoped that it contained nothing about Jesus of Nazareth. I answered, that he would find him mentioned by almost every prophet. Hearing this, he at once asked me to return him his money; but I said he must first see some of those passages I referred to, and then, if he objected to them, I would return him his money. I showed him the 53d of Isaiah, and the 12th and 13th of Zechariah, and after reading these chapters twice over, he became a little angry, and said he wondered how the Jews dare buy these books, and insisted on my receiving back the Bible. I assured him that the Bible was a faithful copy of theirs; but he said he was not to be fooled; for had it been as I asserted, all the Jews would have become Christians. As I had no Bible printed by Jews, all arguments proved useless; and as soon as he had received his money back, off he went cursing the Jews who buy these Bibles. He then called on the chief rabbi, complaining, as I was assured by Jews who were present, of the rabbis permitting the Jews to buy these Bibles, in which, he said, is inserted a part of the New Testament. He then took a Bible of ours which was in the rabbi's possession and pointed out the supposed insertions; but the rabbi showed him that those chapters are also found in the Jewish Bibles, and told him how they must be understood. He left, however, much dissatisfied with the rabbi's explanations; and said, that the Christians must have bribed all Jewish printers to insert those passages!

PROPHETIC VIEW OF AMERICA.

The following are the stanzas of the celebrated Dr. Berkeley, Bishop of Cloyne, in Ireland, containing what now appears like a prophetic view of the rising greatness of America. They were written about a hundred years ago. In 1725, the author published a plan for converting the American savages to Christianity, by the establishment of a College in the Bermuda Islands. The project was favorably received; considerable sums were raised for it. Dr. Berkeley visited this country, and spent a large part of his fortune, and about seven years, in efforts to establish his College, which miscarried through the neglect of Parliament to afford the aid that had been promised. Dr. Berkeley died at Oxford, England, in 1758.

[Presbyterian Cabinet.

The muse, disgusted at an age and clime
  Barren of every glorious theme,
In distant climes now waits a better time,
  Producing subjects worthy fame.

In happy climes, where, from the genial sun
  And virgin earth, such scenes ensue;
The force of art by nature seems outdone,
  And fancied beauties by the true.

In happy climes, the seat of innocence,
  Where Nature guides and Virtue rules;
Where men shall not impose for truth and sense,
  The pedantry of courts and schools.

There shall be sung another golden age,
  The rise of empire and of arts,
The good and great inspiring epic page,
  The wisest heads and noblest hearts.

Not such as Europe heeds in her decay;
  Such as she had when fresh and young,
When heavenly flame did animate her clay,
  By future poets shall be sung.

Westward the star of empire takes its way;
  The first four acts already past—
A fifth shall close the drama with the day—
  Time's noblest offspring is the last.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS OF AMERICA.

At the recent meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in London, Rev. Dr. Baird made a Report on the Religious Statistics of America. The following notice of the Report we copy from the Christian Watchman and Reflector:—

Dr. Baird had suspended conspicuously in the hall a map of the United States, twenty-two feet long by ten wide, on which all the great political divisions were sufficiently large to be seen distinctly by the entire meeting. He began by a rapid and graphic sketch of the earliest settlements of this great country, which "God had designed should be the home of Protestantism and truth, and an asylum for those who, in the Old World, might be called to endure persecution for righteousness' sake." It was on this account, that De Soto, the opener of Mexico and South America to the papal abominations of Spain, in proceeding from Cuba to explore the continent of North America, was made to run up the western, and not the eastern side of the Peninsula of Florida. But it is the statistical part of the report which especially claims attention.

The last 36 years, according to Dr. B., have constituted the most prosperous era of our religious history. In this period, the last ligament which united the Church and the State was sundered—in Connecticut in 1816, in Massachussetts in 1833. The area of the country has been made to reach an extent of about 3 1-4 millions of square miles, and the population an aggregate of more than 23 millions. At the rate of increase thus far, the population, fifty years hence, will be far more than one hundred millions. These statements were made to show the greatness of the church's resposibility in this country. After going at considerable length into a history of our national advancement in material and educational interests, Dr. B. proceeds to give the results of his investigations into the progress and present state of religion in the United States.

The oldest branch of the Protestant church in this country is the Protestant Episcopal. Its history begins in 1607 with the colonizing of Virginia. It continued to labor under very serious embarrassments until after the Revolution. In 1800, it had 320 churches, 260 ministers, and 16,000 communicants; in 1850, 1,550 churches, 28 bishops, 3 missionary bishops, 1,504 ministers, and 73,000 communicants. In the first half of this century, therefore, it has about quintupled its churches, more than quintupled its ministers, and nearly so its members.

The Congregational branch of the one true church of Christ comes next. In 1850, it had 1,971 churches, most of them in the New England States, and the rest in the North-western States, 1,687 ministers, and 197,196 communicants.

The Baptist branch of the church of Christ is third in order of time. Due reference is made to the opposition and persecution this church suffered in consequence of the intolerance of the civil governments of Massachusetts and Virgina. They never experience this in Pennsylvania or New Jersey. In 1791, there were 1,150 churches, 891 ministers, and 65,345 members; in 1850, the regular Baptists are put down at 10,441 churches, 6,049 ordained ministers, and 754,652 members. Add to these the Seventh-day, Free-Will, Six Principle and Campbellite Baptists, and Dr. B. reaches an aggregate of 13,455 churches, 8,018 ministers, and 48,867 members. One hundred years ago, there were only 58 Baptist churches in the whole of what is now the United States. In the last sixty years, exclaims Dr. Baird with astonishment, the Baptists have increased their churches ten-fold, their members more than thirteen-fold, and their ministers nine-fold.

The Presbyterians come next. The first ministers came from Scotland and the north of Ireland. A presbytery was formed in 1705, consisting of seven ministers, and in 1800 there were 500 churches, 300 ministers, and 40,000 communicants. The division took place in 1838. The Old School branch has 23 synods, 134 presbyteries, 2,027 ministers, 618 licentitates and students, 2,675 churches, and 210,306 members; the New School branch, 21 synods, 104 presbyteries, 1,489 ministers, 204 students in theological seminaries and licentiates, 1,579 churches, and 140,060 members. Together, they number 44 synods, 238 bresbyteries, 3,516 ministers, 822 licentiates and students, 4,254 churches, and 350,366 communicants. The increase has been in its ministers nearly twelve-fold, churches eight and a half, and nearly nine-fold in its members. Add the smaller branches, none of which amounted to much in 1800, and the Presbyterian family of churches, all but the Dutch Reformed speaking the English language, and having a British origin, will rise to 4 general assemblies, 65 synods, 360 presbyteries, 4,578 ministers, 1,014 students and licentitates, 5,672 churches, and 490,259 communicants.

The last, in order of time, of the larger religious bodies that arose, was the Methodist Episcopal church. It was organized in 1784, and in 1800 had 40,000 members. Its subsequent increase has been immense. It now spreads all over the country, and, says Dr. B., its conferences, districts, and circuits, cover the whole land. The division took place in 1844. In 1850, the northern branch, called the "Methodist Episcopal church," had 4,004 ministers, and 666,310 members; the Methodist Episcopal church South, 1,642 ministers, and 504,520 members—making a total of 5,646 ministers, and 1,170,830 members. By adding smaller bodies, there will be found to be at least 6,000 regular preachers, more than 8,000 local preachers, and upwards of a million and a quarter of members. There is reason to believe, says Dr. B., that the membership of this communion has increased more than six times as fast as the population of the country has done since 1784.

In addition to the above large denominations, which speak the English language, there is a group of churches which, with few exceptions, use the German language. They are ten in number, and consists of the German branches of the Protestant church in America, almost all of them offshoots of German bodies in Europe. They have about 1,827 regular ministers, 550 local preachers, 5,356 congregations, and 333,000 members. To these, not before computed, must be added 500 congregations or "meetings" of the Society of Friends, of whom 300 are supposed to be Orthodox, and 200 Hicksite. This last body does not increase preceptibly.

The result of Dr. B's investigations is, that there were last year in the United States, in the several branches of the Protestant church that may be termed evangelical, no less than 23,614 ministers, (besides some 9,000 Methodist local preachers,) 58,304 congregations, and 3,292,222 communicants.

The non-evangelical churches are the Roman Catholics, with 4 archbishops, 1,073 churches, 1,081 priests, and a population of 1,500,000; the Unitarians, with about 300 churches, 250 ministers, and 30,000 members; the *Christ*ians, with 1,500 churches, as many ministers, and 150,000 members; the Universalists, with 540 preachers, 550 churches, and 875 societies; the Swedenborgians, with about 40 small churches, 35 minsters, and 10,000 members, and some German Lutheran churches that are Socinian, as are portions of the Friends. Of all these non-evangelical bodies, says Dr. B., the Roman Catholics and Unitarians are alone of much account. "The former have their perfect organization and consummate tact; the latter their cultivated intellect, minds and taste."

A FAITHFUL MOTHER.

The following anecdote strikingly illustrates the strength of maternal love, the beauty of faith, and the efficacy of prayer. It was related by a blind preacher:—

"When I was about eighteen years of age there was a dancing party in Middleborough, Massachusetts, which I was solicited to attend and act, as usual, in the capacity of musician. I was fond of such scenes of amusement then, and I readily assented to the request. I had a pious mother; and she earnestly remonstrated against my going. But, at length, when all her expostulations and earnest entreaties failed in changing my purpose, she said: 'Well, my son, I shall not forbid your going, but remember, all the time I shall spend in praying for you at home.' I went to the ball, but I was like a stricken deer carrying an arrow in my side. I began to play; but my convictions sank deeper and deeper, and I felt miserable indeed. I thought I would have given worlds to have been rid of that mother's prayers. At one time I felt so wretched and so overwhelmed with my feelings, that I ceased playing and dropped my musical instrument from my hand. There was another young person there who refused to dance; and, as I learned, her refusal was owing to feelings similar to my own, and perhaps they arose from a similar cause. My mother's prayers were not lost. That was the last ball I ever attended, except one, where I was invited to play again, but went and prayed, and preached instead, till the place was converted into a Bochim, a place of weeping. The convictions of that night never wholly left me, till they left me at the feet of Christ, and several of my young companions in sin ere long were led to believe the gospel also." [Clements.

CONSOLING IDEA OF DEATH.

"I congratulate you and myself," wrote John Foster to a friend, "that life is passing fast away. What a superlatively grand and consoling idea is that of death! Without this radiant idea, this delightful morning star, indicating that the luminary of eternity is going to rise, life would to my view darken into midnight melancholy. O! the expectation of living here, and living thus, always, would be indeed a prospect of overwhelming despair. But thanks to that decree that dooms us to die—thanks to that gospel which opens the visions of an endless life and thanks—above all, to that Saviour friend who has promised to conduct all the faithful through the sacred trance of death into scenes of everlasting delight."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 20, 1851.

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

This is, or ought to be, the daily prayer of Christians. Those who are sensible of the plague of their own hearts, will pray "after this manner." Feeling themselves too weak, by reason of indwelling sin, to resist the corrupting influences of the world without, they wish to be exposed to them as little as may be consistent with discharging their whole duty to God. Were it not a part of their duty to go out on missions of love to their fallen fellow-creatures, it would be their choice to seclude themselves from the world, that they might be out of the way of temptation, and live in uninterrupted communion with the Father, and with his son Jesus Christ.

As it may be said, that upon this principle there are very few Christians to be found, we must frankly admit, that the great mass of those who call themselves by the name of the Master, appear to rush into temptation as if no danger were to be apprehended. They act as if they had never discovered the depravity of their hearts. They seem not to be sensible of their own weakness. Without the least distrust of themselves, they plunge into an element, whose strong and ever-flowing current is in a direction contrary to heaven, and fancy that they have sufficient strength to resist its power. They accept situations, and undertake missions, to which God never called them, yet imagine that his grace will be sufficient to secure them from the temptations attendant on such situations and missions, the same as if he had called them. At least, they say that this is their belief. A better insight of their hearts, however, would show that their real persuasion was of a different kind. They really depend, not upon the sufficiency of divine grace, but upon their own deep, and (as they suppose) firmly rooted love of virtue; and they go into the way of temptation, in the presumption that they are proof against its power.

He who prays, Lead me not into temptation, and then, without any particular intimation of its being duty to do so, deliberately goes into the way of it, is guilty of coming before God with a lie in his mouth. By his prayer he declares that he is very anxious to keep out of the way of temptation, lest he should be overcome. By his action he contradicts his prayer, and confesses that he told the Almighty a lie. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked."

We will suppose a case. There is a certain region of country, where the prospect for accumulating wealth is very flattering indeed. It possesses a highly fertile soil; or it presents some very valuable water privileges; or it affords great advantages for mercantile operations; or it contains mines of the precious metals, which are accessible to all. Or perhaps the country may combine all of these advantages together. But alas! it is a country filled and peopled with the Lord's enemies. "The men of it are wicked, and sinners before the Lord exceedingly." The state of society is just what must vex the soul of a righteous man from day to day. A poor professor of religion, whose hard toil barely suffices to procure the necessaries of life, has his attention turned towards that country, and imagines that, if he were once settled there, he should soon be able to place himself above want. He deliberates, resolves, and goes to find a home there.

Many a time had this professor of religion prayed, (in words at least,) Lord, lead me not into temptation. Now, however, without pretending to any providential call to the undertaking, more than what arises from his impoverished condition, and the duty of providing for his own household, he deliberately proceeds to plant himself down among those who make a mock at sin, and who will annoy and vex him, if he should attempt to uphold the cause of righteousness, even though they should do nothing worse. He cannot help seeing that this will operate as a strong temptation to hide his religion. Yet he imagines that he shall stand fast, and never become ashamed of Christ. Upon what power, however, does he depend to keep him steadfast? He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool, the Scripture says. He professes, therefore, to depend upon the power of the grace of God. But what pledge has he, that God will supply him with grace at the time when he shall need it? For God never gives grace, before it is needed. Now we admit, that if he were going on an enterprise to which God had called him, he might confidently calculate upon the grace of God to secure him against such temptations as might be attendant on it. But if it is an enterprise which God has not prompted, it is sheer presumption to calculate upon his grace.

What, then, is the evidence that God has called to this enterprise? Simply, that the brother is poor, and that it is a Scriptural duty for every man to provide for his own. Nothing beyond this is pretended. But, on the other hand, it may be questioned whether God has not called him to suffer poverty. People are ready enough to imagine, that they are called to labor after wealth; and where inclination is so strongly enlisted as it generally is, it is not very difficult for them to imagine that it is a divine call. But who is willing to believe himself called to endure poverty? Yet, if we mistake not, God does call some of his people to this very thing. It is their appropriate condition; the one in which they can, by the virtues which it brings into exercise, best glorify his name. And we believe that God always calls his people to this condition, where their attempt to escape from it would invoke them in sin.

Now in the case supposed, it is clear that the brother's attempt to escape poverty does involve him in the necessity of taking up his abode with the ungodly. Is this right? Or is it wrong? There was a man of old time—a man after God's own heart—whose piety prompted him to say, Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with bloody men. Ps. 26: 9. To be compelled to pass his days among the enemies of God, was something too revolting for him to endure. And why should not every Christian choose to go down to the very lowest depths of poverty, rather than have his soul vexed from day to day with the blasphemies, the filthy jests, and abominable practices of those who have no fear of God before their eyes. In our opinion, it is not only his duty to make this choice, but so much his duty, that it is a sin not to make it. And if, instead of making it, he deliberately thrusts himself forward into such a state of society, removing himself from fellowship with the saints, the ministry of the gospel, and all those helps which God has ordained for the furtherance of his people in piety, under the impression that he can do without them by making an extra draft upon divine grace, he will soon find, in regard to that grace, that "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." He will find, that instead of leaning on all-sufficient grace, he was depending a little too much upon himself; and though in his new situation, he is not absolutely compelled to "follow a multitude to do evil," there is a very strong probability that temptation will overpower him, and that he will ever be left without a heart to ask for preserving grace.

That there are instances, in which Christians are called to abandon home, and church privileges, and the society of fellow Christians, and go into the enemy's territory, we do not question. But they are not cases like the one supposed. They are not cases, in which the accumulation of property is the object. They are cases, in which the grand and all-absorbing motive is to do good. The enterprise takes its rise in a desire, not for self-aggrandizement, but for the welfare of mankind. It is the enterprise of a soul ready to part with his property, rather than to accumulate more, and to make all other sacrifices which may tend to the salvation of his fellow-creatures. Whenever it is a Christian's duty to undertake such an enterprise, the leadings of divine providence will make it more or less plain to him, so that he can go in a persuasion, amounting to confidence, that God is calling him. Under such circumstances, he may safely calculate upon those additional supplies of grace which will suffice to sustain him in the hour of trial, and against all temptations.

Cases like that we have supposed are more or less common. Professors of religion do exile themselves from places where God's people dwell, where there are church privileges for themselves and their families, and where means and helps may be enjoyed for their growth in grace, to pitch their tents where they know that they must be, to a greater or less extent, deprived of these advantages. In some instances they go to places but few degrees removed from Sodom and Gomorrah in wickedness. To increase their substance, is all the object they have in view. They follow in the steps of Lot, who chose for himself the plain of Jordan, because it was everywhere well watered like the garden of the Lord. We think that Lot did not gain much by the speculation. We are told to remember Lot's wife; and perhaps it would do some people good to remember Lot himself. If we tell them the danger they are incurring by such a course, that perhaps they will finally apostatize, and "crucify the Son of God afresh, they are ready to say, each of them, "Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?" But alas! when people pray, Lord, lead us not into temptation, and then deliberately rush into the way of it, we cannot help foreboding disastrous consequences.

We were intending to illustrate our point with some other examples, of very common occurrence; but having extended our remarks already to considerable length, we must forbear for the present. Perhaps we may resume the subject at another time. T. B. B.

ALFRED ACADEMY.

The friends and patrons of this Seminary will unquestionably be happy to learn, that the present term has been one of great prosperity. Teachers and students have enjoyed almost uninterrupted good health—a blessing scarcely to have been expected among so large a number as have been in attendance for the term now about to close. The influence exerted by an unusually large number of religious young men and young women in attendance, has been highly salutary. The moral deportment of the students has therefore been generally correct; order has been easily maintained; and the proficiency in studies has, on the whole, surpassed even former terms.

It is also gratifying to notice the increasing calls upon this Seminary for teachers of common schools. No other school in this State sends out as large a number as this.

The next term commences on Tuesday, the 9th of December. Students at the Alfred station, on the day previous to the opening of the term, or any day during the same week, will be taken up to the Seminary free of charge.

N. V. HULL,
Pres. of the Board of Trustees.

November 10, 1851.

GLIMPSES OF DOMESTIC LIFE IN CHINA.

NUMBER ELEVEN.

SHANGHAE, May, 1851.

"We have nothing which shows one the kitchen, sitting-room, and dormitory life of the Chinese." A very just complaint, doubtless, but one not so easily remedied as many which might seem more formidable at the outset. The question is, What shall be described under the above-written nomenclature. Like the Chinese fire-sides, which were the subject of my last letter, so the idea of these sitting-rooms may best be imparted perhaps by telling you what they are not. The endless contrariety of Chinese usage is so proverbial, that one needs hardly be told, with respect to anything national, that it is best described by its opposites, or perhaps more properly by its negatives. If otherwise portrayed, the very correctness of the picture might mislead you, and that, too, from causes which are in themselves irremediable. I find a remark so much in point, in the late work on "The Middle Kingdom," that I will transcribe it here.

"It is a sensible remark of DeGuignes, that 'the habit we fall into of conceiving of things according to the words which express them, often leads us into error when reading the relations of travelers. Such writers have seen objects altogether new, but they are compelled, when describing them, to employ equivalent terms in their own language in order to be understood; while these same terms tend to deceive the reader, who imagines that he sees such palaces, colonnades, peristyles, &c., under these designations, as he has been used to, when, in fact, they are quite another thing.' The same observation is true of other things than architecture, and of other nations than the Chinese, and this confusion of terms and meanings proves a fruitful source of error in regard to an accurate knowledge of foreign notions, and a just perception of their conditions. For instance, the terms, a court of justice, a common school, politeness, learning, navy, houses, &c., as well as the names of things, like razor, shoe, cap, bed, pencil, paper, &c., are inapplicable to the same things in England and China; while it is plainly impossible to coin a new word in English to describe the Chinese article, and equally inexpedient to introduce the native term. If, for example, the utensil used by the Chinese to shave with, should be picked up in Portsmouth by some one who had never seen or heard of it, he would be as likely to call it an oyster knife, or a wedge, as a razor; while the use to which it is applied must of course give it that name, and would, if it were still more unlike the western article. So with other things, since a person can only judge of what he hears or reads by what he knows, it is desirable that when he hears or reads western names applied to their equivalent in eastern countries, the function of a different civilization, habits, and notions, should form an element in the opinion he forms. These remarks are peculiarly applicable to the domestic life of the Chinese, to their houses, diet, dress, and customs in social intercourse; and although careful descriptions may go a good way in conveying just ideas, it cannot be hoped they will do what a single look would instantly accomplish."

And thus you are prepared to hear descriptions without understanding them, or to understand with a great limitation those which you do hear. What you see fit to westernize under the appellation sitting-room, is most likely that which is known here as the family hall, and by foreigners denominated the "Ancestral Hall." The best and most minute description which I have yet seen of this room, is from Lieut. Forbes' "Five Years in China," and is as follows:—

"In the center of the house is a large Hall, commonly called the 'Hall of Ancestors,' common to all the family. In it are arrayed the household gods, (among which are invariably the Taouist Divinities presiding over hearing and sight,) and relics, such as an ancestral picture, in the most conspicuous part of the wall, on each side of which is an aphorism of Confucius, and in front a table* bearing incense burners, and fruits, as offerings, and ornamental vases, &c. The hall also serves as a dry-room for their seeds, and a depository for the smaller implements of husbandry. It is the scene of their entertainments, many of their festivals, and the adoration of their gods, but never used for culinary purposes. This forms the nucleus of the building. Around it are the dwelling-rooms of the different divisions of the tribe, and as often as a marriage takes place, an apartment is added for the newly wedded couple, and in time the whole presents rather the appearance of a village, than a single dwelling-house."

This description, although designed for a country farm-house, answers almost equally well, for the dwellers within the city. If not required as a "dry room for seeds," it is no less available as the depository of those indispensables, which are eminently incident to the wants of a city life, as vegetables, fruits, cakes, &c.; and if the circumscribed boundaries of their territory do not admit of adding room to room, they have at least the alternative of packing themselves the more closely within the limits allowed; and well do they improve it, until one might fancy the very surfeit of members a signal for the entrance of the greedy devourer of all flesh, who comes, no unexpected guest, and bears away his slain, not always to join the pale nations under ground, but to sleep their last sleep beneath the blessed eye of heaven, sharing too late that sunshine and free air, which might have lengthened out, but cannot restore their life. As a proof of the great mortality incident to these crowded homes, I may mention the case of a family, who at the time of our arrival here numbered more than thirty souls, but who within those four years have numbered ten deaths, and these from no epidemical disease, and, as they assure us, from no strange coincidence of events, but according to the looked-for course of nature here.

But to return to the Hall, on which, for the time being, you will allow me to confer the sobriquet of Parlor, merely for the sake of proving to you that it is not a Parlor. That very name is suggestive of "carpets and sofas, and admiring guests"—articles, by the way, which, if known at all in China, must be numbered among those that require a new name to individualize them, or change their identity in order to meet your western notions of things. As to the carpets, these floors, of tile or earth, are poorly adapted to their anti-aquatic natures, to say nothing of the quite insufferable shoes and boots, whose ingress and egress would be altogether unavoidable. Then the long, wide couch, which in the better houses only is ever seen, with its low stand in the center, has small claim to the name of the sofa, although one might find himself thinking of those lines from "The Task," in which a something analogous to the sofa is described under that cognomen:—

> "One elbow at each end,
> And in the midst an elbow it received,
> United yet divided, twain at once."

While the endless monotony of chairs in pairs, alternating with their little tables or tea-stands, ranged up and down the opposite sides of the room, facing each other, leave as little chance for the admission of "admiring guests," as would the display of stools and writing desks, book-shelves, and hat-pegs, in the ever-memorable temples of science, in my native land, to the preferment of the above-mentioned title upon the weary juveniles, who have already gazed their thousand and one times at the dull, unvarying scene. Not that there is never a variety in this uniformity. The pictures, done in crayons or water-colors, are always narrow and long, and hang in pairs against the wall; but they have their comparative excellence as well as with us. The vases, the altars, the shrines, and the candlesticks, are not alike costly; but there is a sameness of outline, a square, massive appearance, with the tendency to heavy and useless ornament, which everywhere prevails. The tables and chairs are sometimes adorned with richly embroidered damask hangings, (especially at their yearly festivals,)

> "With here and there a tuft of crimson yarn,
> Or scarlet crewel in the cushion fixed,
> If cushion might be called what harder seemed
> Than the firm oak of which the frame was formed."

Substituting of course the eastern commodities of silk and sandal wood, or some unnameable wood, for crewel and oak, and these same chairs, as well as the sofa, make one wish for a chronological dissertation on the "birth-days of invention," that we may see how Cowper's poetical periods correspond therewith. Certain it is, that chairs still remain stationary at the point mentioned by Davis, and his quotation from the same author is as appropriate now as it was then.

> "But restless was the chair, the back erect,
> Distrest the weary loins, that felt no ease,
> (The slippery seat betrayed the sliding part
> That prest it,) and the feet hung dangling down,
> Anxious in vain to reach the distant floor."

And this quaint, cold, sombre room, is that which must supply all your ideas of a Chinese parlor. Your western vocabularies will be of little avail to you in furnishing a definition of this term. Webster says, "It is primarily the apartment in a nunnery where nuns are permitted to meet and converse with each other; hence, with us, the room in a house which the family usually occupy when they have no company, as distinguished from a drawing-room intended for the reception of company, or from a dining-room where a distinct apartment is allotted for the purpose. In most houses, the parlor is also the dining-room." Now, however nearly the seclusion of Chinese females may approximate to that of the nunnery, certain it is that this room cannot be said to be their place of meeting. Neither is it the room the family usually occupy when they have no company, the inner apartments being their appointed and almost constant place of resort, while husbands and fathers, busied with their daily avocations, leave such social gatherings too few and far between to warrant the lexicographer in drawing his definition from such a source. Neither can we say that in most cases this is the dining-room, if we except those feasts made for invited guests, at which the females of the household are not "permitted to meet," or those still more important festivals, prepared for the dead, at which the living only assemble to serve the entertainment, pay homage to its invisible guests, or possess themselves of the refuse substantials which remain when their feast is done.

Such is the sitting-room, and such are the details of its interior. Yet one remains to be mentioned, for here may sometimes rest, for months, or even years, the corpse of the patriarchal head of the family, no other member being entitled to this high privilege. Were you here now, I would take you to a house I often visit, where your eye would first rest upon the curtained corner that contains the venerable dead. His portrait and tablet are suspended above the table at his head; (the feet, as a matter of course, being, according to Chinese contrarieties, placed against the wall,) and there incense is burnt, and prayers are offered, and worship preferred, until the heart is sickened by all these sights and sounds. What a place for social gatherings, and how thrilling in its very hideousness is such a scene! I should not wonder if the whole reminded you of Mrs. Hemans' lines on the "Sword of the Tomb."

> "He crossed at length, with a deep-drawn breath,
> The threshold floor of the Hall of Death,
> And looked on the pale mysterious fire,
> Which gleamed from the urn of his warrior sire,
> With a strange and solemn light.
>
> Then darkly the words of the boding strain,
> Like an omen rose on his soul again,
> 'Soft be thy steps through the silence deep,
> And move not the urn in the house of sleep,
> For the viewless have fearful might.'"

L. M. C.

---

* A high table or altar.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Romanism in Spain, &c.

GLASGOW, October 31st, 1851.

There has been published an Allocution by the Pope, dated the fifth of last month, in which the leading point is the re-establishment of ecclesiastical affairs in Spain, very much according to the old plan. "Every other worship" than the Romish, "is altogether removed and interdicted.' All instruction in public and private schools "shall plainly agree" therewith; and magistrates shall endeavor to promote it. The Queen and Government of that country are to give their aid against those who corrupt the faithful, and spread "perverse books." All "matters which pertain to ecclesiastical things and persons" are to be administered "in entire accordance with the canonical and existing discipline of the church." Care has avowedly been taken "to assert and maintain the right which the church has of acquiring and possessing all kinds of property, whether in buildings or land;" and that which remains unsold of what was formerly appropriated by the State is to be restored. Referring also to Tuscany, the Pope states that certain arrangments have been made with the Grand Duke, of which the most important seems to be that the Bishops, every one in his diocese, "may exercise censorship over writings and works which treat of things relating to religion." A work rejected by one bishop cannot even be approved of by another, and there is no appeal from the decision of a bishop in such a case. This is one of the ways by which a wily power not only excludes heresy, but also maintains the unity of which Rome boasts—although even with such aids, as is well known, often so boasts without ground. By such devices on the part of Popes, Cardinals, and Councils, sustained by the arms of Kings and Queens, has the uniformity in past ages been maintained, which we are sometimes called to contemplate as evidence of the change of the Sabbath. By such means any monstrosity might be easily established as good and right.

Rome, however, while thus jealously guarding against the introduction of whatever might tend to enlighten, also claims to have evidence of her apostolicity, in the miracles alledged to be performed in past and present times—as the liquifaction of the blood of St. Januarius and the winking picture. For such things Dr. Newman, a pervert from the Church of England, claims a faith equally as for the Scripture miracles. The Bishop of Norwich lately expressed "disgust" at this, and a couple of letters has in consequence passed between him and Newman, the result of which, if I understand aright, is that the Papist not only feels himself called upon to believe such silly fictions as those I have alluded to, because they have been attested by men, but considers that the Scripture miracles make these more probable. All this is done with great show of logical and metaphysical skill, yet surely the argument exhibits a glaring non sequitur. That the Saviour gave sight to the blind, or that through His apostle the ancle-bones of the lame received strength, and that thus a mighty blessing was conferred upon men, is surely something very different from the puerilities with which Rome amuses her victims. We are far from seeking that God's arm should be shortened, and we know of no evidence in Scripture from which we would be warranted to conclude that God may not again thus show forth the Saviour's power and grace. On the contrary, we expect that in a coming time of greater purity on the part of His church, and of more abounding iniquity in the earth, this will be vouchsafed. But before his return to occupy the throne of His glory, we expect that "there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." (Matt. 24: 24.) If we have the prophets of the Lord to smite the earth with plagues, we may have the magicians, who, like Jannes, and Jambres, are able by their enchantments, in some cases even to do likewise. Miracles alone are not necessarily an evidence of truth. A real wonder may be wrought for the confirmation of a falsehood. Rome apes miracles; but we look for the Man of Sin still, "even him whose coming is after the working of Satan [energized by him] with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved." (2 Thes. 2: 9, 10.) This antichrist we expect to have his seat in the east, not in the west, and not until a new division shall give ten kingdoms (corresponding with the toes of Daniel's image) in the eastern and western divisions of the Roman empire, five in each.

Rome has renewed its old oppression of the Jews. The former regulations have been revived. They cannot travel without a commission from the Inquisition, nor stop in any town without a fresh commission. And this while Rome stimulates her votaries in every land to clamor for facilities to propagate her faith and give her power. Here, it is not easy to perceive what good effect has resulted from the Bill which cost our Government such an effort to pass. If their dignitaries do not personally assume "territorial titles," they administer no rebuke to those by whom they are accorded. The zeal displayed meanwhile by the Papists in this country is not a little remarkable. They have at present a newspaper in Glasgow, which bears the singularly inappropriate title of the Free Press, seeing that it distinctly avows itself "the willing slave of the priests; and feel happier under their severest admonitions than the veriest independent who ever gloried in the impious right of private judgment." This is indeed the sort of free press which Rome loves and demands—it is the means by which her traditions are kept in the place of God's commandments. J. A. BEGG.

REVIVAL AT ROCKVILLE, R. I.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have the cheering intelligence to communicate to you, that we are enjoying a precious revival of religion at Rockville. Our religious meetings became more solemn and more numerously attended than usual, about the middle of September, and were finally held every evening. I continued to conduct them for about two weeks, when my health became such from protracted effort, as to render it impracticable for me to continue them alone. Eld. Lucius Crandall was therefore invited to come and conduct the meetings. His timely aid and faithful preaching have, through the blessing of God, resulted in great good among us. Our church has very generally been brought into a revived and active state, several who had wandered from Christ have been reclaimed, and thirty have been buried with Christ in baptism, nearly all of whom have united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in this place. Six of the number are converts to the Sabbath of the Bible. C. M. LEWIS.

PEACE PETITIONS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Those who are familiar with the proceedings of the late Peace Congress in London, must have observed with how much satisfaction the more thoughtful friends of peace there received the report of efforts made in this country to bring before our rulers the great practical questions of superseding the alledged necessity of war by peaceful substitutes, and our success in securing their favorable attention especially to our plan of STIPULATED ARBITRATION, or a definite provision by treaty for the settlement of all future misunderstandings between ourselves and other nations by reference to umpires mutually chosen.

Here is the simple and feasible substitute for war which we wish to press anew on the attention of Congress and the Executive. Not a few anticipate, sooner or later, the establishment of a CONGRESS OF NATIONS as the grand ultimatum of a thoroughly Christian civilization applied to the intercourse of nations; but Stipulated Arbitration is all we can secure for a long time to come, and will doubtless prove, if adopted in good faith, equally effective in preventing actual wars, and eminently useful in preparing the way for some form of an international tribunal, analagous to what has been provided for themselves by our confederacy of thirty-one Sovereign States. The war system is upheld as an Arbiter of Justice between Nations for the accomplishment of objects clearly important; and they will of course retain and use it until its supposed necessity is in fact obviated by other means that shall peacefully secure its legitimate purposes far better than the sword ever did or ever can. Such a substitute is Stipulated Arbitration, or a provision in treaties for the settlement of all international disputes by reference to umpires.

Now, we wish to urge this Christian measures on the attention of our rulers by petitions. We can expect them to take hold of it in earnest only in response to a strong, general demand from the people; and hence we would request the friends of peace through the whole country, without distinction of sect or party, to unite with us in petitioning both Houses of Congress.

Permit us, then, Friends of Peace, to solicit your prompt and zealous co-operation for this purpose. Having no agents to send forth on this errand, we are obliged, as indeed we choose, to depend almost entirely on your spontaneous efforts in obtaining the requisite number of petitions. If you will just copy the subjoined form of petition, and either yourselves solicit, or get somebody else to procure signatures to it in your place, it can all be done up at once with ease and success. There should be two petitions, one for each House of Congress, both subscribed by every petitioner, and then forwarded, the one for the Senate to a Senator from your own State, and the other for the House to the Representative from your District, with a letter requesting his prompt and special attention to the subject, unless you choose for particular reasons to entrust it to some other member of the Senate or the House.

On behalf of the American Peace Society, and by order of its Executive Committee.

GEO. C. BECKWITH, Cor. Sec.

BOSTON November 3, 1851.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of , in the State of , deploring the great mainfold evils of war, and believing it possible to supersede its alledged necessity, as an Arbiter of Justice among Nations, by the timely adoption of wise and feasible substitutes, respectfully petition your Honorable Bodies to take such action as you may deem best for this most desirable end, by "securing in our treaties with other nations, a provision for referring to the decision of umpires all misunderstanding that cannot be satisfactorily adjusted by amicable negotiation."

THE METHODIST LAWSUIT.—The great suit between the Northern and Southern Divisions of the Methodist Church, to determine whether the extensive property of the denomination in Book Concerns, &c., shall be divided between them, or continue in the hands of the Northern Methodists, was last week decided by Judge Nelson in the United States Circuit Court in New York. After a lengthy argument on the whole case, he says:—

"Upon the whole, our conclusion is that the complainants are entitled to their share of the produce of the Book Concern, and a decree will be ordered accordingly. Whether the funds shall be administered by an application of the produce, pro rata, or by an apportionment of the capital, are questions reserved until the settlement of the decree."

CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.—Abraham G. Thompson, who died in New York a short time ago, bequeathed a large part of his property to charitable institutions. After making bequests to several relatives and friends, Mr. T. directed that the residue of his property should be divided into 32 equal parts, directing his executors to give 6 parts to the American Bible Society; 5 to the American Tract Society; 5 to the Seamen's Friend Society; 4 to the New York Colonization Society; 4 to the American Home Missionary Society; 3 to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; 3 to the Central Presbyterian Education Society; 1 to the Deaf and Dumb Institution; 1 to the Institution of the Blind. The following are the sums which it is estimated that the several institutions will receive:—

American Bible Society	$65,064
American Tract Society	54,220
American Seamen's Friend Society	54,220
American Colonization Society	43,376
American Home Mission Society	43,376
Central American Education Society	32,532
Amer. Board Com. For. Missions	32,532
Institution for the Deaf and Dumb	10,844
Institution for the Blind	10,844
	$347,008

RELIGIOUS DESTITUTION IN NEW YORK.—The meeting held in New York last week to devise some plan for supplying with preaching those who do not now attend the regular places of worship, adopted a series of resolutions, the following two of which give an idea of what is proposed:—

Resolved, That in view of the multitudes of inhabitants of this city who habitually neglect the ordinances of public worship in our Churches, it is the duty of the Ministers of the Gospel, and of the Christian laity, to take measures to have the Gospel preached in our streets, squares, and places of chief resort, where it will be most likely to arrest the attention of those who now habitually neglect it.

Resolved, That the Battery, Park, Chatham-square, Franklin-square, Tompkins-square, Grand-street Ferry, Madison-square, Astor-place, Washington-square, Hudson-square, foot of Canal-street, and other places to be hereafter selected, as experience may suggest, be recommended as proper places for such services.

A Committee was appointed to supervise these measures, and to report at general meetings to be held on the first Monday of March, June, September, and December.

THE SCHOOL AND CHURCH AT SHILOH, N. J.—A business letter, dated Shiloh, N. J., Nov. 12, says:—

"The school here is prospering as well as its best friends could anticipate. We have fifty students' names on our list for this term, and expect more the coming term.

"Eld. Jones has commenced a series of evening meetings in this place; and pray, we entreat of you, that God's power and grace may be manifested here in the revival of the Church, and conversion of sinners."

GIFT TO AN EDITOR.—The following paragraph is sure to go the rounds; because the reading of it suggests to the friends of every editor whether it would not be a good idea for them "go and do likewise:"—

Rev. Thomas Whittemore, editor of the 'Trumpet,' and President of the Vermont and Massachusetts Railroad, was yesterday presented with an elegant Editorial Chair. The framework is solid iron. It sets upon steel springs and is lined with rich purple plush. Upon the back is a neatly executed painting of the Hoosac Tunnel, completed, and a train of cars about to enter from the East. In the distance is a beautiful sketch representing a body of water, with steamers and pleasure boats plying to and fro, and up-lands and hills rising in the background. The gift is from the American Chair Company, Troy.

CHRISTIAN EFFORTS IN JERUSALEM.—About nine years ago, Rev. C. F. Ewald, missionary of the London Jews' Society, commenced his labors at Jerusalem, preaching Christ in the synagogues of the Jews. On his arrival he found four adult Jews who had embraced Christianity, with whom he met for prayer. One and another were added, till the place became too strait for them, and now a Christian church and congregation of both Jews and Gentiles, the wall of partition broken down, assemble on Mount Zion, where services are conducted in English, Hebrew, and German. There are over forty converted Israelites among them.

BAPTIST MISSION FUNDS.—The Baptist Morning Magazine for November states that the amount of receipts for the six months of the financial year, ending 31st of September, appears to be alarmingly deficient—only about $23,671! If the next six months should show no better returns, there would only be an aggregate of about $47,342 for the twelve months, when $125,000 is the sum fixed for the expenditures of the present year!

REVIVAL IN A COLLEGE.—A correspondent of the Herald of Christian Liberty says that a revival has recently been enjoyed in the College at Oberlin, Ohio. For two weeks, President Finney preached once every day. The result has been a great quickening of professors of religion, and the conversion of quite a number of students.

MR. FINNEY IN NEW-YORK.—Rev. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin, Ohio, is holding a series of evening meetings at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, which are spoken of as very interesting.

Rev. Mr. Heinen, a Roman Catholic priest, appeared before the Presbytery of New York, at its last session, and after a formal renunciation of Popery, and assenting to the confession of faith held by the Presbyterians, he was received under the care of the Presbytery.

European News.

The steamer Cambria, with three days later news from Europe, arrived at Boston on the 14th inst.

The English people were paying marked respect to Kossuth. He made a public visit to the City of London on the 30th, and was received with great honor and much enthusiasm. He will leave Southampton with his family and suite, for the United States, on the 13th inst., in the steamship Washington.

The London Times continues its attacks on Kossuth, and has to some extent affected public opinion, among the more cautions classes, and those who are jealous of his reputation.

Lady Franklin has made a very urgent appeal to the Admiralty to send out a powerful steamer to explore the passage which Capt. Penny thinks exists, and this appeal is strongly sustained by some of the Press and many persons of influence.

Three important subjects of commercial legislation promise to engage the attention of Parliament in the next session, viz: Custom-House Reform; the Steam Mail Contract System; and the Law of Partnerships.

The chief item of news from India is that the Governor-General had determined to seize upon a portion of the territories of Dost Mahomed, of Cabul, (the valley of the Dowe) it being well situated for establishing a post to watch and over-awe the Appecad Affracedies around Pechaur. The annexation was considered likely to lead eventually to disastrous consequences.

Fire and Loss of Life in Philadelphia.

On the 12th inst., an extensive Cotton Factory, near Fairmount, Philadelphia, was burnt and three persons perished in the flames while endeavoring to escape.

The building or factory was four stories high and very large. When the fire was discovered, about 6 P. M., there were one hundred persons engaged at work in various parts of it. The fire originated near the common stair-way, and almost as soon as discovered closed up the only egress from the upper part of the building, except through the windows. And even this some endeavored to use at the risk of their lives. As soon as it was observed that the whole upper part of the building was cut off by fire and smoke, the consternation of those outside was almost as intense as of those within. The shout of human anguish from within and without arose above the roar of the destructive element, and the scene was most horrifying—old men and young boys and girls appearing at the upper windows, fifty feet from the ground, preparing to hazard the desperate chance of throwing themselves headlong down—while those below stood in stupified horror, unable to devise any means of general safety. Some jumped headlong, careless of what occurred, so they escaped the terrible fate of a fiery death, and the attempts to catch them by those below were almost as dangerous and desperate as their own. Some few, however, succeeded and made the fearful descent without injury or hurt—others received very great if not fatal injuries. One man, John Browning, leaped from the fourth story and broke both legs and both arms. His daughter, who was employed with him, rushed down stairs and met a more awful fate. Her remains were taken from the burning pile a charred, shapeless mass, almost reduced to a cinder. The corpse of a man, supposed to be an Englishman named Crosley, was taken out at the same time. During the most appalling part of the scene four boys escaped from the fourth story by sliding down a rope. The fire raged all night, and all that time the confusion and alarm, and shrieking, and universal destruction transcended all description.

The estimated loss of the building and its contents is about $35,000, but as it was owned by four or five persons, and the goods and machinery were for the most part insured, the mere pecuniary loss is very trifling compared to the disastrous loss of life and the torture of such a death by so many human beings.

The Holy Places Desolate.

After a peace of thirty-three years duration, the Wahhabis have suddenly fallen upon and pillaged the holy places of Mecca and Medina. The garrison of the latter place, having attempted to defend it, were massacred to a man; and a large number of citizens perished with them. The mosques were destroyed, all their contents of any value appropriated, the cities completely sacked, and numbers of women and children carried off to the desert. The courier who carried the intelligence to Constantinople, described the condition of the plundered towns as distressing in the extreme.

The Wahhabis, it will be remembered, inhabit the interior and highland portion of the Arabian peninsula. Before their repression in 1818, they could bring into the field 200,000 warriors. They believe, as true Mussulmans, in one God, and Mahomet as his prophet; but are peculiar in denying to the latter any claim to Divine power. They accept the Koran in its primitive simplicity, as a Divine revelation; and reject all the articles added by the Turks. The Government is administered by two chiefs, one superintending civil, the other religious affairs. The first of these is styled Emir, and boasts an uninterrupted descent from Ebia Sedi, founder of the Government. The command of the army, the internal control of temporal matters, and the administration of three or four Bedouin tribes, confederated with the Wahhabis, fall within his jurisdiction.

The Wahhabis made themselves generally known at the commencement of the present century by the conquest of the same cities which have now again fallen into their power. Mecca was captured in 1803, and Medina in 1804. Unmolested by the Porte, then embroiled in the endless intrigues of the Janizaries, or by the Pacha of Egypt, equally involved with the Mamelukes, they swept in triumph over the whole of Arabia, from the Persian Gulf to Babelmandel, and reduced Aleppo, Damascus and the rest of Syria, under their barbaric rule. Mehemet Ali murdered the Mamolukes in 1811, and before another year had ended, recaptured the two sacred cities, and contracted the Wahhabian dominion step by step, until by the victory of Tahalite, the race was almost annihilated. Ibrahim Pacha, in 1818, forced his way to Draych, the capital town of the tribe, took it by storm, put 20,000 inhabitants to the sword, and sent the Emir, Abdallah, with forty members of his family to Constantinople to have their heads cut off.

Revenge for the slaughter of these fathers is, it seems, the motive of the new outburst. The sultan obviously regards the danger as serious. The Arabian army has been placed under the command of Mehemet Pacha, a veteran soldier, formerly intrusted with the Government of Aleppo, and every preparation made to extirpate the whole race. [Times.

THE FUGITIVE BOLDING.—The Poughkeepsie fugitive slave Bolding, who was sent back to South Carolina as a slave nearly three months ago, has at length escaped from his persecutors, and reached his family in Poughkeepsie. It seems that after his master, who remained in New York, telegraphed to Columbia, that the $2000 had been raised, and that he should be returned, the authorities, or rather the mob, interfered, took Bolding to the watch or guard-house, locked him up, cutting off all communication between him and his friends, and between him and his own master. He was kept thus confined from 2d September till 21st October. The Deputy returned without him. After several weeks' delay the master returned to Columbia, but his masters interfered, and would not allow him to have an interview alone with his own slave. He stole one at length in the absence of the keeper, caught John's ear, told him to keep up courage, the money was raised, his friends were firm and that he had a letter from his wife for him, but dared not then give it to him. In a few days, however, under pretense of sending him to Georgia or Tennessee, he effected the release of Bolding, sent him to Augusta, Georgia, thence to Nashville, Louisville, Cincinnati, and New-York.

IMPROVEMENT IN CARS.—Yesterday, says the Editor of the New-Haven Palladium, we took a ride in the new car of the N. Y. and N. H. Railroad, and from the experiments made in regard to its utility, we are confident it will accomplish the desirable object for which it is arranged. This car has now been run between this city and Bridgeport some eight or ten times, and always with more or less of the windows open, at times all of them, and yet the interior is as free from dust as though the brush had been in constant operation. The experiment of smoking by three or four inveterates made no impression upon the air of the car, and the current of air outward was so strong that pieces of paper of the size of a dollar were whirled through the open window with great velocity. The construction of these peculiarly formed windows also forms a convenient resting-place for the elbow, and gives some six inches more room to a seat than in ordinary cars, while the beauty of the carriage is not at all affected. The cost of a car constructed upon this new principle is but a trifle more than the old plan, and the arrangement can be applied to the cars now in general use at a very trifling expense.

LOVE STRONGER THAN LAW.—One of the daily papers says that quite a scene occurred in the Brooklyn City Court on Tuesday, Nov. 11. Francis P. Graham, of that city, aged 60, brought a suit against his young wife, aged 19, for divorce, on the ground of infidelity. The charge was peremptorily denied on oath. The parties went to trial. The case was tried by a Jury, before Judge Greenwood, and the trial occupied three days. After the cause was summed up and committed to the Jury, they were out some hours without agreeing on a verdict. While they were deliberating, the husband desired an interview with the wife. It was granted. The parties soon made up, shook hands, cried, forgave each other, agreed to bury the past and live together again as at first. This was told to the Judge; the Jury were called in, the parties appeared in Court, had an entry made in the minutes of their reconciliation, the Jury were discharged, the suit dropped, and to the evident delight of the Court, Council, Jury, and spectators, the whole matter ended, thus demonstrating that love is stronger than law.

NEW YORK ELECTION.—Official returns from nearly every County in the State have been received, which show the following majorities:—

Wright over Patterson,	483
Cook over Welch,	92
Chatfield over Ullman,	340
Fitzhugh over Wheaton,	813
Randall over Forsyth,	1420
McAlpine over Seymour,	2390

The Senate is tie. The Assembly is Whig, 65 to 63.

SUMMARY.

In Brooklyn, on the 13th inst., a dreadful causalty occurred in a Pyrotechnic establishment, by which two boys lost their lives and three others received dreadful injuries. It seems that a stove had been just put up in the lower apartment, which was occupied by Hugh O'Rourke as a pyrotechnic factory, the upper portion of the building being also used for a like purpose, by John Morris, and that on the return of some of the hands from dinner, they had been kindling a fire in the stove, when some sparks fell upon the floor where a combustible sediment lay scattered about, and communicated to a larger stock of material, causing an explosion which blew away the side walls and roof, and set the concern on fire.

A gentleman of Boston has adopted a system of ice culture, for the purpose of preserving that cooling substance early, or when the season is too mild to freeze over the deep water of Fresh Pond. His plan is to make an artificial pond of an equal depth, and let the water into it as fast as it freezes. Work men are now engaged in large numbers on the Fresh Pond Meadows, in preparing such a pond. It will cover about twenty-five acres of land, with a clay bottom, and so much lower than Fresh Pond, that the water of the pond may be let into it in any quantity desirable.

Twenty dollar bills, of the Southport Bank, Connecticut, altered from ones, and remarkably well done, are in circulation. The alteration is done by extracting the figure 1, on each end of the bill, and printing in its place 20. The words "one dollar," in the body of the bill, are changed by the same process to "twenty dollars." The changes are so nicely made, that the bills would be apt to deceive the best judges.

The building for the Astor Library, will be ready for occupation next Spring. It is 65 by 120 feet, of brick, with brown stone basement. The floor of the library room is about 20 feet above the ground. It is guarded against fire, by having hollow walls. There are now about 26,000 volumes stored, ready to be placed on the shelves.

A temperance meeting was recently held in Bridgeport, at which the Mayor of the City, Capt. John Brooks, Jr., presided. P. T. Barnum and others addressed the meeting, and sixty-six legal voters pledged themselves to vote for no man at the ensuing election for an Executive or Legislative office, who is not known to be in favor of a law identical in substance with that in Maine, for the destruction of the liquor traffic in Connecticut. A similar pledge was adopted recently at the State Temperance Convention and by the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance convened in New-Haven, and was signed by 442 voters at a single meeting.

A dispatch dated Buffalo, Friday, Nov. 14, says: The large steam boiler at the Edge Tool Factory of S. & J. J. White, burst at noon to-day. Fortunately most of the hands employed were at dinner, and only 8 or 10 were in the shop. The building was rent entirely in pieces, and bricks, &c., were thrown to a great distance. Three men, named James Kane, Peter Henderberger and John Sorene, were badly scalded and cut, and their lives are dispaired of. Five others were more or less injured. Samuel Tongue, an Englishman, was thrown through a window, but was not seriously injured.

Kossuth is the son of a lawyer, and a small land owner, in Zemplin, and was born in 1806. He is, therefore, now in his 45th year. He was married in 1841. Previous to the Hungarian revolt, he was distinguished for his eloquent advocacy of liberal principles, in the Hungarian Diet, but it was in the character of an editor that his influence was most exerted and deeply felt. Kossuth is said to have commenced his career as a reporter for the Hungarian Diet, and afterwards became an editor.

It is generally supposed, that the Government of Hayti has, in answer to the English and French Consuls, officially confirmed a truce with the Dominicans, with the condition not to resume hostilities without announcing them one year beforehand. This amounts to a truce of one year, and it is to be hoped that the two parties, convinced of their mutual interets and common destiny, may still reunite for their own welfare and the genera benefit of commerce.

A citizen of Philadelphia has caused to be prepared a gift, to be presented to the patriot Kossuth, which is beautiful in the extreme. It consists of a miniature of Washington, from Stuart's portrait, set round with pearls. The frame of this is a gold star and beyond the points of the star projects a cross of St. John, in silver, richly chased. Two drawn swords are also represented between the limbs of the cross. The whole is suspended by a gold chain. It forms an ornament about two inches square.

A shocking accident occurred in Ludlow, Vermont, on Saturday, by which two children of Cyrus Baker, the one a girl of seven years and the other a boy of four, were killed. They were playing near a cart body which had been left standing upon one end when it suddenly fell upon them killing the girl instantly, and injuring the boy so seriously that he died on Tuesday night. The accident was not discovered until probably half an hour after it had occurred.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 4th inst. contains further intelligence as to the outbreak on the Rio Grande. Fighting still continued at Matamoras at the latest dates, and great energy was displayed on the part of Avalvo's forces, and there were signs of flagging by Caravajal, who was fighting his way from house to house, having but one piece of cannon against twelve. From 1,200 to 1,500 women and children have fled from Matamoras, and are in great distress and destitution.

A well-known artist of this City has recently patented a steam carriage for ordinary travel on Plank and Macadamized roads. He has introduced a new method of working steam expansively. By the combination of the radius and parallel rods he gives great steadiness to the machines even at the highest velocities, and by other arrangements for cutting off the steam, &c., enables one person to work the engine with perfect ease and effect.

The railroad lines leading west from Albany have established the following winter tariff of tolls: On up freight, first class, 70 cents per 100lbs.; second, 54; third, 44; fourth, 40. Down freight, first class, 70 cents per 100 lbs.; second, 50; third, 40; fourth, 33, On flour, 60 cents. Last year the rate for flour was $1, including a State toll of 20 cents, now taken off.

The Saco (Maine) Union tells about a singular sea-monster captured at sea, about twenty miles from that place. He is described as having a head like a porpoise, shark's teeth, fins like a whale, and a tail resembling a lizard's. He is sixteen feet long, and when taken weighed eight hundred pounds. His skin has been stuffed, and is now on exhibition.

The St. Louis Republican, of the 7th, announces the arrival at Independence of three gentlemen from Fort Laramie and the Salt Lake. They give the details of the secession in the Territory, the defalcations of Governor Young and his attempt to seize $24,000 more in the hands of the Secretary, which the latter was able to hold and escape with, through the interposition of the Supreme Court.

The Ohio Statesman of the 6th has full returns of the vote lately cast in that State for Governor. They sum up—For Samuel F. Vinton, Whig, 119,538; Samuel Lewis, Free-Soil, 16,911; Reuben Wood, Opp. incumbent, 145,607; Wood over Vinton, 26,069; do. over all, 9,158. Legislature—Senate—Whig, 8; Free-Soil, 1; Opp. 26. House—Whig, 27; Free-Soil, 1; Opp. 66.

Rev. P. Deulin and Rev. Dr. Donnally, an authorized deputation from the Irish Catholic University Committee, are now in our city soliciting subscriptions for the proposed University under the patronage of the Catholic Hierarchy of Ireland, approved by the Archbishop of New York.

A large and enhtusiastic meeting was held in Portland, last Thursday evening, November 13, presided over by the Mayor, in favor of the movement for appealing to the British Government for the pardon of Smith O'Brien and the other Irish exiles. Several eloquent speeches were made.

Hon. Elijah Miller, father-in-law of Gov. Seward, died at Auburn Thursday Nov. 13, aged about 80 years. He was the son of Samuel Miller, a Patriot of the Revolution, and was distinguished for his vigorous intellect and profound ability as a lawyer.

Kate Virginia Poole, a young woman of prepossessing appearance, 23 years old, has been arrested in Manchester, N. H., for murdering her infant, nine weeks old, by throwing it from the window of a railroad car, on Wednesday, between Manchester and Nashua. The cars being in rapid motion, the child was killed instantly. The mother is supposed to be unmarried.

Rev. Heman Lincoln has retired from a proprietary connection with the Christian Chronicle, leaving the paper in the hands of Rev. W. B. Jacobs, who is now its editor and proprietor. Mr. L. will continue in the relation hereafter of assistant editor. The Chronicle, under the direction of these gentlemen, has increased its circulation, and has attained a high rank among our religious exchange journals.

Rev. S. S. Cutting has resigned the Secretaryship of the American and For. Bible Society, to become connected editorially with the Christian Watchman and Reflector. The vacant post has been accepted by Rev. Dr. Babcock.

The steamer Daniel Webster, with California news to Oct. 15, arrived at New-York on Sunday night last. With the exception of one Indian massacre and a not uncommon outrage in the vicinity of Stockton, the news is unimportant.

The telegraph announces the election of James C. Jones as a U. S. Senator from Tennessee and of Robert Toombs as a U. S. Senator from Georgia, each for six years from the 4th of March last.

A contract is reported to have been concluded between the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Company and Mr. Seymour and his associates in New York, for the construction of the the entire length of a road from Cincinnati to Illinoistown, opposite St. Louis.

Judge Conklin, at Syracuse, delivered a charge to the Grand Jury, in which he discussed at length the provisions of the Fugitive Slave Law, and enjoined on the Jury the absolute and indispensable duty of obeying it and giving it effect.

A woman was found dead in the streat in Newark on Tuesday night, Nov. 11, supposed to have been frozen. An inquest was held the next morning. Verdict—Death from intemperance and exposure.

An Irishman, twenty-eight years of age, named Timothy Mahoney, was almost instantly killed at East Boston, by a bank of earth on Eagle Hill caving in upon him.

The late Dr. Rodgers presented his extensive pathological and astronomical collection to the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Crosby-st. New York. It is a valuable donation.

A letter has received from Kossuth by the State Department at washington in which he announces his contemplated visit to the United States, and a three months sojourn here.

D. & J. Edwards, of Little Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., on the 9th inst., killed a porker, aged 27 months that weighed 800 pounds—equal to any "Prairie Whale."

Mr. Morris, the colored lawyer of Boston, charged with aiding the escape of the fugitive slave Shadrach, has after a tedious trial been declared not guilty.

On the 11th inst., three laborers were killed at Spencer Port, N. Y., by the caving in of an embankment, on the Rochester and Lockport Railroad.

John Hemiston, a young man of Cheshire, Ct., was thrown from a colt on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 1, and killed.

In all the States of New-England and some of the Middle, Western and Southern States, there will be efforts to pass the Maine Liquor Law.

The Grand Jury at Philadelphia have returned true bills for the cime of treason against forty persons.

Dr. Granville Sharpe Patterson, professor of Anatomy in the New York university, died on the 12th inst., after an illness of five days.

The total contributions to the American Anti-Slavery Society, for the month of October, were $1,049 35.

The Superior Court of Connecticut granted thirteen divorces at its late session, a large part of them for "habitual intemperance."

Land warrants are quiet, and selling at $140 and $150.

The electric telegraph is to be introduced throughout Turkey by the Government.

A lawyer named Byrd, fell dead at Richmond in a fit of passion, on the 12th inst.

Twenty-three papers in Virginia have hoisted the Fillmore flag.

New York Market—November 17, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 87 a 4 94, Pearls 5 37.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 81 a 8 87 for common to straight State, 3 87 a 4 00 for Ohio and Michigan, 4 00 a 4 12 for Genesee. Rye Flour 3 25. Buckwheat 4 62 a 5 00 per bbl. Corn Meal 3 31 a 3 37.

Grain—Wheat 88c. for Michigan, 97c. for Genesee. Barley 88c. for prime two-rowed. Rye 70c. Oats 37 a 38c. for State, 34 a 35c. for Jersey. Corn, 60c. for Western mixed, 62c. for round yellow.

Provisions—Pork, 13 50 for new prime, 15 00 for mess. Beef, 4 00 a 5 00 for prime, 7 50 a 9 75 for mess. Butter, 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 10 a 16½c. for Western New York. Cheese 6 a 6¾c.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

John Davis, Shiloh, N. J.	$2 00	to vol. 8	No. 52
John T. Davis, "	2 00	8	52
Lewis Davis, "	2 00	8	52
M. Woodruff, "	2 00	8	52
Isaac West, "	2 00	8	52
E. J. Davis, "	2 00	8	52
John Bright, "	2 00	8	52
Reuben Davis, "	2 00	8	52
John S. Bacon, "	2 00	8	52
S. Tomlinson, "	2 00	8	36
Wm. C. Whitford, "	2 00	9	13
T. S. Alberti, Plainfield, N. J.	4 00	9	52
Alex. Dunham, "	2 00	8	52
J. D. Titsworth, "	2 00	8	52
L. Crandall, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	8	52
J. Kenyon, Rockville, R. I.	2 00	8	52
C. Matterson, "	1 00	8	26
J. Nash, Poquetanock, Ct.	2 00	8	52
C. Rogers, New York,	2 00	8	52
J. Champlin, West Edmeston,	2 00	8	52
B. Stillman, "	2 00	7	52
D. Potter, Berlin,	2 00	8	52
O. Burdick, "	1 00	8	26
W. Green, "	2 00	8	52
S. Wells, Little Genesee,	1 00	8	52
J. Hull, Adams,	2 00	9	13
D. Maxson, "	2 00	8	52
A. M. Whitford, Adams Center,	2 00	8	52
R. Saunders, "	2 00	6	52
A. Trowbridge, "	4 00	8	52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

MARRIED,

In Hamilton, N. Y., on the 11th inst., by Rev. Mr. Vogel, of Rome, Rev. A. H. BURLINGHAM, pastor of the Baptist Church in Owego, to Miss EMMA L. STARR, of Hamilton.

At Berlin, N. Y., on the 8th inst., by Rev. Mr. Summerbell, Mr. ASA DAVIS to Miss SARAH SATTERLEE, all of Berlin.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 9th inst., by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. STEPHEN BATES, of Charleston, to Miss MARTHA G. REYNOLDS, of Richmond.

In Alfred, N. Y., Nov. 6th, 1851, by Eld. Jared Kenyon, Mr. JAMES DATES, of Lagrange Dutchess Co., to Miss HARRIET WILLIAMS, daughter of Nathan Williams, Esq., of Alfred, N. Y.

In Wirt, Allegany Co., N. Y., Nov. 5th, 1851, by Eld. B. F. Robbins, Mr. JOSIAH D. AYARS to Miss REBECCA HUBBARD, all of Wirt.

DIED,

In Berlin, N. Y., Oct. 29th, Mr. BRADDOCK HALL, in the 71st year of his age.

On the 3d inst., of pulmonary consumption, at the residence of his son, in West Edmeston, BENJAMIN ARNOLD, aged 63 years.

A Proclamation,

By WASHINGTON HUNT, Governor of the State of New York.

The goodness of Almighty God has been signally manifested towards the people of this State during the present year. The blessings of liberty, national tranquility, and public health, have been enjoyed without interruption. The fruits of the earth, in overflowing abundance, have rewarded the labors of the husbandman. Public improvements have been advanced. The truths of knowledge and religion are more widely diffused, and our republican institutions have been preserved and strengthened.

A just sense of these beneficent dispositions should inspire universal gratitude toward our Divine Benefactor, and call forth appropriate demonstrations of homage and adoration.

Therefore, in compliance with usage, I respectfully recommend to the People of this State the observance of THURSDAY, the TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY of NOVEMBER NEXT, as a day of Prayer, Thanksgiving, and Praise.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto affixed my hand and the privy seal of the State, this sixteenth [L. S.] day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

By the Governor. WASHINGTON HUNT.
JAMES F. RUGGLES, Private Secretary.

Hudson River Railroad.

CARS for Albany, on the Hudson River Railroad, leave New York at 7 and 8½ o'clock A. M., and 12¼ and 5 o'clock P. M. Cars for New York leave Albany at 7½ and 11 A. M., and 3½ and 8½ P. M.

New York and Erie Railroad.

DURING the Winter, trains will leave New York for Dunkirk as follows:—Mail Train at 8 A. M. Day Express Train at 12 M. Emigrant Train at 5 P. M. Evening Express Train at 5 P. M.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Winter Arrangements.

LEAVES New York at 9 A. M. and 4½ P. M., foot of Cortlandt-st.; at 11 A. M. (freight) and 4.10 P. M., Pier No. 1 North River—for Elizabethport, Elizabethtown, Westfield, Scotch Plains, Plainfield, Boundbrook, Somerville, Raritan, White House, Easton, &c.

New York and Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE, via Stonington, for Boston, Providence, New Bedford, Taunton, and Newport, carrying the great Eastern U. S. Mail, without change of cars or detention. The secure and elegant steamers C. VANDERBILT and COMMODORE leave on alternate days (Sundays excepted) Pier No. 2 North River, (first wharf above Battery-place,) at 5 o'clock P. M. For passage, state-rooms, or freight, apply at Pier No. 2 or at the office, No. 11 Battery-place.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of WM. DUNN & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Hoe's Cast Steel Circular and Long Saws.

THE subscribers manufacture from the best cast steel, Circular Saws, from two inches to five feet diameter. These Saws are carefully hardened and tempered, and are ground and finished by machinery designed expressly for this purpose, and are therefore much superior in truth and uniformity of surface to those ground in the usual manner. They require less set, less power to drive them, and are not so liable to become heated, and produce a saving in timber.

They also manufacture cast steel MILL, PITT, and CROSS-CUT SAWS and BILLET WEBS, of superior quality, all of which they have for sale at their Ware-Rooms, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st., or they may be obtained of the principal hardware merchants in the United States. R. HOE & CO., Printing-Press, Machine, and Saw Makers, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st.

The following extract is from a report made by a Committee of scientific and practical gentlemen, appointed by the American Institute:—

"Your Committee are of unanimous opinion, that in the apparatus invented by Mr. R. M. Hoe, for grinding saws, he has displayed great ingenuity and tact in the adaptation of machinery to the production of results in the manufacture of Saws, which may with propriety be denominated the ne plus ultra of the art."

Publishers of newspapers who will insert this advertisement three times, with this note, and forward us a paper containing the same, will be paid in printing materials, by purchasing four times the amount of their bill for the advertisement. nov13 3t

Chambers' Works.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. A selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time. Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Forming two large imperial octavo volumes of 700 pages each, double-column letter-press; with upwards of 300 Illustrations. Edited by ROBERT CHAMBERS. Embossed cloth, $5.

The work embraces about one thousand Authors, chronologically arranged, and classed as Poets, Historians, Dramatists, Philosophers, Metaphysicians, Divines, etc., with choice selections from their writings, connected by a Biographical, Historical, and Critical Narrative; thus presenting a complete view of English Literature, from the earliest to the present time. Let the reader open where he will, he cannot fail to find matter for profit and delight. The selections are gems—infinite riches in a little room; in the language of another, "A whole English Library fused down into one cheap book!"

☞ The American edition of this valuable work is enriched by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint Engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron; a full-length portrait of Dr. Johnson; and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson. These important and elegant additions, together with superior paper and binding, render the American superior to all other editions.

CHAMBERS' MISCELLANY OF USEFUL AND ENTERTAINING KNOWLEDGE. Edited by WILLIAM CHAMBERS. With elegant Illustrative Engravings. 10 vols., cloth, $7 50.

☞ This work has been highly recommended by distinguished individuals, as admirably adapted to family, Sabbath, and District School Libraries.

"It would be difficult to find any miscellany superior or even equal to it; it richly deserves the epithets 'useful and entertaining;' and I would recommend it very strongly, as extremely well adapted to form parts of a library for the young, or of a social or circulating library, in town or country."—George B. Emerson, Esq., Chairman Boston School Book Committee.

The above works are bound in various styles, prices varying accordingly. A liberal discount made to Booksellers and Agents. GOULD & LINCOLN, Publishers,
59 Washington-st., Boston.

Miscellaneous.

From Frazer's Magazine.

Autumn Leaves.

Oh, autumn leaves!
Summer's bright roses one by one have past;
Gone is the beauty of the golden sheaves;
Ye come at last,
Prophets of winter hours approaching fast!

Oh, autumn leaves!
Why look ye thus so brilliant in decay?
Why, for the dying year when nature grieves,
Are ye so gay
With richer hues than graced her op'ning day?

Oh, autumn leaves!
Ye, as ye don your crimson robes of mirth,
While dull decay a moment scarce reprieves,
Your forms from earth—
Ye tell us, happier far is death than birth!

Oh, autumn leaves!
Like you the dying saint in splendor grows;
With each faint pulse of life that feebly heaves
At evening's close,
His every grace with added glory grows.

Oh, autumn leaves!
Like you, he casts aside all hues of gloom,
And of his bright'ning hopes a chaplet weaves
That o'er his tomb
Throws the glad promise of eternal bloom.

Estate of John McDonogh.

The New Orleans Delta says that the Executors of John McDonogh have filed their accounts for the last year. They state that all Mr. McDonogh's property remains in kind, none having been sold, but they propose to sell $216,000 of the bonds of the First Municipality, for the purpose of raising a fund to pay the debts of the estate. They also claim compensation to the exclusion of the non-resident executors. The cash receipts of the estate since December 2, amount to $40,979 75, and the rents and insurance to $47,016 00; total receipts, $88,095 75. The executors have paid out for charges against the estate, $59,831 25. The largest items paid are for notarial and attorney's fees. The notaries charged $12,000 for making the inventory—and they were allowed $3,000. The attorney of the estate, Levi Pearce, is allowed $5,000 for his services.

The inventory of the property in the parish of Orleans amounts to one million nine hundred and seventy-nine thousand one hundred and sixteen dollars and seventy-two cents—to which is added amount of rents received since the inventory was closed, $13,641 73. The inventories in the parishes of Jefferson, Iberville, East Baton Rouge, Livingston, Assumption, St. Landry, St. Tammany, St. Bernard, and Plaquemines, amount to five hundred and one thousand, one hundred and eighty-nine dollars—making a grand total of $2,493,949 15, upon which the Executors charge a commission of 2½ per cent., amounting to $12,469 74 for each Executor, five in number—total commissions $62,348, for Crossman, Roselius, D'Aquin, Leverich, and John Spear Smith. The bills payable issued by the testator, amount to $115,303 45. There are also a number of claims presented, but not acted upon by the Executors, including a claim of $2,500 each for services as appraisers, by H. W. Palfrey and G. Kursheedt. These figures show that it will be some time before the estate will have a surplus. Indeed, the charges and debts look as if they would keep up pari passu with the revenues. The schedule, or inventory, of Mr. McDonogh's property, makes a closely written volume of 1071 pages. In the interminable list of his assets, we discover an item which shows in the strongest light the extraordinary parsimony of McDonogh. It is this: "Articles used by the deceased, personally, $28 85." Compared with his vast landed property, what a contrast does this meagre amount of personal comforts bear!

Farming in Belgium.

We find in the Rural New Yorker, the following interesting remarks from Prof. Rogers, on agricultural management in Belgium.

Draining.—On account of the land lying low and being inundated, at times, by the numerous rivers which flow from the vicinity of mountains covered with perpetual snow, one of the principal branches of work is draining. This is performed mainly by wind-mills, which raise the water from the lower to the higher lands by successive stages; these mills operate upon various plans; some raise the water where the descent is only slight, by means of a paddle-wheel; others have an Archimmedes' screw attached, while others still, lift up the water in buckets, and empty it into reservoirs above. The depth of water to be thus carried off is sometimes several feet, and the machines used for the purpose exceedingly numerous. Constant vigilance is required, and advantage is taken of every wind that blows; many of the largest of these wind-mills are the abodes of the families who tend them. On the low flat-lands, the surface is cut into a net-work of innumerable small canals intersecting each other, and all leading into a main one at the most depending point. The soil is thus drained at great expense and with vast labor, and is, to the stranger, one of the best evidences of the untiring industry of the people. Other modes of draining are also in use.

Tillage.—This operation is performed both by the plow and spade, and is generally carried to greater depth than in the United States. The grain lands are usually thrown up into beds, from six to ten feet wide, with a small ditch, or trench, between them; this is filled up by the plow every year and opened in another place; the ridge of the bed of one year occupying the place of the trench of the former. In this way the soil is tilled to greater depth than could well be done in any other way. When the trench is made by plowing, it is usually deepened and finished with the spade—and this with much care and precision. Great pains is taken to mix the soil, so as to have the different qualities of strata equally disturbed. Sub-soiling is practiced to great extent, both with the spade and plow.

Rotation of Crops is carried on with great precision and regularity. Grain, root, and green crops, alternate each other according to the nature of the soil and the requisitions of the market. Rotations are divided into courses of three, four, seven, nine, eleven, &c., consisting of five to ten different plants in succession, during a series of years. The chemical principles upon which rotation is founded, are of course the same in all countries.

Manuring.—This is practiced in this country, as in Holland and England, very extensively; in many cases on strictly chemical principles—but in all with the greatest precision and in accordance with rules approved by experience. The manner of applying fertilizers is considered a matter of great importance; the first object appears to be, to obtain the immediate effect of whatever is used, as soon as it is brought into proper condition and relation to the soil to furnish its fertilizing properties to the young plants.

Coarse manures are usually laid on the soil and plowed under in the fall, so as to be available for the spring sown crops. Composts, of every complicated nature, are sometimes used; they are usually composed of manure, straw, peat, wood ashes, coal waste, soot, lime, plaster, common salt, animal and vegetable waste matter of all kinds. It is often erroneously supposed that these mixtures actually generate some new principle not previously contained in them; but whenever a good manure is obtained by such a combination, it is done at the expense of some rich fertilizer which enters into the formula. The greatest advantage of compost is that of bringing coarse and crude matters into a state of decomposition, which renders soluble and fit for absorbtion by the spongioles of plants, and of extending and diluting those which are too concentrated or expensive to be used alone.

Liquid manures are saved with great care, and applied to the soil with great exactness; they consist of the urine of animals, washings of the barn-yard, and solutions of various mineral salts. The barns and stables are constructed with stone or wood floors with a slight inclination, and gutters to convey the liquid into tanks or reservoirs, where it is sometimes fermented and mixed with solutions of salts, &c. It is applied to the land by means of carts, watering-pots, or by being let into small canals or gutters made at short intervals over the fields.

Lime, marl, and gypsum, are much used on the same crops and soils as in the United States. From the great abundance of carbonate of lime in some parts, as well as in France and England, it is extensively used on cold, wet, and heavy clay soils.

Every thing of an organic nature is used; such as animal flesh, bones, woolen rags, and wastes from various manufactories. Paring and burning is also practiced in flat and moist lands. Poudrette and guano are both more extensively used than in the United States; they are said to produce grain of a better quality, but less in quantity, than stable manure.

Method of Curing Prize Hams.

The Hams of Maryland and Virginia, says the American Farmer, have long enjoyed a wide celebrity. At the last exhibition of the Maryland State Agricultural Society, four premiums were awarded for Hams. We are informed by those who had the opportunity of examining them, that they were of first-rate quality. The following are the recipes by which the hams were cured.

T. E. Hamilton's Recipe.—First Premium.—To every 100 lbs. pork take 8 lbs. of G. A. salt. 2 oz. saltpetre, 2 lbs. brown sugar, 1½ oz. of potash, and four gallons of water. Mix the above, and pour the brine over the meat, after it has lain in the tub for some two days. Let the Hams remain six weeks in brine, and then dried several days before smoking. I have generally had the meat rubbed with fine salt, when it is packed down. The meat should be perfectly cool before packing.

J. Green's Recipe.—Second Premium.—To 1,000 pounds of pork, take half a bushel and half a peck of salt, 3 lbs. saltpetre, 3 lbs. sugar, and 2 quarts of molasses. Mix—rub the bacon with it well; keep on for three weeks in all; at the end of nine days take out the hams, and put those which are at the top at the bottom.

R. Brooke Jr.'s Recipe.—Third Premium.—One bushel of fine salt, half bushel ground alum salt, one and a half pound to a thousand lbs. pork, left to lie in pickle four weeks, hung up and smoked with hickory wood until the rind becomes a dark brown.

C. D. Slingluff's Recipe.—Fourth Premium.—To 100 lbs. green hams take 8 lbs. G. A. salt. 2 lbs. brown sugar or molasses equivalent, 2 oz. saltpetre, 2 oz. pearl ashes, 4 gallons water, dissolve well; skimming on the skum arising on the surface. Pack the hams compactly in a tight vessel or cask, rubbing the fleshy part with fine salt. In a day or two pour the above pickle over the meat, taking care to keep it covered with pickle. In four to six weeks, according to the size and weight of the hams, (that is to say, the longer period for heavy hams,) hang up to smoke, hock up; smoking with green hickory wood. I have put up hams for the last 12 or 15 years by the above recipe with uniform success, equal at all times to the sample now presented.

Formation of Dew.

The air contains at all times more or less of moisture, though in a state so rarified as to be imperceptible. To prove this it is only necessary in a summer's day to fill a glass with cold water, when, dry as the atmosphere may seem, its moisture will be condensed, and made visible in the form of small pelucid drops upon the outside of the glass below that of the surrounding atmosphere. On this principle distillation is conducted; and in the same manner dew is formed. No sooner does the sun sink towards the horizon than the blades of grass which clothe the earth's surface give out the heat they have been receiving during the day, and consequently they become so much colder than the atmosphere that they condense in the form of dew part of the rarified moisture immediately surrounding them. Dew, being thus formed, is of course more abundant before and after rains, when the atmosphere is moistest.

Calm and clear nights are essential, also, for the copious deposition of dew; for then the glassy blades emit their heat freely, and it is dispersed through the atmosphere without any equivalent return. On the contrary, however, if the night be cloudy, then the clouds, by abstracting the heat from the atmosphere, contribute in some degree to keep its temperature on a level with that of the glassy blades, and thus so nearly equalize the two that but little dew is deposited. If, in addition to clouds, a high wind is blowing, no dew will be formed; for then the temperature of the grass is prevented from sinking by the agitation of the air continually bringing a warmer current by which it is surrounded; or it may be that the night winds, being generally cool, so rapidly reduce the air's temperature as to bring it below that of the grass.

As substances differ in their power of losing their heat, so they differ in their attraction for dew. On grass, swan's down, and other filamentous substances which readily part with their heat, dew copiously condenses. The mechanical condition of objects likewise affects the formation of dew, as shavings attract it more than wood. Dew is more plentifully deposited on meadow grounds than on plowed lands; and cultivated soils are refreshed with abundance of dew, while barren rocks and sandy deserts, not needing, do not receive the genial moisture. Indeed, every plant possesses, according to its king, the power of condensing as much dew as is necessary for its peculiar and individual exigencies. Thus, not even a dew-drop seems to have been formed by the blind action of chance, but is gathered by the hand of infinite Wisdom for a definite and benevolent end.

White Woman Released from Slavery.

The Circuit Court of Rockingham County, Va., after a trial that excited much interest, decided that Amanda Jane, who had been held as a slave ever since her birth, some twenty-six years ago, was a white woman, although her origin was distinctly traced to a negress, who was a slave. The Register says: "Amanda's appearance, the color of her skin, her hair, her eyes, her nose, her whole physical exterior, would prove her to be what the Jury have made her—a white woman. The testimony proving her to be of negro extraction was of the strongest and clearest kind, and yet the appearance of the woman seemed to contradict it all. Amanda Jane has been held as a slave successively by Messrs. Michael Kiser, (whose slave Sally, her mother, was proved to be,) and T. McGahey, and was held in bondage at the time of the trial, by Mr. A. E. Heneberger. She has degraded herself in her servitude, and has become the mother of two fine looking little illigitimate children, perfectly white, who were dandled in her arms during the course of the trial. A more mysterious case we have never heard tried; and it excited, from its commencement to its close, the most intense interest. Exceptions have been taken to the decision of the case, by the counsel for the defendants."

Winter Apples.

In harvesting apples, especially those intended for winter, they should be carefully picked by hand in bright, clear weather. All bruises are not only injurious, as tending to decay, but they render the fruit partially worthless. Some fruit-growers pick their fruit the last of September, before completely ripe, and allow it to shrivel a little before packed in barrels, as it will keep well under this treatment. Such fruit is not equal in quality to that well ripened on the tree. In very warm locations, winter fruit is frequently ripe by the last of September. More fruit-growers allow their winter apples to remain on the trees until October, and become thoroughly ripe.

After picking the fruit, pack carefully in barrels, and head up closely. The following is the mode of management in this section. The barrels are piled up horizontally in cool, open sheds, or in the shade of trees or buildings, and sometimes in open space, covered with boards laid over the barrels, to keep off the sun and rain, and allowed to remain out till November, till there is no danger of their freezing. Apples thus managed will escape a severe frost. The thermometer may be ten or twelve degrees below freezing, or the weather cold enough to freeze ice half an inch thick. We have known apples to escape when the thermometer was twenty degrees below freezing; but there is a risk in leaving them out in so cold weather. When the weather becomes too cold for them to be safe out of doors, put them into a cool cellar. Some fruit growers put them into the cellar immediately after harvesting. Whether apples are put into the cellar early or late, the cellar should be well ventilated in clear weather, when the wind is north or west, but kept shut up closely when the wind is in other directions. This should be practiced even in winter, when there is no danger of apples freezing. [New Eng. Far.

Cruelty of a Step-Mother.

Polly Olmstead has been found guilty of the murder, by slow cruelties, of her own step-child, in Illinois.

It appears that Olmstead married again in about three weeks after the death of his first wife—at which time the child was about five years old. This was about eighteen months ago. Soon after the marriage, the new wife confined the little girl in the kitchen, and there kept her most of the time tied, and without fire. In this situation she was forced to remain up to the time of her death; having no food allowed her except half a pint of coffee or milk and a piece of cold corn bread every day. No bed-covering was allowed her in any weather further than a single scanty quilt. This fiendish woman often amused herself by beating the child in the most outrageous manner, and on one occasion compelled another child to choke her until she was black in the face. She continually forced her to eat rotten fruit and vegetables of various kinds, together with other filth which it would not be seemly to describe. Sometimes she would fasten the little creature under the kitchen floor and leave her there for hours. Other details were given which are too shocking for publication. The poor little sufferer often wished herself dead. On one occasion she escaped from the kitchen and was seen trying to climb a pole which stood in the yard. Upon being asked where she was going, she replied she was going up to the other world to see her mother. The heartless step-mother ordered her down with curses, and the trembling little creature fell, in her weakness, her head striking violently against the wall of the house. The jury found the woman guilty of manslaughter, and she was sentenced to two years' service in the State Prison.

Abolitionism in Kentucky.

A Rev. J. G. Fee, a native of Kentucky, is appealing to the charity of Northern Abolitionists for means to erect a free church, or what is more proper, a church in which he can preach without molestation, and at all times, against the institution of slavery. He says:—

"During the last year I have labored half of my time in Bracken County. We have organized there a small church. At present it numbers thirteen members. This church, like one in Lewis County, does not tolerate slaveholding. This, of course, is an unpopular move in a slave State. Yet our congregations have been constantly increasing. The house we worship in is a school house, and often does not hold more than half of the congregation. Also, often when we would like to hold a protracted meeting, the house is occupied by the school.

"The prospect for building a church, able eventually to sustain itself, is good. It is in a neighborhood of farmers who are generally non-slaveholders, in comfortable circumstances. The church has resolved to try to build a plain, brick church edifice, thirty by forty feet—cost about $600. In view of the fact that some colored persons attended our meetings, and that one of our members is a colored person, the church has voted 'that the seats in this house shall, during the hours of worship and good behavior, be free to all persons.'

"As palpably in accordance with the spirit and practice of the gospel as is this resolution, it is likely to affect our congregation and means for building more than opposition to slavery; for there are many excellent men, who will go with us in opposition to slavery, who yet retain the spirit of caste—to foster which sustains and strengthens slavery. I have by private solicitation received some $135. But, in consequence of failure here, we shall yet lack $150 to complete our house.

Diving Vessels.

Mr. Cavé, the owner and manager of one of the first iron workshops in Paris, is now building two large boats to be used under water in the work of clearing away the bar at the mouth of the Nile. They are on a new plan, and better than anything of the kind we have heard of. In the middle of the deck is a large circular hole, going vertically through the ship, and in it slides a cylinder reaching to the bottom of the river, which may be shortned or enlarged at will, like a telescope. Above the opening is a large air chamber 22 feet in diameter and 16 feet high. By forcing compressed air into the air chamber the water in the tube is driven out at the lower end, leaving dry a portion of the bed. An apparatus of the same kind, but on a reduced scale, is now in operation on the river Seine. [Trib.

Interesting Experiment.—In the Roscrean Workhouse, Ireland, the learned doctor in charge has appropriated one of the wards to the exclusive use of a deaf and dumb nurse, who has charge of four infant childern. They are to be isolated from companionship with all who have the gift of speech, until they have attained the age when children usually acquire a knowledge and use of language. The object is to acquire the natural language of man. This experiment, if thoroughly tried, will probably show that man has no natural language.

It will be remembered that the Phœnicians once made a somewhat similar experiment with an infant, which was placed in the desert in the charge of persons sworn not to permit the utterance of a word in its presence, and to afford it sustenance by allowing it to suckle a goat. In that instance, the first attempt of the child at vocalization resulted in the imitation of the bleating of its foster-mother.

[Daily Times.

Patent Flax Puller.—The only really new thing we saw at the late Fair, says the Janesville (Wis.) Badger State, was a model of a machine invented by S. B. Goss, of Newark, in this county, for harvesting Flax. It seemed so simple in its arrangement, and so easily comprehended, as to leave scarcely a chance to doubt that it must work to the satisfaction of the ingenious inventor. If it meets his expectations, it will pull flax as fast as a horse-power Reaper can cut grain—say 20 acres per day, and do it in the most perfect manner. This invention comes opportunely with the late wonderful discoveries in preparing the flax fiber for manufactories, and those who can remember the back-aching work of flax pulling, will call him blessed. We shall watch the progress of this machine with interest.

Insanity.—Some fishermen of St. Cloud, France, found in the river the body of a young man aged about 25, which appeared to have been several days in the water. The deceased was dressed in fashionable style, and his linen was of the very finest quality. In a little phial hung round his neck, was a paper written in incoherent style, stating that an angel had appeared to him in a dream, and had announced that in his veins flowed the royal blood of France, but that before ascending the throne he must drown himself in the Seine, in order so have an interview with the Eternal Sovereign of all things. It added that in obedience to the angel he committed suicide, but it prayed the Procureur of the Republic to prosecute the angel in the event of its turning out that he had deceived him. The paper was signed, "The future King of France."

Good Effects of Early Rising.—It is related that King George III., who made the cause of longevity a subject of investigation, procured two persons, each above a hundred years of age, to dance in his presence. He then requested them to relate to him their modes of living that he might draw from them, if possible, some clue to the cause of their vigourous old age. The one had been a shepherd, remarkably temperate and circumspect in his diet and regimen; the other, a hedger, had been noted for his irregularity, exposure, and intemperance. The Monarch could draw no inference to guide his inquiries from such different modes of life terminating in the same result; but on further inquiry he learned that both men were alike distinguished by a tranquil easiness of temper, active habits, and early rising.

Before leaving Buffalo for the West, Jenny Lind made a present to that excellent artist, Salvi, of a very beautiful cigar case of massive gold and exquisite workmanship. On one side is represented in relief the grand works of the immortal Italian, Benevenuto Cellini. On the other side is shown the poor Republic of Rome, strangled by her false sister of France, being bound with a cord which is held by the leagued despots; in the distance, on the one hand, is the British lion asleep, while on the other hand Pius IX., surrounded by his Cardinals, distributes blessings and indulgences to the Lazzaroni, the Croats, the Spanish, French, &c.

It is an ancient and still common opinion that the toad possesses a subtile venom, but at present this is deemed fabulous by the scientific. MM. Gratiolet and Cloez, as appears by the reports of the Academy of Sciences, have shown by experiment that they secrete a deadly poison. They inoculated small birds with the milky fluid contained in the dorsal and parotid pustules of this animal, and found that they died at the end of five or six minutes. Even when dried, the fluid destroyed birds. Death occured without convulsions, and all exhibited marked signs of apoplexy.

Variety.

William Penn frequently visited the Indians, which gave him an opportunity to study their character; and he conciliated their favor by partaking of their feasts and witnessing their dances. A respectable old lady once related, that in order to gain the good will of the aborigines, "he walked with them, set with them on the ground, and ate with them their roasted acorn and hominy. At this they expressed their great delight, and soon began to show how they could hop and jump; at which exhibition William Penn, to cap the climax, sprang up and beat them all."

Of all the enemies of idleness, says Johnson, want is most formidable. Fame is soon found to be a sound, and love a dream. Avarice and ambition may be justly suspected of being privy confederates with idleness; for when they have, for a while, protected their votaries, they often deliver them up, to end their lives under her dominion. Want always struggles against idleness; but want herself is often overcome, and every hour shows the careful observer those who had rather live in ease than in plenty.

An enormous tusk was excavated the other day in Clermont County, Ohio, by the laborers on the Little Miami Railroad. It was imbedded in clean gravel sand, twenty-three feet below the surface of the ground, ten feet below the track, and several hundred yards from the Miami River, and some feet higher than the level of its banks. It was about six feet in length and six inches in diameter at the base. When first discovered it was, to all appearance, sound, but upon its being removed and exposed to the air it crumbled to pieces.

The Bank of Tennessee, which is owned and controlled by the State, is in a very flourishing condition. According to The Nashville Banner, it has made and paid into the State Treasury, within the last 2 years, a net profit of $426,799 18, on an actual capital of $2,389,652 54. The circulation of the Bank is $1,757,108, and the cash on hand $954,750 99. The Bank deals largely in exchanges, having furnished within two years $4,290,639.

The New York Times is in ecstacy in consequence of the triumphs achieved by the great Yankee nation at the Great Exhibition in London. The Times says: We have out-yachted, out-reaped, out-safed, out-India-rubbered, out-clocked, out-biscuited, out-stoved, out-locked, and out-pressed John Bull, besides distancing all his burgalers at breaking into a bank. In fact, if we had missed all the other prizes, we should at least have "Plucked up drowned honor by the locks."

When milk is drawn in the usual way from the cow, the last of the milking is the richest, because the cream has in great part risen to the surface inside the cow's udder; the portion last drawn off of course contains the most of it. This fact shows the importance of thorough milking. More milk is said to be obtained from the cow when she is milked three times a day than when but once or twice, but in this last case it is very rich.

Specimens of minerals have been found in lime quarries, near Norristown, Pa. The Herald of that place says it is found mixed through a deposit of the most beautiful quartz rock ever seen, and very much resembles the rich treasures of the quartz rocks in California. Under the belief that it was something of the "same sort," a portion of the mineral was tested, when it was found to be a combination of silver and copper, with a large preponderance of silver.

The number of students at present at Yale College is 548. Of these, 34 are Theological students, 30 Law students, 27 Medical students, and 14 are students in Philosophy and the Arts. Of the literary societies connected with the College, the Lilonia has 174 members, and a library of 11,800 volumes. The Brothers in Unity have 206 members, and 11,725 volumes, and the Calliope has 63 members, and 7,500 volumes in their library.

The editor of The New-Haven Courier says he was lately shown a piece of imitation marble, said to have been made by staining a common red stone with the colors and veins of the richest verde antique. The discoverer claims that he can make a perfect imitation of any kind of stone, either upon wood or any other material, and give it all the polish and perfect appearance of the thing imitated. The deception is described as perfect.

"Kempton's Rotary Clothes-Dryer" is the name of a new Yankee invention which, when not in use, folds up into about the space occupied by a good-sized umbrella, but which is easily expanded so as to hold all the clothes of a large family, while a constant rotary motion is given to the whole by the least breath of air from whatever direction.

"The sound of your hammer," said Franklin, "at five in the morning or nine at night, heard by a creditor, makes him easy six months longer; but if he sees you at a billiard-table, or hears your voice at a tavern, when you should be at work, he sends for his money the next day."

The important discovery of Colored Daguerreotypes appears to have been made simultaneously in America by Mr. Hill, and in France by Mr. Niepce. Specimens have been exhibited here and there, but no clear explanation of the process has been made known in either country.

Mr. Taggert, of Roxbury, Mass., exhibits a model of an engine whose propelling agent is atmospheric pressure. The power is obtained by regular explosions of small quantities of common gunpowder. Eminent chemists have decided its operation to be feasible.

The Court of Appeals, at its last term, decided that the record of naturalization is conclusive evidence of the fact that a prior declaration of intention was made in due form of law.

A woman named Trout was committed to the jail of Lebanon, Pa., recently, on a charge of whipping to death a little girl three years old, to whom she was step-mother. The child fell from her hands dead.

Chief Justice Kenyon once said to a rich friend, asking his opinion as to the probable success of his son, "Let your son forthwith spend his fortune; marry, and spend his wife's, and then he may be expected to apply with energy to his profession."

In a suit recently brought in Massachusetts to recover the value of a horse killed by immoderate driving on a Sunday, it was held that, the contract being unlawful, the plaintiff could not maintain any action upon it, even for the loss of his horse.

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 commenced the first Wednesday in September, and continues forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.
Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J. W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First	commences Aug. 27	and closes	Dec. 2.
" Second	" Dec. 3	" "	March 16.
" Third	" March 17	" "	June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

Board, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. Clarke, Sec. } of Trustees.
DeRuyter, July 18, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
No. 13—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
No. 14—Delaying Obedience. 4 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pp.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to George B. Utter, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New-York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville..Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Hiram W. Babcock.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to

Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 24. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1851. WHOLE NO. 388.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c." [Continued.

Attention to this single fact, that the day following the death of Christ was a great Sabbath, will go far to correct many of the prevalent misapprehensions, and to remove much of the difficulty often experienced, when seeking to understand the narratives of the Evangelists on the subject. Some authors, indeed, do admit, what, if urged, there is no possibility of denying, that, irrespective of its place among the days of the week, this fifteenth day was necessarily a Sabbath. But such authors, (and we are sorry to have to place among these, even the writer of the article quoted with such approbation, from Eadie's Biblical Cyclopædia,) generally farther assume, that besides its festival character as a Sabbath, this day was also the weekly Sabbath. Of this, however, there is neither evidence nor probability. It is neither said in Scripture, nor, on good grounds, can it be implied from it. From that sure word we learn distinctly, that this was certainly an annual Sabbath of the Law—"a great day"—and this alone fulfills fully the requirements of the Gospel narratives, without the aid of unsupported imaginations.

The title "Sabbath," from great inattention to the Law of Moses, with which, however, the writers and early readers of the Gospels were much better acquainted, as by their observance of its ordinances they were kept personally in remembrance, is, by Christians, now only imperfectly understood. It is, therefore, necessary thus to insist upon the fact, that these Holy Convocation days were as truly "Sabbaths" as those of weekly recurrence—yea, that they only were distinguished by the peculiar title, affixed to this by the Evangelist John, "Great Sabbaths." Upon them, all servile work was prohibited; and, therefore, the female disciples rested, equally on this as on the weekly Sabbath, "according to the commandment," for the commandment to do so on the one, was as imperative as upon the other. (Luke xxiii. 56.) Eager though they were to embalm the body of their Lord, these loving disciples, knowing the Law, felt too powerfully its prohibition against servile work on the day immediately following that of the Passover, (which they knew to be a Sabbath, even a Great Sabbath,) to allow themselves to proceed to the desired work. For, in the immediately preceding context, it is plainly shown, by the allusion to the preparation day before it, that it was so; where, referring to the interment itself, the statement is, "And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on." Ver. 54.

Joseph of Arimathea, also, influenced by similar knowledge of the sacred character of this Holy Convocation, with a view to immediate interment, when the even was come, craved the body of his Lord, "because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath." Mark xv. 42. The "preparation," here, intimates distinctly that not the weekly, but the Passover Annual Sabbath is, referred to; its place and character were perfectly known. Even "the Jews, therefore," engaged in condemning, and putting to death the Son of God on false witness of their own procuring, yet, while He hung on the accursed tree, "because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, (for that Sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away." John xix. 31.

Remembrance of this their feeling, or rather their hypocritical pretension of it, enables us to understand their policy, when, at the palace of the high priest, the chief priests, and scribes, and elders, "consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill Him. But they said, Not on the Feast day lest there be an uproar among the people." Matt. xxvi. 3—5. They seem prepared, indeed, themselves to have even thus farther added sin to sin; and seem to have so known each other as in their council not to have disguised that they would, even on the Great Sabbath, have put to death Him they so feared and hated; but as the people were not all so depraved, these wicked rulers are anxious to avoid doing so if possible, "lest there be an uproar among the people."

In thus speaking of "the Feast day," they make the distinction between the Passover itself, and the day which followed it, which we have remarked as so clearly made in the Law itself: "In the fourteenth day of the first month is the Passover of the Lord. And in the fifteenth day of this month is the Feast." Num. xxviii. 16, 17. Josephus is not less distinct, in his Account of the Customs of the Jews: "The Law ordained, that we should every year slay that sacrifice which I before told you we slew when we came out of Egypt, and which was called the Passover; and so do we celebrate this Passover in companies, leaving nothing of what we sacrifice till the day following. The Feast of unleavened bread succeeds that of the Passover, and falls on the fifteenth day of the month, and continues seven days, wherein they feed on unleavened bread." The Passover was, he says, in the beginning of the same paragraph, "in the month of Xanthicus, which is by us called Nisan, and is the beginning of our year, on the fourteenth day of the lunar month." Antiquities of the Jews, book iii. chap. x. § 5.

In the Gospels, indeed, the whole solemnity, including both parts, is, however, sometimes called "the Passover;" at other times, "the Feast of unleavened bread;" while, in Luke's Gospel, (written for gentiles,) we have the one of these explained by the other; "Now the Feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover." Luke xxii. 1. But, in other cases, they are distinguished, as in the enactment itself, into "the Passover," which was the first day, and "the Feast," which was of seven days, beginning and ending with Holy Convocations or Sabbaths. Each of these Sabbaths was a Feast day, but that referred to in the accounts of the Saviour's death, was the first of the two, that on the fifteenth of the month. Our translators, by supplying (in Mark xiv. 1,) the words "the Feast of," although marking them as supplementary, mar the distinction in the text. Without them we read more obviously, "After two days was the Passover and of unleavened bread." "But they said, Not on the Feast."

The same remarks apply, and attention to the same truth will explain, statements of the Evangelist John, at which some have stumbled. Thus we read, "Now before the Feast of the Passover, when Jesus knew that His hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end. And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray Him." John xiii. 1, 2. It affects not our argument; but we may notice that some translate "during supper" instead of "supper being ended." But, an imperfect acquaintance with the Mosaic appointments, or inattention to the fact that the Passover and the Feast were distinct, has obscured the meaning of this text to some authors, otherwise well informed. In point of fact, the Paschal "supper," which it is here stated was "ended," preceded "the Feast" by a whole day; and, therefore, there is neither inconsistency nor obscurity in the statement itself, of "supper being ended," even "BEFORE the Feast of the Passover." There is no real difficulty in the text; its language, on the contrary, is most precise, and in strict accordance with both the letter and the spirit of the Law.

There is one text, however, which, at first sight, has some appearance of intimating that on the day of the Saviour's crucifixion, and, therefore, after He and His disciples had observed the Passover, the Jews had still not done so. "Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment; and it was early; and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, least they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover." John xviii. 28. With the evidence already adduced, that the Passover lamb had been eaten the previous evening, even this statement should not readily be supposed to imply the contrary, although it has sometimes been so understood. But there is, in fact, no real discrepancy; although there is the omission of that discriminating distinctiveness which, in other cases, we have noted between the Passover itself, and the Feast which followed.

The term "Passover," we have shown, and it is to be remembered, is sometimes applied, not merely to the eating of the lamb, but also to the whole solemnity, including both the eating of the lamb and the separate seven days' feast connected with it. If understood in the former of these senses, the meaning of the above text is both obvious and in harmony with all other texts bearing on the point. For, although the Jews had the preceding evening partaken of the Passover lamb, there still remained before them, and probably more prized by them, the Passover Feast; and while hurrying the Righteous One to death before the Feast, "lest there be an uproar among the people," they are sedulously careful not to mingle with those they called unclean, "lest they should be defiled," and so prevented, by scrupulous attention to their own traditions, from partaking in the Feast of the Passover Sabbath, then close at hand.

That this is the true meaning, is farther obvious from the fact, that the words occur in the statement of John, who has himself furnished us with others sufficiently clear to prevent the possibility of any mistake. Thus, in the following chapter, he tells us; concerning this very day, that "it was the preparation of the Passover," (John xix. 14;) and we have, farther, already seen from the same chapter, that "the preparation" spoken of, was the preparation day immediately before that special Sabbath day which was an high day. Verse 31. The Passover lamb itself, then, they must have eaten on the preceding night. It is, therefore, only an entire neglect even of the very context that can prevent any one from perceiving that the Jews were, in this case, contemplating the farther sacrifices which pertained to the Passover Sabbath, or to those of the whole Feast, of seven days, following the day on the night of which the lamb was eaten.

Penn, although, like others, taking it for granted that the Saviour was crucified on Friday, has some good notes on the point now under consideration; and says, in explanation of the above text, "The anxiety of the Jewish chiefs to be in a condition to 'eat the Passover,' did not regard the 'lamb and bitter herbs,' which had been eaten the preceding evening; but, the more alluring festival of the 'great day,' which was to commence on that same evening. Euthymius (with other expounders of the middle ages,) not aware of this distinction, and assuming that it was the Paschal Lamb which those chiefs were desirous to eat, inferred, that the sacrifice of the Lamb was still in their prospect; and on this misapprehension founded the false speculation, that our Lord had anticipated that sacrifice by one day, and that His supper had taken place on the Wednesday evening, instead of the Thursday evening; thus making their own erroneous interpretation of St. John a rule by which they perverted the correct relations of the other Evangelists." Annotations on the Book of the New Covenant. John xviii. 28.

[To be continued.]

THE HEAVENLY SHEPHERD.

BY MRS. J. R. LOWELL.

When on my ear your loss was knelled
And tender sympathy upburst,
A little rill from memory swelled,
Which once had soothed my bitter thirst.

And I was fain to bear to you
Some portion of its mild relief,
That it might be a healing dew
To steal some fever from your grief.

After our child's untroubled breath
Up to the Father took its way,
And on our house the shade of death
Like a long twilight haunting lay;

And friends came round with us to weep
Her little spirit's swift remove—
This story of the Alpine sheep
Was told to us by one we love:

They in the valley's sheltered care
Soon crop the meadow's tender prime,
And when the sod grows brown and bare,
The shepherd strives to make them climb

To airy shelves of pasture green,
That hang around the mountain's side,
Whose grass and flowers together lean,
And down through mists the sunbeams slide.

But naught can tempt the timid things
That steep and rugged path to try,
Though sweet the shepherds call and sing,
And seared below the pastures lie.

Till in his arms their lambs he takes,
Along the dizzy verge to go;
Then, heedless of the rifts and breaks,
They follow on o'er rock and snow;

And in those pastures lifted fair,
More dewy soft than lowland mead,
The shepherd drops his tender care,
And sheep and lambs together feed.

This parable, by nature breathed,
Blew on me as the south wind free,
O'er frozen brooks that float unsheathed
From icy thraldom to the sea.

A blissful vision through the night
Would all my happy senses sway,
Of the good Shepherd on the hight,
Or climbing o'er the starry way,

Holding our little lamb asleep;
And like the burden of the sea,
Sounded that voice along the deep,
Saying, "Arise and follow me."

DR. JENNER AND VACCINATION.

It has been lately resolved to erect a bronze statue in London to the memory of the eminent Dr. Jenner, the great discoverer, or at least the great agent of extending vaccination; and it is proposed to aid in the erection of this testimonial by subscriptions in America. At such a time it cannot be improper to look at the man and his labors.

Every one knows that small pox was formerly one of the greatest plagues of our world, sweeping myriads into untimely graves, and where it existed in its mildest forms it carried off one in fourteen of the whole population. Whenever it appeared in Ceylon, entire villages were abandoned; in Thibet, on one occasion, the capital was deserted for three whole years; in the Russian empire two millions of human beings died of the small pox in twelve months. Bernouilly calculated that fifteen millions fell victims to it every twenty-five years, taking the whole world, or six hundred thousand annually; and whole tribes of the North American Indians have been destroyed by this fearful malady.

To Lady Mary Wortley Montague we are indebted for her determination and courage in having her son innoculated in Turkey, and her daughter subsequently in England; her example was followed by the Princess of Wales, who caused her two daughters to be innoculated. This custom was opposed even by eminent men, who denounced it as an attempt, at once impious and unavailing, to counteract the visitations of an all-wise Providence, asserting that in the case of the adults who voluntarily submitted to it, it was suicide; and in respect to children it was murder. A London clergyman named Masey, declared that it was no new art, as Job had been innoculated by the Devil.

Notwithstanding that some good was done by innoculation, it was still true that multitudes died of small pox; and within the memory of persons now living, many thousands were deprived of their beauty by the marks the disease left behind it.

At a comparatively early period some glimpses of a preservative against this plague existed; for when a lady in the days of Charles the Second, told the beautiful Duchess of Cleveland that she would soon deplore the loss of her beauty from the effects of the small pox then raging in London, she replied there was no ground for fear, as in her own country she had undergone an attack of the cow pox, which was a preservative; and the attention of Jenner was first attracted by hearing a country girl saying that she had cow pox; but not one in ten thousand believed in it as a remedy from small pox. Not a single physician in the known world then practiced it.

The 17th of May, 1749, gave birth, in the vicarage house of Berkley, in Gloucester, to Edward Jenner, son of the estimable clergyman of that parish. He was a child and youth of great promise, and having received a good preparatory education in the neighborhood of his native town, he entered on the study of medicine, and, after a time, removed to London, where he placed himself under the care of the distinguished John Hunter. From this enthusiastic and successful cultivator of the science of life, Jenner caught the true art of philosophical investigation. The friendship between Hunter and his pupil lasted through life. After several years' study, Jenner returned to his native town, where he practiced medicine, and distinguished himself by scientific studies. A paper of his on the singular habits of the cukoo, was inserted in the Transactions of the Royal Society, and attracted much attention.

It was now that the fact came before him that the servant girls who milked the cows of that neighborhood, usually took a mild disease from the teats of the cows, and were ever afterwards protected from the small pox. The incident rivited his attention, and he commenced a careful investigation of the whole subject. He communicated his views to Hunter, who replied, "Do not think, but try; be patient, be accurate." This encouraged him to persevere, notwithstanding the sneers and determined opposition of his medical neighbors, who omitted no opportunity of expressing their contempt and even abhorrence of his views. However, on three different occasions he vaccinated his own son, and in 1788, he first published an account of it, which attracted the attention of medical lecturers in London, one or two of whom mentioned it in their lectures of that year.

But it was not till 1798 that the subject was fully understood. Dr. Cline successfully tried the plan, and Lady Ducie, and the Countess of Berkley broke through the prejudices of the day, and caused their children to be vaccinated. The inspector-general of the military hospitals favored it, and in the following year the children of the Duke of Clarence were vaccinated, and a feeling in favor of this protective remedy began to spread. Jenner now began to watch for the realization of his hopes, that the scourge of small pox would soon be eradicated from the world, but the opposition of many eminent physicians and surgeons was inveterate. Still the cause slowly gained ground; he was tempted by large offers of support to remove to London, but refused to do so; and others realized the pecuniary advantages to which he was justly entitled; vaccine institutions were opened both in England, and (notwithstanding the war) on the continent of Europe, and eminently succeeded.

Before, however, vaccination had been heard of in Paris, it was known in the United States, the American public being made acquainted with it through the medium of the newspapers, as "Something curious in the medical line." There, too, it was destined to be opposed. Sermons were preached against it, and the leading physicians of Philadelphia pronounced it "too beastly and indelicate for polished society." But truth and good sense prevailed. President Jefferson, with his sons-in-law, vaccinated nearly two hundred persons among their own connexions, and soon the practice became almost universal.

In Europe, the cause made progress; the British Parliament voted large sums of money to advance it, efforts were successfully made to introduce it over the whole continent of Europe, and it was shown in the British House of Commons that 2,000,000 persons had been vaccinated, of whom not one had died of the affection. Strange tales were, sometimes, however, told about it. A lady complained, that since her daughter was vaccinated, "she coughs like a cow, and has grown hairy over her body;" and in one part of England the practice was discontinued because those "who had been innoculated in that manner bellowed like bulls." Still the practice gained ground, many clergymen began to vaccinate in the vestries of their churches gratuitously; among these, the eminent Rowland Hill vaccinated many thousands, and many private gentlemen, and even ladies, practiced the art.

On the whole, Jenner was greatly encouraged. From every part of the world he constantly received letters expressive of gratitude, admiration, and congratulation. When the continental sovereigns visited London in 1814, he was cordially received by the Emperor of Russia. He died in a good old age, with his general health and mental faculties unimpaired till the last. His death, occasioned by apoplexy, took place of course very suddenly, on Jan. 20, 1822, in the 74th year of his age. He was buried in the chancel of Berkly church, and a monument to his memory was erected by his professional brethren. Most cordially do we hope that the civilized world will now do itself justice, by the erection of a statue which may proclaim to future ages his worth, and the public gratitude. [Christian Times.

HONESTY IN MERCANTILE LIFE.

Setting aside the golden rule of loving one's neighbor as one's self; and what we may call the silver rule of setting one's affections on things above, not below; how is it with the simple copper rule of "Honesty is the best policy?" Does that hold in commerce?

I must confess that the persons who excite my suspicions most against merchants are the merchants themselves, when I see the excitement produced among them when any one does an honest act—for instance, pays his debts after failure. It is remembered for years, and whenever the name of the individual is referred to, it is trumpted to his honor. Now, although it is pleasing to see this theoretical respect for simple honesty, still when we look closer, it is alarming that it should be so rare as to be talked about. Thus I remember reading in Anson's voyages, that nearly all the shops in Canton have on the signs the words "Pau Hau," or "no cheating here." Now when a man thinks it necessary to announce on his sign, "no cheating here," though it does not demonstrate that he does not cheat, it proves pretty well that some of his neighbors do; and the more general the announcement, the greater the suspicion; and so of this similar phenomenon in our mercantile community. If it is so generally understood that honesty is the best policy, pray why this sensation when any is politic enough to try it?

I sometimes think that the habits of caution prevalent among us, the excess of documentary transactions, notes, endorsements, receipts, have rather a tendency to encourage fraud, by constantly suggesting the thought of it, and seeming to reduce the whole thing to a game of skill. I have been confirmed in this, by hearing that in places where there is less attention to these things, and more trust in honor, the trust is better repaid. For instance, I am told that it is so in the West Indies and Spanish America generally. Mr. Schoolcraft, who was Indian Agent at Lake Superior for twenty-five years, said that he had never known an Indian to break a promise in the way of business. I read in a recent essay on the Commerce of Brazil, that the slave trade being contraband, is carried on entirely upon honor; "and hence," the author adds, very simply, "fraud is of rare occurrence." One wishes trade in general could be declared contraband, if such be the result. And there is an anecdote in point of Mr. Fox, the British statesman. A tradesman who had often dunned him in vain for payment of a note, came in one day and found him with two hundred pounds before him, and claimed his share. No, said Mr. Fox, this is for a debt of honor I owe to Sheridan. Then, said the tradesman, I make my debt a debt of honor, and threw the note in the fire. Mr. Fox acknowledge the obligation, and paid him at once. [Hunt's Merchants' Maga.

DEVIL WORSHIP IN CEYLON.

The last annual report of the English Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society contains a letter from Mr. Ripton, missionary of the Society in the southern province of Ceylon, in which he gives the following account of devil worship in his field:—

The people are all in theory all Buddhists—in practice, all devil worshipers. Within four miles of my house there are sixteen Buddhist temples. In one of these alone there are thirty priests! The whole number of priests in this circuit is perhaps five hundred. It is "not by (human) might nor by power" that we can prevail against such a host as this! Frequently in the dead of the night I hear the music from the devil dances in the neighborhood. I have attended these midnight orgies; and it is only by doing so that any person can form an idea of the strength with which this superstition binds down an otherwise acute, ingenious, and intelligent people. Never did a Christian congregation in England listen with more unbroken silence; nor an audience in Exeter Hall hang with more complete absorption of soul on the lips of its most chosen speakers, than these people do on the frantic gestures, and hideous yellings, and senseless incantations of the devil priest. To their conceptions, he is penetrating the invisible world and communing with spirits. His ascendancy over their minds is complete. He is the great intercessor between devils and men, for the removal of all evil, and the bestowment of all good; for the devil is still the same liar who said of old, "All these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me!" Without the priests nothing can be done. If a house is to be built, if a journey is to be taken, if a child is to be born, devils must be propitiated, and their favor secured; but especially in cases of sickness where all ordinary methods of cure have failed, devil dances and incantations are the last resort, the poor deluded wretches often dying in the midst of the ceremonies, although the priest has perhaps offered a fowl in sacrifice, dug open graves and slept in them, and fried eggs in human skulls, in order to obtain the necessary influence to perform the cure! An evil so wide-spread and so deep-rooted will not be easily destroyed; and a conviction of its magnitude, and of the necessity of resorting to extraordinary measures for its extinction, has grown upon me daily.

The System Tested.

The whole system of devil worship received a severe shock last autumn, at Matura, its great stronghold. The priests there are considered the cleverest in the Island; and Mr. Murdock, the Secretary of the Singhalese Tract Society, being at that place on business, challenged the priests publicly, and offered them a large reward, if they would cause any of their incantations to take effect upon him by causing him to fall down dead; for these priests profess to be dispensers of death to the living, as well as of life to the dying. They used all the methods of preparation already mentioned, sleeping in graves for many nights, and met Mr. Murdock, in the presence of many hundreds of Singhalese, who had gathered together to witness the experiment on the day appointed. Their first effort was to evade the challenge. They excused themselves on the ground that they should be tried for murder if they killed him. Application was therefore made to the government authorities, and an undesired permission obtained for them to do their worst. Their next attempt was to intimidate. Their incantations never failed—his death was certain if they tried them—and he had better save himself at once, and run no risk. When this failed, they were driven lastly to the test, and a miserable failure it was! They stood reading their incantations, burning resin, and blowing its fumes upon him, for more than an hour; and the people "looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly; but after they looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds"—if not with reference to him, at least with reference to the power of these charms. A derisive cry was raised throughout the crowd, and the devil priests have since been hooted through the streets of Matura!

MISSIONS IN ST. HELENA.

In New York, on Sunday morning, Nov. 16th, Rev. J. McGregor Bertram, of St. Helena, delivered a highly interesting address on the Missionary Work of that Island. Mr. Bertram having designed laboring among the natives of South Africa, had spent some time at the Cape of Good Hope. While there, a young man, a native of St. Helena, who had come to the Cape to carry on his business, became a Christian, when he presented the claims of the Island to the churches at the Cape as a missionary field. St. Helena is a rock in mid ocean, 1,800 miles from the Cape of Good Hope, 2,600 miles from Rio Janerio, 1,200 from the African coast, and 600 from the Island of Ascension; and with its lofty and precipitous cliffs rising from 500 to 2,000 feet in hight, it is like a vast rock in the sea. Yet, though forbidding in its approach, on entering the harbors, and penetrating into the valleys, the most delightful climate, the most lovely valleys and landscapes, and the most romantic pictures of natural beauty, are to be met with, probably unsurpassed in any part of the world. The Island is about thirty miles in circumference, and nine to ten in diameter. The population is about 7,500—composed of 1,500 whites, 1,000 liberated Africans rescued from slave ships, and 5,000 natives, who are a mixture of Portuguese and Africans early introduced in the brilliant period of Portuguese discovery and navigation. They are ignorant and degraded, and were without any knowledge—without the idea of a soul or of a God—until they were taught by the missionary. Being three-fourths colored, they had been enslaved by the whites, until the glorious period of British emancipation. Mr. Bertram, on the representation of the young convert before spoken of, turned his attention to this island, as a missionary field. He was the first dissenting minister who had ever entered the harbor for the purpose of settling there. The account the speaker gave of the first preaching, the first convert—a young man of the finest talents and education, who is now an ordained minister in one of the churches—the gathering of the natives, and their habits, together with the occasional descriptions of natural scenery, were highly interesting. It is but about five years since he first went to St. Helena, and there is now a church of whites, and two native churches, and several Sunday schools. Mr. Bertram is seeking assistance to support this mission, and to build houses of worship for the poor natives. [Tribune.

THE VOTARIES OF PLEASURE.

The New York Herald has published a statement of the numbers attending places of public amusement in that city, designating the capacity of the buildings, and the amount of the receipts. The editor states that in every instance the numbers have been obtained from the proprietors, or their confidential employees. Sixteen places are specified, and the following results are reached:—

"Thus, then, in round numbers, there are 44,000 persons, in one day, attending our places of public amusement, and the receipts amounting to $21,000. This number, and the money expended, present a curious phase in the growth of our prosperity. There can be no stronger evidence that the necessaries, the comforts, and even the luxuries of life abound, when such an enormous sum is expended in a single day upon the amusements of the people."

As we read the article, and glanced at the stated capacity of the parquette, dress circle, private boxes, gallery, second and third tiers, &c., of the Broadway and Bowery theatres, furnishing accommodation for 8000 people, we were disturbed with thoughts more sad than curious, and calculated to inspire us with fear of a future harvest, rather than any rejoicing over a present prosperity. How significant is the Scripture description of the children of disobedience: 'Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.'

Twenty thousand dollars a night in one city for pleasure! Five nigths per week, at this rate, exhibits an annual expenditure of $5,200,000. The contributions for Foreign Missions by all the professing Christians of the United States, do not exceed $500,000 per annum; so that if the Herald's statement is correct, more than ten times as much money is spent in a single city, for the purchase of unsatisfying wordly pleasure, than is contributed by all the Christians in the land, to fulfill the commission of their Lord, among Jews, Turks, and heathens. "Preach the gospel to every creature." Lovers of pleasure give full proof of their devotedness to the object of their affection. Would that Christian men and Christian women might be found giving equal demonstration of supreme regard to the kingdom of their Lord.

The pleasures of the ball-room, the theater, and kindred places, will pall upon the taste, and in numberless instances pollute the heart and demoralize the life; but the pleasure which arises from doing good, from serving God and blessing man, will from a perennial spring of joy, which the changes of life, the approach of death, or the solemnities of judgment, will neither disturb nor destroy. [Episcopal Recorder.

HOW JOHN KNOX GOT A WIFE.

Knox used to visit Lord Ochiltree's family, preaching the gospel privately to those who were willing to receive it. The lady and some of the family were converts. Her ladyship had a chamber, table, stool, and candlestick for the prophet, and one night at supper, says to him, "Mr. Knox, I think you are at a great loss by want of a wife," (he was then a widower) to which he said, "Madam, I think nobody will take such a wanderer as I," to which she replied, "Sir, if that be your objection I'll make inquiry to find an answer 'gainst our next meeting."

The lady accordingly addressed herself to her eldest daughter, telling her she might be very happy if she could marry Mr. Knox, who would be a great reformer, and a credit to the Church; but she despised the proposal, hoping her ladyship wished her better than to marry a poor wanderer.

The lady addressed herself to her second daughter, who answered as the eldest.

Then the lady spake to her third daughter, about nineteen years of age, who very frankly said, "Madam, I'll be very willing to marry him, but I fear he'll not take me," to which the lady replied, "If that be all your objection, I'll soon get you an answer."

Next night, at supper, the [illegible] Mr. Knox, "Sir, I have been cor[illegible] a wife to you, and find one [illegible] o which Knox said, "Who is sh[illegible] e answered, "My youngest dau[illegible] y you at the table." Then addr[illegible] the young lady, he said, "My [illegible] willing to marry me?" She [illegible] sir; only I fear you'll not be [illegible] me." He said, "My bird, if y[illegible] take me, you must take your ve[illegible] providence as I do. I go through the country sometimes on foot, with a wallet on my arm, a shirt, a clean band, and a Bible in it; you may put something in it for yourself; and if I bid you take the wallet, you must do it, and go where I go, and lodge where I lodge." "Sir," says she, "I'll do all this." "Will you be as good as your word?" "Yes, I will." Upon which the marriage was concluded, and she lived happily with him, and had several children by him. She went with him to Geneva, and as he was ascending a hill, as there are many near that place, she got up to the top of it before him, and took the wallet on her arm, and sitting down said, "Now, good man, am I as good as my word?"

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 27, 1851.

A Proclamation,

By Washington Hunt, Governor of the State of New York.

The goodness of Almighty God has been signally manifested towards the people of this State during the present year. The blessings of liberty, national tranquility, and public health, have been enjoyed without interruption. The fruits of the earth, in overflowing abundance, have rewarded the labors of the husbandman. Public improvements have been advanced. The truths of knowledge and religion are more widely diffused, and our republican institutions have been preserved and strengthened.

A just sense of these beneficent dispositions should inspire universal gratitude toward our Divine Benefactor, and call forth appropriate demonstrations of homage and adoration.

Therefore, in compliance with usage, I respectfully recommend to the People of this State the observance of THURSDAY, the TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY of NOVEMBER NEXT, as a day of Prayer, Thanksgiving, and Praise.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto affixed my hand and the privy seal of the State, this sixteenth [L. S.] day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

By the Governor. WASHINGTON HUNT.

James F. Ruggles, Private Secretary.

EFFICACY OF PRAYER.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Would it comport with your other duties to write an article on prayer? Of late the subject has been made one of some conversation in the circle of my acquaintance, and views I find obtain quite the reverse of what I supposed the Bible taught. For instance, it is maintained that prayer does not affect an absent person, or one who is not present when the prayer is offered, and no farther than the one who offers the prayer has communication with the one prayed for. It is also maintained, that when prayer is made, even at the ordaining of a minister, the prayer has no influence to make the one prayed for a better man, except he hear the words of the prayer. Farther, that prayer does not and cannot influence God to send the Holy Spirit into the heart of the one prayed for, except he is present and hears the prayer.

A good article on this subject appears to be needed. I am afraid that semi-infidelity is fast gaining ground.

Remarks.

The epithet "semi-infidelity" is not a whit too strong for the doctrine which our correspondent complains of. Those who argue, that prayer cannot affect the condition of another person any farther than as he himself hears the petition, and has communication with the person praying, must have made up their minds to reject some of the most plainly-taught truths of Divine Revelation. We can scarcely conceive how a Christian can give utterance to such stuff. In the mouth of a Deist, it would be characteristic enough; but that any one professing subjection to a Master, who taught his disciples to pray, not only for themselves, but for others, should talk thus, takes us a good deal by surprise.

Why does Christ enjoin the believer to enter into his closet when he prays, and to shut the door, if it is so essential that those should hear for whom supplication is made? Certainly, not merely that the suppliant himself may be benefited by the effect which his devotions are supposed to have upon his own mind; for in that case he receives his reward in secret; whereas the reward which the Father bestows is said to be an open one. "Thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Hence it is evident that the benefit of prayer, so far as the suppliant is concerned, consists in someting more than the effect of the exercise itself upon his own mind; and if so with regard to himself, why not with regard to others also, for whom he makes supplication?

He has, we will suppose, an ungodly relative—a son, perhaps—whom he would gladly see turned from the power of Satan to God. But this son is far, far away, and the tidings which the father hears from him serve only to wring his heart with anguish. He cannot talk to that son; he cannot communicate with him. But in the fullness of his grief he is on the point of turning into his closet, to ask God to stretch forth his hand and save him. Just at this juncture he is met by one who tells him, "It will do no good, so far as your son is concerned. He is too far away to hear your prayers; and prayer does not affect an absent person, or one who is not present when the prayer is offered." The father looks at his miserable comforter for a moment, and then answers the fool according to his folly, saying, "It is not to my son that I am going to offer my prayer, but to my Father who seeth in secret. My Saviour encourages me to expect an answer."

It is true that God is unchangeable. Our prayers can excite in Him no new feelings, to which he was before a stranger; they call into existence no new purpose, which he had not formed from eternity. But how to reconcile this necessary attribute of the Deity with what the Scriptures teach concerning the efficacy of prayer, is not quite so clear. What then? Shall we reject what the Scriptures teach, because our puny little minds are incapable of grasping the mystery? No. Both of these propositions—the unchangeableness of God, and the efficacy of prayer—are matters of revelation, and we will receive them both, though we know not how to make them agree together. God sees their agreement, and that is enough for us.

What says an inspired Apostle? "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." James 5 : 16. And how does the Apostle illustrate this point? By showing what effect prayer has upon the minds of other persons hearing it? Not at all. But by showing what Elijah effected, when he prayed "earnestly" that it might not rain; and again when he prayed that it might rain. The instance was one in which the effect produced upon the minds of others, who, peradventure, may have heard his supplications, could have had nothing to do in bringing about the result. The Apostle cites this instance as an encouragment to all believers. Nay, he cites it as an encouragement to pray under circumstances in which the effect upon the mind, either of suppliant or hearer, can contribute just as little to the desired result, as it did when Elijah prayed. "Is any sick among you? Let the elders of the church pray over him. The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."

What said another Apostle, when writing to a brother beloved? "I trust that through your prayers I shall be given to you." Philemon, 22d verse. Indeed! Did the Apostle expect that the heathen authorities at Rome, by whom he was held in bonds, (ver. 10, 13, 23,) would hear or know any thing about the prayers of Philemon at Colosse, or care about them if they did know, so as to be moved to set the Apostle at liberty? There is no twisting of this Scripture to make it mean any thing else than what it says. It is a clear and unmistakable recognition of the efficacy of prayer under circumstances where none but God can be supposed to hear.

Again, had Moses' prayer nothing to do in turning away God's anger from the Israelites when they rebelled against him? They made and worshiped a calf when Moses delayed to come down from the mount. God was angry, and said to Moses, "Let me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven." But Moses would not let him alone. He fell down before the Lord, and prayed. He accompanied his prayer with fastings, and he continued to do so forty days and forty nights. What was the result? "The Lord hearkened unto me at that time also." Now it is worthy of remark, that not only does Moses himself recognize in this case a direct answer to his importunity, but the Psalmist, referring to it afterwards, expressly attributes the deliverance of the Israelites to that "effectual fervent prayer." "Therefore he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath." Ps. 106 : 23. Let not the argument from this case be evaded by saying, that Moses' prayer and fasting, being witnessed by the Israelites, moved them to repentance, so that God could consistently with his eternal purpose save them, whether Moses prayed or not. For there is no evidence that the Israelites did witness the transaction. The contrary appears to have been the fact. The whole transaction appears to have taken place on the mount, before Moses came down from it. See Deut. 9th chap.

Had Abraham's prayer nothing to do with the healing of Abimelech, king of Gerar? (Gen. 20 : 7, 17.) Had Moses' prayer no influence to bring about a respite from perdition to Pharaoh? (Ex. 8; 8, 12, 13, and 9 : 28, 29, 33.) Had Samuel's prayer nothing to do with bringing thunder and rain in the midst of wheat harvest, (1 Sam, 12 : 17, 18.) Had Job's prayer nothing to do in saving his three friends from being dealt with according to their folly? (Job 42 : 8, 9.) Was it of no avail that king Hezekiah prayed to the God of Israel, when besieged by a blasphemous heathen? (Isa. 37 : 21.) Was it of no avail that Hezekiah prayed for himself, when he was "sick unto death?" (Isa. 38 : 5.) Was it of no benefit to Peter, when he was in prison, bound with two chains, and guarded by two soldiers, that "prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him?" (Acts 12 : 1—11.) Did Paul think that the prayers of his brethren would do nothing towards securing his deliverance from "unreasonable and wicked men?" (2 Thess. 3 : 2. Compare Rom. 15 : 30, 31, and 2 Cor. 1 : 10, 11.)

But we need not multiply examples. The efficacy of prayer is so abundantly testified in scripture, that we wonder how any man, professing to receive the Bible as an inspired book, can call it in question. "Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened to you." "Pray without ceasing." "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint." Our heavenly Father will "give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." Moreover, we are expressly taught, that "the Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth. He will fulfill the desire of them that fear him; he also will hear their cry, and will save them."

We feel distressed in view of the developments made by our correspondent. If such views obtain any considerable prevalence among us, we may as well give up the battle at once. For unless God can hear and answer our prayers, and send his Holy Spirit into the hearts of those for whom we pray, that they may be made obedient to the truth, we are fighting against a most fearful odds, and defeat is inevitable. The subject is too important to be dropped here, and we shall recur to it again, Providence permitting.

T. B. B.

Catholic Regard for Religious Liberty.—The Rambler, a Roman Catholic journal published in England, and edited by a Puseyite clergyman, now a Catholic layman, thus delivers itself:—

"You ask, if he [the Pope] were lord in the land, and you were in a minority, if not in numbers, yet in power, what would he do to you? That, we say, would entirely depend upon circumstances. If it would benefit the cause of Catholicism, he would tolerate you; if expedient, he would imprison you, banish you, fine you—possibly he might even hang you. But be assured of one thing: he would never tolerate you for the sake of 'the glorious principles of Civil and Religious Liberty.'"

In the same spirit the Paris Univers, a Catholic periodical of considerable character and influence, recently gave place to an article applauding the burning of John Huss, and wishing Luther had been served the same way; which, being criticized, the writer repeated, in these words:—

"As for myself, what I regret, I frankly own, is, that they did not burn John Huss sooner, and that they did not likewise burn Luther; this happened because there was not found some prince sufficiently politic, to stir up a crusade against the Protestants."

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday in Scotland and France—Protestant Chapels in Rome—Popery in Ireland.

Glasgow, November 7th, 1851.

The old Sunday Laws of Scotland seem to be falling into disuetude, as indifference in practice abounds. In the very metropolis, where the Alliance for the maintenance of man's day in opposition to God's holy day has its office and its fullest influence, the law officers refuse to lend their aid in the cause, when solicited urgently so to do. Mr. R. K. Greville, Secretary to the Edinburgh Sunday Alliance, states this week, that in June last an attempt had been made to exhibit a walking match in adjacent grounds, which it was designed should not be interrupted on Sunday. The Committee of the Alliance, he says, put themselves into communication with the legal authorities to ascertain how far such a case came under the cognizance of the statutory and common law of Scotland. The answer was of a discouraging character; but the man who was to walk broke down before a Sunday ensued. But a few weeks ago another walking match was commenced in the neighborhood of Edinburgh, to extend through a thousand successive hours and half hours, &c., which if completed will embrace ten Sundays; and visitors are invited, and refreshments sold in a cottage or tent at the place on Sunday. The Sheriff of the County was applied to by the Alliance Committee, to have this prevented; but that functionary states that he cannot interfere unless there were a breach of the peace. "Although the Confession of Faith is part and parcel of the law of the land," says the disappointed Secretary, "the machinery for rendering it effective has in course of time become feeble." The Alliance Committee, at a meeting on the 29th ult., in order "to ascertain precisely the actual state of the law" affecting cases of public Sunday desecration, appointed a sub-committee to prepare a memorial for the opinion and advice of Counsel, with the view if necessary of applying to Parliament. The Committee also resolved to recommence the agitation of the Sunday Post Office Question. But the Secretary intimates that the funds of the Sunday Alliance have fallen greatly in arrear and need to be replenished. From the zeal manifested in giving Prizes for Sunday Essays, and in the distribution of the Essays, it is much more probable that money may be collected than that Parliament will be disposed to reënact some of the old Scottish Sunday Statutes. Every such discussion is more likely to loosen the reins than to tighten them on those who, either from conviction or indifference, are disposed to return the Sunday to its rightful place among the "six working days."

The missionary at Tahiti who protested against the anniversary feté in honor of the establishment of the French Republic, appointed by the Governor to be observed upon a Sunday, has been justified by the verdict of a jury—or rather, according to the intimation, the crime libeled has been found not proven. This case is however fitted to suggest to those who are so anxious to procure the sanction of irreligious civil governments in behalf of Sunday, how soon they may find these governments persecuting themselves on account of its observance. Sunday-keeper, as well as Sabbath-keeper, may yet feel that there does exist a power which dislikes the semblance of submission to divine authority as well as its reality. In France itself amusements rather than worship still form the chief occupation of the Church's day at all times; and on one Sunday last month, at Paris, M. Burnel, an aeronaut, made an ascension from the Park of Rambouillet, in a balloon, filled, or partially filled rather, with pure hydrogen gas. The ascent was rendered exceedingly perilous by circumstances; but, not to disappoint the assembled thousands, who had congregated to contribute their quota to the general testimony of Christendom in favor of Sunday observance, the aeronaut resolved to gratify them at the hazard of his life. He rose into the air, it is stated, with the rapidity of an arrow, and in a few minutes had attained the height of about 2000 metres.

The Pope has withdrawn the sanction which a year ago he gave to the American Chapel for Protestant worship within the walls of Rome. Although granted in gratitude to the Consul of the United States for his successful interference for saving the College of the Propaganda at the period of the revolution, it was a very remarkable concession. It never had the full sanction of the Cardinals, and has been found an inconvenient precedent; and worship can now be observed only at the Consular residence without the city walls, near to the granary which is used as the English Chapel. This seems an impolitic move at the present juncture; for it affords but little encouragement to similar efforts in any emergency in future, while the latest intelligence implies that they may soon again be equally requisite. The Naples correspondent of the Daily News says that 30,000 troops are being collected at Gaeta, and that there are appearances indicative of an apprehension that the Pope may again be obliged to make it his place of residence. When the subject of an effort to procure authority for the removal of the English Chapel within the walls of Rome was discussed in our House of Lords, in August last, the Marquis of Lansdowne stated that no application had hitherto been made to the Court of Rome, and he was confident that when any just complaint should be made on the subject by British inhabitants of Rome to our Secretary of State for the Foreign Department, he would not be slow in making application for its redress. As we doubt not that this hint was acted upon, and complaints made to our Foreign Secretary, it is not improbable that the privilege has been withdrawn from the subjects of the United States in consequence of applications of the British Government for the extension of it to English residents. If so, the Marquis of Lansdowne will have been well justified in the opinion he expressed on the occasion alluded to, when he said he did not think that such application would be attended at present with success, "as it was an established maxim of the Court of Rome, to have one degree of toleration for others at Rome, and another for itself in all other countries."

Since the passing of the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, intended as some restraint upon Popery, the priests and dignitaries of that system in Ireland have become more virulent than before. It is, however, alledged, that through more zealous labors of Protestant missionaries and Bible distributors in that benighted land, many hundred converts have been received into the Episcopal Church; and we are disposed to credit the report from the violence with which the Popish organs denounce those who are stated to have labored thus successfully. "Hell Opened in Drogheda," is the title of an article on the subject in the latest number of The Tablet, the Dublin newspaper of the fiercest party of Rome's agents in this country. As vast numbers continue to emigrate from Ireland, taking with them their priests, they carry with them fountains of ignorance and intolerance to curse the land of their adoption. The census revealed a large diminution of population in that island, and the drain seems still on the increase—priests who remain in certain districts, confessing to the fact that their flocks are only a third of what they were. Strange to say, Peru has an agent at Cork, asking Romanists to emigrate thither—offering even to pay two-thirds of the passage money. Meanwhile the Irish Encumbered Estates Commission continues to dispose of numerous large properties. Many of these have come into the hands of Englishmen, some into the hands of Scotchmen. Whether agriculturists introduced may better the condition of the peasants who remain, is yet to be seen. Without a change of teachers and religion, our hopes for Ireland from any other source are small.

J. A. BEGG.

A JEW'S OPINION OF SUNDAY-KEEPING.

In "The Occident and American Jewish Advocate" for November, we find a well-written article on the Jewish Ministry. In speaking of the disadvantages under which Israelites labor in consequence of their comparative fewness, and of the ease with which any popular doctrine can be promulgated, the writer illustrates his idea as follows:—

"Let no one tell us, for example, that the Sunday is observed so much more strictly in England and America than in continental Europe, from sincere conviction of its necessity on the part of the masses; but we think that we should come nearer the truth, were we to aver, that it is from the fortuitous circumstance that, at the reformation in Scotland, the opponents of the Romish church borrowed and applied to themselves the Bible phraseology, which otherwise only denotes and speaks of Israel proper, and thus clothed the church festival, the Sunday, with the dignity of the Jewish Sabbath; and from the fact that the Puritans, in emigrating hither, brought over with them the ideas that prevailed in this respect among them in Europe, coupled with the fact that the respecters of the Sunday have always employed all available means to force its observance by penal enactments upon others, which ultimately succeeded in inducing the greater number of those who, as elders or ministers, have the direction of public opinion, in blindly conceding to the first day a degree of sanctity not warranted by anything derived from primitive Christianity; and that this has of late years again contributed to induce the common people to yield their acquiescence in the same direction, for fear of being marked and denounced as irreligious, by which means they would naturally suffer great inconvenience. That this might produce great injury to many, no one acquainted with the course of business in a community will deny. Let there be several candidates for public office, and our word for it, that he who most flatters the majority, by adopting their mode of dress, conduct, and speech, will obtain their suffrages, in preference to him who has the independence to avow his own opinions, and to carry them out in his daily practice. Mankind do not love contradiction; and no matter how liberal we may be, we will be pleased with the irresistible flattery which any one pays us in adopting our ideas as the basis of his thinking and acting."

The Emperor of China.—The following statement, which appeared in the last number of the Annales de la Propagation de la Foi, is calculated to create considerable sensation in the Christian world:—

"The young Emperor of China, who succeeded his father at his death in February, 1850, having at his accession rejected the demands addressed to him by the Mandarins for permission to persecute the Christians within his dominions, published a decree in the month of June, in the same year, permitting the free exercise of the Christian religion throughout his dominions. The Emperor at the same time invited four missionaries to wait upon him, who are to be lodged in his palace. Monsignor Perroneau, Bishop of China, has informed us, in a letter dated 5th of September, 1850, that the Emperor was educated by a Christian lady, in whom the late Emperor placed unbounded confidence. A similar education had been formerly given to some of the Roman Emperors during the three centuries of persecution, and the Christians had thereby obtained an occasional respite, so valuable for the propagation of the faith amongst those naturally timid souls, who, in all times and countries, have been the most numerous."

CHEAP POSTAGE.

At the Merchant's Exchange in New-York, on the 18th inst., a large meeting was held at the call of the New-York Cheap Postage Association, for the purpose of taking into consideration the rates of postage on newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, and other printed matter, imposed by act of Congress of March, 1851; and also to petition the Natonal Legislature to modify them, so that the rates may be simple, uniform, and cheap, and thus encourage rather than retard the diffusion of knowledge through every section of the Union. After organizing by the appointment of ex-Mayor Harper, Chairman, and a long list of other officers, the following resolutions, presented by Barnabas Bates, and advocate by several speakers, were adopted:—

Whereas, It has been the policy of Congress since the formation of our Government to encourage the diffusion of knowledge by fixing the postage at the lowest possible rates, consistent with the support of the Post-Office Department; and whereas, at the first establishment of the Government, newspapers were sent free of postage, and afterward, when taxed with postage, it has been comparatively at so low a rate as not to be felt as a burden.

And whereas, At the last session, Congress departed from the liberal policy heretofore pursued, by passing an act which has increased the postage on newspapers, periodicals and printed matter to an extent which amounts almost to a prohibition; and whereas the rates are not only burdensome, but so complicated that few persons are able to understand what postage they are required to pay; and whereas said act, or so much of it as relates to the postage on newspapers, periodicals and printed matter, is peculiarly burdensome and obnoxious to the people, inasmuch as it retards the diffusion of knowledge through the medium of the press; therefore—

Resolved, That the rates of postage on newspapers, periodicals, pamphlets, and all other printed matter, should be uniform and cheap, so that any person may understand what he has to pay, and so low that the postage should not be felt as a burdensome tax.

Resolved, That the postage on newspapers should not exceed a uniform rate of one cent to any part of the Union, and the postage on periodicals and other printed matter, one cent an ounce, allowing publishers, who desire to prepay the postage, fifty per cent. discount.

Resolved, That a Committee of seven persons be appointed to prepare a bill and petition in conformity with these views, to be presented to Congress at the next session, and to adopt such measures as they deem expedient to relieve the people and the press from the present burdensome and obnoxious tax on knowledge.

Resolved, That the delegation from this City be earnestly requested to bring this subject immediately before Congress, and to use their best exertions to effect the passage of a bill reducing the rates of postage on newspapers, periodicals, and other printed matter, so that the evils now felt may be removed.

Resolved, That we recommend to our fellow-citizens generally, and especially to publishers, editors, printers, in other towns and cities of the Union, to call public meetings, and prepare petitions to Congress, urging upon that body the necessity of an immediate modification of the law in relation to the postage on newspapers, periodicals and printed matters.

The Catholics and Politics in Canada.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Toronto, Canada, says that there is no effective party organization in Upper Canada, except among the Roman Catholic electors, who every where insist on separate schools for the children of that communion, at the public cost, and refuse to vote for any candidate who will not pledge himself to advocate their views. In many instances, the Reform candidates have given way on this point; for, in several constituencies, the Roman Catholic electors are sufficiently numerous to hold the balance of power between these two parties; and as their rule is, under the direction of Bishop Charbonnell, always to make their politics subservient to their religion, they stand ready to cast their vote for that candidate, belong to what party he may, who is most willing to claim for them all they want as Catholics. In several instances the Catholic Institute of Toronto has sent special emissaries to oppose Parliamentary candidates who are known to entertain, or who had expressed, views inimical to the claims of that denomination.

Wesleyan Missions.—The report of the English Wesleyan Missionary Society for 1850-51, shows that the Society has under employment 418 missionaries and assistant missionaries, besides 14 supernumeraries. Of these 205 are principally connected with the Heathen, Negroes, and converts from heathenism, and 210 labor among Europeans and British Colonists. There are also 864 paid catechists, teachers, &c., and 8,071 gratuitous Sunday school and other teachers. Connected with the missions there are 104,235 "full and accredited church members," of whom 73,935 are chiefly among the heathen; and 80,070 scholars. The receipts of the Society for the last year were 104,661*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*, and the expenditures 113,767*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* The number of "principal stations or circuits" occupied by the Society is 322, and the number of preaching places more than 3,000.

A Missionary Church.—The Christian Chronicle says the Baptist Mariner's Church, New York, is emphatically a missionary church, as the following facts clearly evince. She has two regular missionaries. She sends out a considerable number of self-sustaining missionaries. She is in her members composed of sixteen nations. And last month, she received into her fellowship seven persons, two by letter and seven by baptism, belonging to seven different nations.

Yale College.—It appears from the Annual Catalogue of this venerable Institution, that there are now connected with it in the various departments of study 558 students; Theological students, 38; Law students, 27; Medical students, 37; students in the Arts, 16; Undergraduates, 440, viz: Seniors, 92; Juniors, 112; Sophomores, 121; Freshmen, 115. These are divided among the States and other countries as follows: Connecticut, 140; New York, 90; Massachusetts, 66; Pennsylvania, 85; Ohio, 13; Maine, 9; Louisiana, 9; Georgia, 8; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 7; Kentucky, 6; Illinois, 6; New Hampshire, 5; New Jersey, 5; Virginia, 5; Tennessee, 5; Alabama, 4; Vermont, 3; Wisconsin, 2; Delaware, 1; Rhode Island, 1; Texas, 1; South Carolina, 1; Maryland, 1; District of Columbia, 1; Quebec, 1; Nova Scotia, 1; Constantinople, 3; Sandwich Islands, 2; China, 1; Scotland, 1. Total, 558—leaving only seven States—Iowa, Michigan, Arkansas, North Carolina, Indiana, Florida and California, unrepresented.

Progress of Protestants in Ireland.—A correspondent of the London Times, after detailing the proceedings of a tour of the Bishop of Tuam, to the several missionary stations in Connemara, says:—

"There appears to be a favorable impression towards the Protestants at the present time in all the places I visited. There was no disturbance or annoyance given by the people. The power of the priests is, from some cause or other, on the wane. In what I have written I have merely stated facts. I do not express any opinion as to the movement, but I have merely reported what I have seen and heard. It is reported by credible witnesses, that in the district through which I have traveled for the past week, nearly 5,000 persons have left the Church of Rome. There are certainly large numbers of Romanists, or persons who had left that church, at all the stations I have visited; and with many of these I conversed, who appeared to be sincere and intelligent, and who were quite able to assign reasons for the step they had taken."

Bibles coming from China to America.—The following letter, from the Rev. Dr. Boring, Superintendent of the M. E. Mission in California, bearing date of May 30th, will be read with interest by the friends of the Bible, as affording new evidence that God is rapidly preparing the way for the evangelization of the earth:—

"A vessel has arrived at this port from Shanghae, China, from which I am in receipt of a letter from the Rev. B. Jenkins, of the 10th of April, dated at that place, by which I am informed that he has sent to my care fifty copies of each of the four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles, for distribution among the Chinese of California. Think of this. How strange that China should so soon send the Word of Life back to the American shores, and become a contributor to the missionary work of the very people through whose instrumentality and worthy representatives it has so recently been sent thither!"

Hawaiian Annexation.—The Independent says that Mr. Jarves, the historian of the Sandwich Islands, is now the agent of the Hawaiian government to negotiate for the admission of that nation to the American Union. The A. B. C. F. M. have expended a million and a half of dollars in the missionary work, and there are now nearly a thousand Americans resident there, mostly engaged in the cultivation of coffee and sugar, one man having $90,000 invested.

New York: Past Present, and Future; comprising a History of the City of New York, a Description of its Present Condition, and an Estimate of its Future Increase. By E Porter Belden, M. A., Projctor of the Model of New York. Prall, Lewis, & Co., 76 Nassau-st.

The fifth edition of this work, revised and brought up to September, 1851, has just been issued. It contains a map of the city, some twenty plates of noted buildings, and over 150 pages of descriptive and statistical matter, interesting to every resident and visitor of New York. The last half of the book is devoted to advertising, and gives one an idea of the business of the metropolis. The whole makes a very desirable work for reading or reference,

Anecdotes of Literature.—Gould & Lincoln, of No. 59 Washington-st., Boston, have just commenced publishing, in numbers, Arvine's Cyclopædia of Anecdotes of Literature and the Fine Arts, containing a copious and choice selection of Anecdotes of the various forms of Literature, of the Arts, of Architecture, Engravings, Music, Poetry, Painting and Sculpture, and of the most celebrated Literary Characters and Artists of different countries and ages; with numerous illustrations; the whole classified under appropriate subjects, alphabetically arranged. The work will be issued semi-monthly, comprising eight numbers, at 25 cents each, forming together one large beautiful imperial octavo volume of more than 700 pages.

Book for Organists.—We have received a valuable book for young organists, entitled "Schneider's Practical Organ School," containing all necessary instructions in fingering, management of stops, pedals, etc., together with a great variety of exercises, interludes, easy and difficult voluntaries, &c., to which is added a complete Treatise on Harmony and Thorough Bass. Published by Oliver Ditson, Boston. Sold by Gould & Berry 297 Broadway, and Mason & Law, Park Row, New York.

The Fulton Hotel, kept by J. E. Johnson and Clarke Rogers, at 144 Fulton-street, New York, is a very quiet, pleasant, and economical stopping place for gentlemen visiting the city. Kept as it is on the European plan, it enables persons to suit their meal hours to their tastes or their business; while the courteous treatment and honest dealing which are invariably met there make strangers feel perfectly secure and at home.

General Intelligence.

Awful Calamity and Loss of Life.

On Fifth-day, Nov. 20th, New York was the scene of a most fearful calamnity, which resulted in the death of about fifty children, and the maiming of many others. It seems that about 2¼ o'clock on that day Miss Abby Harrison, Principal of the Female Department of Ward School No. 26, in Greenwich Avenue, while she was hearing the recitations of a large class, was attacked with a momentary paralysis of the tongue. She tried to speak, but only made an unintelligible noise. In her effort to speak, her face was drawn into disagreeable contortions, and the children in the class became alarmed, and made a loud screech, which attracted the attention of the whole of the school. A rush was immediately made by the children of the department to the doors, and they commenced to descend the circular stone steps at a rapid rate. The cry of fire was now raised, and Miss Whitney, the Principal of the Primary School, which was on the second floor, opened the door to see what was the matter; she was immediately forced down to the bottom of the steps by the rush of the children, and had scarcely been there two seconds before the railing by the side of the steps began to give way.

After Miss Whitney had been forced from the Primary School, the children took the alarm, and forced their way from the school rooms. Now a scene of the most horrible description presented itself; the railing having given way, commencing at the upright post at the bottom of the staircase, the force which came against it made it break from its fastenings from step to step, until the whole length was broken near half way up the staircase. The presure from behind still forced the children forward, and they began to fall down into the pit between the circular stone steps. Many of them struck their heads against the rough corners of the steps as they fell, and in about two minutes the children were lying at the bottom, one on top of the other, to the hight of from twelve to fourteen feet, in one confused mass.

During the time that this sad catastrophe was occurring, information of fire had been carried to the Police Station, and the fire bell was rung, which aroused the fire Department, and ladders were soon placed to the windows of the Primary Department on which a large number of the smallest children were passed down safely.

The police officers and others by this time had forced their way through the crowd of children at the front of the school, and they say that danger and death was the dreadful position of hundreds of poor children. The excitement being still great, they commenced removing the children one by one from their position, and soon the awful features of the catastrophe manifested themselves. Many children were injured badly, but were alive, and numbers of others were taken from the mass quite dead; some from the effects of the fall, and some from suffocation. About 40 were taken out quite dead, and one or two others died immediately after being released.

The bodies were taken to the Police Station, and the news spread like wild-fire throughout the whole neighborhood. Thousands of persons rushed to the spot, and mothers and fathers, frantic with grief, ran wildly from place to place, to find their children. One poor woman went into the Station-House and fround two of her children dead, and her cries and lamentations were the most piteous that human ears have ever listened to. One after another came to the Police Station, and found the bodies of their dead children, and by about 7 o'clock, 38 of them were recognized and taken to the houses of their disconsolate parents, and shortly after, the other four were also conveyed away, making the whole number killed 42!

The school house is a large four story building; the ground floor being unoccupied, and in the second story are the Primary Schools, the third story the Female Department, and the fourth story the Male Department. There were in attendance at the time of the sad occurrence, 1,851 scholars, besides teachers, viz: 763 in the Primary School, 508 in the Female Department, and 580 in the male; and the rush of more than one-half this number of children at a moment, and the force with which they pressed against the railing, was the cause of its giving way. The Principal of the Male Department, Mr. McNally, kept his boys mostly in school by putting his back against the door, and preventing their rushing out; otherwise the loss of life would have been much greater. The numbers killed belonging to the different departments, according to the most accurate statements, are 34 of the scholars of the Primary School; 5 of the scholars of the Female Department; and 3 of those of the Male Department, who it is supposed forced their way down before the teachers had time to prevent their leaving the room.

The following items concerning this sad casuality are taken from the daily papers:—

As near as we can give it, there have been FIFTY OR FIFTY-ONE children slain. The number of injured is supposed to amount to between SEVENTY-FIVE and EIGHTY.

It is said that one boy jumped from an upper window, intending to strike upon the roof of the neighboring house, but he came short and struck his head upon the eaves of the house with such force as to throw him back against the wall of the school-house, whence he fell to the ground, but most wonderfully escaped with his life, and will probably recover.

One boy, who was among the first to rush out of the door in the general panic, instead of running down stairs with the mass of his schoolmates, took the contrary direction, and from the landing above witnessed the fearful destruction of human life which followed.

One of the teachers states that some of the boys from the Male Department rushed down the back stairs, and were stopped by a door, which, like those in front, opened inward, and the back stairs presented a scene similar to that in the front entry, and one or two were fatally injured here.

Miss Whitney, one of the teachers who was reported to have been seriously injured, was not much hurt. She opened the door of her room to see what was the matter, and was swept at once down stairs, and succeeded in reaching the street.

Miss Harrison very soon recovered from the attack of paralysis, and at 9 o'clock in the evening was nearly well. She says she was perfectly conscious all the while, and would have given worlds if she could have uttered a word to quiet her scholars.

Capt. Lovett, Capt. Seabring, and Capt. Taft, and a number of their men, repaired to the building, and upon searching in and around the bottom of the well-hole, they found a cart-load of childrens' wearing apparel, consisting of shawls, bonnets, hats, shoes, stockings, carpet-bags, and other articles belonging to the dead and wounded children, all of which were conveyed to the Station House at Jefferson Market, where some of the garments were recognized by heart-broken fathers, mothers, sisters, and brothers, many of whom called at the Station, and when viewing the heap of clothing torn from the unfortunate little ones, in extricating them from the well-hole, they burst into a flood of tears, presenting a heart-rending and affecting scene.

The Coroner's Jury, in making their calls upon the several families to which the lost children belonged, witnessed some sad scenes. One house was No. 30 Greenwich Avenue. Two lovely little children, a brother and sister, who had both been taken up dead, were laid out on a couch. The girl, Debiana Woolley, 7 years, and one month old, was a beautiful creature even in death, and had been one of the most promising pupils of her age in the school—the boy, J. L. Woolley, was 9 years two months and twenty days old, and bore a great resemblance to his sister. The poor mother had only a short time previous lost one child, and this blow had made her childless. Since the melancholy occurrence she has been almost distracted.

The Coroner's Jury had a painful duty to perform, a visitation of mourning that lasted from about noon to six o'clock, of Sixth-day, sufficient to harrow the feelings of the toughest heart.

The parents of some of the dead children are very poor, as well as those of some of the injured scholars, and in some instances they were not even prepared with funds to bury their dead. Mr. Latson, on behalf of the Trustees, took a carriage and visited most of the bereaved parents, administering to their wants as far as he was able with the funds that were in his hands. He found the poor creatures, in some instances, in the deepest poverty, living in cellars and in back garrets, and to those who really needed it, he cheerfully gave relief. One poor widow woman, who had an injured child, was in the act of borrowing two cents to buy some biscuits for her offspring, when he entered, and on his supplying her with a few dollars to nourish the injured babe, which was only five or six years old, she shed tears of thankfulness for the gift, which prevented her utterance.

The subscription which has been entered into for the relief of the poor sufferers by the sad accident, has been well supported.

Many instances of heroism and self-sacrifice on the part of the children are told. One poor girl was on the staircase after the balustrades had gone, feeling herself fiercely pressed towards the edge of the fearful gulf, threw her arms around a younger girl next to her, who, having more support, stood in no immediate danger. The little one, feeling the grasp of her friend, said, "Anne, let go, please, or you will drag me down with you." And Anne did let go. A few instants she kept her footing, then reeled and fell upon the mass of sufferers below, where she met a speedy death.

An instance of fraternal devotion is told of one Alfred Gage, who, after reaching the ground floor in safety, saw his brother on the fatal staircase, vainly endeavoring to retain his footing. Alfred attempted to stem the living tide, and to make his way through it to assist his brother, but his efforts were fruitless, and placing himself below the little fellow, he told him to spring down, a hight of twenty feet. Thus called upon, the boy made the frightful leap into the arms of his brother, and both fell among the dying and wounded, without being the least injured.

At the time of the alarm, Miss Mary Higgins, one of the teachers of class K, had 80 children, from 7 to 10 years of age, in a class room 16 feet square. The panic seized them, and she could not restrain them. They escaped from the room, and three were killed; some of them jumped out of a window. The little ones were completely beside themselves, and quite a number began to take off their clothes and shoes. This was a singular move, but being commenced by some of the scholars, the rest followed their example, not knowing what they did.

There are many instances of painful mental suffering connected with this affair, but they are of a nature that forbids public delineation. We hear of two or three instances where the bereaved parents have manifested unmistakable signs of insanity. Such a dreadful misfortune, occurring at a moment and in a place where the most perfect security was the natural and reasonable anticipation, was quite sufficient to upset the firmest mental faculties.

Among the singular escapes which have come to our knowledge, we mention the following. A girl about 10 years of age jumped from one of the windows of the Female Department, and was partially caught by a man who saw the act. The girl escaped with only a sprained ankle, while the man was seriously bruised by the concussion.

THE RIO GRANDE INSURRECTION.—A dispatch from New Orleans, dated Nov. 19, says that Col. Carvajal, after waiting for reinforcements for several days, had been at last compelled to raise the siege of Matamoros, and fly from the city—his party suffering great loss at the hands of the Mexican troops.

The Rio Bravo, in an extra issued by that paper, gives still later accounts, and says that Carvajal was daily receiving large reinforcements, and had already commenced his return march to Matamoros, being determined to make one more effort to accomplish his object—the capture of the city.

Gen. Canales had arrived at Matamoros with 300 of the National Guard, and Gen. Ureya was expected soon with a force of 800 regulars, to strengthen the defense of that city.

Recruiting officers had been dispatched to the United States, and a report was current that it was Carvajal's intention soon to issue a declaration of Independence.

Business at Matamoros was seriously interrupted by the attempts at revolution, and scarcely anything was doing. Many persons had left the place, and others were daily leaving.

The boiler of the locomotive of the express freight train which left Hamburgh, S. C., on Friday evening for Charleston burst near Aiken, killing the engineer and two firemen. Three cars were damaged, and the Magnetic Telegraph line sustained some injury.

European News.

The steamer Africa, with Liverpool dates to Nov. 8th, arrived at New York on the 19th inst.

The advices by the Africa are more favorable, commercially. Cotton was more active, and market was about ½d better. Flour had also an improving tendency, and was in better demand. The state of trade in the manufacturing districts during the week had presented a more healthy aspect.

The principal topic of the English papers is the welcome paid by the people of England to the Hungarian patriot, in spite of the apathy of the Government and the leading aristocratic chiefs. Kossuth has delivered important political addresses to the Workingmen of London, and to a representation of the friends of Italy, frankly declaring his wish to establish a Constitution in Hungary similar to that of the United States.

The French Legislative Assembly was opened on the 4th inst. The Message of Louis Napoleon is a prolix document, for the most part destitute of the spirit and the language of Republicanism.

News from the Cape of Good Hope to Oct. 15th, had been received in England. The revolt and disturbances had spread from the mouth of the Buffalo to Mosheth's country and the Basutos. An aggravating feature in the last fatal attack on the British troops, by combined Hottentots and Kaffirs, was the employment by the former of fierce dogs, which pulled down several of the troops, and rendered them an easy prey to the clubs of their enemies. Capt. Oldham and many of the Second Queen's Regiment have been slain, and the 74th has lost some men. The troops are being collected, and some general movement is probably contemplated by General Somerset. It is also understood that the Kaffirs are collecting from 5,000 to 6,000 men with a similar object. There seems to be no prospect whatever of an early termination of the war. The total number of casualties, is two officers killed, sergeants four, rank and file twenty-three. Wounded: Officers four, sergeants two, rank and file twenty-five, missing eight. Colonel Mackinnon and Colonel Eyre had returned from patrols in the Fish River bush, having suffered severe loss without anything done. The official account of losses in the Fish River bush, is more dismal than it was even supposed to be. The return shows the serious total of seventy-eight casualties, of which no fewer than twenty-nine men were killed on the spot, two have since died of their wounds, and eight are unaccounted for, but have, there is little doubt, fallen by the hand of the enemy, thus making the loss in killed thirty-nine, and exactly the same number wounded. These casualties include six officers, being eight per cent. of the total number. It is affirmed that a great many of the enemy were killed in these severe combats.

Four Days Later.

The steamship Atlantic, with news to Nov. 12th—four days later—arrived at New York on Sunday morning last.

The advices by the Atlantic are not very important, but are generally favorable. There had been ⅛d advance in Cotton, with a large business doing in consequence of the short stock in the manufacturing districts. Breadstuffs were also in good demand, with an upward tendency.

Kossuth continues his triumphal career among the citizens and working classes of England. The aristocracy pay him no attention. His reception at Birmingham and Manchester was exceedingly enthusiastic. He was to sail for New York on the 14th.

It is stated by The Times, that the Crystal Palace will be preserved on its present site. The Royal Commission have voted to pay the builders £35,000 additional, which they would not have done were they decided to pull down the building. This makes £144,000 they have paid for it; the price of it if preserved will be £150,000.

The sub-marine Telegraph between England and France is completed, and was to be thrown open to public use on the 13th inst. The insulation of the wires is found to be perfect.

In France, the prospect is decidedly that the President's scheme for restoring universal suffrage as preliminary to his own reëlection will be defeated.

The King of Hanover has made his will. His recovery it not hoped for.

In Italy, Count Guerrieri and Baron Lutti, of Verona, have been found guilty of high treason—the former for having received an anonymous letter treating of the plans of the revolutionary party—the latter for having accepted an invitation to the house of Guerrieri, for the purpose of persuing, and afterward burning, that letter. The sentence of the military court adjudged ten years' imprisonment in a fortress to the count, and two years to the baron.

SUMMARY.

Mr. Thrasher, at Havana, has been tried and found guilty of treason, and sentenced to eight years in the chain-gang. He is to be sent to Spain. He is still in good spirits, and anticipates a reversal of his sentence. Mr. Owen, the American Consul, was present during the trial, and has used his endeavors to obtain Mr. T.'s release from the Captain General, but his labors were without effect.

A passenger by the Georgia states that the receipts of Gold from California per month will increase to six if not eight millions. He also states that he left San Francisco on the 15th ult., on the New Orleans, and that her passengers had in their pockets over $2,000,000. They were chiefly Western men, who went overland to the mines two years ago. They were bound to New Orleans.

The citizens of Stamford, Ct., have decided, by a vote in general meeting, to erect a large edifice for a High School, the expense of which is estimated at $5,000. The citizens of Naugatuck have taken measures for the erection of a suitable building for the same purpose.

In Waltham, Mass., on Sunday, Nov. 16th, a boy named Stearns, about 14 years of age, was accidentally shot through the heart, by his companion, another boy of about the same age. They were hunting for rabbits in the rear of the Central House.

A dispatch from Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 19, says: The Grand Jury have found true bills against 25 of the parties charged with being in the riot at Syracuse. The warrants have not yet been executed, and the names are suppressed.

H. B. Concklin, convicted of arson, was hung at Whitesboro, Oneida Co., N. Y., on the 21st inst. He was connected with a gang, others of whom are in danger of the same punishment. A confession which he dictated a few days previous to his execution, will probably be published.

Intelligence has been received at Utica of the murder of James Monroe, formerly of that city, near Salt Lake. It is stated that he there met a person named Egert, with whom he formerly had a difficulty, when Egert deliberately raised his gun and shot Monroe dead on the spot.

Thomas Kane, the keeper of an evil den in Boston, was, on conviction, sentenced by Judge Bishop as follows: For selling rum without license, $100; for keeping a disorderly house, $25, and for keeping a house of ill fame, one year's imprisonment with hard labor.

The Legislature of Rhode Island lately held a session of four days, chiefly devoted to the class of business called private bills. The House passed an act abolishing imprisonment for debt, but the Senate postponed it.

At a late fire in Portland, the office of Zion's Advocate and the Christian Mirror were destroyed and the editor of the latter paper lost many valuable volumes of pamphlets, which to a veteran editor is a calamity quite irreparable.

The Superintendent of the Rome and Watertown Railroad states that the earnings of the road for the present month will exceed $20,000, on a cost of $1,000,000. At the same rate for the year, the earnings will be $240,000. Allowing one-half for expenses, the net earnings of the road will be $120,000, or 12 per cent, on its cost.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch notes the election of Robert M'Clelland, Esq., formerly of Chambersburg, Pa., as Govenor of Michigan; and the election of Edward Johnston, Esq., formerly of Westmorland, Pa., and a brother of Governor Johnston, one of the Supreme Bench of Iowa.

Official information has been received at the State Department from our Consul at Honolulu of the loss of the whale ships Arabella and America of New Bedford, the Henry Thompson and Armada of New London, the Mary Mitchell of San Francisco, and the Sol Soltars of Fall River.

It is stated that the Directors of the Troy and Greenfield Railroad have contracted for the machine by which the labor of tunneling the Hoosic Mountains is to be performed, and that forfeitures are pledged on the part of the Company and the owners. The latter bind themselves to excavate twelve feet per day.

The authorities of Cuba have published an official account of the number killed and wounded on the Spanish side in the Lopez campaign. It is as follows—showing a remarkable disparity between the Spanish and American statements; wounded, 174; killed, 78; total, 252.

An effort is on foot for the complete endowment of the Bangor (Me.) Theological Seminary, (Congregationalist,) by raising $34,000. A large part of the amount has been subscribed, and the balance is confidently expected.

A little boy and girl, the first eight, and the other five years of age, arrived in Utica, recently, having come from Ireland alone. They had been sent for by their mother who resides in the above city.

A valuable mine of anthracite coal has been discovered in Charles River, about four miles from Astoria, Oregon by a man named Shein. The vein is said to be nine feet wide and three feet thick, and was discovered in digging a well.

An act to authorize the business of Banking has passed both branches of the Vermont Legislature. This act is similar in its main features to the general Banking Law enacted by the Massachusetts Legislature last winter.

Further discoveries of gold have been made at Port Phillip, Van Diemans Land, but we have no definite facts as to their extent or value. A coal field has also been found which surpasses any of those in the sister Colonies.

The Journal of Commerce states, that the imports into this country, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1851, were, $210,000,000; exports, $188,000,000, showing excess of imports $22,000,000.

The demand for Land Warrants is good, and we quote $140 to $150 for the 160 acre Warrants. There is little doubt that Warrants under the act of September, 1850, will be made assignable by the approaching Congress.

C. R. Mahony, Secretary of Father Mathew, is going to publish in Europe an account of his American tour, with various statistics and details in regard to this country and its institutions.

Gage, Hittenger & Co., of Charlestown, Mass., recently loaded a vessel with ice and apples, for Alexandria, Egypt. She carried out an ice-house.

The gold exported from San Francisco, in California, from the first of January last, to the first of August, amounted to $56,538,294, being nearly equal to seven millions per month.

The Cincinnati Commercial states that a number of Mississippi steamboat captains have resolved to abjure the use of intoxicating liquors.

President Fillmore is to give a grand Diplomatic Dinner to M. Kossuth, to which the Chevalier Hulsemann, the Austrian Minister, will be invited.

Col. H. L. Kinney offers to Kossuth and his companions ten thousand acres of land, situated on the Neuces River, in Texas, and as fertile as any in the Union.

The Congregational Church and the Female Seminary at Racine, Wis., were destroyed by fire on the 2d inst., The Church was insured for $3,000.

A mathematical wonder has appeared in Transylvania, in the form of a young girl of Wallachian origin, who cannot read or write, but solves the hardest questions in arithmetic in a moment.

There is great suffering in some parts of Spain, from the scarcity of grain and the high price of bread. In the City of Madrid it is worse than elsewhere.

Messrs. Jacob Little & Co., have sold their building, No. 44 Wall-st., N. Y., to the Bank of North America for the sum of $100,000.

Thurlow Weed, of the Albany Evening Journal, sailed for Europe last Sabbath, by steamer Baltic.

The rates of uncurrent Money in New York are: Eastern, ¼ per cent.; State, ½ per cent.; New-Jersey Tom Cat, ¾; old Jersey Banks, ¼; Southern, 1 and 1¾; Western, 1¼ and 1½; Tennessee, 3 per cent. The broken Banks are selling as follows: Farmers' Bank, Mina, 90 cents on the dollar: Bank of New Rochelle, 80 cents on the dollar: James's Bank, 75 cents on the dollar: Com'l. Bank, Perth Amboy, 50 cents on the dollar: People's Bank, Paterson, 15 cents on the dollar: Bank of Salisbury, 15 cents on the dollar: It is understood that the Farmers' Bank of Mina will resume sometime before the 1st of Dec.

The Harlem Railroad is about being finished to Chatham Corners, from whence the passenger train from New York will be taken over the Western Railroad to Albany, 23 miles. A company by the name of the "Lebanon Springs Railroad" has been organized to construct a road from Chatham to Hoosic River, north, which will unite the Harlem Railroad with the Western Vermont Railroad, thus constituting a great interior line of railroads from New York to Montreal.

The following New York Banks have notified the Bank Superintendent of their intention to wind up and withdraw their circulating notes: Adams Bank, American Bank, Champlain Bank, Cortland County Bank, Commercial Bank of Lockport, Knickerbocker Bank, McIntyre Bank, Merchants' Bank, Washington County; Merchants' Bank, Ontario County; Northern Bank of New York; Oswego County Bank.

A man was killed on Tuesday, while walking on the track of the New Haven Railroad, between New Rochelle and Williams' Bridge, being run over by a train which he had been waiting for at the former place.

Elisha M. Wolcott, who was found guilty of setting fire to the dwelling of Mr. Ellis, New-Haven, has been sentenced to the State Prison for life.

In North Carolina, a member of the Legislature, Col. Avery, shot a brother member, Mr. S. Fleming, dead in a public Court House, at Morgantown.

The loss of the brigantine Cooper, of New-York, with all hands, near Cape Race, is among the items of news brought us by the telegraph.

The U. S. Steamship Mississippi, with a part of Kossuth's company on board, arrived at New York on Second-day of the present week.

There are 1,500 grog-shops in Boston, of which 900 are kept by Irish, and about 100 by other foreigners.

Chateaubriand says, "In new colonies, the Spaniards begin by building a church; the French a ball-room; and the English a tavern.

A man in North Carolina, convicted of forgery, was lately sentenced to be whipped nine lashes.

The circulation of the New York Daily Times, at the close of the seventh week of its existence, was upwards of 15,000.

A North-east storm, last Thursday, caused a high tide, which flooded the streets and cellars on the East side of New York.

Robert Melton, a Mail rider, has been convicted at Savannah of Post Office robbery, and sentenced to the penitentiary for 8 years.

The amount of produce transported on the Erie Railroad is almost incredible, and is only limited by the capacity of the road.

Francis W. Kellogg, the Ohio shoemaker, has been in England for the last three months, lecturing on Temperance.

A bill permitting Atheists to testify under oath has passed the Vermont House of Representatives.

The Syracuse Star says there is good sleighing from Tully to Homer in that neighborhood.

A large company of missionaries left Boston on Tuesday, in the Esther May, for Honolulu.

The vote for a Free Banking Law in Illinois has been carried by 5,000 majority.

Richard Hines, ex-member of Congress from Virginia, is dead.

New York Market—November 24, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 87 a 4 94; Pearls 5 37.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 81 for State, 3 87 a 4 06 for Michigan, Indiana, and Wisconsin, 4 06 a 4 12 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 25. Corn Meal 3 31 for Jersey, 3 50 for Brandywine. Buckwheat 2 12 a 2 50 for 100 lbs.

Grain—Not much doing in wheat on account of an advance by holders; Canadian 86c., white Michigan 87c., Genesee 1 00. Rye 69c. Barley, dull at 80c. for two-rowed, prime Barley Malt 1 00. Corn 60 a 61c. for western mixed, 62c. for round yellow. Oats 35 a 36c. for Jersey, 38c. for State.

Provisions—Pork, 12 50 a 13 50 for prime, 15 00 for new mess. Beef, 4 00 a 5 00 for prime, 7 50 a 9 75 for mess. Dressed Hogs 6 a 6¼c. Lard 8 a 8¼c. Butter 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 10 a 16c. for Western New York. Cheese 6 a 6¾c.

Beans—White, 1 25 a 1 50 per bushel.

Beeswax—26½c. for Western yellow.

Flax—8 a 8½c. for Jersey.

Feathers—43c. for prime Western.

Hay—50c. for shipping.

Hops—30 a 35c. by bale.

Lumber—13 00 for Spruce and Pine.

Peas—Domestic, 73c. per bushel.

Wool—Domestic Fleece 36 a 42c., mostly 40 a 42c. Country Pulled 32c.

MARRIED.

In DeRuyter, N. Y., Nov. 8, by Eld. J. R. Irish, Mr. Perry B. Maxson, of Hopkinton, R. I., to Miss Mary S. Wilcox, daughter of Dea. W. D. Wilcox, of DeRuyter.

In Lincklaen, N. Y., Oct. 30th, by Eld. R. G. Burdick, Mr. David M. Heady, of South Plymouth, Chenango Co., to Miss Phebe L. Bosworth, of Pharsalia.

In Truxton, N. Y., Nov. 10th, by the same, Mr. Sylvanus Burdick, of Lincklaen, to Miss Rosetta Richmond, of Truxton.

In Lincklaen, on the evening of the same day, by the same, Mr. Samuel Burdick, of Truxton, to Miss Sally Burdick, of Lincklaen.

DIED.

In Alfred, N. Y., Nov. 9th, 1851, Mr. Jesse Whitford, in the 89th year of his age. Bro. Whitford embraced religion in his 69th year, and united with the second Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred, with which he continued a worthy and faithful member to the day of his death. For a few of the last years of his life, he was not able to meet with the congregations of the saints as he had been accustomed to previously. He has frequently expressed himself to the writer, during the present year, that he was ready to join the church in glory whenever his Lord should call for him. In his last sickness, he remarked that he feared the grave as little as his bed. Death was disarmed of all its terrors. He knew in whom he had believed, and he has gone to enjoy that rest prepared for the righteous. J. K.

In Plainfield, N. J., Oct. 19th, Mr. Francis Drake, aged eighty years. He was the oldest member of the Church at New Market, having been connected with the Church nearly sixty years.

LETTERS.

R. G. Burdick, W. C. Kenyon, W. M. Fahnestock, C. D. Langworthy, E. R. Maxson, S. Davison, C. Potter, W. C. Whitford, C. M. Lewis, E. Maxson, J. Kenyon, G. G. Hamilton, D. C. Green, A. P. Harris, D. Coon, D. & J. Edwards, J. Nash, A. H. Hills, C. M. Seley, I. D. Titsworth, S. S. Griswold, N. Spencer (they start together.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

David Stillman, Jr., Westerly, R.I.	$2 00	to vol. 8	No. 52
Ephraim Stillman, “	2 00	8	52
Miss M. A. Stillman, “	2 00	8	52
Bathsheba Lanphear, “	2 00	8	52
John Hiscox, “	2 00	8	52
Wm. R. Wells, Hopkinton, R. I.	6 00	8	52
Welcome B. Babcock, “	6 00	8	52
John H. Burdick, “	2 00	8	52
Wm. B. Haynes, Mystic Bridge, Ct.	2 00	8	52
Thomas Edwards, “	2 00	8	52
John Batty, “	4 00	8	52
Wm. E. Maxson, “	2 00	8	52
J. L. Dennison, “	1 00	8	52
Henry Chipman, “	2 00	8	52
Charles Mallory, “	2 00	8	52
Asa Fish, “	2 00	8	52
Charles Grinnell, “	2 00	8	52
Joseph Cottrell, “	2 00	8	52
Asa A. Avery, Mystic, Ct.	2 00	8	52
Benj. F. Collins, “	1 00	8	52
Lyman Dudley, Portersville, Ct.	2 00	8	52
B. F. Langworthy, Stonington, Ct.	2 00	8	52
E. B. Champlin, Waterford, Ct.	2 00	8	52
B. D. Randolph, N. Market, N. J.	2 00	8	52
John Pope, “	2 00	8	52
Samuel King, Colon, Mich.	2 00	8	7
C. Needham, Burr Oak, Mich.	2 00	8	52
Samuel Griffin, Farmington, Ill.	3 00	8	52
Nathan Spencer, East Winfield,	2 00	8	52
E. R. Maxson, Adams Center,	2 00	9	20
Joseph Davis, Alfred,	2 00	6	52
Joseph Edwards, Alfred Center,	2 00	9	10
Thomas T. Burdick, “	2 00	8	52
Wm. Maxson, Andover,	2 00	8	52
D. S. Remington, Independence,	5 00	7	26
Allen M. Wood, “	2 00	7	52
John C. Green, “	2 00	8	52
John C. Bassett, “	2 00	8	52
Wm. Reynolds, Spring Mills,	2 00	9	24
Jason B. Wells, DeRuyter,	2 00	8	52
Mrs. Harriet D. Wells, “	2 00	8	52
I. C. Burdick, “	6 00	5	52
R. G. Burdick, “	1 00	7	52
T. B. Stillman, New York,	2 00	8	52
A. Burt, Schenectady,	2 00	8	52
P. A. LaDue, St. Louis, Mo.	2 00	8	52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

New York and Erie Railroad.

DURING the Winter, trains will leave New York for Dunkirk as follows:—Mail Train at 8 A. M. Day Express Train at 12 M. Emigrant Train at 5 P. M. Evening Express Train at 5 P. M.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Winter Arrangements.

LEAVES New York at 9 A. M. and 4½ P. M., foot of Cortlandt-st.; at 11 A. M. (freight) and 4.10 P. M., Pier No. 1 North River—for Elizabethport, Elizabethtown, Westfield, Scotch Plains, Plainfield, Boundbrook, Somerville, Raritan, White House, Easton, &c.

New York and Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE, via Stonington, for Boston, Providence, New Bedford, Taunton, and Newport, carrying the great Eastern U. S. Mail, without change of cars or detention. The secure and elegant steamers C. VANDERBILT and COMMODORE leave on alternate days (Sundays excepted) Pier No. 2 North River, (first wharf above Battery-place,) at 5 o'clock P. M. For passage, state-rooms, or freight, apply at Pier No. 2, or at the office, No. 11 Battery-place.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co., have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Hoe's Cast Steel Circular and Long Saws.

THE subscribers manufacture from the best cast steel, Circular Saws, from two inches to five feet diameter. These Saws are carefully hardened and tempered, and are ground and finished by machinery designed expressly for this purpose, and are therefore much superior in truth and uniformity of surface to those ground in the usual manner. They require less set, less power to drive them, and are not so liable to become heated, and produce a saving in timber.

They also manufacture cast steel MILL, PITT, and CROSS-CUT SAWS and BILLET WEBS, of superior quality, all of which they have for sale at their Ware-Rooms, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st., or they may be obtained of the principal hardware merchants in the United States. R. HOE & CO., Printing-Press, Machine, and Saw Makers, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st.

The following extract is from a report made by a Committee of scientific and practical gentlemen, appointed by the American Institute:—

"Your Committee are of unanimous opinion, that in the apparatus invented by Mr. R. M. Hoe, for grinding saws, he has displayed great ingenuity and tact in the adaptation of machinery to the production of results in the manufacture of Saws, which may with propriety be denominated the ne plus ultra of the art."

Publishers of newspapers who will insert this advertisement three times, with this note, and forward us a paper containing the same, will be paid in printing materials, by purchasing four times the amount of their bill for the advertisement. nov13 3t

Chambers' Works.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. A selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time. Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Forming two large imperial octavo volumes of 700 pages each, double-column letter-press; with upwards of 300 Illustrations. Edited by ROBERT CHAMBERS. Embossed cloth, $5.

The work embraces about one thousand Authors, chronologically arranged, and classed as Poets, Historians, Dramatists, Philosophers, Metaphysicians, Divines, etc., with choice selections from their writings, connected by a Biographical, Historical, and Critical Narrative; thus presenting a complete view of English Literature, from the earliest to the present time. Let the reader open where he will, he cannot fail to find matter for profit and delight. The selections are gems—infinite riches in a little room; in the language of another, "A whole English Library fused down into one cheap book!"

☞ The American edition of this valuable work is enriched by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint Engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron; a full-length portrait of Dr. Johnson; and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson. These important and elegant additions, together with superior paper and binding, render the American superior to all other editions.

CHAMBERS' MISCELLANY OF USEFUL AND ENTERTAINING KNOWLEDGE. Edited by WILLIAM CHAMBERS. With elegant Illustrative Engravings. 10 vols., cloth, $7 50.

☞ This work has been highly recommended by distinguished individuals, as admirably adapted to family, Sabbath, and District School Libraries.

"It would be difficult to find any miscellany superior or even equal to it; it richly deserves the epithets 'useful and entertaining;' and I would recommend it very strongly, as extremely well adapted to form parts of a library for the young, or of a social or circulating library, in town or country."—George B. Emerson, Esq., Chairman Boston School Book Committee.

The above works are bound in various styles, prices varying accordingly. A liberal discount made to Booksellers and Agents. GOULD & LINCOLN, Publishers, 59 Washington-st., Boston.

Miscellaneous.

The Social System of Russia.

In Russia there does not prevail that marked distinction between the modes of life of the dwellers in town and country; which is found in other countries and the general freedom of trade, which in other nations is still an object of exertion, has existed in Russia since a long by-gone period. A strong manufacturing and industrial tendency prevails in a large portion of Russia, which, based upon the communal system, has led to the formation of what we may term "national association factories." And here again we find a portion of the St. Simonist theories of social reform actually carried into practice.

Operative industry in Russia is not based on the system of each place having a number of workmen of different trades, according to the amount of supply required by the immediate neighborhood alone; instead of this, the various articles are manufactured in gross, in large quantities, and then brought to the markets for sale in deta l. Hence the markets in Russia are of quite a different nature from those in most other countries, and one consequence of the system is that the national spirit of association has, in the course of time, highly developed itself. The tendency of manufacturing industry is thus, for the most part, entirely communal; the inhabitants of one village, for example, are all shoemakers, in another smiths, in a third tanners only, and so on. A natural division of labor thus prevails exactly as in a factory. The members of the commune mutually assist one another with capital or labor; purchases are usually made in common, and sales also invariably, but they always send their manufactures in a general mass to the towns and market places, where they have a common warehouse for their disposal. Besides this, there exists no such thing as a trade guild or company, nor any restraint of similar nature. Any member of a commune can at pleasure abandon the occupation he may be engaged in, and take up another; all that he has to do in effecting the change is to quit the commune in which his old trade is carried on, and repair to another, where his new one is followed. The cultivation of the soil in general is not very remunerative, and also can only be engaged in for a few months in the year, which are perhaps the reasons why the peasant in Russia evinces so great an inclination for manufactures and other branches of industry, the character of which generally depends on the nature of raw products found in the districts where they are followed. In the village of Wixen, for instance, in the government of Nishni Novogorod, where the majority of the inhabitants form an association for the preparation of leather, there also six glue manufacturers, two tallow candle makers, and eight large factories for the manufacture of hair rugs, which however, are also made in many houses as a sort of secondary occupation. Of all these articles, there are disposed of in the annual fair at Nishni Novogorod, more than 58,000 roubles worth, and in other less important markets 10,000 to 20,000 roubles worth besides.

In the government of Yaroslay the whole inhabitants of one place are potters. Upward of 2,000 inhabitants in another place are ropemakers and harness-makers. The population of the district of Uglitich in 1835 sent three million yards of linen cloth to the markets of Rybeeck and Moscow. The peasants on one estate are all candle-makers, on a second they are all manufactures of felt hats, and on a third they are solely occupied in smith's work, chiefly the making of axes. In the district of Pashechœ there are about seventy tanneries, which give occupation to a large number of families; they have no paid workmen, but perform all the operations among themselves, preparing leather to the value of about 25,000 roubles a year, and which is disposed of on their account in Rybeeck. In the district where the forest-trees mostly consist of lindens, the inhabitants are principally engaged in the manufacture of matting, which, according to its greater or less degree of fineness, is employed either for sacking or sail cloth, or merely as packing mats. The linden tree grows only on moist soils, rich in black humus, or vegetable mould; but will not grow at all in sandy soils, which renders it comparatively scarce in some parts of Russia, while in others it grows abundantly. The mats are prepared from the inner bark, and as the linden is ready for stripping at only 15 years of age, and indeed is best at that age, these trees form a rich source of profit for those who dwell in the districts were they grow. The Russian has a great disposition for wandering abroad. The love of home seemes to be merged, to a great extent, in love of country. A Russian feels himself at home every where within Russia, and, in a political sense, this rambling disposition of the people, and the close intercourse between the inhabitants of the various Provinces to which it leads, contributes to knit a closer bond of union between the people, and to arouse and and maintain a national feeling and a patriotic love of country. Although he may quit his native place, the Russian never wholly severs the connection with his native place; and, as we have before mentioned, being fitted by natural talent to turn his hand to any species of work, in general never limits himself in his wanderings to any particular occupation, but tries at several, and chooses whatever may seem to him the most advantageous. When they pursue any definite extensive trade, such as that of a carpenter, mason, or the like, in large towns, they associate together, and form a sort of trades' association, and the cleverest assume the position of a sort of contractor for the labor required. Thus, if a nobleman should want to build a house, or even a palace, in St. Petersburg, he applies to such a contractor (prodratshnik), lays before him the elevation and plans, and makes a contract with him to do the work required for a specified sum. The contractor then makes an agreement with his comrades respecting the assistance they are to give, and the share they are to receive of the profit, after which he usually sets off to his native place, either alone or with some of his comrades, to obtain the requisite capital to carry on the work with. The inhabitants who also have their share of the gains, readily make up the necessary sum and everything is done in trust and confidence; it is indeed, very rare to hear of frauds in these matters. The carpenters (plotniki) form a peculiar class of the workmen we have described. As most of the houses in Russia, and especially in the country parts, are built of wood, the number and importance of the carpenters, as a class, are very great in comparison with other countries. Almost every peasant, whatever other trade he may follow, is also something of a carpenter, and knows how to shape and put together the timbers for a dwelling. The plotniki in the villages are never anything more than these general carpenters, and never acquire any regular knowledge of their business. The real Russian plotniki seldom carries any other tools with him than an axe and a chisel, and with these he wanders through all parts of the empire, seeking, and every where finding, work.

Many also wander as grooms and coach-drivers; and every where, but especially in Moscow, we find a peculiar class, the drosky drivers (isvostshiki) formed of natives of all parts of the empire, for the Russian is a born coachman. One sees a lad of ten or twelve hanging all day, and sometimes all night, on one of the shafts of a coach; and there he eats and drinks, and makes one with his horse, and in 18 or 20 degrees of cold he will sleep sounldy on the back of his four-footed companion, apparently unheeding the inclemency of the weather. With his 17th or 18th year he advances to the dignity of a coachman on the box, when he manages to scrape as much together, by saving and speculating, as enables him to buy a horse and drosky of his own, together with a sledge for the winter, and from that time forward, his only dwelling is the small front seat of his drosky, or his sledge. In general two isvostshiki club together, and keep three horses for their two vehicles, so that each horse may rest every third day.

A large number of the wandering Russians are serfs, a circumstance which arose in the following manner: Peter the First and his immediate successors introduced branches of manufacture into Russia, and endeavored to force them into precocious activity. For this purpose they invited foreign manufacturers, gave them capital or made advances, granted them ground for their establishments, and, moreover, transferred over to them a number of serfs, generally a whole village, to make workmen of, who then stood in the same relation to their master as the serfs on an estate to the landlord; that is, they worked without receiving pay, while the manufacturers were answerable for their maintenance, clothing, and housing. Experience, however, soon proved that the Russian is a bad workman so long as he labors wholly for the good of another, while, on the other hand, he is exceedingly skillful and industrious when working on his own account. The consequence was, that the land-owners having serfs gave them permission to engaged in manufactures, and to seek for work for themselves where they liked, on the mere condition of paying their lord a personal tax (obrok.) Each person is rated according to his personal capabilities, talents, and capacities, at a certain capital, and according to what he estimates himself capable of gaining he is taxed at a fixed sum as interest of that capital. Actors and singers are generally serfs, and they are obliged to pay obrok for the exercise of their art as much as the lowest handicraftsman. In recent times the manufactory system of Western Europe has been introduced into Russia, and the natives have been encouraged to establish all sorts of manufactures on these models, and it remains to be seen whether the new system will have the anticipated effect of contributing to the formation of a middle class, which hitherto has been the chief want in Russia as a political State. [London Adv.

Western Cities

Rock Island City, in Illinois, capital of the County of that name, is romantically situated on the Upper Mississipppi. It occupies a central position in the County, about 356 miles above St. Louis. Its age as a city is only two years, having been chartered in the Fall of 1849. Its population amounts notwithstanding to 3,500. There are several public buildings, among which is the Court-House and five churches—two Presbyterian, one Methodist, one Baptist, and one Catholic. There are two large iron foundries, one steam saw-mill, five hotels, and several well-stocked stores. The water-power in the falls, between Rock Island, in the river, and the Illinois shore, is capable of working any quantity of factory or milling machinery. The Chicago and Rock Island Railroad will have its terminus there.

Directly opposite the City of Rock Island, on the Iowa side of the Mississippi river, stands the city of Davenport, the county seat of Scott county Iowa. This town was laid out in 1836, and at present boasts of a population of 3,000. It received a city character in the fall of 1850. It has two large steam flouring mills, three steam saw-mills, about twenty stores, two printing offices, five hotels, including the Le Claire House, which is the largest and most magnificent hotel in Iowa, a Court-House, one Church of each of the following denominations: Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, Catholic, Lutheran, Episcopal, and Disciples. There is also a Literary College on the bluffs, back of the town, which is under the direction of the Presbyterian Church. [Tribune.

How the Eye is Swept and Washed.

For us to be able to see objects clearly and distinctly, it is necessary that the eye should be kept moist and clean. For this purpose it is furnished with a little gland, from which flows a watery fluid, (tears,) which is spread over the eye by the lid, and is afterwards swept off by it, and runs through a hole in the bone of the inner surface of the nose, where the warm air, passing over it while breathing, evaporates it. It is remarkable that no such gland can be found in the eyes of a fish, as the element in which they live answers the same purpose. If the eye had not been furnished with a liquid to wash it, and a lid to sweep it off, things would appear as they do when we look through a dusty glass. Along the edges of the eyelid there are a great number of little tubes or glands, from which flows an oily substance, which spreads over the surface of the skin, and prevents the edges from becoming sore or irritated, and it also helps to keep the tears within the lid.

There are also six little muscles attached to the eye, which enable us to move it in every direction; and when we consider the different motions they are capable of giving to the eyes, we cannot but admire the goodness of Him who formed them, and has thus saved us the trouble of turning our heads every time we wish to view an object. Although the eyes of some animals are incapable of motion, as the fly, the beetle, and several other insects, yet the Creator has shown his wisdom and goodness in furnishing their eyes with thousands of little globes, and by placing their eyes more in front of their heads, so that these little insects can see almost around them without turning their heads. A man who has examined the eyes of a fly, says that the two eyes of a common one are composed of 8000 little globes, through every one of which it is capable of forming an image of the object. Having prepared the eye of the fly for the purpose, he placed it before the microscope, and then looked through both, in the manner of the telescope, at a steeple which was 299 feet high and 750 feet distant, and he says he could plainly see through every little hemisphere, the whole steeple inverted or turned upside down.

The Maine Liquor Law.

The Friends of Temperance in Bangor, Me., had a meeting in their City Hall on Friday evening, Nov. 14th, the Mayor in the chair, and all the leading clergymen among the speakers. Rev. Mr. Allen submitted a minute and full report on the effects of the new Law in that city, from which we extract as follows:—

The Law does actually and perfectly accomplish two things: 1st. It puts the temptation to drink out of men's way; so that if one will have liquor, he must take some trouble to find it, instead of having it thrust upon him. 2d. By making all liquor debts null and void, it saves the family of the drunkard from the necessity of penury and ruin. The remnants of the family property, of the wife's or widow's wages, or the children's scanty earnings, cannot be seized, as they could once, to feed the source of their misery. These two things the law does at once and perfectly accomplish.

* * * * *

The Maine Temperance Law of 1851 is "an act for the suppression of drinking houses and tippling shops." It provides that intoxicating liquors cannot be lawfully sold, except by certain salaried agents "for medicinal and mechanical purposes only." It makes the violator of it liable to search, fine and imprisonment. Without mincing the matter, it aims to break up the ruinous traffic, that breeds the poverty and vice that prey upon the State. It seizes and destroys the article unlawfully held. It compels the authorities, on suitable representation, to search shops or buildings for this purpose. It makes null and void all debts or contracts entered into for the unlawful purchase of intoxicating liquors. And this it does, with the view, first of defending the public peace and morals; and, secondly, of diminishing the burdens of the State.

How far have these two objects been effected in this city during the past quarter—the first of its operations here?

In answer to the first, we have the general testimony of our citizens, as to the greater quiet and better order of our streets, especially at night. We have the particular statement of a watchman, who has been constantly on duty for eight years, and who says that at no time, for all that period, have the streets been so safe and quiet. We have the notorious fact, that our watch-house and jail have been nearly tenantless, and that the 4th of July passed without a single commitment by the police. We have the favorable testimony of the city authorities, to the same general effect; and the assurance of the Clerk of the County Court, that "unquestionably" the expense of criminal prosecutions will be materially diminished by the working of this law. We have the report of the City Marshal, who presents a list of 20 places of sale closed—twelve of the dealers having left the city, and three having been committed to jail. And, finally, we have all this, in contrast to the disgraceful violence that took place in our streets last Winter—violence resulting twice in murder.

We have obtained from the proper sources the following statistics which will illustrate this matter in detail:

1. Commitments to the County Jail. Quarter ending

Sept. 30, 1850, for Drunkenness	12	Assault	7	Total	19
June 30, 1851,	11		3		14
Sept. 20, 1851,	3		5		8

Showing a difference in favor of this quarter of 6, as compared with the one previous, and of 11 as compared with the corresponding one of last year.

2. Commitments to the City Watch-house.

Quarter end'g June 30, '51	154	Cost to City	$258 80
Sept. 30, '51	51		75 73
Difference in favor of Quart.—Cases	103,	Cost	183 07

3. Number of places where liquor is sold, last Spring 106; at present, some 56; showing a diminution of near 50 per cent., while the quantity sold is estimated to be reduced about 75 per cent.

4. Amount of fines paid to the City Treasury $110.

5. Quantity of liquor seized and condemned, about 4,000 gallons; and a still larger amount reshipped to Boston.

6. The state of the streets and city, according to the City Marshal's statement, is "improved 75 per cent." as compared with the previous quarter.

A part of these statistics show merely the efficiency of the law, but we call more particular attention to those facts which show the actual decrease of crime, and the positive gain of public morals. In answer to the second question i. e. as regards the pnblic burden of Pauperism, we have the most ample and satisfactory statements. An Overseer of the Poor says: "The applications for aid for the last three months have not been half so numerous as the three preceding months. This I attribute to the enforcement of the late Liquor Law. It is, in my opinion, gradually but surely diminishing our pauper expenses; and I hope the day has already dawned upon us when this fruitful source of pauperism, misery and crime, will be entirely banished from our midst."

"Stand from Under."—It is wonderful to think that the Bunker Hill Monument is bending like a bow, backward and forward, every day, by the influence of the sun! As the sun during mid-day shines on the south side of it, that side expands, becomes longer than the north side, and the consequence is that it bends over towards the north. The same must be true of all other tall monuments, and also of tall chimneys, for some of the latter are five hundred feet high. This movement is not simply from the south towards the north, as at mid-day, but in the morning it must be westerly, at noon northerly, and in the evening easterly. These results have been unexpectedly ascertained by Professor Horsford in his pendulum experiments at Bunker Hill in reference to the rotation of the earth. And thus it has ever been in scientific pursuits; while searching carefully after one object, another is unexpectedly found.

Singular Physiological Observations.

At the last session of the Academy of Sciences, an interesting paper was read, being an account of the joint labors of three physiologists in a curious field of observation. It has always been a matter of knowledge that in warm-blooded animals, and especially in man, the temperature of the central parts of the body is remarkably steady during health, and that it is only under the influence of disease, or at the approach of death, that the temperature increases or diminishes. After having examined a large number of patients, either sick or dying, with a view of ascertaining the variations of heat or cold, the three savans made a series of experiments upon healthy subjects, by means of medicaments, introduced into the digestive organs or into the blood, with the same object. They obtained results easily perceptible by the thermometer. While it was seen to diminish the temperature, it was exceedingly difficult to elevate it. The most exciting substance never caused an increase over one-quarter as great as the decrease obtained by the administration of the sulphate of copper, the most active agent in destroying the vital heat. As a result of their experiments, they divide all medicinal substances into three classes, according to their effect upon animal warmth. The first embraces all those which increase the heat of any warm-blooded animal, such as strychnine, phosphorus, Spanish flies, sulphate of quinine, cinnamon, and the acetate of ammonia. The second includes such substances as diminish bodily heat; among the alteratives are iodine and corrosive sublimate; among the purgatives, the sulphate of copper; all the sedatives, as the acetate of morphine, laudanum, codeine and belladonna, and all lethargic agents, such as the cyanide of potassium. The third category includes all medicinal preparations which act differently upon the temperature of the body, according to the dose employed. The most violent purgatives, such as gamboge, coloquintida, and croton oil, when given in quantities insufficient to cause death, increase the temperature, after having diminished it for two or three hours. Others produce different effects, in large and in small doses.

Hints for Farmers.

Cabbages and Turnips should be suffered to remain out while the ground keeps open. When there is a pretty fair prospect for its freezing, they may be removed. Both these vegetables increase more rapidly in size after the advent of cold, than before. They also attain a certain crispness toward the close of the season, of which they are destitute at the earlier seasons of their development.

Cabbage, when removed to the cellar, should be immediately set out. A very slight sprinkling of soil about the roots, will cause them to keep fresh, and even to increase somewhat in size during the winter. It will also conduce considerably to the savoriness as an article of food, and retain them crisp and sweet.

A shed behind your horse-stable, is the most favorable place for the hens, during the winter. You can throw the manure from the stalls into it, and as horse dung, especially where the animals are grain-fed, ferments rapidly and powerfully, its heat will conduce to keep up a genial and summer-like temperature, highly advantageous to the fowls. By sprinkling sulphuric acid freely over the surface every few days, all the unpleasant and deleterious consequences resulting from the ammonial gas, evolved by the manure, will be neutralized, and saved for the benefit of the crops. Another important advantage attending this practice is the saving effected by the economization of the grain contained in the excrement. This, when the manure is thrown into a yard, or in heaps, is inevitably lost; but under the system herein recommended, every particle is saved. Hens accommodated in this way, if well fed, and supplied with meal, lime, ashes, chopped vegetables, buttermilk, &c., &c., will lay constantly, and be nearly or quite as profitable as during the summer months.

Rats may be expelled from your cellars and granaries simply by scattering a few stalks and leaves of mullen in their paths. There is something very annoying in this plant, to the rat. It affords, therefore, a very easy remedy for a most perplexing evil, and much more economical and less troublesome than gunpowder, "rat exterminators," cats, or traps. The mullen is a very common production, and may be found in almost every field, as well as in pastures.

Save the bones, and having mashed them, place them in a tub and pour over them a quantity of sulphuric acid. They will be dissolved, and may then be applied as manure to your turnip and other crops. Not a bone should be thrown away. [Germantown Tel.

Weather Wisdom.

A careful study of the thermometer has shown that a descent of the temperature of London from forty-five to thirty-two degrees generally kills about 300 persons. They may not all die in the very week when the loss of warmth takes place, but the number of deaths is found to increase to that extent over the previous average within a short period after the change. The fall of temperature,—in truth, kills them as certainly as a well-aimed cannon-shot. Our changing climate or deficient food and shelter has weathered them for the final stroke, but they actually die at least of the weather. * * * Instead of a warm summer being followed by a cold winter, the tendency of the law of the weather is to group warm seasons together, and cold seasons together. Mr. Glasier has made out that the character of the weather seem to follow certain curves, so to speak, each extending over periods of fifteen years. During the first half of each of these periods the seasons become warmer and warmer till they reach their warmest point, and then they sink again, becoming colder and colder, till they reach the lowest point, whence they rise again. His tables range over the last seventy-nine years—from 1771 to 1849. Periods shown to be the coldest were years memorable for high-priced food, increased mortality, popular discontent, and political changes.

[Dickens' Houshold Words.

Discoveries in Japanese Literature.—An American ship-of-war, cruising in the Japanese seas, picked up the crew of a vessel of that country, which had been wrecked. Lieut. Tennyson, of the Revenue cutter Polk, sends to the Secretary of the Navy a copy of the Japanese alphabet, which is executed apparently by hand, but with so much skill, it is said, that the work might readily be mistaken for lithography; a list of the names of the Japanese sailors, with their autograph signatures in the Japanese character; a representation of the compass found with them, and the Japanese numerals. The alphabet, as represented by Lieut. Tennyson's diagram, contains 48 characters, which consist of straight, oblique, parallel, crooked, and angular lines and marks, resembling thick and ragged scrawls with a bad quill-pen. The letters and names stand in perpendicular columns, and the order of reading is to begin with the right hand column and read down—the reverse of our method. These discoveries prove that the Japanese are a people among whom learning has been cultivated; and a hope is expressed that, through the rescued seamen, a more successful attempt will be made to open a communication with that people.

Gigantic Publishing Enterprise.

The most extensive enterprise of the present day, in the way of publishing, is progressing in Paris, under the sole direction of a Papal ecclesiastic, the Abbe Migne, who is said to be the originator of the enterprise. He has an establishment, embracing a printing office, stereotype foundry, and all other departments of book manufacture. Here is to be published a complete series of the chief works of Papal literature, extending to two thousand different volumes, and the price is to be such as to put then within the reach of the mass of the clergy of that faith. It is expected that a quarto volume of seven hundred pages will be produced at a price not exceeding one dollar seventy-five cents. The price of the whole, in separate volumes, will probably not exceed three thousand dollars. To the clergy, who subscribe for the whole set and pay for each work as it appears, the price will not exceed two thousands dollars; and the whole series is offered to those who pay in advance at a cost of one thousand two hundred dollars. Among the departments or topics of this vast collection, are the following: 1. Biblical literature, dictionaries, atlases, analytical tables, concordances; 2. Works of the (so called) Fathers, two hundred volumes; 3. Histories and Acts of Councils, eighty volumes; 4. Canon Laws, one hundred and fifty volumes; 5. Lives of the Saints, one hundred volumes; 6. Ascetical works, one hundred volumes; 7. Ecclesiastical and Universal Biography, one hundred volumes; 8. Controversial works, one hundred volumes; Ecclesiastical History and Geography, two hundred volumes; 10. Theological Encyclopedias, fifty volumes.

A Picture of Desolation.

A California immigrant, just arrived across the plains, gives the following description of the memorable "jarnado del muerto," on which so many thousands of animals and so many persons of last year's emigration perished:—

"If there is a section of country in God's wide extended creation that can surpass that large scope of country lying between Salt Lake Valley and Carson River for sterility of soil, scarcity of timber, and everything that has a tendency to cheer up the spirits of the wearied traveler, I am sure that I don't care to see it. From the sink of Humboldt River across the desert to Carson River, my heart was sickened at seeing the great destruction of property, viz: wagons, carriages and buggies, dead horses, mules and cattle, whose carcasses lie thick all over the ground, in a state of preservation, the skins and a good deal of the flesh being dried to the bones, the water, marshes and air being so strongly impregnated with alkali that it has a tendency to keep off the devouring insects and birds of prey. But the worst is not half told yet; to see every two or three hundred yards a grave, where a father, or mother, brother, or sister has been buried, but ere the train is out of sight, the corpse is disinterred by the prowling wolf or the savage Indian—the bones to bleach upon the great American Desert. Although I am rather a hardened sinner, yet when I saw the scene as just described, I could not refrain from shedding tears, and feeling myself more submissive to that mighty and powerful God who rules the universe."

A Good Garden.

No branch of husbandry is more neglected than the garden. Those farmers who live too far from market to indulge often in the luxury of fresh meat, are still content to dine on salt pork or beef, with the addition of potatoes only, rather than devote a few hours to the cultivation of a kitchen garden. Both health and good taste demand that a farmer's table should contain a full variety of vegetables. Radishes, lettuce, cauliflowers, beans, peas, tomatoes, beets, turnips, and indeed many others, should be found there in proper seasons, while melons and the small fruits will furnish the breakfast and evening board with healthful luxuries.

Raspberries, strawberries, and blackberries, may be grown almost without labor, and with due attention, their improvement in quality will fully compensate for the painstaking.

If farmers wish their children to be fond of home, they should at least furnish them with such luxuries as every journeyman mechanic would purchase in the large cities for the use of his family, particularly when he can do so at comparatively little cost. [Working Farmer.

The Saratoga of California.—The Journal decides that the Saratoga of California is to be in the South, near Los Angeles, at the hot springs which that paper gives the following description of:—

In this connection, we think of no better spot than Agua Caliente, a place well known to all who have visited Los Angeles. It is situated about 400 miles south of Stockton, and near 130 miles from the sea shore, on the ranche of Hon. Mr. Warner. The warm springs from which the place takes its name gush from a large ledge of rocks, near the base of the mountain, and after falling a short distance, empty into a cool mountain brook, which has its origin in the towering Sierra in the rear. This junction of cold and warm water creates an excellent bathing temperature, rendered healthy by a mixture of sulphur and other medical properties. The Indians appreciate this blessing very highly, as they have made a reservoir for the water, and from morning till night numbers may be found enjoying the comforts of an ablution. The morning is set apart for the women and children, and the remainder of the day to the men.

The son of Quintus Fabius Maximus advised his father to seize on a post, saying "It will only cost a few men." Fabius answered drily, "Will you be one of the few?"

Union Academy.

THE Academic Year of this Institution (located at Shiloh, N. J.) for 1851 and '52 commenced the first Wednesday in September, and continues forty-four weeks, including two vacations, of one week each, between terms.

The year is divided into three terms:

The First commencing Wednesday, September 3d, and ending Tuesday, December 9th.

The Second commencing Wednesday, December 17th, and ending Tuesday, March 23d.

The Third commencing Wednesday, March 31st, and ending Tuesday, July 6th.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. WHITFORD, Principal,
And Teacher of the Classics, Natural Sciences, and higher Mathematics.
Miss RUTH R. HEMPHILL, Preceptress,
And Teacher of French, Painting, Drawing, and assistant in Mathematics.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress.
Rev. J W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First	commences	Aug. 27	and	closes	Dec. 2.
" Second	"	Dec. 3	"	"	March 16.
" Third	"	March 17	"	"	June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

Board, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. Clarke, Sec. } of Trustees.
DeRuyter, July 18, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
No. 13—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
No. 14—Delaying Obedience. 4 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention isinvited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pp.
The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.
An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.
Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to George B. Utter, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New-York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville - Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Halsey Stillman.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond.
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.
Terms:
$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per yea will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.
☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.
☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.
☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to
Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 25.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 4, 1851.

WHOLE NO. 389.

The Sabbath Recorder.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

SERVING OUR GENERATION—NO. 2.

BY ELD. W. B. GILLETT.

We have, in the history of the past, an account of a poor shepherd's boy, who, having gathered some of the treasures of wisdom, wished for more. He went to a book-store, and inquired for a Greek Grammra. He was interrogated as to what he wanted of such a book, whether he could read Greek, and was assured that if he would read a sentence correctly, he should have a Grammer. He took the book; he read it, to their astonishment, and bore off his prize in triumph. That boy was John Brown, the author of the Bible Concordance.

Carey, the first Baptist Missionary to India, was a cobbler. He possessed a holy ardor, a strong desire to serve his generation, and to save souls; and while he toiled at his daily task, he faithfully applied himself to study, until a flame was lit up at Kettering, England, that has continued to burn, and has lighted up farther India, China, and the islands of the sea. From that small beginning, what astonishing results! As near as we can calculate, this small beginning of sending out Carey, has resulted in the employment of sixteen hundred missionaries, aided by five thousand native teachers. These are laboring around twelve hundred and fifty stations, and in connection with sixty printing establishments. Over one hundred and eighty thousand persons have already professed conversion to God, and over two hundred thousand more are brought under the teachings of Christianity. It was the cobbler Carey who kindled the first light at home, and was the first to penetrate the regions of darkness. Previous to this, some noble efforts were made to christianize the Indians of this country; and the names of a Brainard, and of an Elliott, must not be forgotten, for through their self-sacrificing labors they yet speak. And the missionary efforts of the Moravians, in the West Indias, in Greenland, and elsewhere, have not been without their good effect upon the world. Those who, Paul-like, labored with their own hands to support themselves and others, that they might preach the gospel, are well worthy of our imitation. But where are these laborious and self-denying men now? They have served their generation, and found, to the satisfaction and joy of their hearts, that a useful life secured to them a peaceful death. In our lives and labors, let us imitate them, that our deaths may be as peaceful as were theirs.

It may be not uninteresting to remember, that among us there have been, and now are, those whom we may with much propriety imitate. They are those who have laid the foundation upon which we are now building. Had they lived in this age, their circumstances would have been far different from what they were. They have done, probably, what we could not do, were we placed in their circumstances. In my opinion, the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination flourished more twenty-five or thirty years ago, than it does at this age, according to its gifts and numbers. To what shall this be attributed? Is it for the want of men who are willing to labor? I hope not. There is a greater amount of intellectual culture now than there was then. And this may be our ruin, if we apply it where we ought not. Of itself, it can never supply the place of the gospel, and those who attempt to make it, will find themselves, as did Samson, without strength. Let it accompany the gospel, and it will partake of its power. From the paucity of our numbers we may be forgetful of those who have gone before us. Some thirty years ago a Missionary Society was formed, and its meetings were held in connection with the meetings of the General Conference. Its design was to send missionaries among the destitute of our own denomination. Though some errors may have been committed in its management, yet I believe that it was a main-spring at that time to the denomination. Men who were appointed to labor under the patronage of that Society, did not expect to ride on steam-boats, stages, and rail-road cars, or to remain in the city and walk its paved streets, and be furnished with all the necessaries of life. No! Their families, their churches, their homes, were to be left. They were expected to take their saddle-bags, and their horse, already jaded with its home labor and toil, and with a few shillings in their pockets, and that borrowed, they penetrated the wilderness of Western New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Virginia, Indiana, &c., and whenever and wherever they found a settlement of human beings, wayworn and fatigued, they preached Christ to them. Subsisting upon the scanty fare of those warm-hearted pioneers, they laid themselves down at night, to sleep quietly and in peace.

In this picture, I am confident I have not exaggerated. There are those living who when they read this will say, It is is true. They know it; they have experienced it; and we may be assured of it, if we will take the trouble to look at their published journals in the Seventh-day Baptist Magazine. Although they who thus labored made sacrifices, and suffered, a full pecuniary reward they have never had, and never expect; but our Heavenly Father will never forget them. During the labors of those men, and the prosperity of that Society, the number of churches and ministers in the denomination doubled, and that too in a very few years. I bless God that some of those Fathers are yet with us, to counsel us, and to help us in guiding Zion's ship.

Have we at this age a desire to serve our generation? If so, how can we do it to the best advantage? God will give unto the best minds the widest field. All men have some points of contact. One true soul will touch the latent springs in others, the sparks will kindle, the voice of truth and justice will be heard. The man of God, who comes forth with proper credentials, having a heart to feel, must and will be heard. We have nothing to fear, then, but our own selfishness.

For some years past we have been doing something by way of missions. It has been principally by establishing and prosecuting the mission in China; and thus far it has been managed by men who have spent their time and money without charge to the Society. Pastors of the different churches have acted as agents. In this way we may yet sustain the China Mission. But there is a work, and a great work, to be done here, or the streams will be dried up. Churches are destitute of pastors; some of them are not in circumstances to support them; ministers are wanted, men of God, men who are active, strong, wise and prudent. We are just upon the frontier; yes, all Seventh-day Baptist Churches are on the frontier, surrounded by a formidable enemy. This we suppose is one reason why more encouragement is not given by destitute churches to young men; they fear they will not succeed; all want men of experience. To serve our generation as churches, give due encouragement to the gifts that are among us; not only by hearing them, but by looking out for them fields of usefulness, and recommending them as men that God has called and placed in the work. "The harvest is plenteous, and the laborers are few."

To serve our generation, we should have personal piety. It is expected that we as a people should have more religion than other people. For Seventh-day Baptist families to live without prayer and family devotions, to eat their meals without giving God thanks, for neighborhoods of them not to maintain prayer-meetings weekly, has a bad influence. It is not so much by our knowing the truth, as by our loving it, that we are to do good in the world. Things that would be connived at in others, would be thought criminal in us as a people. Cultivate deep piety, that the world be not disappointed in us, and that we be not charged with holding the truth in unrighteousness.

That we may serve our generation, it is needful that we increase our liberality. The ministry among us is not well supported. There is no need of trying to conceal it; it is known, and I am ashamed of it. How often are ministers of talent among us told "You must be conscientious; you might have a thousand dollars a year with such a people." It is pleasant to be believed to be conscientious, but should they be exposed to such temptations, when many of our churches are abundantly able to give to their pastors a good support? They are men of like passions with others. A young man, by labor, and industry, and the help of friends, obtains an education, intending to enter the ministry; but he finds himself poor; he looks, he thinks, he sees that ministers are poorly paid; he comes and offers himself as a school teacher; he can get from four to six hundred dollars a year in a country village for teaching school, with little or no expense, while the minister, who helps support him, who has a growing family, and the expense of a horse and carriage, the entertaining of friends, and a large proportion of the expenses of the church to bear, receives probably from two to four hundred dollars a year. And while the teacher receives his pay punctually, in cash, the minister is paid when it is convenient. A young lady, well educated, can get more salary for teaching than many churches pay their pastors. This is not necessary. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth." We are able, abundantly able; and it will be for our interest to give to our pastors a good support, and at the same time double our missionary contributions.

How many thought, a few years ago, that to send one missionary to the heathen would impoverish us. We have not only sent one but four, and it has cost more to sustain them than we at that time expected, and nearly four thousand dollars have been sent to them to build a chapel. Who has been impoverished by it? No one. Are there any who want back what they have paid? And it would have been for the interest of others if they had made an investment there too. Our own country is before us, and the time is near when it will be necessary that we should place missionaries on the Pacific coast. Who will go? Fathers and bretheren in Christ, let us make this great boon our own, to serve our generation, that fountains may be opened to supply the wants of the present and coming generations as the demand may arise. Let us then approach the holy altar, in the Christian spirit, and, like the young Carthagenian, swear eternal enmity to every vice, and everlasting allegiance to the King of kings and Lord of lords, that our usefulness in our country, and in the cause of God, may increase, and our end be peace.

BUSINESS AND PRAYER.

The following sentiments, expressed in a few lines, are worth treasures to those who receive them and weigh their importance:—

"If a professed disciple would not have his secular business become as a mill-stone about his neck, to drown him in perdition, he must be a man of prayer; he must daily secure spiritual communion with God. If he suffer his business to consume his time and spirits, so as to deprive him of opportunities for prayer, reading the Bible, and real communion with God, he must decay in piety, and his service of God. No one who believes that God answers prayer, will think of omitting either secret or family devotion for want of time, even when business is unusually urgent. Which is worth most to you or your family, an additional period of your own unblessed labor, or the blessing of God on your efforts, won by spending that time in pleading with him in prayer? The plea of want of time is essentially atheistical; none should urge it but those who regard prayer as an empty mockery, that never receives an answer from the Lord. Let the day begin with communion with God, let the disciple pass the whole day in the spirit of prayer, and all its duties will become spiritual duties, and all its scenes will be inscribed with 'Holiness to the Lord.'"

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c." [Continued.

One other circumstance, only, connected with the Passover Sabbath, will here be noticed. It is related in the account of our Lord's arraignment, that Pilate, who avowedly found in Him no fault at all, desirous of preventing His death, said unto the Jews, "Ye have a custom that I should release unto you one at the Passover; will ye, therefore, that I release unto you the King of the Jews?" John xviii. 38, 39. A very remarkable "custom" this was, though probably an ancient one, continued and countenanced to the subjugated Jews, by the Romans, who are noted for having indulged the various nations they conquered, by a retention of their religious customs and rites, where not inconsistent with their own authority. Their law had fully enacted it here; for, "of necessity, he must release one unto them at the Feast." Luke xxiii. 17. Pilate, who had been now some years Governor in the land of Judea, and, of course, acquainted with their customs, having previously, himself, annually, therefore, conformed to the custom, in this instance sought to avail himself of it, to prevent the Saviour being sacrificed to their unrighteousness, "for he knew that for envy they had delivered Him." Matt. xxvii. 18.

Like other eastern nations, the Jews employed, for the purpose of impressing upon the mind and retaining in remembrance important truths and events, the giving to them a symbolical expression, as is largely shown in the Old Testament Scriptures. The "custom" of the Jews to which Pilate alludes, of releasing a prisoner at the Feast, seems to have been one of that nature. It points back to the period when they themselves were prisoners, in the land of Egypt; and were released from their thraldom by the Lord. That redemption had been achieved on the 15th day of the month after they had partaken on the 14th of the Passover lamb. And, in conformity with the circumstances of this, their own deliverance, and, as a symbol of it, they continued, on the same day, in after time, to give release unto a prisoner of their own. Accordingly, while, in the quotation made above, Pilate speaks simply of this prisoner being released "at the Passover," yet, in corresponding Gospels, we find that this was done "at the Feast," and, therefore, in honor of that Feast day. Luke xxiii. 17.

At the time when Pilate put them in remembrance of this privilege, obviously the Passover lamb had been already eaten on the preceding night, and it was not at their request, but of his own suggestion, that reference was now made unto a custom bearing on the following day. The Feast day, which was the anniversary of Israel's deliverance, commenced not until the setting of the sun; but in his anxiety to avert the guilt of dooming the innocent to death, the Governor, mindful of the "custom" of release on that Feast day, is disposed to press Jesus on their acceptance.

Little, indeed, did Pilate know what the needs were of the sacrifice of God's own Son in behalf of a guilty world, when he thus proposed to save Him from that curse which He had voluntarily come to bear, and which the Jews were laboring to lay upon Him, when thus he sought escape for the destined victim. And little did he know aright of the character of those for whom His death should be the ransom, when he proposed that the Holy and Righteous One should stand even in symbol for that perverse people, whose wickedness on this occasion was to him apparent, whom yet God had delivered from Egyptian bondage. But, as Caiaphas, wicked though he was, compassing the death of Christ, prophetically spake of the expediency of one dying for the people; (John xi. 50, 51;) so, also, the clamorous crowd seem prophetically inspired to stamp perfection on the type, by demanding a representative more in accordance with their own real character, and that of all those to be now redeemed. The choice lay with them; for, "at that Feast, the Governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner whom THEY would." Matt. xxvii. 15. And now "they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barrabbas." "Now Barrabbas was a robber," who "had also committed murder." John xviii. 40; Mark xv. 7.) We look not upon all this as a mere coincidence, but rather as the divine arrangement for another typical expression of God's love and grace towards guilty sinners, as symbolized in the whole circumstances of the Paschal solemnity. In bringing Israel forth from Egypt, after they had eaten the Paschal lamb and sprinkled sacrificially its blood, God was setting forth in magnificent symbol, the power of his grace to robbers and murderers of mankind generally. "And such were some of you, but ye are washed." Even the trivial circumstance of a released prisoner at the Feast, as men might be ready to account it, thus, also, has its place in God's plan, and contributes to the illustration, if not to the establishment, of the glorious significance of that Passover Sabbath, which followed immediately the Passover day—the memorial of a nation actually redeemed from bondage, when the sacrifice had been accepted; symbolical farther of the redemption of a peculiar people to the Lord, in a more extensive sense.

[To be continued.

MY MOTHER'S BIBLE.

BY G. P. MORRIS.

This book is all that's left me now!
  Tears will unbidden start;
With faltering lip and throbbing brow,
  I press it to my heart.
For many generations past,
  Here is our family tree;
My mother's hands this Bible clasp'd—
  She, dying, gave it me.

Ah! well do I remember those Whose names these records bear;
Who round the hearth-stone used to close
  After the evening prayer,
And speak of what these pages said,
  In tones my heart would thrill!
Though they are with the silent dead,
  Here they are living still!

My father read this holy book
  To sisters, brothers dear,
How calm was my poor mother's look,
  Who loved God's word to hear,
Her angel face—I see it yet!
  What thrilling memories come!
Again that little group is met
  Within the halls of home!

Thou truest friend man ever knew,
  Thy constancy I've tried;
Where all were false I found thee true,
  My counselor and guide.
The mine of earth no treasures give
  That could this volume buy;
In teaching me the way to live
  It taught me how to die.

SELLING A PASTORAL CHARGE.

The practice of selling the right to presentations of livings, in the church of England, is treated as follows by Punch:—

A few days ago certain Christian flocks were submitted to the hammer at the Auction Mart, and knocked down to the best Christian pastors, namely, to those happy shepherds who could best afford to offer the highest price for the chattels. Not being present at the ceremony, Punch does not pledge himself to the most rigid verbal accuracy in the report of the transaction; but no doubt the auctioneer did his best in the disposal of the goods, after the improved method of auctioneers in general.

Gentlemen, (says the man with the hammer,) the next article I have the honor to submit to your emulation is the advowson, with patronage, &c., of the rectory of Trettire and Michael Church, Herefordshire, net annual income £250, present incumbent seventy-four years of age. What shall we say for the rectory of Trettire and Michael? Herefordshire, splendid country; maganificent hills, that lift the thoughts of churchmen to the devotional altitude; beautiful thyme pasturage for sheep. Malvern mutton, for instance, unparalleled. Now an offer, if you please, gentlemen, for Trettire and Michael, net value £250, gentlemen. Further, gentlemen, present incumbent is seventy-four years of age—seventy-four, gentlemen, so be quick with your biddings.

First Bidder—One thousand pounds.

Auctioneer—A thousand pounds! What! and present incumbent with one leg in the grave? Think of the country, gentlemen, the feet of the everlasting hills of Herefordshire, and mind your bidding.

Second Bidder—One thousand two hundred.

Auctioneer—And present incumbent seventy-four? Pray, gentlemen, do not forget; one leg in the grave, gentlemen; at least one leg.

Third Bidder—Fifteen hundred.

Auctioneer—Come, we're getting on, but fifteen hundred; only fifteen hundred; for Trettire and Michael; going like a drug, gentlemen—like a drug. I should be sorry to find no better devotion in the company—thank you, sir—sixteen hundred; no warmer enthusiasm for the Established Church, and that at the present time, when rampant Popery threatens—one thousand seven hundred, thank you—our altars and our homes—seventeen hundred and fifty, thank you—and present incumbent—seventy-four—seventy-four—and according to the course of all sublunary things, with one leg in the grave, gentlemen—a human and commercial fact you cannot too well consider, gentlemen. No advance on seventeen hundred and fifty, and one leg in the grave?

Fourth Bidder—Eighteen hundred.

Auctioneer—Thank you; but consider, gentlemen, the span of life, seventy-four, and one—

Fifth Bidder—Eighteen hundred and fifty.

Sixth Bidder—Ninety.

Auctioneer—Thank you; eighteen hundred and ninety for Trettire and Michael; salubrious country—seventy-four—one leg in the grave—and the best pasturage. No advance on eighteen hundred and ninety? No advance—going—going—one leg, gentlemen; I must call your attention to one leg in the grave. No advance? Going—going—(hammer falls.) Advowson, with Rectory of Trettire and Michael, yours, Sir, dog cheap—sold for a song, Sir, a very song.

THE GOSPEL THE GREAT CIVILIZER.

I select one resident at the station of Mr. Hood; and I take that man the rather, because he is a Caffre, one of a race that seems doomed—doomed, I fear, by the voice of British bayonets, as "irreclaimable and treacherous savages." On this point I have a word to say presently. I speak now of a man who had heard a missionary speak of "the wrath to come," though he did not understand the meaning of it. He came into the colony, was brought to the missionary, explained his anguish, and asked what he should do. Mr. Hood preached to him the Saviour. He listened with eagerness, and stood trembling, and said, "Sir, I am old and stupid, tell me again." And being told again, the tears rolled down the sable cheek of this man of noble and athletic frame, and he confessed his astonishment at the love of God, and the compassion of the Saviour. He resolved to come and live near the missionary, that he might hear again and again the glad tidings. The little space in the village was, however, already occupied; and as he had acquired property, and that property was cattle, there would be no room to graze them. He told his difficulty to the missionary, and added, "I am a Caffre, and I love my cattle; but I will part with the last one I have, if that stands in the way of coming to hear the Word!" Noble decision! He had found the pearl of great price, and he would part with all he had to procure it. The missionary arranged matters for him, and he now resides on the spot—a consistent, devoted Christian, fervent in prayer, useful to many; and as I saw him I said, "He is not an unreclaimable Caffre!"

And, speaking of Christian temper, allow me to relate an instance of a Caffre young woman. She had renounced her Caffre dress and heathen customs; put on European clothing, as a sign of the change, and attended instruction. Her brother, still a heathen, urged her to accompany him to a heathen dance. She refused. He fetched a stick, and threatened he would compel her to accompany him. He beat her, tore off her clothes, and beat her till the stick broke. She never winced, nor uttered a cry, nor a word of reproach. He went to procure another stick; native women interposed and rescued her; they thought she had suffered enough. He then covered her with some heathen dress, and then she wept and sobbed bitterly, as though she was returned back to heathenism. "Why did'n't you cry before?" said her brother; "when I beat you, you were silent; now I dress you, you weep!" Some time rolled by, and the brother came again to visit her. He would not enter the hut; he was, perhaps, ashamed of his conduct; he might have met with reproach. No; he mistook her; he had not yet learned Christianity. She could forgive; she went out and met him at the entrance, gave him her hand, and with it a sister's kiss! That subdued him. Woman's tenderness conquered this untamed Caffre, and she continued her attendance on the instructions of the missionary. I called on her in company with Mr. Birt. I admired her for her patient and amiable spirit. I wished her many blessings, and I was delighted to leave with her a trifling present as a token of my esteem. These people are surely worth an effort to redeem them from heathenism! These are fruits of the Spirit in South Africa. [Rev. J. J. Freeman.

THE BEST PORTION.

Do you need, first, a temporal portion? The Lord will provide. He is a God of infinite knowledge, and so, fully acquainted with all your needs. He is a God of infinite wisdom, and so, he fully understands how to provide. He is a God of infinite goodness, and so, fully disposed to provide. He is a God of infinite power, and so, fully able to provide. He openeth his hand, and filleth all things living with plenteousness. No good thing will he withhold from them that live a godly life, but give them all things richly to enjoy.

Do you need a spiritual portion? Blessed be God! according to his abundant mercy, he is the author of all spiritual blessings. Thus, where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, or freedom; freedom from the bondage of spiritual blindness, freedom from the bondage of spiritual fear, freedom from the bondage of this ensnaring world, freedom from the bondage of in-dwelling sin, and freedom from the bondage of the devil. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is also joy; joy in having the Spirit of adoption, joy in having access to the "throne of heavenly grace;" joy in having the love of God shed abroad in the heart; joy in bearing necessary temptations and afflictions, joy in having an earnest of a heavenly inheritance, even joy unspeakable and full of glory. And where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is peace: not bitter envying and strife in the heart, not hatred and malice, not emulation and wrath; but peace—peace with friends, peace with enemies, peace with all mankind, peace with God through Christ, and "peace of mind which passeth all understanding."

JOHN KNOX IN HIS LAST MOMENTS.

A short time before he breathed his last, this great Reformer fell into a slumber, interrupted by heavy moans, during which the attendants looked every moment for his dissolution. But at length he awaked, as if from sleep, and being asked the cause of his sighing so deeply, replied: "I have formerly, during my frail life, sustained many contests, and many assaults of Satan; but at present he hath assailed me most fearfully, and put forth all his strength to devour and make an end of me at once. Often before has he placed my sins before my eyes—often tempted me to despair—often endeavored to ensnare me by the allurements of the world; but these weapons were broken by the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, and the enemy failed. Now he has attacked me in another way: the cunning serpent has labored to persuade me that I have merited heaven and eternal blessedness by the faithful discharge of my ministry. But, blessed be God, who has enabled me to beat down and quench this firey dart, by suggesting to me such passages of Scripture as these: 'What hast thou that thou hast not received? By the grace of God I am what I am. Not I, but the grace of God in me.' Upon this, as one vanquished, he left me. Wherefore let us give thanks to my God, through Jesus Christ, who has been pleased to give me the victory; and I am persuaded that the tempter shall not again attack me; but within a short time I shall, without any great pain of body or anguish of mind, exchange this mortal and miserable life for a blessed immortality, through Jesus Christ."

He then lay quiet for some hours, except that now and then he desired to wet his mouth with a little weak ale. At ten o'clock they read the evening prayers, which they had delayed beyond the usual hour, from an apprehension that he was asleep. After exercise was concluded, Dr. Preston asked him if he had heard the prayers. "Would to God," said he, "that you and all men had heard them; I praise God for that heavenly sound." The doctor rose up, and another sat down again before his bed. About eleven o'clock he gave a deep sigh, and said, "Now it is come." A friend immediately drew near, and desired him to think upon those comfortable promises of our Saviour Jesus Christ, which he had so often declared to others; and perceiving that he was speechless, requested him to give them a sign that he heard them, and died in peace. Upon this he lifted up one of his hands, and, sighing twice, expired without a struggle.

VOLTAIRE AND PSALM 51.

Presumptuous individuals, who venture to attack the Holy Scriptures with unpurified hearts and mere scholastic learning, without being enlightened by the Holy Spirit, are punished with confusion, blindness, and delusion. Voltaire was once daring enough to versify that affecting penitential Psalm, the fifty-first. Every thing went well until he came to the tenth verse, where it is said, "Create in me a clean heart, O God." But his pride, and truly infernal hatred against God and his worshipers, did not permit him with the royal penitent to entreat of God a pure and sincere heart; however, he strove to translate the verse poetically. But suddenly the terrors of hell seized him; the pen refused to move beneath the hand of the reprobate who had indicted so many blasphemies and obscenities for the destruction of innocence and the fear of God. He sought to flee, but could not; he fell half senseless on his couch, and afterwards confessed several times to his friends, that he could never think of this appalling occurrence without inward tremor and uneasiness. [Van Ess.

KEEP THE HEART ALIVE.

These words of Bernard Barton are good. Often good and wise men in other things have rendered their old age cheerless and unlovely, from a want of attention to them.

"The longer I live, the more expedient I find it to endeavor more and more to extend my sympathies and affections. The natural tendency of advancing years, is to narrow and contract these feelings. I do not mean that I wish to form a new and sworn friendship every day, to increase my circles of intimates; these are very different affairs. But I find it conduces to my mental health and happiness, to find out all I can which is amiable and loveable in those I come in contact with, and to make the most of it. It may fall very far short of what I was once wont to dream of; it may not supply the place of what I have known, felt, and tasted; but it is better than nothing; it seems to keep the feelings and affections in exercise; it keeps the heart alive in its humanity; and till we shall be all spiritual, this is alike our duty and our interest."

STRIKING AND SUGGESTIVE ANECDOTE.

The most significant anecdote to illustrate the religious impressions made upon his (the late Dr. Channing's) mind in childhood, is one related by himself. His father, with the view of giving him a ride, took William in his chaise one day, as he was going to hear a famous preacher in the neighborhood. Impressed with the notion that he might learn great tidings from the unseen world, he listened attentively to the sermon. With very glowing rhetoric, the lost state of man was described, his abandonment to evil, helplessness, dependence upon sovereign grace; and the need of earnest prayer, as the condition of receiving this divine aid. In the view of the speaker, a curse seemed to rest upon the earth, and darkness and horror to veil the face of nature. William, for his part, supposed that henceforth those who believed would abandon all other things to seek this salvation; and that amusement and earthly business would no longer occupy a moment.

The service over, they went out of the church, and his father, in answer to the remark of some person, said, with a decisive tone, "Sound doctrine, sir?" "It is all true, then," was his inward reflection. A heavy weight fell on his heart. He wanted to speak to his father; he expected his father would speak to him in relation to this tremendous crisis of things. They got into the chaise and rode along; but absorbed in awful thoughts, he could not raise his voice. Presently his father began to whistle! At length they reached home. But instead of calling the family together, and telling them of the appalling intelligence which the preacher had given, his father took off his boots, put his feet toward the fireplace, and quietly read a newspaper. All things went on as usual. At first he was surprised; but not being given to talking, he asked no explanations. Soon, however, the question rose, "Could what he had heard be true?" No; his father did not believe it! People did not believe it! It was not true! He felt that he had been trifled with—that the preacher had deceived him; and from that time he became inclined to distrust every thing oratorical, and to measure exactly the meaning of words. He had received a profound lesson on the worth of sincerity. [Memoir of Dr. Channing.

THE BIBLE A SECTARIAN BOOK.—A Boston paper says: A matter of no little interest has recently engrossed the attention of the School Committee of the City of Cambridge. It appears that one of the rules in the Schools of that city is, that selections from the Bible were read by the pupils daily. This order has recently been objected to by a scholar in one of the Schools at the Port. When it came to this pupil's turn to read, an objection was made on the ground that his parents, who were Catholics, instructed him not to read the Protestant Bible. The Teacher of the School immediately informed the School Committee on the subject, which Board notified the parents of the child, that they must either withdraw him from the school, or instruct him to comply with the established rules of the school, and orders of his instructor. We learn that a suit at law is to grow out of the trouble, and that a legal gentleman has already been retained as council by the parents of the pupil referred to, and that the ground taken is, that the school in question has openly violated the 23d sec. of the 23d chapter of the Revised Statutes, prohibiting the introduction of sectarian books into our Public schools.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 4, 1851.

From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser of Nov. 22.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH.

A simultaneous republication, by the religious newspapers of this city, of Sir Matthew Hale's opinions on the observance of the Christain Sabbath, no doubt arises from certain movements said to be contemplated with reference to railroad traveling on Sunday. Of course any project to make Sunday railroad travel more general in this State will awaken lively opposition. The religious portion of the community will oppose it, nor they alone. They will oppose it on principle. Others will oppose it on the ground of its inexpediency. Some persons will defend it, though these will be few out of the circle of two interested classes—those who may profit pecuniarily by Sunday traffic on the road, and those who are interested generally in relaxing the stringent observance of the Lord's day. It is a question for discussion and argument, and not for denunciation. There will be a controversy about it, and the advocates of Sabbath observance will find arrayed against them able men on the opposite side, who will take every advantage which their quick perception and subtle powers of reasoning may afford them; and the friends of obedience to the authoritative command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," will have need to be candid in argument and sound in logic—neither denying nor admitting too much.

Every one knows that a good cause is often injured by the indiscreetness of its advocates and friends. The cause of temperance, of peace, of Sabbath observance—each has been "wounded in the house of its friends," by the indiscretions of its defenders; and we think there is danger lest this question of increased Sunday railroad travel should thus suffer. It is one in which the whole people are interested, the irreligious as well as the religious, and both classes are to be convinced that railroad traveling on Sunday is wrong, or inexpedient, or both, if we would have the question put at rest and decided in favor of the cause of morality and good order. Irreligious men, too, are generally shrewd, can see through the fallacy of an argument, and are in the main indisposed to take for granted what the advocates of religion may assert. Hence we think the opponents of Sunday railroad travel err in employing such arguments as this:—"The plea of going to see sick friends is generally fallacious. Friends are no more likely to be sick on the Sabbath than on other days; and if sick they need the quiet of the Sabbath, and the Sabbath's blessing." It may be easily retorted—Friends may be sick on Sunday as well as on other days, and why should we be prohibited from seeing them on that day alone? Would not a visit from a friend or relative—his presence and sympathy and pious converse constitute for the afflicted a sabbatical rest and a sabbatical blessing?

We have made and commented upon the above extract from a leading journal just to show what use might be made of it. The requirement to keep holy the Sabbath day, however, does not justify a resort to such sophistries. Much stronger arguments may be adduced in its support, and must be adduced if we would have it obeyed by consent of the whole people. For be it remembered that with us the observance of the Christian Sabbath is achieved by the voluntary act of the community. The general observance of that holyday is a tribute to the reasonableness and wisdom of the institution; and that the people may ever continue to pay that tribute, we must continue to exhibit its reasonableness and wisdom. We want reverence for the Sabbath to be the calm dictate of men's judgments; we want all to be consenting parties to its just observance. Under our institutions there is little or no power to compel men to reverence the Sabbath; nor is such power to be desired, except just so far as it shall protect from annoyance those who conscientiously keep it holy.

These things premised, there remain strong and to our mind conclusive reasons—unanswerable arguments—for even a stricter observance of the Christian Sabbath than now prevails, and of course such arguments will apply with tenfold force as reasons why there should be no farther encroachment upon the sanctity of that day. We do not address these arguments to religious men, so much as to irreligious. To the former it is enough that "God spake these words and said, Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," &c. The changing of the original sabbatical day from the last to the first is to them of minor moment, because it still remains a seventh day, "or the seventh day," which the Supreme Being requires us to keep "holy," abstaining from all work upon it, as not being our time but His. Nevertheless, any one reverencing his Maker, must admit that respect should be shown to the slightest intimation of His will concerning us.

But there are considerations which appeal to us as men, as members of society, and as citizens, and which ought not to be without influence upon the minds of all. The Sabbath is one of those institutions which the physical condition and moral character of man make absolutely necessary. All experience goes to show that man requires rest every seventh day from bodily labor, while the moral effect of the Sabbath is beyond estimation. And it is on this argument that we deprecate any extension of means for Sunday traveling than is absolutely and palpably necessary. The general morality of a people will always be found to bear proportion to its respect for the Sabbath. The demoralization and profligacy of Paris, for instance, are remarkable, as the wholesome morality of a New England village is gratifying. In the one the Sabbath is wholly disregarded, in the other cordially respected and observed; and the same would hold good in many other illustrations which might be given. Indeed, it is in the very nature of Sabbath desecration, of every form, to demoralize and degrade. It cannot be otherwise in the very nature of things.

It is an established truth, that true religion elevates and improves man. True religion consists in reverence for God, and obedience to his requirements. In proportion as that obedience is withheld voluntarily, man sinks in moral character. He falls from a high aim, and his moral character inevitably suffers in proportion as his lofty purpose of obeying His Maker's will is abandoned. This is especially the case when, for the sake of personal gratification and indulgence, he lowers his standard of reverence for the Supreme Being.

This principle admitted, not only is the inexpediency of unnecessary Sunday labor or amusement made apparent, but it is proved that the Sabbath has the sanction of high moral necessity. We must observe the Sabbath-day if we would maintain our high standard of national morality. We have made an exception in favor of works of necessity. But the continued observance of the Sabbath is the greatest necessity of all. It is necessary to the preservation of our national morality, which is necessary for the preservation of any form of national existence of which self-government is the radical constituent. The institution of the Sabbath, then, we say, is the great bulwark of the morality of a people, and though we may be unwilling to denounce any man's opinion about what are and what are not works of necessity, we shall deeply regret the introduction of any plan which may prove an entering wedge for contempt of the Sabbath day.

While upon this subject we desire to say a few words upon certain Sabbath practices which prevail in this city, and which perhaps are doing more to undermine reverence for the day than even railroad travel would do. We allude to the seemingly established custom of keeping open drug stores, fancy restaurants and confectionery retreats. Seeing how these have multiplied within the last few years, the friends of the Sabbath may well take alarm at any further projected encroachment upon that day. It seems to us that special effort should be made to inoculate the public mind with this sentiment—that just as we submit our individual predilections and abstract rights to the government of laws,—just as for the good of society and our prosperity as a nation we deny ourselves of whatsoever those laws prohibit—so ought we to forego such conveniences or indulgences as would militate against reverence for the Sabbath, which is the safeguard of sound morals and of national purity and prosperity.

Remarks.

A desire to keep our readers informed of the various phases which the Sabbath controversy assumes, induces us to publish the foregoing. From the time of the organization of the "American and Foreign Sabbath Union," there appears to have been a systematic, and measurably successful, effort to bring about the cessation of Sunday travel on our railroads, and other thoroughfares. Nevertheless, there have always been found some who persisted in demanding the authority for making the Sunday a holyday. As long as this demand was made only by a handful of Seventh-day Baptists, whose influence it was easy to neutralize by falsely representing them as judaizers, who sought only to create disturbance, but little attention was paid to it. But since doubts of any Bible authority for Sunday keeping have begun to pervade community to considerable extent, and anti-sabbatarianism threatens to cast its blighting influence upon the piety of the land, it is found to be, (and we hail the announcement with pleasure,) "a question for discussion and argument, and not for denunciation." "The advocates of Sabbath (?) observance" are informed, that they "will find arrayed against them able men on the opposite side, who will take every advantage which their quick perception and subtle powers of reasoning afford them;" and that they "will have need to be candid in argument and sound in logic—neither denying nor admitting too much."

It would have been well, had the observers of the so-called Christian Sabbath taken this into consideration a little sooner. But the idea that all their learned doctors, who had advocated the popular practice from the days of Constantine downwards, might possibly be wrong, was not to be entertained; and to be taught it by a sect of people who could boast of nothing which is highly esteemed among men, was too humiliating—it was perfectly intolerable. But tell us, ye who now find the question to be one 'for discussion, and not for denunciation,' what is it that gives your anti-sabbatarian opponents such power against you? What renders them formidable as controversialists, and fills you with anxiety lest the Christian Sabbath should become generally despised? Not the strength of the anti-sabbatarian argument in the abstract, certainly. You well know that its strength is perfect weakness, except so far as it finds a support in the depravity of the human heart; and even this support must give way before the power of God's truth. It matters but little what may be the ability of those who are enlisted in the work of propagating it, even if they "take every advantage which their quick perception and subtle powers of reasoning afford them." For is it not written, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent?" "With him is strength and wisdom; the deceived and the deceiver are his. He leadeth counselors away spoiled, and maketh the judges fools." Job. 12: 16, 17. No, sirs, your anxiety arises from a very different cause. You have some secret misgivings as to the strength of your own position. Anti-sabbatarians are using our arguments, to show you how sophistical is your defense of Sunday observance, and you are beginning to open your eyes. You are beginning to understand, that 'Remember the first day of the week, to keep it holy,' is not written any where in the Bible. You begin to feel that such doctrine will not do for the people much longer. Led on by anti-sabbatarians, they demand, and will have, a "thus saith the Lord" for what you impose upon their consciences, or they will reject it altogether. This you are at last beginning to see. The formidableness of anti-sabbatarianism lies in your own weakness, gentlemen. Run into the strong tower of God's word, and you are safe enough. The Babel you have undertaken to build, is doomed to destruction, and your workmen are already confounded, that they cannot undersand one another's speech.

As to the merit of the particular question upon which the Commercial has expatiated so largely, we have but little to say. If there are to be increased facilities for railroad travel on Sunday, we are partly glad, and partly sorry. We are sorry that temptations should be held out for people to break what they even imagine to be the Sabbath-day. We wish no man to violate the dictates of his conscience; and if any do feel that the Frst Day of the Week is a divinely appointed season of rest, we would not ask them to desecrate it, nor provide any facilities for their doing so. But, on the other hand, we are glad to see the ramparts about the Sunday beginning to fall. We would that they were razed to the ground. Not that we desire to see such a state of things as will be when there is no Sabbath acknowledged by the community; far from it. We look forward to such a state, as one to be deplored by all the truly good. But we have long since made up our mind, that the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment will never become the Sabbath of the land, till all the hedges about the falsely-named Christian Sabbath are broken down and destroyed. God's institutions will not be honored till man's are rendered contemptible.

But while we respect the conscientious convictions of those who look upon the Sunday as a divinely appointed season of rest, we must say, that such people are not quite so numerous as is sometimes supposed. There are thousands in our land—and the number is constantly increasing—who can see in the act of traveling on the First Day of the Week, or even in the performance of common labor, no delinquency whatever. We are glad, when we find such persons among the number of those who are engaged in destroying the factitious sacredness of the day. We are glad, because while they thus fulfill the designs of Providence, they are not at the same time, and by the very act, doing their own souls an injury. Many of them are persons of general good character; and were they rationally convicted of their error in regarding no day whatever as holy to the Lord, we trust they would make very good Sabbatarians according to the Bible standard. But it must be something worthy of the name of argument, which will show them their error. That kind of logic which builds up the Sabbatic institution, and then immediately demolishes it by a special plea for a day which the law of the Sabbath does not enjoin, does but excite their contempt. It will never convince them. We are also glad that such persons are engaged in the work, because of the relief which it affords to the otherwise discouraging prospect. Were all the opposers of the popular Sabbath reckless of moral principle, and accustomed to break over the restraints of conscience whenever inclination prompted, there is no calculating the amount of evil which might for a season ensue. Without doubt, it would be found that their opposition to Sunday sabbatizing was but a stealthy method of attacking the whole system of religion. The terrible drama of French infidelity, which blotted out the weekly festival of the Church, and substituted the decade, would be acted over again, with all its attendant blasphemies and abominations. But, thank God, the opposers of Sunday sabbatizing are not all of this class. Besides, the question, in this country, wears a different aspect from what it did in France, where the corruptions of the Papal Church almost by a law of necessity gave birth to infidelity. The conviction that in this country the popular Sabbath will lose its reputation, without being followed by such fearful wickedness as attended its abrogation in France, is quite a relief to our minds; though the best relief of all is, that God reigns, and that "when the enemy cometh in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."

The relief which we feel in the fact that anti-sabbatarianism is partly in the hands of virtuous men, must not be understood as an admission, or even as approximating to an admission, that the cause of religion is perfectly safe though no Sabbath at all should be acknowledged by the community. We repeat what we said above, that such a state of things is to be deprecated by the truly good. It might not issue all at once in the wild desolation of infidelity, (that it would eventually, we have no doubt,) but it would most unquestionably be attended with such a marked prostration of those interests which are the delight of Christians, and the true source of prosperity to all, that Ichabod—the glory is departed—might be written upon the land. The blind persistence of Christendom in repudiating the Bible Sabbath, and upholding a human tradition instead, is hastening this state of things.

In all, or nearly all, that the Commercial has said concerning the advantages of the Sabbath, physical and moral, its indispensableness to our national morality, &c., we cordially concur. We feel no sympathy for that kind of reasoning, which pleads for Sunday recreations on the ground of the laboring man's necessities for something of the kind to promote health and cheerfulness of spirits. All such reasoning is airy sophistry. Nevertheless, if the Directors of any of our railroads can, without doing violence to their own consciences, run their cars on Sunday, we hope they will do so. We should be glad, however, if they would all lie still on the Sabbath. But even this we want achieved by the voluntary act of those who are concerned, and not by coërcion of law. Let the laws which sanctify the popular day of rest, be blotted from our statute books. They are oppressive to some, and a benefit to none.

T. B. B.

Sailing of Missionaries.—Rev. Wm. W. Eddy and wife, Henry Lobdell, wife and child, and Rev. Joseph W. Lutphen and wife, all Missionaries for the Syrian station, have taken passage in the bark Sultana, soon to sail from Boston for Smyrna.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Observance in Scotland—Romanism in France.

Glasgow, November 14th, 1851.

At the Free Church Synod of Lothians and Tweeddale, the Rev. Mr. Davidson made a statement on the part of the Sunday Observance Committee. They are convinced that the postponing of the agitation of the question last year has done great injury to their cause. Although, he said, there had been a diminution of occupation in the post-offices of Edinburgh and some other places, yet Sunday employment still continued there, and therefore the movement against it ought to be recommenced and prosecuted with vigor. At the walking match at Restalrigg, in the neighborhood of Edinburgh, to which I adverted a week ago, Mr. Davidson stated that £15 had been taken, in sixpences, one Sunday lately. (If this be a correct statement, it is a farther evidence of the waning influence of Sunday among those who can afford to pay sixpences for their amusement.) There was doubt, he said, as to whether it was the Kirk Session or the Presbytery of the bounds which had the privilege of prosecuting; but, whichever of them, the responsibility ought to be undertaken. Dr. Candlish, on the same occasion, said that any Anti-Popery agitation which does not take the Sunday question, is singularly defective, and the subject should be kept before Town Councils and others. It does not indeed seem to occur to the Reverend Doctor, that the Sunday for which he is thus anxious to enlist the power of Town Councils is retained by the Protestant Church only because the Reformation from Popery was "singularly defective," and that while he imagines himself engaged in the overthrow of all Popery, he is in this enlisting in its behalf.

In the number of Evangelical Christendom for the present month, there is a lengthy paper on the state of Romanism in France, which gives a lively idea of the energies and resources of that politic system there. The State Budget for Popish Worship in that country, it appears, is upwards of 38 millions of francs, besides 837,000 francs under the heads of Public Worship and Ecclesiastical Pensions. And for their worship and instruction in the Colonies, the State provision is two and a half millions of francs. There is again a large amount of State expenditure in religious edifices. Upwards of 37 thousand communes have all churches thus built, maintained, and enlarged. It is calculated that jointly these demands amount to 100 million of francs yearly. The officiating clergy paid by the State amount to more than 40 thousand, without reckoning fellows of colleges. Then there is a vast number of Communities which are formed independent of the clergy—a perfect army of volunteers, enlisted under the banners of Romanism. Indeed, none of the larger towns are without several monasteries, asylums, sisterhoods, or brotherhoods. These nurseries are sending colonies into almost every village. Exclusive of the monasteries, (to be afterwards spoken of,) we observe, that, besides the Houses of Sisters of Mercy, so termed, spread every where throughout the land, 38 communities "of the Sacred Heart," and other fantastic titles, maintain 2,310 establishments in the villages and country—the parent Houses being in the towns.

There are 83 diocesan clerical colleges, 118 smaller ecclesiastical colleges, 565 monasteries, 1,012 boarding schools for young ladies, and 939 hospitals or charitable institutions, which, even where not of Romish origin, confide the care of the sick to "the sisters." There are 3,379 small colonies of sisters, 761 establishments of brothers (schools,) and 48 missionary establishments in the interior. All these are organized by the bishops, are under their control, and skillfully directed to subserve the purposes of this apostate system. The receipts for the year 1850 of the single Society of St. Vincent de Paul, (established amongst young people,) in subscriptions, lottery, and donations, was 217,668 francs.

Besides all these home appliances for maintaining and extending Popery in France, are to be noticed the efforts for the same purpose abroad. Different missions are sustained by the Propagation Society of the Faith, established at Lyons in 1822. Its object is the extension of Popery throughout the world. It has had and continues to receive the countenance of Popes, Princes, and Bishops; and Papists throughout Europe generally take part in it, while America, India, and the East, also lend their aid. It has a most perfect organization of collectors to its funds. Its receipts in 1850 amounted to 3,309,646 francs; towards which France contributed 1,907,916 francs. Through its means, popish operations abroad have greatly increased. They maintain missionaries in China, Gochin-China, Japan, Tartary, Central Asia, and India. They have increased their missions in Syria and Asia Minor, in the United States and Australia. Indulgences are promised to those who promote subscriptions to the funds and say the prayers prescribed—these indulgences being extended even to the dead. Alas! for the church; alas! for the world!

The monstrous evils which this system inflicts upon every community within which it finds a lodgment and support, are in this country becoming more obvious to many. Preparations are therefore being made in London for a keen agitation throughout the land to urge upon Government the duty of absolutely withholding the £30,000 annually given to the Irish Popish Seminary of Maynooth. It certainly seems the reverse even of worldly wisdom to be contributing largely to the maintenance of an institution which, besides propagating superstition, makes a business of rearing priests to teach treachery to our liberties, civil and religious. On the other hand, the Protestant Prussian Government has issued final orders for the suppression of all the congregations of what are called in Germany "Free Catholics." It is not improbable, however, that this may have been for political plottings—political rather than religious reasons having always been predominant among these seceders from the Romish yoke.

The connections of the Submarine Telegraph, are now so far complete that the Glasgow papers of this morning contain a dispatch dated Paris yesterday afternoon at one o'clock—received in London an hour and a half afterwards.

And here, I mention, that Elihu Burritt has a letter in yesterday's Morning Chronicle, explaining what he means by Ocean Penny Postage, which he labors to get introduced. Some have supposed the penny designed to cover not only the expense of ship transmission from shore to shore, but also the expense incurred by inland carriage—which, of course, is not his meaning.

J. A. BEGG.

THE SABBATH.

There is much uneasiness in the minds of many individuals with regard to the Sabbath, among whom are those called Adventists, who, like many others, strive to quiet conscience by some metaphysical reasoning, or tradition, or in some other way, so that they may use the Sabbath as a thing of convenience, and throw off all obligation to God as respects the day. Now, would it not be much easier for such to take the Word of God as it is, and leave all cavil on the subject to skeptics? Did not God require of his creatures, in connection with the command to keep the Sabbath day holy, that they should remember what he had done in creating the heavens and the earth?—and does he not require the same thing now? Surely, we have no evidence that he does not.

The subject of the Sabbath has been treated, at least on one side, in the Advent Herald, Boston, in the Advent Harbinger, Rochester, in the Bible Advocate, Hartford, (now united with the Harbinger,) and in the Monitor and Messenger, New York. The writers in these papers have each set forth some particular reason or reasons for observing the day commonly called Sunday; some averring that it is the true seventh day; others, that it matters not what day we keep, only we ought to keep a seventh part of time; and others, (I believe the largest number,) that it is only a matter of convenience for worship in obedience to our laws; while others claim that it ought to be observed in commemoration of Christ's resurrection. All these profess to find satisfactory evidence in some way, and so continue to discard the most positive evidences of the Word of God and of history, that the Decalogue, or the ten commandments, remain unchanged; yes, and they are willing, at the same time, to allow that all of them except the fourth are just as obligatory now as ever they were. Now, if the fourth commandment is null and void, what consistency is there in making it a rule for keeping a seventh part of time? for the day and the object of the day are as clearly specified in the commandment as the portion of time. Did God leave this commandment so indefinite and incomplete, while all the others are complete?

It was, no doubt, in reference to this very thing—observing days of their own choosing—that the apostle wrote to the Galatians in chapter 4, verse 10. But, says the objector, Paul, in writing to the Collossians, (2: 14,) says that the whole law, commandments and all, was nailed to the cross. Then what have you done, my dear objector, but sacrilegiously torn these commandments from the cross, and applied them as the great rule of social and religious living! Is such a course consistent with truth or reason? If not, how can God be pleased with it?

But, says another, the work of redemption is much greater than the work of creation, and we ought to commemorate it. Perhaps so; but have you or I a right to reject what we please, and substitute another thing instead thereof? God says, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." The reason he gives is, "For in six days," &c. Thus he continually reminds us of what he has done, and thereby also enjoins an obligation upon us to glorify him. Well indeed will it be for us if we are found keeping "his commandments," without adding, diminishing, or substituting one jot or tittle; for Christ declares, (Matt. 5: 18,) "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." What law? Read verses 19, 21, 27, and 33. If that is not a part of the law, then I do not understand the meaning of my Lord and Saviour. Again, "I am not come to destroy, [the law or the prophets,] but to fulfill." V. 7. Did he fulfill the Sabbath, the seventh day? Nay, verily, you and I are looking for its fulfillment in the rest that remaineth for the people of God. What, then, did he do with the Sabbath? He taught its observance by his own example, and by calling it the Sabbath; not according to Jewish tradition, but according to the true intention of God, and this he did as clearly and forcibly as he gave those precepts concerning the commandments referred to in the before-named verses. Is it consistent with sound reason to refer to the fourth commandment, and follow it as respects the portion of time, and yet deny the particular day therein appointed, and also the particular object for which that day was appointed? Observers of Sunday, or the first day, how stands your faith in God's law? God gives you a command to remember his wonderful work of creation; do you respect that command? Has he said that the work of redemption by Jesus Christ is greater than the work of creation? Has Jesus, or have the apostles, said, or even intimated, any such thing? Nothing like it. It is all inference. Christ gave a command to remember him; but it is not, "Keep the first day, the day of my resurrection;" it is, "Do this in remembrance of me." 1 Cor. 11: 24. Here is no transfer of a memorial, but a new memorial instituted, commemorative of a new and glorious work. Then let both have their proper place, and be observed according to each distinct command. Both God in creation, and Jesus Christ in redemption, ought to receive our homage and praise; and in no way can we better do our duty in this thing, as well as in all other things, than by implicit obedience to the revealed will of God and his own beloved Son.

As for Sunday, or first day, I am astonished to find it in the English New Testament. I am much mistaken if any word can be found in the Greek Testament which can, by any fair exegesis, be rendered first day of the week. It is not a correct exposition of the terms sabbatoon in the plural, and of sabbaton in the singular. They mean Sabbath in the singular, and Sabbaths in the plural, and nothing else. There is a forced construction given us by this professed translation, an unwarrantable liberty used in applying either one or the other to the first day of the week, and in every instance where the terms are so applied in our English Testament, they undoubtedly refer to the seven Sabbaths mentioned in Leviticus 23.

Eureka.

Gerrit Smith to John C. Spencer.—A few weeks ago, John C. Spencer wrote a letter to George Wood, in which he fully endorsed the "Compromise Measures," as they are called. For this, Gerrit Smith has taken him in hand; and in a lengthy letter, a printed copy of which is before us, shows the inconsistency of Mr. Spencer's present views with his former speeches and his general course of conduct. Mr. Smith says that the following positions are fairly deducible from Mr. Spencer's letter: 1st. To be "an abolitionist, little if any short of Gerrit Smith," is to be disqualified for civil office; 2d. A "cordial" enforcement of the "Fugitive Slave Law" is our duty; 3d. Such enforcement is "patriotic," and "the salvation of the Union depends upon it;" 4th. The law is constitutional. Each of these positions is reviewed by Mr. Smith in his usual candid and convincing manner.

Ordination of a Colored Minister.—A correspondent of the Philadelphia Presbyterian says that on Sunday evening, Nov. 16th, Mr. Henry M. Wilson, a colored licentiate, was ordained by the Presbytery of New York, with a view to his laboring as a stated supply in Emanuel Church. The services were, invocation and reading the Scriptures, by the Rev. Samuel E. Cornish, a colored minister; prayer by the Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., of the Third Presbytery of New York, also a colored minister; hymn by the Rev. John Neander, a converted Hebrew; sermon by the Rev. Edward E. Rankin; ordination service by the Rev. William Bannard and the Rev. Dr. Phillips; charge to the Evangelist by the Rev. Dr. Krebs; address to the people by the Rev. Dr. Phillips. Thus, it may be perceived, was there an illustration, in this fellowship of the gospel, adapted to, and partaken by our common nature, of that unity of our race which is derived from the one blood whereof God hath made all nations of men; for on the head of the newly ordained evangelist were laid the hands of descendants of all the three sons of Noah—Shem, Ham and Japhet.

A New Society.—A call has been issued for a Convention at Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 17th of December, to form "An American Reform Book and Tract Society." The reason for this movement is thus stated in the Call:—

"To many pious people it is a matter of deep regret, that the American Tract Society, the American Sunday School Union, and other similar institutions, do not publish books and tracts on some of the most important subjects of reform. It is a painful fact that there are prominent strongholds of error and sin, against which these institutions do not send forth the voice of warning, nor a single sentence of rebuke. In view of a delinquency so lamentable, it is deemed necessary to form a new institution adapted to the condition of the age and nation, one that will assail every system of oppression and wrong doing, and one that will be willing to suffer reproach in sustaining the cause of righteousness."

Presbyterian Doctrinal Tract Society.—At a recent meeting of the New School Presbyterian Synod of Tennessee, the following memorial was adopted.—

"Feeling the importance of a Doctrinal Tract Society and a Board of Publication, under the direction and control of our branch of the Church, we earnestly recommend that the next General Assembly establish such Society, and such Board, as in their wisdom may meet the demands of the Church. We need such agencies very much within our bounds. Indeed, our existence and prosperity very much depend upon them. Sectarian influences around us imperatively require that we, as a denomination, cultivate our own field, and such agencies are needed to help us."

Bibles in England.—Recent returns laid before the House of Commons, show that during three years ending December 31, 1850, the Queen's printers printed 1,157,500 Bibles and 754,000 Testaments. For the same period, there were printed at the Oxford press 872,750 Bibles and 750,000 Testaments. At the Cambridge press, 138,500 Bibles and 204,000 Testaments.

Geography by a Chinaman.—A correspondent of The Ohio Observer says that a Chinaman has written a geography in his native tongue, in which he astonishes the natives by introducing them to the habits and customs of civilized nations, all of which they had thought hopelessly sunk in darkness and barbarism. Speaking of this country, he thus descants on the character of Washington:—

"It is evident that Washington was a remarkable man. In devising plans he was more decided than Chin Shing or Wu Kwang; in winning a country he was braver than Tsau Tsau or Liu Pi. Wielding his four-footed falchion, he extended the frontiers thousands of miles, and then refused to usurp the regal dignity, or transmit it to his posterity, but first established rules for an elective administration. Where in the world can be found such a public spirit?"

Universalism Modified.—A clerical correspondent of the Universalist paper in New-York, writing from the Eeastern part of the State, says:—

"It is no longer necessary the fact should be overlooked, that the major part of Universalists believe in a future state of discipline. This jumping into glory, as a man pulls off his clothes and dives into the bath, is to me unreasonable. I cannot be governed by the opinions of others on this subject; but must think for myself. Analogy, facts, the scheme of salvation revealed in the Bible, the relation existing between God and his creatures, all prove to my mind the position that there must be a disciplinary process, to induce a progress in holiness—that there must be a difference of moral character and spiritual excellence, of purity and happiness, when men enter the future state, in accordance with their moral condition at death."

The Portuguese Exiles.—We learn that Rev. Mr. Gonsalves is now preaching to the Portuguese exiles in Illinois, of whom there are about four hundred. A correspondeut of the Central Christian Herald, who has visited those located at Springfield, Jacksonville, and Waverly, says of them:—

"They are universally respected, I am told, and are every where highly spoken of. They are sober, industrious and economical. They all find employment, and some of them have quite eligible and profitable situations, as clerks, &c., in some of the business houses in the city. Said one gentleman to me, who is extensively acquainted with them, 'I never saw one of them drunk, neither have I heard a profane word among them.'"

Medical Students.—It is reported in the Medical Gazette, that the highest number of students counted in any of the lecture rooms of the medical institutions in New York, during the present season, including all present at any part of the lecture, has been as follows:

College of Physicians and Surgeons,	197
University of New York,	179
New York Medical College,	69
Total,	445

The classes are not supposed to be fully made up, but it is certain that there is a less number of medical students in the city now, than there was at the same period last year.

Glances at Europe: in a series of Letters from Great Britain, France, Italy, Switzerland, &c., during the Summer of 1851; including notices of the Great Exhibition, or World's Fair. By Horace Greeley. New York: Dewitt & Davenport, Publishers. 350 pp.

These Letters have already appeared in the New York Tribune, and have been extensively copied by other papers. But this circumstance will not probably stand in the way of selling the volume. Those who have read all of the letters, as well as those who have read only fragments, will be glad to get them in a convenient form for leisure reading and reference. They give a clear and vivid description of the districts traversed, and the incidents encountered. Some of the opinions expressed in them are of course crude from the circumstance that they were hastily formed and penned. But the book as a whole will be found interesting and instructive.

"Words in Earnest; or, the Path of Wisdom made Plain."—Under this title, Edward H. Fletcher, of 141 Nassau-st., New York, has published a duodecimo volume of 300 pages, containing articles on "The Social Position and Influence of Cities," "The Temptations of City Life," and "The Theatre," by Rev. W. W. Everts; "Young Men of Cities urged to Mental Improvement," by Rev. J. W. Alexander; "Duties of Employers and Employed," by Rev. Wm. Hague; "Punishment not Preventive—not Reformatory," by Prof. G. W. Anderson; "A Plea for Children," and "The Sunday Liquor Traffic," by Rev. Geo. B. Cheever.

Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.—Gould & Lincoln, of Boston, have published a "Popular Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature," condensed from Dr. Kitto's larger work, which will probably supersede all other publications in that line. It occupies 800 pages royal octavo.

Opening of Congress.—The first session of the 32d Congress opened on Second-day, and the President's Message was to be delivered on Third-day at 12 o'clock. As we usually go to press before that hour, and as there is no point upon which people will feel specially anxious to hear the President's opinion early, we conclude to defer until next week all account of the matter.

F. G. Wood, 17 State-st., Boston, offers a prize of $200 for the best Essay adapted to the interest of Business Men, and of $200 for the second best—to consist of not more than 150,000 words each—the two to be printed and sold together for 50 cents. A very respectable Committee to award the premiums is named.

The School Calamity.

The Coroner's Jury called to investigate this case, brought in their verdict last Sixth-day, after having spent nearly a week in the investigation. It is as follows:—

"The Jury unanimously concur in the opinion that the cause of death in the cases of (here follow the names of the deceased) was suffocation conjoined with external and internal injuries produced by falling down the front and rear stairway of Ward School Building known as No. 26, situate in Greenwich-avenue. That said children deceased, with others at that time in said school building, became suddenly alarmed, first occasioned by the slight paralysis of the principal of the Female Department of said school, Miss Abby Harrison. A sudden and almost instantaneous panic, produced by the impression that the building was on fire, took possession of the entire school, causing a universal rush of the children to escape from the building, rendering it utterly unavailing for the teachers, by any agency or means in their power, to quell the alarm, or to stay the children from their attempts to emerge from the building; and that the teachers of said school, and each of them, are blameless concerning the casualty, and are in no way responsible for the deaths or injuries occasioned by the disaster."

To this verdict is appended a statement in which the Jury say, that no ground of complaint can by any just construction of the testimony be alledged against the teachers of the school. The builders, also, are exonerated from blame. The design and structure of the stairway, and the facilities of ingress and egress to the building, are unqualifiedly condemned. In conclusion, the Jury recommend that separate stairways be provided for each of the Departments of the Public Schools, and that in every case the doors opening from these entrances be so hung as to swing outward; that hereafter no Public School building to be constructed should exceed three stories in hight; and that buildings be constructed with a view to a limited number of children, not in the farthest to exceed one thousand scholars.

European News.

The Steamers Asia and Washington have arrived since our last, with one week later news from Europe, of which we give a summary.

The Sub-Marine Telegraph between England and France is now in full operation. On the 13th the first message was sent, giving the price of the English Funds.

A return has just been issued by the Board of Trade of the declared value of British and Irish produce and manufactures exported from the United Kingdom in the year 1850, specifying the amount to each country and colony, from which it appears that the British Possessions, in conjunction with the United States, take nearly one half of the entire total.

Advices from New South Wales to the 18th August, had been received in London, giving the most flattering accounts both as to the quantity and quality of the gold round about Bathurst. Sydney was said to be almost deserted. The receipts per week into the towns were said to reach £20,000 to £25,000.

The Cologne Gazette states that a peasant, while lately clearing out a ditch near the paved road between Frankfort-sur-Maine and Houhst, discovered a quantity of muskets of very old manufacture, placed upright, about two feet below the earth, to the number of several thousand.

The Austrian Lloyds says that General Haynau is about to sell the large estates he purchased in Hungary, on account of the difficulty of finding laborers to cultivate them.

The Prussian Official Gazette has published an edict issued by the Minister of Public instruction, which places the Prussian schools and teachers under the control of the clergy.

The Prussian Government has under taken to establish an Electric Telegraph between Hamburg and Lubeck. The wires are already being laid down. There will be no intermediate stations.

The East India Company have forwarded to Manchester, for sale, a further consignment of 96 bales of cotton, per the Countess of Zetland, from Cochin-China.

A letter from the Russian frontier reports the publication of an imperial ukase, ordering the Jewesses to wear their own hair, and prohibiting the use of wigs.

The Hull Advertiser notices the committal of a woman for bigamy. Both marriages were celebrated within a fortnight.

The Nenagh (Ireland) Board of Guardians are entertaining a project for sending 1,000 of the paupers to America.

The second reading of the new Electoral Law was lost on Thursday evening, the 13th, by a majority of 375 to 348, in the National Assembly of France.

Five able-bodied fishermen were drowned by the swamping of their boat, while crossing the bar at Aberdeen.

The general effective land force of France consisted, on the 1st October, of 387,519 men and 84,306 horses.

Of 1,145 tribes proved to exist in Algeria, 1,100 have acknowledged the sovereignty of France.

A rage for California gold companies has commenced in London, and four, the Aqua Fria, Nouveau Monde, Ave Maria and West Mariposa have been started. The stock of some of these companies has run up to a large premium. The companies are formed under leases from Col. Fremont.

American Wine.—A letter from Cincinnati says: I have just returned from a visit to one of N. Longworth's wine cellars, where I saw 75,000 bottles of sparkling Catawba, and about 40,000 gallons of wine in casks, varying from 40 to 5,000 gallons in each. This cellar is 120 feet long, 40 feet wide, and 40 feet deep; and it is the intention of the owner to increase it to double this size during the coming Spring. Beside Mr. Longworth, there are many other persons in Cincinnati, and the neighborhood, engaged in the cultivation of the grape, and it is supposed that not less than 1,000 acres are devoted to this purpose. The Catawba grape is, I believe, much preferred to any other variety for wine, and invariably ripens better than the Isabella in this climate.

California News.

The steamship Cherokee, from Chagres, with sixteen days later news from California, and over two million dollars in gold dust, arrived at New York last Sabbath evening.

The Pacific Mail steamship Tennessee arrived at Panama on the 16th ult., with two and a half millions of dollars in gold dust on freight, and five hundred passengers. The Tennessee left San Francisco on the morning of the 1st.

Alta California, summing up the news, says that in commercial and monetary affairs the most important changes and improvements are noticeable, particularly in the city of San Francisco. The reports from the mining region present but few attractive features. Many apprehensions are entertained that the winter, from scarcity of rain in the mountains, may prove unfavorable to mining operations. Large quantities of auriferous earth have been extracted and got in readiness for washing, and the Miners are anxiously seeking after signs. The first rains of winter have already fallen, and the usual "dry spell" which, like an Indian summer in the Atlantic States, precedes the water season, has set in with hazy atmosphere and sultry days.

By this arrival we have the proceedings of a Convention assembled to consider the propriety of dividing California into two States, Southern and Northern. The language of the speakers would leave no doubt as to the final issue to which this division tends. The establishment of a new Slave State is manifestly the aim of at least some of the promoters of this scheme.

The Clipper ship Challenge, from New York, arrived at San Francisco on the 29th of October. She experienced an unusual mortality, ten men having died on board since she left New York. A few days before her arrival a difficulty occurred on board between the mate and some of the sailors, the mate having been stabbed.

New Indian troubles on the Gila are reported by this arrival.

The Israelites of San Diego, faithful to the religion of their forefathers, observed their New Year's day and day of Atonement, with due solemnity. The day of Atonement, one of the most solemn and sacred days in the Jewish calendar, was observed by Messrs. Lewis Franklin, Jacob Marks and Charles A. Fletcher, (the only three Hebrews in town), by their assembling in the house of the former gentleman, and passing the entire day in fasting and praying.

Thanksgiving Railroad Accidents.

Nov. 27, on the Rutland and Vermont Railroad, when near Rutland, the freight train was thrown down an embankment, through a misplaced switch. The fireman was killed, and Mr. Taylor, the Conductor, had his leg broken.

The same day the engine and forward car of the train from Newton was thrown off the track of the Worcester Railroad, by a heavy iron rail being maliciously placed on the line. 100 passengers narrowly escaped death; the engine was badly damaged.

The same day the 5 o'clock train from Milford ran over an Irishman killing him instantly.

The same day a train on the Branch Railroad between Salem and Lawrence, ran over a sleigh containing a gentleman and several children. The gentleman and one child were instantly killed.

A Woman wearing the Breeches from Slavery.—The Voice of the Fugitive, a paper published at Sandwich, Canada West, says that among the several new arrivals from Southern bondage this week, we have had the pleasure of greeting a likely young female on the Canadian shore, who was dressed up in her old master's best jacket nnd trousers. She was well dressed in male attire, which was the most effectual way in which she could have eluded the chase of the keen-scented slave-hunter. In proof of this, her old master passed her on the highway, in a Free State, in hot pursuit, making her a polite bow in passing, but not recognizing her, even in his own suit. "Cunning as a fox was she, but as harmless as the dove." In snapping the chains of American Slavery, link by link, we are induced to do many things which modesty, and even conscience, would forbid, under other circumstances.

Gteat Suffering and Famine.—The Milwaukie Wisconsin learns that owing to the wreck of vessels on Lake Superior, laden with supplies for the miners, a famine has occurred in that region—so that some thirty men, women, and children, started from the iron mines, through the woods, for Badenoque, a distance of sixty miles, with a foot of snow on the ground. They were out three days and suffered terribly. One poor woman, it is said, clung to a folio Bible in her possession, until she was obliged to drop it from sheer exhaustion. The children were nearly frozen.

SUMMARY.

D. D. Howard, Esq., of the Irving House, communicates to the Tribune the fact that Jenny Lind sings on Thursday, the 4th, and Saturday, the 6th inst., in Boston. The week after, probably, in Worcester, Providence, and in Hartford, or New Haven. On the 16th, 19th, and 22d inst., she sings in Philadelphia. Her next concerts in this city will commence on the 30th inst., at Tripler Hall, and her last concert in America will take place on the 12th January, 1852.

The Elmira Republican says some kidnapping larkies who have been hanging about town for a few days past, made application on Saturday last for a warrant for a fugitive slave in town. By same sort of hocus pocus the friends of the fugitive found out what was going on, so that when the hunters came after him, "where he was, he wan't there." So may all fugitive slave cases end in Elmira.

The N. Y. Tribune says that the proper pronunciation of Kossuth is Kosh-oot, or more exactly Kosh-yoot, with the emphasis on the first syllable. In the Magyar language s always has the force of our sh, except when it is modified by the collocation of z, which in this instance is not the case; u is pronounced like oo in boot; and the letters th together have the force of our simple t.

Accounts from Independence confirm the account of the loss of 175 mules belonging to the Government train, while en route to the States. Sixty miles beyond Council Grove, one man was frozen to death. The cause of the sad disaster was an immense fall of sleet and rain.

On the afternoon of Nov. 24, the gasometer of the Schenectady Gas Works exploded, and seriously, if not fatally, wounded Patrick Donnelly. Mr. John Eaton, Superintendent of the Works, and a laborer, were also somewhat injured. Owing to some leaks in the gosometer, the bonnet was taken off early in the morning for the purpose of allowing the gas to escape, so that they could enter and paint the inside. The laborers, while Mr. Eaton was absent, and contrary to his express and often repeated orders, took a lighted candle and were lowering it into the gasometer when it exploded, blowing it and the brick building erected over it to atoms, and throwing the men and rubbish in every direction.

On Second-day, Nov. 24, as the majority of the workmen in Messrs. Hoe's foundry, corner of Broome and Sheriff-sts., New York, had gone to dinner, the gable end of the grain loft of Harmon & Co., brewers, adjoining, a building four stories in hight, give away and tumbled on the roof of Messrs. Hoe's blacksmith shop, with the weight of some ten thousand bushels of barley added to the falling mass of brickwork and timber. The roof was immediately broken in, and four men, named Enoch Brown, Walter Mathews, Robert Seers and Wm. Conquest were buried in the ruins. Brown and Mathews were taken up dead, while the others were severely injured.

On Seventh-day, (Sabbath,) Oct. 22, at 11¼ A. M., the sloop Francis Cary, of Newark, N. J., loaded with iron, was capsized and sunk 1½ miles below Bedlow's Island. The Capt. of steamer Red Jacket, seeing her capsize, ran his steamer as near as possible, launched his small boat from his upper deck, and went himself with his assistant pilot and clerk to the aid of the crew. He succeeded in saving John Crogan, one of the hands, who, by clinging to one of the hatches, kept himself above water. The captain of the sloop, O. Hare, and one hand, named Hawkner, who were clinging to the mast, were thrown from it and drowned.

The Galena Advertiser gives an account of a discovery of lead ore, which promises to surpass anything of the kind on record. It lies about two miles north-east of the Linsipheur Mound, is two miles distant from any other diggings, on a farm in the prairie, and was discovered by a boy finding mineral in a creek. On examining the bottom of this creek, it was found to be almost a solid mass of lead ore for some ten or twelve feet in width. Some three or four holes have been sunk about four feet in the clay, on each side of the creek, and specimens of large black mineral taken out, weighing from fifty to one hundred pounds.

The vicinity of Halifax, N. S., was visited by a severe storm on the 22d ult. It commenced to blow hard at 10 P. M., and it raged a perfect hurricane from 2 to 4 the next morning, doing much damage to the wharves and shipping—particularly coasters. The tide overflowed the wharves, sweeping away planks, abutments, piles, &c.; vessels were driven against each other; some were dismasted, and others sunk, and daylight exposed to the view a fearful scene of disaster. The loss amounts to many thousand dollars, and falls on those least able to bear it.

A very valuable discovery has recently been patented by a French gentleman. The discovery relates to the preservation of milk for an indefinite period of time. The discovery found a place in the Crystal Palace during the Exhibition, but appears to have escaped the observation of the Jury. The milk tablets can be grated into a fine powder, and when put into tea, they will immediately dissolve, without leaving any sediment whatever behind, while the milk itself not only retains its full flavor, but also its nutritious qualities. For long sea voyages its utility is obvious.

At Boston, Nov. 25, a party of four, consisting of Thomas Haskell, ship's cook of steamer Asia, David Watkins, second steward of the fore cabin; Alexander Turnbull, barkeeper, and John Sumner, watchman of the Cunard wharf, hired a boatman named Davidson, to take them out to the Asia. A several gale was blowing at the time, accompanied by a snow storm; the boat was capsized, and the four first named were drowned. Davidson clung to his boat and was picked up.

The Ithaca Falls Woolen Cloth Mills were destroyed by fire, Nov. 23d. It was discovered about 9 P. M., and before 11 the whole of the main building, wool house, &c., were a heap of ruins. It is not known how the fire originated, but from the fact of its breaking out at both ends of the building, there is but little doubt that it was the work of an incendiary. The loss was about $30,000 over the insurance.

During a storm on the night of the 20th ult., two Coal boats owned by Messrs. Smith & Colvin, of Pittsburgh, were sunk 15 miles above Portsmouth, Ohio, and all on board, twelve persons in number, were drowned. Three of the victims were sons of a widow named Thompson, of Temperanceville, Pa., where nearly all of them resided.

A Grand Scribe of the Sons of Temperance of Western New York has issued an address to the Rechabites of this State, to meet them in a Convention at Albany, fourth week in January, to urge the Legislature to pass a law like the one passed in the State of Maine against the liquor traffic.

France has thirty-six millions of people, and less than two hundred Sunday Schools in the entire country. The single city of New-York has more than that number, with double the attendance of scholars, according to observant travelers.

The largest steamer ever built is now making in Scotland, for the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. She will be in length 325 feet, breadth of beam 43 feet, measurement 3,000 tuns, the collective power of her four engines 1,400 horses; she is guarantied to go 14 knots an hour.

The schooner Newbould, Capt. Maine, was capsized a few days since, on Lake Michigan, with about thirty persons on board, all lost! She was on her passage from Chicago to Grand Traverse, with full supplies for a lumbering establishment at the latter place.

The Spanish Cortes have decided that the narrow guage, 4 feet 8½ inches, shall be used for all the railroads to be built in that country.

A large quantity of plank has been sawn in Allegany county, N. Y., for the Dry Dock to be built at San Francisco.

Recent frost in parts of South-Carolina and Georgia have, it is feared, greatly damaged cotton and other vegetation.

The same officer has given notice that the bonds and mortgages forming a portion of the securities of the Bank of New Rochelle, of Bolivar, Allegany County, will be sold at auction at the Merchants' Exchange, Albany, at noon, on the 17th of Dec. These mortgages are for $16,700 on Dunkirk property, and $48,263 on Brooklyn property, and bear 7 per cent. interest.

Mr. Geo. Law, of this City, in connection with Mr. Seymour of Utica, and others, has closed a contract with the Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad Company, for the entire survey, grading, bridging, superstructure, iron, dépots, equipage, &c., of their road, for the sum of nine millions of dollars. This road is about 330 miles long, and is to be delivered in complete working order in all respects within five years, for that sum.

Widow Mary Bowen, wife of the late Rev. James Bowen, of Mount Carmel, Illinois, is in great distress on account of the absence of her son Francis Bowen. No tidings can be heard from him, although friends have been written to in all directions. His poor mother, now on the very borders of the grave, would be greatly relieved to hear of or from him. Most of his relatives think him deceased.

Two fugitive slaves from Maryland were arrested in Columbia, Pa., on Saturday, one of whom succeeded in making his escape. The other was delivered up to his master and taken back to Baltimore. A white man resisted the Marshal while making the arrests, and a warrant has been issued for his apprehension. Two white men from Baltimore, the fugitives confess, assisted them to make their escape.

On Thursday last a new brick building, unfinished, being one of a row in Twenty-fifth-st., between Seventh and Eighth-avs. New York, fell with a tremendous crash, and now lies in the shapeless condition of its original elements. Four persons were considerably injured, but none of them dangerously so. Mr. Clark, the builder, was one of the persons wounded. "He that diggeth a pit shall fall into it."

In Oneida County, last week, two men, named David Shandler and Jacob L. Brunt, were sentenced to nine months' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of $10 each, for throwing stones into the express train of cars going West, a day or two previous. One of the stones weighed about 3½ pounds, and entirely demolished a window in the car, although it fortunately missed the passenger sitting on the same seat.

The Superintendent of the Banking Department of this State has given notice that the trust funds of the James Bank, Jamesville, Saratoga County, will be converted into money, and the proceeds applied toward the redemption of the circulation of that institution. The circulation of this Bank, according to the late annual report of the Controller, was $76,743.

The Christian Advocate and Journal announces that the late decision of Judge Nelson in the case of the Methodist Church North and South referred to only one of three suits pending, and that whichever party finally succeeds in the Circuit Court, there will doubtless be an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States—the tribunal of the last resort.

Died, in Lysander, Onondaga County, August 3, Pamelia A. Adams, in the 19th year of her age. Also, October 3, John Q. Adams, in the 17th year of his age. Also, November 1, Charles J. Adams, in the 15th year of his age. Also, November 15, Phebe Ann Adams, in the 21st year of her age.

Four inches of snow fell at Fitchburg, Mass., on Monday, Nov. 24, and eight inches at the same time at Concord, N. H. In the upper part of Maine the drifts were three feet in hight. There was fine sleighing at Bellow's Falls, Vt., last week.

The New-Orleans Commercial Bulletin of the 17th ult., says that immense damage has been done to the Cotton crop in that vicinity by a storm. Some of the plantations will not yield one quarter of what was expected.

Dates from Galveston, Texas, to the 21st ult., state that Col. Rogers has at length succeeded in effecting a treaty with the Camanche Indians. Col. Rogers recovered twenty-seven white captives from the Camanches, who had been in bondage for some time.

In a New York Court, last week, in the case of John Weber against John Washington, the latter charged with seducing the daughter of the former, a girl of 14 years of age, the jury gave a verdict of ten thousand dollars for the plantiff.

The latest advices from the seat of war on the Rio Grande, report that Gen. Caravajal had received a reinforcement of four hundred Americans, and was making preparations to renew hostilities on a most formidable scale.

It is understood that the President has decided to remove Brigham Young from the Governorship of Utah Territory.

The price of Coal in Cincinnati is reduced to 13 cents a bushel. Eggs 20 cents a dozen in the same market.

The census returns show the annual product of hogs in Indiana to be 2,314,900.

Mr. Thomas Vincent, a farmer in Ithaca, was killed on Saturday by kicks from a horse.

MARRIED.

At Pawcatuck, R. I., on the 22d ult., by Elder A. B. Burdick, Mr. Thaddeus H. Spencer, of Suffield, Conn., to Mrs. Lucy E. Stillman, of the former place.

DIED.

In Leonardsville, Madison Co., N. Y., Nov. 4th, after a week's sickness of acute inflammatory disease, Mrs. Lucy Davis, widow of the late William Davis, in the eighty-seventh year of her age. She was a native of the State of Rhode Island, and in early life professed her faith in Jesus, and became a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton. On her removal to the State of New York, she united with the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, then under the charge of the late Eld. Henry Clarke, and has continued a much-loved member of the same church until her removal by death to the society of the spirits of the just made perfect. Her whole professional life appears to have been that of a consistent and devout Christian. She was highly esteemed for her excellent life and conversation, by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, and those who knew her best, loved her most. Though far advanced in life, in her death the church has sustained an afflictive loss; but her remaining children and relatives suffer a still heavier affliction. As her pastor was absent, her funeral sermon was preached by Eld. E. S. Bailey, from Heb. 2:14, 15.

In Waterford, Ct., Nov. 10th, Esther, wife of Dea. Oliver Maxson, aged 67 years. Sister Maxson embraced religion in early life, and connected herself with the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Waterford, where for more than half a century, she has remained a worthy member; and from thence, we trust, she was transferred to the church triumphant above. H. H. B.

New York Market—December 1, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 87 a 4 94; Pearls 5 37.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 3 87 a 4 00 for common to straight State; 4 00 a 4 18 for Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, and Wisconsin; 4 25 a 4 50 for fancy Ohio and Genesee. Rye Flour 3 25. Corn Meal 3 25 for Jersey, 3 44 for Brandywine. Buckwheat 2 12 a 2 50 for 100 lbs.

Grain—In Wheat there is not much doing, the prices being above the views of holders; a lot of white Michigan brought 90c. Rye 69c. Barley 78 a 83c. Oats 38 a 39c. for State, 36 a 37c. for Jersey. Corn 59 a 60c. for Western mixed, 62 a 63c. for round yellow.

Provisions—Pork, 13 00 a 14 00 for prime, 15 00 a 15 50 for mess. Beef, 4 00 a 5 00 for prime, 7 50 a 9 75 for mess. Dressed hogs 6 a 6¼c. Lard 8 a 8¼c. Butter 8 a 11c. for Ohio, 10 a 16c. for Western New York. Cheese 6 a 7c.

Feathers—35 a 38c. for prime Ohio.

Hops—32 a 35c.

Hay—50 a 52c. for 100 lbs.

Peas and Beans—Canadian Peas 68 a 76c. White Beans 1 25 a 1 56 per bushel.

Seeds—Flax 1 30 a 1 33. Nothing doing in Clover and Timothy.

Wool—Slight improvement; Domestic Fleece 35 a 43c.; pulled 30 a 35c.

LETTERS.

L. A. Davis, W. C. Kenyon, J. Parmalee, N. V. Brand, J. Hubbard, B. G. Stillman, A. R. Gardner, A. Babcock, W. B. Maxson, S. F. Blood, J. Whitford, H. H. Baker, J. P. Livermore.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Abel G. Lewis, Scott,	$2 00	to vol. 8	No. 52
John Barber, 2d, "	2 00	8	52
A. D. C. Barber, "	2 00	8	52
Daniel Babcock, "	1 00	8	26
B. A. Palmer, "	1 00	8	13
L. D. Burdick, DeRuyter,	2 00	8	52
Wm. G. Crandall, "	2 00	9	25
Ruhama Lewis, Brookfield,	2 00	8	52
C. M. Whitford, "	2 00	8	52
J. C. Burdick, Leonardsville,	2 00	8	52
E. B. Rogers, Oxford,	2 00	8	52
W. C. Satterlee, State Bridge,	2 00	8	52
Royal Burdick, Higginsville,	1 00	8	40
J. Willard, Mina,	2 00	8	52
H. W. Maxson, Sacketts Harbor,	4 00	8	52
Clarke Witter, Wellsville,	2 00	8	52
Wm. B. Clarke, Andover,	2 00	8	52
Hazard P. Clarke, Independence,	5 00	8	26
Jared Green, Berlin,	2 00	8	52
Russell W. Green, "	2 00	8	52
Desire Maxson, Troy,	2 00	8	52
C. S. Benson, New York,	4 00	8	52
Lewis A. Davis, Farmington, Ill.	2 00	9	26

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

New York and Erie Railroad.

DURING the Winter, trains will leave New York for Dunkirk as follows:—Mail Train at 8 A. M. Day Express Train at 12 M. Emigrant Train at 5 P. M. Evening Express Train at 5 P. M.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.
Winter Arrangements.

LEAVES New York at 9 A. M. and 4½ P. M., foot of Cortlandt-st.; at 11 A. M. (freight) and 4.10 P. M., Pier No. 1 North River—for Elizabethport, Elizabethtown, Westfield, Scotch Plains, Plainfield, Boundbrook, Somerville, Raritan, White House, Easton, &c.

Daguerrean Gallery.

GURNEY'S Daguerrean Gallery, No. 189 Broadway, has been known for years as one of the first establishments of the kind in the United States, and the oldest in the city of New York. He has recently greatly enlarged his Gallery by the addition of more rooms and large skylights, and other improvements, rendering it one of the most extensive establishments in this country. Mr. G. attends personally to his sitters, and from his great experience in the art he is enabled, at all times, to give perfect satisfaction. The large-sized pictures recently taken by his new process are universally acknowledged superior to any heretofore taken in this country. A large collection can be seen at all hours of the day. Ladies and gentlemen are respectfully invited to examine them.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Wm. Dunn & Co. have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.
WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Hoe's Cast Steel Circular and Long Saws.

THE subscribers manufacture from the best cast steel, Circular Saws, from two inches to five feet diameter. These Saws are carefully hardened and tempered, and are ground and finished by machinery designed expressly for this purpose, and are therefore much superior in truth and uniformity of surface to those ground in the usual manner. They require less set, less power to drive them, and are not so liable to become heated, and produce a saving in timber.

They also manufacture cast steel MILL, PITT, and CROSS-CUT SAWS and BILLET-WEBS, of superior quality, all of which they have for sale at their Ware-Rooms, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st., or they may be obtained of the principal hardware merchants in the United States. R. HOE & CO., Printing-Press, Machine, and Saw Makers, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st.

The following extract is from a report made by a Committee of scientific and practical gentlemen, appointed by the American Institute:—

"Your Committee are of unanimous opinion, that in the apparatus invented by Mr. R. M. Hoe, for grinding saws, he has displayed great ingenuity and tact in the adaptation of machinery to the production of results in the manufacture of Saws, which may with propriety be denominated the ne plus ultra of the art."

Publishers of newspapers who will insert this advertisement three times, with this note, and forward us a paper containing the same, will be paid in printing materials, by purchasing four times the amount of their bill for the advertisement. nov13 3t

Chambers' Works.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. A selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time. Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Forming two large imperial octavo volumes of 700 pages each, double-column letter-press; with upwards of 300 Illustrations. Edited by Robert Chambers. Embossed cloth, $5.

The work embraces about one thousand Authors, chronologically arranged, and classed as Poets, Historians, Dramatists, Philosophers, Metaphysicians, Divines, etc., with choice selections from their writings, connected by a Biographical, Historical, and Critical Narrative; thus presenting a complete view of English Literature, from the earliest to the present time. Let the reader open where he will, he cannot fail to find matter for profit and delight. The selections are gems—infinite riches in a little room; in the language of another, "A whole English Library fused down into one cheap book!"

☞ The American edition of this valuable work is enriched by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint Engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron; a full-length portrait of Dr. Johnson; and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson. These important and elegant additions, together with superior paper and binding, render the American superior to all other editions.

CHAMBERS' MISCELLANY OF USEFUL AND ENTERTAINING KNOWLEDGE. Edited by William Chambers. With elegant Illustrative Engravings. 10 vols., cloth, $7 50.

☞ This work has been highly recommended by distinguished individuals, as admirably adapted for Family, Sabbath, and District School Libraries.

"It would be difficult to find any miscellany superior or even equal to it; it richly deserves the epithets 'useful and entertaining;' and I would recommend it very strongly, as extremely well adapted to form parts of a library for the young, or of a social or circulating library, in town or country."—George B. Emerson, Esq., Chairman Boston School Book Committee.

The above works are bound in various styles, prices varying accordingly. A liberal discount made to Booksellers and Agents. GOULD & LINCOLN, Publishers, 59 Washington-st., Boston.

Miscellaneous.

Old Fashioned Farmer's Kitchen in New England.

A picture of one of these scenes of comfort has lately fallen under our observation. What can be more cheerful and pleasant than the view of a farmer's kitchen, taken during the evening meal of a cool autumn day? It is a picture of the calm happiness of rural life.

The kitchen of the old farm-house of New England is not the scullery, or mere cooking-place of some modern houses—a dirty hole, or comfortless out-room, or sort of human bake oven, where the cook is almost as much cooked as the food. No, it is a room perhaps twenty-four feet long, and sixteen wide, well lighted, warm, neat, and every way comfortable. Upon one side there is a fire-place large enough to roast a whole ox, in which a great fire of logs seuds up a cheerful blaze, lighting up the whole room so that its brightness might be seen through the great uncurtained windows like a beacon light to the traveler, as he comes down the slope of yonder hill, two miles away, and makes him involuntarily thank God, in anticipation, for the good things spread out upon the great table standing between the window and the fire.

Let us take note of this old fashioned meal. At the head of the table sits a matron of some sixty summers, though in appearance there is nothing of the winter of old age about her. Her dress is a gown of homespun worsted, well fortified with flannels from the same manufactory, that bid defiance to the autumn winds of a rigorous climate. She wears a cap on the head, and shoes and stockings upon the feet, that were made in pursuance of the best medical recipe ever written—"Keep the head cool and the feet dry and warm"—for the stockings are the product of busy fingers at idle moments with many housewives, and the shoes of stout leather, were made for service, and the cap is a mere ornament—a snow-wreath among raven locks, and her face is the indication of health and happiness. Upon her right hand sits the farmer, dressed in a butter nut colored coat, blue pants, buff vest, white linen shirt—every article home-made—stout boots and black silk cravat; for he has been to town, and this is his holiday suit. Below him sits Jedediah, Marvin, Abram, and Solomon, all economical names, for they can be shortened in common use to Jed, Marv, Ab, and Sol. Two of these wear the check, woolen winter frock of New England farmers, the others are in round jackets—they are school-boys. Upon the left sits Mary, Adeline, and Mehetabel, pictures of rural beauty and health. The eldest is "drest up;" she has been to town with father; she has a gown of "boughten stuff," around her neck is a boa of lamb's wool, knit by her own hands, fastened in the throat with grandmother's silver brooch. The other two are in check woolen, spun, wove, colored, and made up under the same roof. Further down the table are three athletic young men, day laborers upon the farm, sons of neighboring farmers, one of whom is eyeing the charms of the sweet face of Mary with an expression easily read by a good physiognomist. The group is completed by the schoolmaster, a young man with a glowing eye, which speaks of an intellect that will tell upon the world some day with as much force as though he had not been obliged to obtain his education by summer labor and winter teaching. He is one of New England's rising sons. The meal is for men who toil. At one end of the table stands a pot, of ample dimensions, smoking from the great oven flanking the fire-place, of that most excellent of New England cookeries—a dish of baked beans—crowned with a great, square piece of salt, fat pork, crisped and rich. Lower down, a broad, pewter platter holds the remains of the "boiled victuals" that formed the dinner—beef, pork, potatoes, cabbage, beets and turnips—a pile that might rival a small hay-cock in size and shape; a plate of rye and Indian bread, cold, and another, made of rye flour, are untouched; for a great loaf, just drawn from the oven, nicely browned and hot, is offered in great, broken pieces, to tempt the appetite to one of the richest repasts ever given to an epicure. By the side of the old lady stands a black, earthen tea-pot, the contents of which are freely offered, but only accepted by two of them, as the rich, new milk, or hearty, old cider, is preferred as a beverage, morning, noon, and night, by those old fashioned, hearty laborers. We must not forget the never-failing accompaniment of the evening meal at this season of the year in New England, for 'tis New England's proudest dish, the golden pumpkin sweetest pie.

God being thanked for his great bounties after the close of this happy meal, all draw into a circle around the great fire-place. Father is finishing off an axe-helve, Jed is mending a pair of boots, and one of the hired men upon the other side of the same bench is repairing a wagon harness—both use the same tools. The other two are employed, one shelling corn and the other helping Mary peel pumpkins, which are cut in slices and hung upon poles overhead. This is Mary's accepted lover. Happy hearts and blessed industry! Marv, Ab, and Sol, are engaged with the schoolmaster around the big table, lighted by a home-made candle; they are studying geography, writing, and arithmetic—fitting themselves for future statesmen. Mother is making a new coat for one of the boys, Ada is ironing at a side table, and Hitty is washing the supper dishes at another. There are two other members of this happy family group—the cat occupies the top of the blue-dye tub, which stands in one corner of the fire-place, and Old Bose sleeps quietly under the table. Directly, and before any sound is audible to human ear, he gets up, walks out into the entry and gives a long, sharp bark at the outside door and stands waiting the approaching step. Soon satisfied that the new comer is a friend, he retires again to his repose, and three or four boys that look as though they might be brothers to those already described, so much are they dressed alike, enter and draw around the table with the others and the schoolmaster. These are from a neighboring farm, sons of a widow, who have till now been so much engaged with the labors of the farm, that they have been unable to attend the school in the day time, but are determined to lose none of the evening opportunities to keep along with their class. These will make honest, intelligent, industrious farmers. The old folks welcome them heartily, and the young ones are all rejoiced at their arrival. The old lady inquires why in the world their mother did not come along; and Mary, the kind-hearted Mary, is sorry to hear that it is because Sarah is not so well, and mother is very busy getting their clothes done so they can go to school, as soon as they finish picking apples.

"John," says she, "let us hurry and get through our 'sent' and we will go over to the widow's, and while I help her with her sewing, you shall read for the amusement of poor Sarah, for an hour or two." "If that is the case," says father, laying down his axe handle, "my good children, you shall go now. I will finish your work." "And Mary, my dear girl, don't go empty handed," says mother; "you know from experience how sweet little delicacies, brought by friendly hands to the side of a sick bed, are to the poor invalid." "Hitty, my dear, if you have done your dishes, you must get your cards and make a few rolls, for I am quite out of gray yarn, and we must have more stockings in the work." "Old man, don't cut that pumpkin too thick." "Ada, daughter, get a plate of doughnuts and some of those nice fall pippins and set on the table, I guess these boys can eat a few while they are cyphering. I do wonder if you have got light enough." "Sol, get another candle, I am sure such industrions boys ought to have all the light they want." [Am. Agriculturist.

Death of the Poet Montgomery.

The decease of James Montgomery, whose name for almost half a century has been familiar to the readers of English poetry, is announced by a late arrival from England. Montgomery was born on the 4th of Nov., 1771, and consequently had just completed the unusual allotment of four score years. On his eightieth birth-day, the 4th of November, he planted an oak tree on the lawn in front of the Infirmary of Sheffield, in which town he had resided from early life. Descended from parents who were attached to the Moravian faith, he received his education at a school belonging to that persuasion, and never lost the impressions which were then made on his susceptible mind. His parents intended him to enter the ministry among the Moravian brethren; but finding himself disinclined to pursue that vocation, he entered a mercantile house with a view to adopting that business as his permanent calling. Becoming deeply interested in politics, and having already attained a certain readiness and power in composition, he connected himself with a journal in Sheffield, of which he soon became the leading editor. His freedom of remark on public affairs subjected him to the suspicion of the Government. He was narrowly watched, and soon was made the subject of prosecution. He was first sentenced to three months' imprisonment. This was in the year 1794; and during the next year he was condemned to six months' imprisonment for a similar offense.

His first poetical work was "The Wanderer in Switzerland," which appeared in 1806, and was received with signal favor by the public, and has passed through some fifteen editions. "The West Indies" was published in 1807; "Prison Amusements" in 1810, though written sixteen years before; "The World before the Flood" in 1813; "Greenland" in 1819; and the "Pelican Island" at a subsequent period. An edition of his collected works was issued in 1841.

Montgomery will be chiefly remembered in British Literature for his devotional poetry. His productions in this kind are tinged with a slight coloring of mysticism; they breathe the spirit of the simple and fervent Moravian piety in which he was nurtured; at the same time, they are truly lyrical, not didactic statements in verse, but gushing from a deep religious fountain; blending enthusiasm with sweetness, and a certain Oriental unction with modern refinement; they will continue to be regarded among the choicest specimens of choral melodies, while men speaking the English tongue shall meet in solemn assemblies for social worship.

Russian Manners and Hospitality.

You must go and see the different country houses which they have built in the middle of an island formed by the Neva, in the centre of Petersburg. The plants of the South, the perfumes of the East, and the divans of Asia, embellish these residences. By immense hot-houses, in which the fruits of all countries are ripened, an artificial climate is created. The possessors of these palaces endeavor not to lose the least ray of sun while he appears on their horizon; they treat him like a friend who is about to take his departure whom they have known formerly in a more fortunate country.

The day after my arrival, I went to dine with one of the most considerable merchants of the city, who exercised hospitality a la Russia—that is to say, he placed a flag on the top of his house to signify that he dined at home, and this invitation was sufficient for all his friends. He made us dine in the open air, so much pleasure was felt from these poor days of Summer—of which a few yet remained—to which we should have scarcely given the name in the south of Europe. The garden was very agreeable; it was embellished with trees and flowers; but at four paces from the house the deserts and the marshes were again to be seen. In the environs of Petersburg, nature has the look of an enemy who resumes his advantages when man ceases for a moment to struggle with him. [Freeman.

A Fox's Revenge.

Rev. J. Murray, in his work on Creation, tells the following story:—

An old and respectable man of the County of Montgomery used frequently to relate an anecdote of a circumstance which he saw. In his youth he resided on the banks of the Hudson River. One day he went to a bay on the river in order to shoot ducks or wild geese. When he came to the river he saw six geese beyond shot. He determined to wait for them to approach the shore. While sitting there, he saw a fox come down to the shore and stand some time and observe the geese. At length he turned and went into the woods, and came out with a very large bunch of moss in his mouth. He then entered the water very silently, sank himself, and then keeping the moss above the water, himself concealed, he floated among the geese. Suddenly one of them was drawn under the water, and the fox soon appeared on the shore with the goose on his back. He ascended the bank and found a hole made by the tearing up of a tree. The hole he cleared, placed in the goose, and covered it with great care, strewing leaves over it. The fox then left, and while he was gone, the hunter unburied the goose, closed the hole, and resolved to await the issue. In about half an hour the fox returned with another in company. They went directly to the place where the goose had been buried, and threw out the earth. The goose could not be found. They stood regarding each other for some time, when suddenly the second fox attacked the other most furiously, as if offended at the trick of his friend. During the battle the man shot them both.

How Glass Beads are Made.

Besides the invention of mirrors, reticulated glasses, for which we have to thank the Venetians, the art of making glass beads was also first discovered in the glass-houses of Murano, and is practiced there at the present day, on an extensive scale. The small glass beads are fragments cut from pieces of glass tubing, the sharp edges of which are rounded by fusion. Glass tubes of the proper size are first drawn from 100 to 200 feet in length, and of all possible colors, in Venice they prepare two hundred different shades, and are broken into lengths of two feet. These of the same length as their diameters; they now present the form of beads, the edges of which, however, are so sharp that they would cut the thread on which they have to be strung. The edges have consequently to be rounded by fusion, and as this operation must be performed upon a great number at once, they must not be allowed to stick together; they are mixed in coal dust and powdered clay, previous to their being placed in the revolving cylinder in which they are heated. The finished beads are then passed through sieves sorted to their size, and strung upon threads by women. Besides the ordinary knitting beads, another kind is manufactured called perles a la lune, which are firmer and more expensive. These are prepared by twisting a small cord of glass, softened by a glass blower's lamp, around an iron wire. The glass beads made in imitation of pearl for toilet ornaments, the invention of which dates from the year 1656, are very different from the preceding, both as regards their application, mode of production, and origin. These are small solid glass beads, of the same size as native pearls, which they are made to resemble by a coating of varnish, which gives them a peculiar pearly lustre and color. A maker of rosaries, by the name of Jaquin, was the first to discover that the scales of a species of fish (Cyprinus albunus) communicate a pearly hue to water. Based upon this observation, glass globules were first covered on the outside, but at a later period on the inside, with this aqueous essence. The costly essence, however, of which only a quarter of a pound could be obtained from the scales of four thousand, was subject to one great evil, that of decay. After trying alcohol without success, in consequence of its destroying the lustre of the substance, sal-ammoniac was at length found to be the best medium in which to apply the essence; a little isinglass is also mixed with it, which causes it to adhere better. The pearls are blown singly at the lamp, a drop of the essence is then blown into them through a thin tube, spread out by rolling, and the dried varnish is then covered in a similar manner by a layer of way.

Remarkable Automaton Tree.

This remarkable piece of mechanism, which formed one of the curiosities at the World's Fair, consists of a hawthorn tree in full bloom, faithfully copied, the crusted or semi-perished bark on the trunk and the foliage, being most naturally imitated; and on several branches stuffed humming birds are perched, which, now waving their wings and anon hopping from spray to spray, and pouring forth a flood of music, almost charm the spectator into belief that a pleasing reality, and not an illusion, is presented to his admiring view. One of the tiny creatures jumps from one branch to another in pursuit of flies and insects; another lies basking on one of the hawthorn flowers, and a third sits on its nest, while several others are disposed on different parts of the tree. The singing of the birds is not only accurate and natural, but the motion is also admirable—one of them flying from one branch to another, a distance of about eight inches, with the greatest possible precision, and alternately turning completely round in going or returning, and without any thing being observed to cause such an effect, or even to discover the motion of this unique and elegant specimen of industrial art.

On the base of the tree, which abounds in moss, tuffs of grass, and the concomitant herbage, with a number of shells, &c., appears a tanager, and a Chinese fly-catcher, both kinds of beautiful plumage, and the latter is incessantly pecking the carcase of a golden beetle amongst the moss in the foreground, now and then stopping to swallow what he may have managed to cull with his slender beak. The artist has achieved a work of which he may be justly proud, the ensemble being such as to strike the beholder with involuntary wonderment, whilst the most endite ornithologist or professor of botany, would fail to distingusih the imaginary from real, at first sight. The whole work is enclosed in a glass case, and is the production of that renowned Parisian, Stevenard.

Experiments with Sorrel.

I hear and see a good deal spoken and written against sorrel, which I do not think it deserves. I will give you my views upon it. Sorrel is generally regarded as a worthless production. Still it is not always easy to get rid of. On many farms, and more especially on such as are of a sandy formation, and imbuded with acids, sorrel readily takes root, and finding in the soil an abundance of appropriate pabulum, it grows and perpetuates itself with surprising and fatal vigor. On all lands of this description it springs spontaneously. When a farmer finds that his fields have become infested with it, his only remedy is to make the best of it. If he keeps horses or sheep, they will find a ready market for the produce of the sorrel plat, and will be found to do as well as when fed on the best cultivated grasses, with a liberal supply of grain. Of the correctness of this I am convinced by numerous experiments made with a view to ascertain, precisely, its specific value for feeding, my farm being one on which the plant grows with the most luxuriant vigor, and cannot easily be got rid of. Horses, fed on sorrel hay—made, as hereafter stated, without a particle of provender—do remarkably well, and will perform as much work in the spring as those supplied with any feed it is possible to give them. As the sorrel grows short, and contains, for so diminutive a plant, a very considerable quantity of seed, it should be cut early in the season—say as soon as the seeds have fairly formed, and be made, not by open and long exposure to a hot sun, but in grass cock. This is done by allowing the crop to remain in winrow till toward night of the first day after mowing, and then pitching it into small cocks of eighty or a hundred pounds each, (green hay,) and raking up the scatterings afterward with a hand rake.

In this condition it should be allowed to remain for five or six days, if the weather be fair, and before getting in it may be turned up, simply reserving the cocks, the bottoms of which will generally be a little moist, in consequence of absorption of water from the ground. By permitting sorrel to stand till the seed ripens, the value of the crop for hay will be materially diminished, as the seed will be shattered out in cutting and conveying to the barn. When ground, sorrel seed makes a meal highly valuable as a feed for hogs, &c. [Germantown Telegraph.

A Visit to a Mexican Cathedral.

A correspondent of the Union, writing from the city of Mexico, says:—

"One day last week I spent a whole morning (six hours) in examining the Cathedral and its treasuries. By special favor they showed us everything; among others the custodian, in which the consecrated host is exposed on certain occasions. It cost $200,000, and is worth $500,000; and you will not wonder at this when I inform you that it is full four feet high, made of solid gold, studded with precious stones. The pedestal is a foot and a half square, inlaid with diamonds and rubies. At each corner is the golden figure of an angel, exqnisitely carved. Around his waist and neck are strings of the finest pearls. His wings are inlaid or covered with diamonds, rubies, and emeralds. In his right hand he holds sheaves of wheat, made of topaz; in his left, bunches of grapes, made of amethysts. The shaft is also studded with diamonds, rubies, and emeralds. The upper part, containing the host, is made to represent the sun, and is a foot and a half in circumference; the rays that emenate on one side are made entirely of diamonds, beginning with some of large size, and gradually tapering off. The cross that surmounts the top is also on this side made of diamonds, and is superb. On the other side, both the cross and the rays are a beautiful emerald, perhaps larger than the diamonds."

IRON CARRIAGES.—We yesterday examined, says the N. Y. Tribune, the newly patented Iron and Steal Carriages which are for sale by Mr. Hague, No. 6 Gold-st., near Maiden-lane, and were satisfied, after listening to the inventor's explanations, that in durability and safety from accidents they are very far superior to ordinary carriages, while their cost and weight scarcely exceed those of the latter. In the new carriage, the body, reach, hubs, axles, spokes, tire, &c., are of metal, all but the tire being protected from oxidation by a thick coat of enduring black paint. The spokes are screwed into the hub, and so bolted to the tire as to render the defection of one almost impossible; they are set into the hub alternately some inches nearer to and further from the body, so that half of them may be carried away by a violent concussion and the wheel still stand firm and steady; while the pressure is so equally adjusted as to bear quite as heavily on that part of the wheel which is uppermost as that which is resting on the earth. The linch-pin cannot fall out; the reach can scarcely be torn from the body; there is no wood to decay or crack but the felloes, which will last longer than those of the ordinary carriage and can be replaced with less trouble. The weight of the substantial Iron Carriage exhibited is between three and four hundred pounds.

LION CATCHING IN SOUTH AFRICA.—Mr. Lemue, who formerly resided at Motito, and is familiar with Killiharri country, assured me that the remarkable accounts sometimes circulated as to the people of that part of Africa catching lions by the tail, and of which, I confess, I was very incredulous, were perfectly true. He well knew that the method prevailed, and was certainly not uncommon among the people. Lions would sometimes become extremely dangerous. Having become accustomed to human flesh, they would not willingly eat any thing else. When a neighborhood became infested, the men would determine on measures to be adopted to rid themselves of the nuisance; then, forming themselves into a band, they would proceed in search of their royal foe, and beard the lion in his liar. Standing close by one another, the lion would make his spring on some one of the party—every man, of course, hoping he might escape the attack—when instantly others would dash forward and seize his tail, lifting it close to the body with all their might; thus not only astonishing the animal, and absolutely taking him off his guard, but rendering his efforts powerless for the moment; while others closed in with their spears, and at once stabbed the monster through and through. [Freeman.

NEW ETCHING LIQUOR FOR COPPER-PLATE ENGRAVING.—Etching on copper with nitric acid has the great inconvenience of producing a disengagement of gases which remain in small globules between the copper and the liquid, and prevent the uniform action of the latter. Engravers, to obviate this defect, either shake the plate, or with their breath or otherwise force the acid to move and carry off these globules. Mr. Kobell, a Prussian, has discovered that the chloride of iron combines with copper without the production of gases, and that it may be used by engravers without difficulty. To prepare the salt, iron turnings are dissolved in hydro-chloric acid, and a hot aqueous solution of hydro-chlorate of potash is added, until the color, at first a deep brown, acquires the yellowish hue of beer. This, diluted with weak hydro-chlorate acid, is the liquor ready for use. It acts on copper by transforming it into chloruret of copper, which the hydro chlorate of potash converts into chloride of copper. The liquor may be kept in good condition by adding to it, from time to time, a hot solution of hydro-chlorate of potash.

CRIME IN NEW YORK.—The quarterly report by the Chief of Police of New York city, for the quarter to 30th September, shows that the whole number of arrests during the preceding three months amounted to 3,748, among other offenses, as follows:—Arson, 2; assault and battery, 627; burglary, 3; disorderly conduct, 70; desertion from army and navy, 7; forgery, 3; fighting in street, 54; larceny, grand and petit, 36; highway robbery, 3; habitual drunkards, 7; insanity, 31; intoxication, &c., 374; insulting females, 9; keeping disorderly house, 12; murder, 1; counter feit money, 8; perjury, 5; riot, 2; receiving stolen goods, 2; rescuing prisoners, 3; suspicious persons, 11; suspicion of murder, 1; selling lottery policies, 1; threats, 17; violation of city ordinances, 172; vagrancy, 93. Total, 1,794—being an increase of 180 over the previous six months.

REFRESHING INCIDENT IN THE DRAMA OF LIFE.—On Saturday morning, says the Boston Courier, the widow of a worthy mechanic, recently deceased, called at an office in State street, for the payment of a small bill, which was due for the services of her late husband. Her pale and sunken cheek told the sad story of bereavement, affliction, and over-watching. After her departure, a number of gentlemen who happened to be at the office upon business, made some inquiries respecting her condition, and upon being informed that she had been left with four small children, and in almost destitute circumstances, immediately opened a subscription list, each putting down five dollars. Others, who came in afterwards, in the regular course of the morning exchanges, followed suit, and before "board time" a very respectable sum was raised for the deeply afflicted and almost heart-broken widow. "Whose giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." "Go thou and do likewise."

THE RELIGION OF PAYING DEBTS.—One of our exchanges has the following strong remarks on this subject. They drive the nail in to the head and clinch it:—

"Men may sophisticate as they please. They can never make it right, and all the bankrupt-laws in the universe cannot make it right, for them not to pay their debts. There is a sin in this neglect as clear and as deserving church discipline as in stealing or in false swearing. He who violates his promise to pay, or withholds the payment of a debt when it is in his power to meet his engagement, ought to be made to feel that in the sight of all honest men he is a swindler. Religion may be a very comfortable cloak under which to hide; but if religion does not make a man 'deal justly,' it is not worth having."

A STEAM PALACE.—A very singular and expensive project is entertained by some gentlemen in this City in regard to steam navigation on the North River, as opposed to the land conveyance along its eastern shore by the Railroad. Whether it will amount to a realization, we cannot guess; but it has been so far entertained that plans have been prepared and estimates made of the expenses for building a mammoth steamer, five hundred feet in length, to be finished and furnished in the most luxurious style, and to be in every way equal for comfort and accomodation to the best hotels in New-York. In a word, it is a proposition to place ease and luxury in competition with a moderate gain of time for the northern travel.

Variety.

The Eastport Sentinel says: A Salem schooner, the St. Helena, arrived here on Thursday from New York, with over 50 barrels of strong liquor on board, from T. & B. (?) marked principally for St. Stephens and St. John, N. B., and directed in the care of R. Burns, B. Sharkey, and George Hobbs, Eastport. The liquor was seized by our authorities, and on the refusal of the master of the vessel to unload it, the hatches were forced open by a constable and the liquor landed and stored. The liquor came mostly in barrels, which are not admissible to entry, by the revnue laws of New-Brunswick.

Mr. J. Gould lately read before the Geological Society of London a minute description of six new species of humming birds, brought from Veragua, in New Granada, by Mr. Warzewicz, a distinguished traveler and botanist. Some specimens, thought to have been spoiled on the voyage, were still beautiful, colored a glittering red, blue, and green color, mixed with snow white, or a brilliancy enhanced by darker colors. They were discovered at 6,000 feet up the mountains where they inhabit. Mr. W. is the first naturalist who has penetrated into those parts, where he encountered both hardship and danger.

California gold has a whitish color, due to a large proportion of silver, which gives it quite a new appearance. Professor Tenant, of King's College, London, having experimented with the crucible, on a large piece of gold-bearing quartz, from California, weighing 3 lbs. 1½ oz., has found in it 1 lb. 2 oz. of quartz, 1¾ lb. of pure gold, and 4½ oz. of silver, making the silver 20 per cent. on the amount of gold. Such results happen in large pieces, while the gold found in small pieces is the purest.

Meteorological Observations, made by Mr. Thompson at Chiswick, near London, and by Mr. Weall, at Boston, during the month of August, show that the mean hight of the barometer was at Chiswick 30 inches; at Boston 29.51 inches. The mean temperature was at C. 62° Far.; at B. 62 4° For. The quantity of rain during the month was at C. 2.03 inches; at B. 1.64 inches. During 24 days out of the 31 of that month, the directions of the wind at the two places were within 45° of each other.

The advices from California in regard to the crop of gold are of the most flattering description. The surface washings are yielding in all localities a large reward to the labors of the miners, while new discoveries of placers are being daily made. In the quartz districts new veins are being explored, and numerous companies formed for the purpose of working them. The companies in operation, whose affairs are conducted with skill, and who have proper machinery, are doing well.

The Ontario and Huron Railroad, connecting lakes Ontario and Huron, we learn from The Chicago Democrat, is to be completed in fifteen months, at a cost of $2,000,000 of which 1,700,000 has already been provided. The western terminuns is Goodrich. Immediately after the completion of the road, a line of steamers will run between Chicago and Goodrich, in connection with the road, and a line of steamers on Lake Ontario.

Thompson's Bank Note Reporter says: The dividends and capital of the Boston, New York, and Philadelphia Banks, for the year 1851, have been comparatively as follows:—

	Average Capital.	Dividends.	Per cent.
Boston	$22,710,000	$1,744,375	$7 68
New York	28,051,450	2,510,566	9 93
Philadelphia	7,725,000	747,500	9 67

Mr. Vallée, keeper of reptiles at the Garden of Plants, observed six eggs on the sand in the space reserved for turtles. Having placed three of them in the hatching apparatus, he found there a turtle two months after, the size of a walnut. This is the first time that a turtle has been hatched by artificial means.

The prize offered by the Austrian Government for the locomotive best adapted to ascend steep declivities, has been gained by Mr. Maffey, a manufacturer of Munich.

New York and Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE, via Stonington, for Boston, Providence, New Bedford, Taunton, and Newport, carrying the great Eastern U. S. Mail, without change of cars or detention. The secure and elegant steamers C. VANDERBILT and COMMODORE leave on alternate days (Sundays excepted) Pier No. 2 North River, (first wharf above Battery-place,) at 5 o'clock P. M. For passage, state-rooms, or freight, apply at Pier No. 2, or at the office, No. 11 Battery-place.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress
Rev. J. W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First commences Aug. 27 and closes Dec. 2.
" Second " Dec. 3 " " March 16.
" Third " March 17 " " June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term, but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

BOARD, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. CLARKE, Sec. } of Trustees.

DERUYTER, July 18, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.

No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.

No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.

No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.

No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.

No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.

No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.

No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.

No. 9—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition 4 pp.

No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed 16 pp.

No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.

No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

No. 13—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.

No. 14—Delaying Obedience. 4 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention isinvited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pp.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New-York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville. Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdich.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Halsey Stillman.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randol
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to

GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 26. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 11, 1851. WHOLE NO. 390.

The Sabbath Recorder.

ABSTRACT OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

I congratulate you and our common constituency upon the favorable auspices under which you meet for your first session. Our country is at peace with all the world. The agitation which, for a time, threatened to disturb the fraternal relations which make us one people, is fast subsiding; and a year of general prosperity and health has crowned the nation with unusual blessings. None can look back to the dangers which are past, or forward to the bright prospect before us, without feeling a thrill of gratification, at the same time that he must be impressed with a grateful sense of our profound obligations to a beneficent Providence, whose paternal care is so manifest in the happiness of this highly-favored land.

[The President here recapitulates the leading facts of the Cuban Expedition, and the fate of those engaged in it, and thus discusses the general principles involved.]

Such is the melancholy result of this illegal and ill-fated expedition Thus, thoughtless young men have been induced, by false and fraudulent representations, to violate the law of their country, through rash and unfounded expectations of assisting to accomplish political revolutions in other States, and have lost their lives in the undertaking. Too severe a judgment can hardly be passed, by the indignant sense of the community, upon those who, being better informed themselves, have yet led away the ardor of youth and an ill-directed love of political liberty. The correspondence between this Government and that of Spain relating to this transaction is herewith communicated.

Although these offenders against the laws have forfeited the protection of their country, yet the Government may, so far as is consistent with its obligations to other countries, and its fixed purpose to maintain and enforce the laws, entertain sympathy for their unoffending families and friends, as well as a feeling of compassion for themselves. Accordingly, no proper effort has been spared, and none will be spared, to procure the release of such citizens of the United States, engaged in this unlawful enterprise, as are now in confinement in Spain; but it is to be hoped that such interposition with the government of that country may not be considered as affording any ground of expectation that the Government of the United States will, hereafter, feel itself under any obligation of duty to intercede for the liberation or pardon of such persons as are flagrant offenders against the law of nations and the laws of the United States. These laws must be executed. If we desire to maintain our respectability among the nations of the earth, it behooves us to enforce steadily and sternly the neutrality acts passed by Congress, and to follow, as far as may be, the violation of those acts with condign punishment.

But what gives a peculiar criminality to this invasion of Cuba is, that under the lead of Spanish subjects and with the aid of citizens of the United States, it had its origin, with many, in motives of cupidity. Money was advanced by individuals, probably in considerable amounts, to purchase Cuban bonds, as they have been called, issued by Lopez, sold doubtless, at a very large discount, and for the payment of which the public lands and public property of Cuba, of whatever kind, and the fiscal resources of the people and government of that island, from whatever source to be derived, were pledged, as well as the good faith of the government expected to be established. All these means of payment, it is evident, were only to be obtained by a process of bloodshed, war, and revolution. None will deny that those who set on foot military expeditions against foreign States by means like these, are far more culpable than the ignorant and the necessitous whom they induce to go forth as the ostensible parties in the proceeding. These originators of the invasion of Cuba seem to have determined, with coolness and system, upon an undertaking which should disgrace their country, violate its laws, and put to hazard the lives of ill-informed and deluded men. You will consider whether further legislation be necessary to prevent the perpetration of such offenses in future.

No individuals have a right to hazard the peace of the country, or to violate its laws, upon vague notions of altering or reforming governments in other States. This principle is not only reasonable in itself, and in accordance with public law, but is engrafted into the codes of other nations as well as our own. But while such are the sentiments of this Government, it may be added that every independent nation must be presumed to be able to defend its possesions against unauthorized individuals banded together to attack them. The Government of the United States at all times since its establishment, has abstained and has sought to restrain the citizens of the country from entering into controversies between other powers, and to observe all the duties of neutrality. At an early period of the Government, in the administration of Washington, several laws were passed for this purpose. The main provisions of these laws were re-enacted by the act of April, 1818, by which, amongst other things, it was declared that if any person shall, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, begin, or set on foot, or provide, or prepare the means for any military expedition or enterprise to be carried on from thence against the territory or dominion of any foreign prince or State, or of any colony, district, or people with whom the United States are at peace, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be fined not exceeding three thousand dollars, and imprisoned not more than three years; and this law has been executed and enforced, to the full extent of the power of the Government, from that day to this.

In proclaiming and adhering to the doctrine of neutrality and non-intervention, the United States have not followed the lead of other civilized nations; they have taken the lead themselves, and have been followed by others. This was admitted by one of the most eminent of modern British statesmen, who said in Parliament, while a minister of the crown, "that, if he wished for a guide in a system of neutrality, he should take that laid down by America in the days of Washington and the secretaryship of Jefferson;" and we see, in fact, that the act of Congress of 1818 was followed, the succeeding year, by an act of the Parliament of England, substantially the same in its general provisions. Up to that time there had been no similar law in England, except certain highly penal statutes passed in the reign of George II., prohibiting English subjects from enlisting in foreign service, the avowed object of which statutes was, that foreign armies, raised for the purpose of restoring the house of Stuart to the throne, should not be strengthened by recruits from England herself.

All must see that difficulties may arise in carrying the laws referred to into execution in a country now having three or four thousand miles of sea coast, with an infinite number of ports and harbors and small inlets, from some of which, unlawful expeditions may suddenly set forth, without the knowledge of Government, against the possessions of foreign States.

Friendly relations with all, but entangling alliances with none, has long been a maxim with us. Our true mission is not to propagate our opinions, or impose upon other countries our form of government, by artifice or force, but to teach by example, and show by our success, moderation, and justice, the blessings of self-government, and the advantages of free institutions. Let every people choose for itself, and make and alter its political institutions to suit its own condition and convenience. But, while we avow and maintain this neutral policy ourselves, we are anxious to see the same forbearance on the part of other nations, whose forms of government are different from our own. The deep interest which we feel in the spread of liberal principles and the establishment of free governments, and the sympathy with which we witness every struggle against oppression, forbid that we should be indifferent to a case in which the strong arm of a foreign power is invoked to stifle public sentiment and repress the spirit of freedom in any country.

The governments of Great Britain and France have issued orders to their naval commanders on the West India station to prevent by force, if necessasy, the landing of adventurers from any nation on the Island of Cuba with hostile intent. The copy of a memorandum of a conversation on this subject between the Chargé d'Affaires of her Britannic Majesty and the Acting Secretary of State, and of a subsequent note of the former to the Department of State, are herewith submitted, together with a copy of a note of the Acting Secretary of State to the Minister of the French Republic, and of the reply of the latter, on the same subject. These papers will acquaint you with the grounds of this interposition of the two leading commercial powers of Europe, and with the apprehensions, which this Government could not fail to entertain, that such interposition, if carried into effect, might lead to abuses in derogation of the maritime rights of the United States. The maritime rights of the United States are founded on a firm, secure, and well-defined basis; they stand upon the ground of National Independence and public law, and will be maintained in all their full and just extent.

The principle which this Government has heretofore solemnly announced, it still adheres to, and will maintain under all circumstances and at all hazards. That principle is, that in every regularly documented merchant vessel, the crew who navigate it, and those on board of it, will find their protection in the flag which is over them. No American ship can be allowed to be visited or searched for the purpose of ascertaining the character of individuals on board, nor can there be allowed any watch by the vessels of any foreign nation over American vessels on the coasts of the United States or the seas adjacent thereto. It will be seen by the last communication from the British Chargé d'Affaires to the Department of State, that he is authorized to assure the Secretary of State that every care will be taken that, in executing the preventive measures against the expeditions, which the United States Government itself has denounced as not being entitled to the protection of any government, no interference shall take place with the lawful commerce of any nation.

In addition to the correspondence on this subject, herewith submitted, official information has been received at the Department of State, of assurances by the French government that, in the orders given to the French naval forces, they were expressly instructed, in any operations they might engage in, to respect the flag of the United States wherever it might appear, and to commit no act of hostility upon any vessel or armament under its protection.

[The President then alludes to the mobbing of the Spanish Consul at New Orleans, which he regards with mortification and regret; he has directed inquiries respecting the pecuniary loss of the Consul, with a view to propose to Congress to indemnify him. Our laws are deficient in providing for the protection or punishment of Consuls, and a revision thereof is suggested.

The subject of reciprocal trade with British America, is noticed, without any decided expression as to the measure.

The Convention to settle the Portuguese claim has been ratified, and the first installment under it paid; in the case of the Armstrong, pending with that government, the President of the French Republic has accepted the office of arbiter.]

The Turkish government has expressed its thanks for the kind reception given to the Sultan's agent, Amin Bey, on the occasion of his recent visit to the United States. On the 28th of February last, a despatch was addressed by the Secretary of State to Mr. Marsh, the American Minister at Constantinople, instructing him to ask of the Turkish government permission for the Hungarians, then imprisoned within the dominions of the Sublime Porte, to remove to this country. On the 3d of March last, both Houses of Congress passed a resolution requesting the President to authorize the employment of a public vessel to convey to this country Louis Kossuth and his associates in captivity.

The instruction above referred to was complied with, and the Turkish government having released Governor Kossuth and his companions from prison, on the 10th of September last they embarked on board the United States steam-frigate Mississippi, which was selected to carry into effect the resolution of Congress. Governor Kossuth left the Mississippi at Gibraltar, for the purpose of making a visit to England, and may shortly be expected in New York. By communications to the Department of State, he has expressed his grateful acknowledgments for the interposition of this Government in behalf of himself and his associates. This country has been justly regarded as a safe asylum for those whom political events have exiled from their own homes in Europe; and it is recommended to Congress to consider in what manner Governor Kossuth and his companions, brought hither by its authority, shall be received and treated.

[Peace has been concluded between the contending parties in St. Domingo.

The office of Commissioner to China is unfilled; the salary is but $6,000, but with no provision for an outfit, and on that account it has been declined.

The existing policy of the Government toward the Sandwich Islands will be continued; that policy is to preserve their independence and keep them from the control of any other great maratime State.

The disturbances in Mexico are regretted; the Administration has acted in that regard as the obligations of treaties and good neighborhood require. The Government will exert itself to bring about arrangements for the completion of the Tehuantepec Railroad.

Until the troubles in Nicaragua are settled, nothing can be done toward settling the questions pending with that country.

An elaborate exposition of the state of the finances is given, with an estimate of the relative value of our exports and imports of raw materials and manufactured articles. The funds available to the Treasury for the year ending June 30, 1851, were $58,917,524 36, and the expenditures $48,005,578 68. The imports were $215,725,995, including $4,967,901 in specie. The exports were $217,517,130, of which $178,546,555 were domestic products, $9,738,695 foreign products, and $29,231,880 specie. Since Dec. 1, 1850, $7,501,456 56 have been paid on the public debt; that debt now amounts to $62,560,395 26, exclusive of that issued for Texas. The available funds for the present year will be $63,258,743 09, and the expenditures $42,892,299 19; of this, $9,549,101 11 will be on account of the new territories; and it is estimated that on June 30, 1853, there will be a balance of $20,366,443 90 to pay off the debt then due, and for other purposes. Our Domestic Exports have increased $43,646,322 over the previous year; this is due mainly to the high price of cotton during the first half of the year. The value of our exports of breadstuffs has fallen from $68,701,921, as it was in 1847, to $21,948,653; rice and tobacco have also fallen off $1,156,751.

The great production of gold in California is exciting a spirit of speculation, which, if not checked, will produce excessive importations of dry goods.

The Texas stock has not been issued, though ready; the creditors of the State not having filed the necessary releases for the five millions accruing to them; nor has the State authorized any agent to receive the five millions accruing to it.

The frauds under the ad valorem system of duties are anew called to the attention of Congress.

The sales of public lands have increased. Further legislation is necessary to extend our land system over California and Oregon.

It is recommended that the California mineral lands remain as now, a common field for industry and enterprise, rather than, by premature legislation, to fasten a bad system on the country.

The difficulties in organizing New Mexico and Utah are alluded to, and further communications promised when information has been received.]

"In my last annual communication to Congress I recommended the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau, and I take this occasion again to invoke your favorable consideration of the subject.

Agriculture may justly be regarded as the great interest of our people. Four-fifths of our active population are employed in the cultivation of the soil, and the rapid expansion of our settlements over new territory is daily adding to the number of those engaged in that vocation. Justice and sound policy, therefore, alike require that the Government should use all the means authorized by the Constitution to promote the interests and welfare of that important class of our fellow-citizens. And yet it is a singular fact that, whilst the manufacturing and commercial interests have engaged the attention of Congress during a large portion of every session, and our statutes abound in provisions for their protection and encouragement, little has yet been done directly for the advancement of agriculture. It is time that this reproach to our legislation should be removed; and I sincerely hope that the present Congress will not close their labors, without adopting efficient means to supply the omissions of those who have preceded them.

An Agricultural Bureau, charged with the duty of collecting and disseminating correct information as to the best modes of cultivation, and of the most effectual means of preserving and restoring the fertility of the soil, and of procuring and distributing seeds and plants and other vegetable productions, with instructions in regard to the soil, climate, and treatment best adapted to their growth, could not fail to be, in the language of Washington, in his last annual message to Congress, a 'very cheap instrument of immense national benefit.'"

[A hundred thousand persons have availed themselves of the Bounty Land Law of September, 1850.

The Mexican Boundary Commission is doing well; its numbers have been reduced, as it was too unwieldly.

The Census Returns have all been received except from California; it is hoped an appropriation will at once be made for their publication.

River and Harbor Improvement is anew earnestly recommended.

An increase of the Army is recommended, to keep in order the Indians on the Mexican frontier, in California and Oregon. There is a deficiency in the army appropriations for last year. The Military Asylum is to be situated near Washington.

An extra allowance is recommended for the officers and men of the late Arctic Expedition; so is the reörganization of the naval establishment and the provision of some punishment in place of the abolished cat. A Navy Yard is wanted at San Francisco. The estimated expenses of the Navy for the ensuing year are $5,856,472 19.

"The report of the Postmaster-General, herewith communicated, presents an interesting view of the progress, operations, and condition of his Department.

At the close of the last fiscal year, the length of mail routes within the United States was 196,290 miles; the annual transportation thereon 53,272,252 miles; and the annual cost of such transportation, $3,421,754.

The length of the foreign mail routes is estimated at 18,349 miles; and the annual transportation thereon at 615,206 miles. The annual cost of this service is $1,472,187, of which $448,937 is paid by the Post Office Department, and $1,023,250 is paid through the Navy Department.

The annual transportation within the United States (excluding the service in California and Oregon, which is now, for the first time, reported and embraced in the tabular statements of the Department) exceeds that of the preceding year 6,162,855 miles, at an increased cost of $547,110.

The whole number of post offices in the United States, on the 30th day of June last, was 19,796. There were 1,698 post offices established, and 256 discontinued, during the year.

The gross revenues of the Department for the fiscal year, including the appropriations for the franked matter of Congress, of the Departments, and officers of Government, and excluding the foreign postages, collected for and payable to the British post office, amounted to $6,727,866 78.

The expenditures for the same period (excluding $20,599 49, paid under an award of the Auditor, in pursuance of a resolution of the last Congress, for mail service on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers in 1832 and 1833, and the amount paid to the British post office for foreign postages collected for and payable to that office) amounted to $6,024,566 79; leaving a balance of revenue over the proper expenditures of the year of $703,299 99.

The receipts for postages during the year (excluding the foreign postages collected for and payable to the British post office) amounted to $6,345,747 21, being an increase of $997,610 79, or 18,65-100 per cent. over the like receipts for the preceding year.

The reduction of postage, under the act of March last, did not take effect until the commencement of the present fiscal year. The accounts for the first quarter, under the operations of the reduced rates, will not be settled before January next; and no reliable estimate of the receipts for the present year can yet be made. It is believed, however, that they will fall far short of those of the last year. The surplus of revenues now on hand is, however, so large that no further appropriation from the treasury, in aid of the revenues of the Department, is required for the current fiscal year; but an additional appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1853, will probably be found necessary when the receipts of the first two quarters of the fiscal year are fully ascertained.

In his last annual report, the Postmaster-General recommended a reduction of postage to rates which he deemed as low as could be prudently adopted, unless Congress was prepared to appropriate from the treasury, for the support of the Department, a sum more than equivalent to the mail services, performed by it for the Government. The recommendations of the Postmaster-General, in respect to letter postage, except on letters from and to California and Oregon, were substantially adopted by the last Congress. He now recommends adherence to the present letter rates, and advises against a further reduction until justified by the revenue of the Department.

He also recommends that the rates of postage on printed matter be so revised as to render them more simple, and more uniform in their operation upon all classes of printed matter. I submit the recommendations of the report to your favorable consideration."

[A revision and codification of the laws of the United States is recommended.

The appointment of a Commission to settle private claims against the Government is anew advised.

The President concludes his Message with the following expression of his views of the Compromise Measures in general and the Fugitive Slave Law in particular.]

It is deeply to be regretted that in several instances officers of the Government, in attempting to execute the law for the return of fugitives from labor, have been openly resisted, and their efforts frustrated and defeated by lawless and violent mobs; that in one case such resistance resulted in the death of an estimable citizen, and in others serious injury ensued to those officers and to individuals who were using their endeavors to sustain the laws. Prosecutions have been instituted against the alleged offenders, so far as they could be identified, and are still pending. I have regarded it as my duty, in these cases, to give all aid legally in my power to the enforcement of the laws, and I shall continue to do so wherever and whenever their execution may be resisted.

The act of Congress for the return of fugitives from labor is one required and demanded by the express words of the Constitution.

The Constitution declares "that no person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on the claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due." This constitutional provision is equally obligatory upon the Legislative, the Executive, and Judicial Departments of the Government, and upon every citizen of the United States.

Congress, however, must from necessity first act upon the subject, by prescribing the proceedings necessary to ascertain that the person is a fugitive, and the means to be used for his restoration to the claimant. This was done by an act passed during the first term of President Washington, which was amended by that enacted by the last Congress, and it now remains for the Executive and Judicial Departments to take care that these laws be faithfully executed. This injunction of the Constitution is as peremptory and as binding as any other; it stands exactly on the same foundation as that clause which provides for the return of fugitives from justice, or that which declares that no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed, or that which provides for an equality of taxation, according to the census, or the clause declaring that all duties shall be uniform throughout the United States, or the important provision that the trial of all crimes shall be by jury.

These several articles and clauses of the Constitution, all resting on the same authority, must stand or fall together. Some objections have been urged against the details of the act for the return of fugitives from labor; but it is worthy of remark, that the main opposition is aimed against the Constitution itself, and proceeds from persons and classes of persons, many of whom declare their wish to see that Constitution overturned. They avow their hostility to any law which shall give full and practical effect to this requirement of the Constitution. Fortunately, the number of these persons is comparatively small, and is believed to be daily diminishing, but the issue which they present is one which involves the supremacy and even the existence of the Constitution.

Cases have heretofore arisen in which individuals have denied the binding authority of acts of Congress, and even States have proposed to nullify such acts, upon the ground that the Constitution was the supreme law of the land, and that those acts of Congress were repugnant to that instrument; but nullification is now aimed, not so much against particular laws, as being inconsistent with the Constitution, as against the Constitution itself; and it is not to be disguised that a spirit exists and has been actively at work to rend asunder this Union, which is our cherished inheritance from our revolutionary fathers.

In my last annual message I stated that I considered the series of measures, which had been adopted at the previous session, in reference to the agitation growing out of the Territorial and slavery questions, as a final settlement in principle and substance of the dangerous and exciting subjects which they embraced; and I recommended adherence to the Adjustment established by those measures, until time and experience should demonstrate the necessity of further legislation to guard against evasion or abuse. I was not induced to make this recommendation because I thought those measures perfect, for no human legislation can be perfect. Wide differences and jarring opinions can only be reconciled by yielding something on all sides, and this result had been reached after an angry conflict of many months, in which one part of the country was arrayed against another, and violent convulsion seemed to be imminent. Looking at the interests of the whole country, I felt it to be my duty to seize upon this Compromise as the best that could be obtained amid conflicting interests, and to insist upon it as a final settlement, to be adhered to by all who value the peace and welfare of the country. A year has now elapsed since that recommendation was made. To that recommendation I still adhere, and I congratulate you and the country upon the general acquiescence in these measures of peace, which has been exhibited in all parts of the Republic. And not only is there this general acquiescence in these measures, but the spirit of conciliation which has been manifested in regard to them in all parts of the country, has removed doubts and uncertainties in minds of thousands of good men concerning the durability of our popular institutions, and given renewed assurance that our Liberty and our Union may subsist together for the benefit of this and all succeeding generations.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, December 2, 1851.

"ROCK OF AGES, CLEFT FOR ME."

This favorite hymn has always been attributed to Toplady, till the learned Richard Watson claimed the authorship for Charles Wesley. A correspondent of the New York Observer sets the question at rest, and gives also a copy of the hymn as originally published by the author.

"The hymn was first published, so far as I can ascertain, not in one of the numerous hymn books of the Wesleys, but in the Gospel Magazine for March, 1776, with the signature 'A. T.' (Augustus Topadly,) of which magazine Mr. Toplady was at that very time the editor. It appears, moreover, not in the department of 'Poetry,' but at the close of an editorial article, in which Mr. Toplady presents, in the form of a dialogue, the absolute impossibility of a sinner's paying the immense debt of sin with which he is charged before God. As a suitable conclusion to the article, and as an embodiment of its grand truth, he then adds the following:—

A LIVING AND DYING PRAYER FOR THE HOLIEST BELIEVER IN THE WORLD.

I.

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee!
Let the water and the blood,
From thy riven side which flowed,
Be of sin the double cure,
Cleanse me from its guilt and power

II.

Not the labors of my hands
Can fulfill thy law's demands;
Could my zeal no respite know,
Could my tears forever flow,
All for sin could not atone;
Thou must save, and Thou alone.

III.

Nothing in my hand I bring;
Simply to thy cross I cling;
Naked, come to Thee for dress;
Helpless, look to Thee for grace;
Foul, I to thy fountain fly;
Wash me, Saviour, or I die!

IV.

Whilst I draw this fleeting breath,
When my eye-strings break in death,
When I soar through tracts unknown,
See Thee on thy judgment throne,
Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

A. T.

CHALMERS RETRACTING AN ERROR.

In the life of Dr. Chalmers, is recorded a remarkable instance of the readiness of the great man to retract his opinions when convinced of his error.

In the year 1825, the majority in favor of allowing parish ministers to hold professorships in conjunction with their ministerial duties dwindled into what was tantamount to a minority. It was during a debate on this subject that there occurred one of the most impressive passages in the history of Chalmers. "Late in the afternoon a speech on the opposite side had been closed by a quotation from an anonymous pamphlet, in which the author insisted that, from what to him was the highest of all authority, his own experience, he could assert that, 'after the satisfactory discharge of his parish duties, a minister may enjoy five days in the week of uninterrupted leisure for the prosecution of any science in which his taste may dispose him to engage.'" As this passage was emphatically read, no doubtful hint being given as to its authorship, all eyes were turned towards Dr. Chalmers. The interposition of another speech afforded an opportunity for reflecting on the best manner of meeting this personal attack. At the close of the debate, and amid breathless silence, he spoke as follow:

"Sir, that pamphlet I now declare to have been a production of my own, published twenty years ago. I was indeed much surprised to hear it brought forward and quoted this evening, and I instantly conceived that the Rev. gentleman who did so had been working at the trade of a resurrectionist. Verily, I believed that my unfortunate pamphlet had long ere now descended into the tomb of merited oblivion, and that there it was mouldering in silence, forgotten and disregarded. But since that gentleman has brought it forward in the face of this House, I can assure him that I feel grateful to him, from the bottom of my heart, for the opportunity he has now afforded me of making the public recantation of the sentiments it contains. I have read a tract entitled The Last Moments of the Earl of Rochester, and I was powerfully struck in reading it, with the conviction how much evil a pernicious pamphlet may be the means of disseminating. At the time when I wrote it, I did not conceive that my pamphlet would do much evil; but, sir, considering the conclusions that have been deduced from it by the Rev. gentleman, I do feel obliged to him for reviving it, and for bringing me foward to make my public renunciation of what is there written. I now confess myself to have been guilty of a heinous crime, and I now stand a repentant culprit before the bar of this venerable Assembly. As far back as twenty years ago, I was ambitious enough to aspire to be successor to Professor Playfair in the Mathematical Chair of Edinburg. During the discussion relative to the person who might be appointed, there appeared a letter from Professor Playfair, in which he stated as his conviction, that no person could be found competent to discharge the duties of the Mathematical Chair among the clergymen of the Church of Scotland. I was at that time, sir, more devoted to mathematics than to the literature of my profession; and feeling indignant at what I conceived an undue reflection on the abilities and education of our clergy, I came forward with that pamphlet, to rescue them from what I deemed an unmerited reproach, by maintaining that a devoted and exclusive attention to the study of mathematics was not dissonant to the proper habits of a clergyman. Alas! sir, so I thought in my ignorance and pride. I have now no reserve in saying, that the sentiment was wrong, and that, in the utterance of it, I penned what was most outrageously wrong. Strangely blinded that I was! What, sir, is the object of mathematical science? Magnitude, and the properties of magnitude. But, then, sir, I had forgotten two magnitudes;—I thought not of the littleness of time—I recklessly thought of the greatness of eternity!" [N. Y. Observer.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 11, 1851.

EFFICACY OF PRAYER.

When we closed our remarks upon this subject, week before last, we intimated our intention of recurring to it again. It is a subject, the importance of which cannot well be over-rated; for prayer is the broad mark of distinction between him that is dead in sins and him that liveth. That is, no one truly prays, till the Spirit of Life has taken possession of his soul. He may, in a sense of self-sufficiency, undertake to compliment the Deity by a form of supplication; but true prayer rises only from the heart which is sensible of its own vileness—a sensibility which always indicates life.

It is wonderful how fruitful the human heart is in raising objections to this most reasonable duty. One of the many that are urged is, that however earnestly we pray, we can never change the mind of God. The Scriptures declare that unchangeableness is one of the essential attributes of his nature, and reason assents to the declaration. Hence, if God bestows a favor, it is only what he always intended to do. Of what avail is it, therefore, to pray for it?

Perhaps it will hardly be deemed a sufficient answer to this objection, to say that God requires us to pray. Perhaps the suppliant wants to go about such an exercise in the confidence that there is some natural connection between the act and the obtaining of that which he prays for, and that it is not one which rests upon mere appointment. The beggar, who stands shivering and starving at our door, feels that his entreaties will have some sort of effect in bringing forth a supply to his wants. The one who goes to God in prayer, wants to feel, and (if he truly prays) always does feel, just so. What, then, is the proper answer to the objection stated? We do not expect to clear up the matter, so that there will be no further difficulty about it; but we are confident that, in perfect consistency with the unchangeableness of the Divine Mind, there is a real connection between prayer and the enjoyment of blessings sought. We never can doubt this, so long as it stands written, "The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much."

Let this much be said, that though God, in bestowing a blessing, gives nothing but what he always intended to give, he always intended to bestow it only in answer to prayer. His purpose has respect, not merely to the end, but to the means of bringing about the end; not merely to the bestowment of a gift, but to the act on our part in condescension to which he bestows it.

The real efficacy of prayer is probably founded in the necessity of honoring God by such act as shall most perfectly express our entire dependence upon him for every blessing which we enjoy. It appears to be in strict accordance with the nature of God to bestow no favor of any kind, except in condescension to a suitable and reverential acknowledgment of his perfections. For instance, eternal life, the free gift of his love, could not be granted, except his justice were suitably honored. Hence, if Christ had not atoned for our sins, no soul could be saved. Yet no well-informed person will say, that the death of Christ excited in the Father feelings of compassion which were not there before; or, that it was the means of originating in him a determination to save the lost. It was just the reverse. The Father first determined to save, and therefore sent his Son into the world. But it were just as rational to object to the necessity of an atonement, because God was already mercifully disposed towards the human race, as to object to the necessity of prayer, because God had already determined whether or not to bestow the blessing we ask for. And we argue, that as through the atonement we express our regard for God's justice, and confess our desert of his wrath, so by prayer we express our regard for his sovereignty, and confess our entire dependence on him. Now, if the atonement had a real efficacy to procure eternal life, notwithstanding it made no change in God's feelings, why may not prayer have a real efficacy to procure blessings, though it make no alteration in the Divine Mind?

We have said that God bestows blessings only in answer to prayer. At first, this may appear to be contrary to facts. The Christian looks upon an ungodly man, who never bowed the knee in supplication, nor remembered with gratitude the Giver of all good, and does not see but what as many blessings are bestowed upon him as upon his praying neighbor. He prospers as well in business; he enjoys as good health; his family are as free from sickness; he is as much esteemed by the world; in short, his circumstances, from first to last, would seem to indicate that God blesses him as much as if he prayed daily. But is it true, that prayer is not concerned in procuring the blessings which he enjoys? Though he himself never prays, may there not be some kind friend who intercedes in his behalf? Or, may not the blessings which he enjoys have been bestowed on the principle that the wicked are prospered for the sake of God's people? For it is a scriptural truth, that the godly are "the salt of the earth;" and that, were it not for them, the wrath of Heaven would soon come upon the wicked "to the uttermost," sweeping away all their prosperity, and themselves too. It may be, however, that that which they esteem their prosperity is, in reality, a curse to them. "The prosperity of fools shall destroy them." Prov. 1: 32. Ungrateful for the blessings bestowed, and too depraved to make any other use of them but to pamper their unholy hosts, what would otherwise have been for their welfare becomes a trap. Ps. 69: 22. In reality, they are not blessed; they are cursed by being placed under temptation too strong for their depraved hearts to resist. They are only fattened for the day of slaughter. As for spiritual blessings, they are strangers to them altogether. And not an instance can be cited of spiritual blessings being bestowed upon any one who did not seek them by fervent prayer.

T. B. B.

FOREKNOWLEDGE.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In an excellent article in your issue of Nov. 27, on the subject of Prayer, the following passage occurs:—

"It is true that God is unchangeable. Our prayers can excite in him no new feelings, to which he was before a stranger; they call into existence no new purpose, which he had not formed from eternity. But how to reconcile this necessary attribute of the Deity with what the Scriptures teach concerning the efficacy of prayer, is not quite so clear."

Now I know that the subject of God's foreknowledge is an "awful" subject. Yet I desire, if it would not be presumptuous so to do, to ask the following questions; and, if it be deemed proper, please answer them:—

1. Are some things that occur in the order of Divine Providence governed by absolute laws?

2. Are some things that occur in the order of Divine Providence contingent?

3. If some things are absolute, and some contingent, then does God "foreknow" things absolute as such, and things contingent as such?

N. V. HULL.

ALFRED CENTER, Nov. 28, 1851.

Reply.

Concerning God's foreknowledge we have but a few words to say. From all eternity, He foreknew that Bro. H. would write us just such a communication as the foregoing. It was just as well known to Him from all eternity, as it is now that the circumstance has actually taken place. To suppose the contrary, is to suppose that His knowledge may be increased; or, in other words, that He is not omniscient. Now, if from all eternity He certainly foreknew the event, the certainty of it must have been from all eternity established, or decreed; otherwise it could not have been foreknown.

To say He foreknew it as contingent, is the same as to say, He foreknew it, although there was no evidence to Him that the event ever would take place; which is a clear contradiction. Bro. H. may say, that his communication to us was contingent upon the publication, on our part, of the sentiment which he has quoted; otherwise it had never been written. But this only throws the subject one step father back. The publication on our part of the sentiment excepted to, was just as certainly foreknown by the Divine Mind from all eternity, as it was after it took place. The certainty of the thing became no more evident to the Divine Understanding on the twenty-seventh of last month, than it did five thousand years ago. If our correspondent chooses, he may remove the question still another step back, and say, that our article upon the efficacy of prayer was contiengent upon a communication we received, calling for some remarks on the subject. But the result is the same. The contingencies themselves were all as distinctly foreseen as the results to which they gave rise.

If our correspondent uses the term 'contingent' denoting that there was no necessary connection between the event and the circumstance which brought it about, and yet supposes that God certainly foreknew it, we cannot agree with him. For to say that God certainly knows that a thing will infallibly take place, which at the same time he knows to be so contingent that it may possibly not take place, is the same as to say, that he knows a proposition to be of certain truth, which he knows to be of contingent and uncertain truth; which is a contradiction. God views things as they are. If an event be contingent, God views it so. If the event may possibly never take place, God knows it may possibly never take place; and that is to know that the proposition which affirms that it will take place may possibly not be true. In other words, He knows that the truth of the proposition is uncertain; which is quite inconsistent with his knowing it as a certain truth. If there was no necessity whatever that the event should take place, then it would not argue perfection of knowledge in any being to determine peremptorily that it would take place. It would rather argue ignorance and mistake; because it would argue that he supposes a propostion to be be certain, which, in its own nature, and all things considered, is uncertain and contingent. It is needless to reply, that God may have ways of knowing contingent events which we cannot conceive of; for that is as much as to say, that God may know contradictions to be true, for aught we know, or that he may know a thing to be certain, and at the same time know it not to be certain, though we cannot conceive how; because he has ways of knowing which we cannot comprehend.

We do not include the last paragraph in quotation marks, though we acknowledge our indebtedness for the method of argument employed to an author whose investigations on this point have never been fairly refuted. To our mind the argument is conclusive, and has been so long interwoven with our habits of thinking, that we offer no apology for presenting it as our own.

T. B. B.

THE SABBATH TRACT ENTERPRISE.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the American Sabbath Tract Society, letters were read from several individuals who have been engaged in the tract enterprise, and the Corresponding Secretary was instructed to make extracts from them for publication in the Recorder.

The first letter read was from a brother who has served the Society a short time as colporteur in the City of New York. After a general account of his labors, he says:—

"During the month I distributed about 700 tracts, and discovered, in conversation with the recipients, that in general the subject of the Sabbath was new to them. Few of them were at all conscious that in resting on Sunday they did not rest on the Sabbath day according to the commandment. Of these few, most appeared to feel that a return to the observance of the day commanded would amount to judaizing, although, when called upon, they could not assign a reason why obedience to the fourth commandment should subject Christians to such a reproach, rather than the performance of the duties enjoined, or the avoidance of the crimes prohibited, in the other nine commandments of the Decalouge, which they acknowledged to be obligatory upon all, whether Jew or Gentile, in common.

"One lady (I believe a widow) who keeps a shoe store, told me that she felt herself puzzled by questions addressed to her by her son, a few days previous to my visit, when preparing his Bible Lesson for Sunday School. Her boy is about fourteen years of age; without any idea of controversy, simply to avail himself of his mother's accustomed assistance in the preparation of his regular lesson, he proposed the questions referred to; and she told me she failed to satisfy her own mind by such reasons as she was able to give her boy for the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath instituted by God. Nevertheless, she considered that her duty as a mother to provide for her family leaves her, in the existing state of things, no choice; and although she would prefer if possible to close her store and celebrate the rest on the day sanctified by the Creator for that purpose, she must forego the pleasure to be derived from conscientious obedience, in order to secure for her little ones what to eat and drink and wherewithal they shall be clothed.

"Only in a few instances has this reason for existing practice been so explicitly, so honestly avowed; but I fear that this is the true motive in most instances where the question has been carefully examined, and a day not required substituted for that sanctified by the Creator.

"I have had many interviews with colporteurs laboring amongst our immigrant population, and much fear that some of them are acting contrary to their convictions upon this subject."

The next letter read was from Bro. Wm. M. Jones, giving some account of a journey from Shiloh, N. J., to Huntingdon Connty, Pennsylvania. He says:—

"On the way I had frequent opportunities for tract distribution and conversation on the subject of the Sabbath. One young man, a member of one of the Universities of the land, appeared a good deal interested in listening to an argument in favor of the seventh-day Sabbath. As the subject was new to him, he said he was not prepared to give an answer. I gave him a number of tracts, after the reading of which, according to promise, he is to write me his convictions on the subject. At parting, he remarked that he thought he had grace enough to do his duty if convinced that he ought to keep the Sabbath.

"I distributed tracts in the cars. One man refused to accept, but afterwards came to me and asked for a German tract, and I gave him "The True Sabbath Embraced." I offered the "Vindication of the True Sabbath" to Governor Johnston. He looked at it long enough to read the title, and then refused it by shaking his head. He was on his way west of the mountains, as the conductor told me, to commence a political campaign. At H. I had a long conversation with two ministers, but have not much hope that either will ever be led to acknowledge the Sabbath of the Bible.

"I lectured to the Stone Creek Baptist Church; congregation about 100. Good attention was paid to the word, and I distributed tracts to the people. Liberty was given and the congregation were urged to reply, but no one replied. At Union and Huntingdon the congregations numbered about 200 each. Although liberty was given to any person, at each of these places, to reply, no reply was attempted. Quite a number of persons received our tracts and read them with apparent interest. A few were disposed to hear a course of lectures on the Sabbath, and some remarked that they thought if I would remain a few months, many might be led to change their views and practice. Indeed, I should not be surprised to hear of conversions to the true Sabbath in that region. Although outward circumstances are forbidding, yet the Lord, by His Spirit, is able to convict and convert when and where he will to his holy law.

"The most common obstacle in the way of the truth is indifference. Almost all think the Sabbath of little or no importance, especially when the change from the first day to the seventh day is the question at issue. Is there as much feeling among us in behalf of this subject as it demands? I fear there is not. There should be more preaching, for the people need light. We need to pray more that the cause of the Sabbath may have free course, run and be glorified. I think special prayer meetings held at an appointed time would do much to deepen our own interest in its behalf, and to awaken the attention of others to its claims. I should think that the recommendation of a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, for the furtherance of the Sabbath cause, would meet with the approbation of the churches. And why not have it appointed on some Sabbath?"

Another letter—the last from which we will quote now—was from Bro. James R. Irish, giving the results of his experience in attempting to promote the tract enterprise. He says:—

"During the year, I have been permitted to labor some to carry forward the enterprise of the Society, and trust my joy in the Lord has been increased thereby. I have lectured and distributed tracts, and have found an unexpected willingness to hear and read in relation to the subject. In one instance, after lecturing and distributing tracts where the subject had never been presented, the recipients of the tracts came forward and made donations to aid in purchasing tracts for others, saying, 'It costs something to distribute them, if you do choose to do it as a gratuity.'

"The resolution which I took part with you in passing last year in relation to funds, I have endeavored to carry out to the spirit and letter of my pledge, and rejoice that a high stand was taken. The brethren and friends of DeRuyter and Truxton seemed to appreciate it, and scarce an individual was found unwilling to do his part when once the matter was fully understood; on the contrary, men, women, and children gave as God had prospered them. The two societies for which I pledged last year are small and relatively poor, yet they have raised and forwarded double their proportion of the amount resolved to raise, and near ten dollars more is subscribed, which is delayed only for a suitable opportunity to receive it from the subscribers. It did me good to see with what alacrity rich and poor, young and old, set apart to this work.

"I hope that a still larger amount will be aimed at the coming year. It is time for us to make an effort, that we shall ourselves feel, if we would make others feel. If we love the Sabbath as we ought, we shall be willing to circumscribe our temporal pleasures to carry its claims to those who do not love it, but refuse compliance with its demands, and especially to make it known to those who are ignorant of what God commands in this matter."

LOUIS KOSSUTH.

Early last Sixth-day morning, the steamer Humboldt, having on board Louis Kossuth, Governor of Hungary, and his suite, arrived off Staten Island, where arrangements had been made for the entertainment of the distinguished visitors until preparations were completed for their public reception by the City of New York. Sixth-day and the following night they spent in the hospitable mansion of Dr. Doane, where they were met and welcomed by numerous Committees and individuals of note, as well as by a large representation of Staten Islanders. On Sabbath morning, a Committee of the Common Council proceeded to Staten Island by the steamer Cornelius Vanderbilt, took on board the illustrious Magyar and his company, and after a sail up the North and East Rivers, to give them a view of the City, landed them at Castle Garden. Here a formal welcome was given to Kossuth, and he attempted to reply, but was prevented by the confusion from finishing his speech. Then a grand procession was formed, which proceeded through Broadway to Astor Place, and down Bowery and Chatham-street to the Park, where Kossuth reviewed the military, and made a brief address. Since that he has been entertained at the Irving House in a style becoming his station.

A Municipal Dinner is to be given to Kossuth on Fifth-day, the 11th inst., and the editorial fraternity are getting up an entertainment of a high order to come off at his earliest convenience. Meanwhile, Committees and Congratulatory Addresses from all quarters are flowing in upon him, and the prospect is that he will be received with unprecedented enthusiasm throughout the country.

On our fourth page to-day will be found some account of the deeds of Kossuth, which have served to create the deep interest everywhere felt in him. The following account of his personal appearance we copy from the New York Tribune:—

Gov. Kossuth is rather taller than we had supposed, and his face has an expression of penetrating intellect which is not indicated in any portrait we have seen. It is long, the forehead broad, but not excessively high, though a slight baldness makes it seem so, and the chin narrow, but square in its form. His hair is thin in front and of a dark brown, as is his beard, which is quite long, but not very thick, and arranged with neatness and taste. His moustache is heavy and rather long. His eyes are very large and of a light blue; his complexion is pale, like that of a man who is not in perfect health, and his appearence was that of the spirit bearing up against the exhaustion of the body. His manner in speaking is at once incomparably dignified and graceful. Gestures more admirable and effective, and a play of countenance more expressive and magnetic we remember in no other public speaker. He stands quite erect, and does not bend forward like some orators, to give emphasis to a sentence. His posture and appearance in repose are imposing, not only from their essential grace and dignity, but from a sense of power they impress upon the beholder. This sense of unused power, this certainty that he is not making an effort and doing his utmost, but that behind all this strength of fascination, there are other treasures of strength, other stores of ability not brought into use, possibly never brought into use, is perhaps what constitutes the supreme charm of his oratory. He speaks as if with little preparation, and with that peculiar freshness which belongs to extemporaneous speaking; there is no effort about it, and the wonderful compactness and art of his argument are not felt until you reflect upon it afterward. His every movement is perfectly easy, and he gesticulates a good deal, equally well with either arm. Nothing could be more beautiful in its way than the sweep of his right hand, as it was raised to Heaven, when he spoke of the Diety; nothing sweeter than the smile which at times mantles his face. His voice is not very loud, and more evinced exhaustion that either his face or his general bearing, but it was heard distinctly through the large pavilion. On the whole, our previous impression was perfectly confirmed by hearing him yesterday. Beyond a doubt he is the greatest of orators now living, and we shall not easily believe that in that capacity he has ever been excelled.

In speaking, Kossuth occasionally referred to notes which lay on the stand before him. He was dressed after the Hungarian fashion, in a black velvet tunic, single breasted, with standing collar and transparent black buttons. He also wore an overcoat or sack of black velvet with broad fur and loose sleeves. He wore light kid gloves.

Generally his English is fluent and distinct, with a marked foreign accent, though at times this is not at all apparent. He speaks rather slowly than otherwise, and occasionally hesitates for a word. His command of the language, astonishing as it is in a foreigner, seems rather the result of an utter abandonment to his thought and a reliance on that to express itself, than of an absolute command of the niceties of the grammar and dictionary. He evidently has no fear of speaking wrong, and so, as by inspiration, expresses himself often better even than one to whom the language is native and familiar. Though he often uses words with a foreign meaning, or a meaning different from that we usually give them, he does not stop to correct himself, but goes on as if there were no doubt that it would be apprehended just as he meant it.

SKETCH OF A METHODIST BISHOP.

In the Methodist Episcopal Church in 13th-st., New York, on the evening of Dec. 1st., Rev. E. O. Haven delivered a lecture on the life and character of Francis Asbury, the first bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. A report of the discourse, in the Tribune, states that Francis Asbury was born in Staffordshire, England, in the year 1745, at the time when John Wesley was 42 years old, and was preaching throughout the country. He was a self-taught man, and at 16 he commenced preaching the Gospel. At the age of 26 he decided to leave his own country for America. The friends he met in Bristol, from which port he sailed, clothed him and gave him £10, and with this sum he embarked. After a stormy passage he reached Philadelphia in 1771, and began to preach to the scattered societies, and in one year after he was asked by Wesley to take charge of the Methodist Societies, and to assist him in his arduous labors. He soon began to show sagacity and shrewdness; he enforced discipline, and called a conference of the rulers of the churches, and in two years Methodism was respected, its adherents were doubled, and it was looked on as a respectable denomination. The war broke out between England and America, and he was pressed to go home, but he refused to leave 3,000 souls without a superintendent.

In 1774 Asbury was appointed the first Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he traveled 5,000 miles a year on horseback, upon a salary of $80, which he continued until 1816, when he died in Spotsville, Virginia.

The prominent feature of his character was his industry; for, according to his journal he read 100 pages a day, and lectured in the open air every other day. In 45 years he preached more than 20,000 sermons, presided at over 200 conferences, traveled more than 400,000 miles to the farthest western settlements. He made more than 50,000 pastoral visits, and gave frequent advice to the ministry, which increased from 10 pastors to near 700 during his life, and by his exertions. The church members in America amounted to 1,000 when he commenced his labors, but when he died they were more than 200,000, thus increasing 200 fold, while the country in the same time had only increased in population 7 fold.

The lecturer then went on to notice his humility, his simple manners and hard living, his love of order, his practical wisdom, all of which traits of character he possessed in an eminent degree. As a public speaker he was not an extraordinary man, but as a social companion he was gentle and affable.

D'AUBIGNE.

Most of our friends have probably read the History of the Reformation, by Dr. Merle, usually called D'Aubigne, which is the place of his residence, and not his name. To such the following description of him, from "Wanderings in the Shadow of Mount Blanc," will be interesting:—

"The manners of D'Aubigne are marked by a plain, manly, unassuming simplicity; no shade of ostentation, no mark of the world's applause upon him—a thing which often leaves a cloud of vain self-consciousness over the character of a great man, worse by far than any shade produced by the world's frown. His conversation is full of good sense, just thought, and pious feeling, disclosing a ripe judgment, and a quiet, well-balanced mind. You would not perhaps suspect him of a vivid imagination, and yet his writings do often show a high degree of that quality. A child-like simplicity is the most marked characteristic to a stranger, who is often surprised to see so illustrious a man so plain and affable. He is about [1846] fifty years of age. You would see in him a tall, commanding form, much above the stature of his countrymen; a broad, intelligent forehead; a thoughtful, unsuspicious countenance; a cheerful, pleasant eye, over which are set a pair of dark shaggy eye brows, like those of Webster. His person is robust, his frame large and powerful, and apparently capable of great endurance; yet his health is infirm. Altogether, in face and form, his appearance might be described in three words—noble, grave, and simple. The habit of wearing spectacles has given him an upward look, in order to command the center of the glass, which adds to the peculiar openness of his mien."

MR. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

By request, I would invite the attention of your readers to Mr. Begg's articles on the Sabbath, in the 19th, 22d, and 23d numbers of the Recorder. It is thought that a careful perusal of his arguments would result in more general uniformity of practice in regard to the time of commencing and closing the weekly Sabbath. This, as he argues very conclusively in regard to the natural day, the passover day, the high day, and consequently the day of the weekly Sabbath, is at the going down of the sun.

Yours, W. M. JONES.

SHILOH, N. J., 11 mo. 30, 1851.

MISSIONS IN CHINA.—At a missionary meeting in Yew York on the 1st inst., an interesting letter was read from Rev. Mr. Talmage, giving a detailed account of the progress of the missionary work in the Celestial Empire. The prospects for the accomplishment of great results are very flattering. There are several cases of religious inquiry, and the natives manifest a greater interest in the cause of the Gospel.

SAILING OF MISSIONARIES.—At the missionary meeting held at the Tract-House in New York on the 1st inst., it was stated that two companies of Missionaries have departed from our shores since the previous monthly meeting. One of these, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Parris, Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Gulick, and Mr. Snow and lady, set sail from Boston in the ship Esther May. Mr. Parris and lady, and Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, will take up their abode in the Sandwich Islands; and Messrs. Gulick and Snow, with their wives, are destined for the new Mission lately established in the Micronesian Islands. On Sabbath, Nov. 29, another company sailed in the bark Sultana for Smyrna. It consisted of Rev. Mr. Eddy and wife, Dr. Lobdell and wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Sutven. Mr. and Mrs. Eddy will stop at Smyrna; Dr. Lobdell and wife are to be stationed at Mosul; and Mr. Sutven and lady proceed at once to the Armenian Mission at Erzeroom. Besides these, Rev. Mr. Vrooman and lady sailed last week for China, in the ship Samuel Russell. At the same meeting the interesting fact was stated, that three of the missionary ladies who thus devote their lives and labors to the adornment of the gospel, are daughters of clergymen. Mrs. Vrooman is the daughter of the venerable Dr. Pitkin, of Hudson, O.; Mrs. Eddy, of Dr. Condit, of Ohio; and Mrs. Sutven, of Rev. President Kellogg, of Clinton, N. Y.

REVIVAL IN HOPKINTON AND RICOMOND, R. I.—Eld. S. B. Bailey communicates to the Christian Watchman and Reflector the cheering fact that the Second Baptist Church in Hopkinton, located on the border of Richmond, has recently enjoyed a most precious refreshing from the presence of the Lord. "A series of meetings was commenced on Sunday, August 24th, and continued every evening with few interruptions until the last of September, since which time on account of the running of the mills they have been less frequent. Soon after the church began to inquire, 'Wilt thou not revive us again that thy people may rejoice?' the impenitent began to inquire what they must do to be saved. After four weeks of persevering labor we were permitted to visit the banks our Jordan, and to bury 27 converts in the likeness of Christ's death. With this commencement we have repaired to the same place for the same purpose each successive Sabbath [Sunday we suppose he means] during the six weeks that have followed. The whole number added to the church by baptism, is 74, and by experience, 10. We may here state, also, that the number of the church was increased 43 during a revival season enjoyed two years ago, and that all without exception have honored their profession."

DIVISION AMONG THE JEWS.—The following paragraph, the source of which we do not know, states very clearly the ground of division between the Rabbinical and Reformed Jews:—

"The British Jews are of two classes, the Rabbinical and the Reformed. The former maintain that the Mishna and Talmud are of divine authority, as well as the Sacred Scriptures; the latter view them as merely human compositions, containing the advice and instruction of their post-biblical ancestors, and receive and reverence them as such; holding that the sacred volume of the Scriptures is the only authoritative and unerring guide of Israelites. These two classes of Jews stand to each other in a position somewhat similar to that of Roman Catholics and Protestants. Protestants repudiate Romish traditions at variance with the Word of God, and the Reformed Jews, Rabbinical traditions which accord not with the Hebrew Bible."

HENRY CLAY.—Horace Greeley, writing from Washington, under date of Wednesday, Dec. 3, says:—"Henry Clay did not attend the sitting of yesterday, and I did not see him in the Capitol to-day. But, seeing him at his own room, I was pained by his general appearance. His mind is clear, vigorous, and active as ever, but his physical powers have been greatly impaired since I last before saw him. He is much thinner, looks older, and is less able to brave fatigue and exposure than he was even last March. He suffers continually from a dry hacking cough, which has clung to and grown upon him for the last eighteen months, and sometimes causes him much distress. I do greatly fear that this is the very last session of Congress wherein his eloquent voice will be heard and his potent influence felt in the Councils of the Nation."

BIBLES FOR SLAVES.—At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society, held on the 4th inst., a request was made and granted for New Testaments to distribute among slaves in North Carolina. Grants were also made of Spanish Bibles and Testaments for distribution in Cuba and in South America, English and German Bibles for the U. S. Barracks at New Orleans, and two copies of the Bible for the Blind to the Institution for the Blind in St. Louis.

The arrangements for a great public meeting of literary men and others in honor of the late Mr. Fennimore Cooper have been completed. The solemnities will take place in Tripler Hall, New York, on Christmas Eve, the 24th inst. A Commemorative Discourse will be pronounced by Mr. Wm. C. Bryant, and addresses are expected from Edward Everett, George Bancroft, John P. Kennedy, Rev. Dr. Hawks, and other friends and admirers of the genius of the deceased American novelist. Hon. Daniel Webster has been invited to preside at the meeting, and it is understood that he will accept the appointment.

As the widow of Dr. Judson was embarking for the United States at Calcutta, a number of noble hearted and disinterested friends made her a present of 3,000 rupees, or nearly $1,500, as a testimony of the reverence in which they held her lamented husband, and the respect and interest they felt for his bereaved family.

Delia Webster, rendered famous a few years since by her effort to run slaves from Kentucky into the Free States, is now at Frankfort, Ky., so ill that she can survive but a short time, it is said.

On Thanksgiving Day, Mr. Levi A. Ward, of Rochester, sent the Orphans of that city a chicken pie which weighed 200 pounds!

General Intelligence.

Proceedings in Congress last Week.

SECOND-DAY, DEC. 1.

The SENATE met at 12 o'clock. The new members whose credentials were presented, were received, sworn in, and took their seats. The Secretary was instructed to inform the House that the Senate were ready to proceed to business. It was ordered that the daily hour of meeting be 12 o'clock. The Senate discussed at some length the right of Mr. Mallory, of Florida, to take his seat pending the trial of Mr. Yulee's petition. Finally, a Committee of five members was appointed to take the petition into consideration, and Mr Mallory was duly sworn, and took his seat. Several Senators gave notice of new bills, some of them of great importance. Among them are, by Mr. Clemens, a bill to establish a National Central Railroad from the Mississippi to the Pacific; a bill to reduce Postage on Newspapers, and provide for a regular uniform rate of Postage; and a bill to establish a line of Ocean Steamers from San Francisco to Shanghae, China, via the Sandwich Islands. Mr. Foote gave notice of a joint resolution for a Commitee of the two Houses, (the number left blank,) "to make suitable arrangements for the reception of Louis Kossuth, Ex-Governor of Hungary, on his arrival in the United States, and to communicate to him assurances of the profound respect entertained for him by the people of the United States; to tender to him, on the part of Congress and in the name of the people of the United States, the hospitality of the Metropolis of the Union." The Senate then adjourned.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the Clerk called the roll, and 218 members answered. Linn Boyd, of Kentucky, was nominated as the Compromise candidate for Speaker, and was elected by a large majority. Mr. B. was conducted to the Chair by Messrs. Stanley and Disney, and sworn in by Mr. Giddings. New Members were sworn in and took their seats. Col. Forney, of the Pennsylvanian, was elected Clerk. The rules of the last session were adopted; and the House, after appointing a Committee to wait on the President, adjourned.

THIRD-DAY, DEC. 2.

The SENATE appointed a Committee on the Florida contested Senatorship; received and laid over Mr. Foote's resolution on the reception of Kossuth; heard the President's Message; ordered 10,000 extra copies of it and the accompanying documents printed; adjourned at 3 o'clock.

The HOUSE did nothing but vote $30 worth of newspapers to each member, hear the President's Message, and order 15,000 copies of it and accompanying documents printed.

FOURTH-DAY, DEC. 3.

In the SENATE, a bill was introduced granting land to Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad; also a bill granting land to the Florida and Gulf Railroad Co. Mr. Foote moved to have the blanks in his Kossuth resolution filled up, and spoke at some length in reference to Kossuth's extraordinary merits. Mr. Dawson, of Ga., opposed the resolution in toto, on the sole ground of its being unprecedented to offer such an ovation to a foreigner. Mr. Hale, of N. H., expressed a hope that the resolution would pass amended, and he proposed an amendment to the effect that an assurance should be given to Kossuth that the Senate sympathized with the oppressed everywhere, and entertained the hope that the universal rights and liberty of man would be everywhere recognized. To this Mr. Foote replied in language unworthy the occasion, the object, and the assembly. Mr. Hale in retort said he wished to see Kossuth in Washington, that he may act as a living and signal reproach to our oppressors at home. Mr. Cass supported the rosolution, and was caustic as to Senator Hale's course. Mr. Underwood opposed the resolution on many grounds. The discussion was continued, Foote, Underwood, and Cass being the principal speakers. The hour of adjournment arrived before a vote was taken.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Mr. Harris, of Tennessee, introduced a joint resolution, explanatory of the Land Bounty act of September, 1850, to the effect that nothing in said act shall be so construed as to prevent the sale and transfer of any certificates of land warrants prior to the location of the same. Mr. Meade, of Virginia, proposed to amend, so far as to make all land warrants assignable, which proposition was accepted by Mr. Harris. Before any final action was had, the House, in pursuance of an order passed yesterday, proceeded to select seats; after which it adjourned over to Sabbath, to give time for the Speaker to appoint the various Committees.

FIFTH-DAY, DEC 4.

In the SENATE, several Executive communications were presented. Mr. Clemens gave notice of his intention to renew his proposition to confer the rank of Lieutenant-General on Winfield Scott. Mr. Gwin introduced a bill to establish a Branch Mint at San Francisco, one directing a survey of public lands in California, and another refunding to her the duties collected on her imports prior to her admission into the Union. Mr. Foote introduced a resolution of Sympathy for the Irish Exiles. Mr. Fish gave notice of a bill to establish a Branch Mint in New York. Mr. Underwood introduced his joint resolution making land warrants assignable. A resolution introduced by Mr. Hale, inquiring whether the law abolishing flogging in the Navy had been violated, was laid on the table. Mr. Foote's resolution declaring the finality of the Compromise Measures, was made the special order for Monday next. Mr. F., by permission of the Senate, withdrew his resolution tendering honors to Kossuth, because it had met with unexpected opposition, and could not be acted on in the House in time to be effectual. Mr. Seward then gave notice of a joint resolution tendering to Kossuth through Congress the cordial welcome of the people of the United States, to the Capital and to the country. The Senate adjourned to Monday.

SABBATH-DAY, DEC. 6.

The HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES held a brief session, at which notice was given of intention to introduce a bill establishing a Mint in New York, the Report of the Superintendent of Coast Survey was received, and there being no general disposition for business, the House adjourned till Third-day, when the various Committees will be announced.

The following is Mr. Foote's resolution on the Compromise Measures:—

Be it Resolved, That the series of measures embraced in the act entitled "An Act proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by the said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to the said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States, and to establish a Territorial Government for New Mexico," approved Sept. 9, 1850; "An Act for the admission of the State of California into the Union," approved Sept. 9, 1850; "An Act to amend, and supplementary to the act entitled 'An Act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters,'" approved Feb. 12, 1793—approved Sept. 18, 1850; and "An Act to suppress the slave trade in the District of Columbia," approved Sept. 20, 1850; commonly known as the Compromise Acts, are, in the judgment of this body, entitled to be recognized as a definite adjustment and settlement of the distracting questions growing out of the system of Domestic Slavery, and as such, that said measures should be acquiesced in and respected by all good citizens.

The following is Mr. Foote's Joint Resolution about the Irish Patriot Exiles:—

Be it Resolved, That in consideration of the general sympathy felt by the people of the United States for Smith O'Brien, T. F. Meagher, and their immediate associates—exiled Irish Patriots—and the warm sympathies felt by the countrymen of those distinguished sufferers, who have become adopted citizens of the United States, the President of the United States be requested to authorize a correspondence to be opened with the Government of Her Majesty, the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, appealing to the magnanimity of the British Government and people in their behalf, and respectfully requesting the liberation of those personages from their present confinement, with an offer to receive them upon the hospitable shores of the United States.

European News.

The steamers Humboldt and America, with European news to Dec. 22d, have arrived since our last.

There is no political news of any importance, nor any personal intelligence of any moment.

Lord Blaquiere, an English nobleman, aged 74, has committed suicide.

An American gentleman, named Charles L. Barnes, who arrived at Liverpool from New York in the America on Sunday, committed suicide at the Adelphi Hotel on Wednesday.

In Ireland, religious agitation is on the advance, which is all that can be said of the country. Coupled with this agitation is the following announcement from The Evening Mail: "The Spanish Government have conceded a grant of 250 square miles of country, on the banks of the Guadalquiver, in the provinces of Andalusia and Estremadura, containing more than 160,000 acres of land of the richest quality, to be colonized by Irish settlers, under the following conditions: Exemption from taxation for 25 years; admission of the furniture, clothing, and agricultural implements free of duty; privilege of felling timber for building in the royal forests; power to appoint their own municipal authorities. The district in question having been depopulated by the expulsion of the Moors, has, it is stated, been never since fully occupied."

Lamartine is very sick, not dangerously, but so that a long and painful illness is expected. He had been confined to his room nearly four weeks at our last advices.

In the drawing of the lottery of the golden ingots, the great prize of 400,000 francs was won by a person whose name is not yet known; some say it is a poor woman—others, an engineer on a railroad. The second prize of 200,000 francs was gained by a journeyman hair-dresser.

The King of Hanover died on the 17th ult., in the 81st year of his age. He was born in England, and as Duke of Cumberland received his University education at Gottingen, entered the army in 1790, in 1794 commanded the First Brigade of Cavalry, and in an encounter near Tournay lost his left eye. In 1813 he was made a Field Marshal, but on the accession of William IV., took umbrage at being preceded in the command of all the Horse Guards by the Duke of Wellington, and resigned his rank in the army.

From Vienna we learn that two hundred respectable brokers and dealers on the Bourse of that city had been ordered to quit the Austrian capital for "bearing" the exchange market.

The line of railroad from St. Petersburgh to Warsaw has been by command of the Emperor of Russia already marked out, and the earth-works have been commenced.

The Dalmatian papers are teeming with accounts of earthquakes along the Albanian and Dalmatian coasts. A violent shock occurred at Stagno Piccolo on the 19th ult., accompanied with subterranean detonations; another detonation ensued some time after on the same day, and these phenomena were repeated on the 20th with still greater intensity. Fortunately no disaster of a serious nature has to be lamented there. Further particulars of the terrific earthquake at Vallona have reached Osservatore Dalmato. It was preceded by violent detonations, to which succeeded a series of intermittent shocks, which lasted in the aggregate about a quarter of an hour. The waters of the river Voiussa, six miles from Vallona, rose two feet above the ordinary level, and many houses fell in the town itself. The town of Beratti, about 30 miles from Vallona, is a heap of ruins; its castle has been destroyed. Some villages have literally disappeared, leaving scarce a vestige of their former existence. The shocks, though weaker, continued to be felt up to the latest date, being the 26th Oct.

LATEST.—The steamer Pacific, with European news to Nov. 26, arrived at New York on Sunday night last. Her news is not important. A dinner has been given at Liverpool to Hon. R. J. Walker, late Secretary of U. S. Treasury, by about seventy of the principal merchants. In France the Electoral Law continues to be the principal topic of discussion. Near the Isles de Hyeres, recently, two steamers ran together, and one of them soon sunk, causing the loss of many lives—how many is not yet known.

Outrage at San Juan.

The facts connected with an outrage on the American steamer Prometheus, by the British brig-of-war Express, near San Juan, are thus set forth by Capt. Churchill, in a letter from that place, dated Nov. 21st:—

"At 2 P. M., I proceeded to get my ship under weigh to proceed to sea, having but just received the last of our passengers from the Pacific steamer, numbering in all about 500. At this moment the city authorities of Greytown, constituted, as they stated, by the authority of the Mosquito King, came on board of the ship with a police force, and served a process of attachment on the ship and myself for the amount of $123, claimed by the authorities for present and arrearage port dues charged on the ship, which we supposed to be illegally demanded, and had consequently refused to pay them, as I did in the present instance. The port dues are made up from the weight of anchorage in the harbor, Captain of the Port's fees and pilotage. I hove up my anchor, and dropped down the harbor with the current, having alongside one of the river steamers, receiving from her the baggage of the passengers. The English brig-of-war lying a short distance from us, immediately got under weigh, made sail for us, and when within a quarter of a mile from us, fired a round shot over our forecastle, not clearing the wheel-house over ten feet. In a few moments another shot was fired, which passed over the stern so near that the force of the ball was distinctly felt by several passengers. I sent a boat on board the brig to inquire the cause of the firing into us. The Captain stated it was to protect the authorities of Greytown in their demands; and if we did not immediately anchor, he would fire a bomb-shell into us, and ordered his guns loaded with grape and cannister shot; at the same time our small steamer left us, and I proceeded under steam back to our anchorage, and anchored. The brig stood up the harbor, and anchored very near us; sent a boat aboard of us with orders that our fires should be put out, and that an officer would be sent to see that the fires were extinguished. The shore authorities then came on board, and, under the circumstances of the case, the amount demanded was paid under protest, and we were permitted to proceed to sea by the Captain of the brig."

The Administration has acted in relation to this business with earnest readiness. The Republic informs us, that a squadron has been ordered to the Mosquito coast, to look after American interests, and secure our mercantile marine from similar insults in future; and that application has been made to the British Government for explanation and disavowal of the extraordinary act of the Express.

Mormon News.

The Mormon country in Iowa is announced for sale, and the "saints" of that locality are adjured to repair to the Great Valley. The Sixth Epistle from the President of the Mormons is published. It contains, among a vast number of religious matters, the following terrestrial facts:—

"The railway from the city to the mountains was surveyed early this year, and partly graded. and a considerable share of the timber and rails provided; but the work has been suspended. The walls of the basement story of the Seventies Hall are in progress, and the walls of the Tithing Barn are completed; also, the walls of the joiners' and paint-shops and planing and slitting machine, 140 by 45 feet, on the Temple Block, preparatory to building a Temple. The Council House is completed. The Tithing Storehouse is in progress of finishing. The foundation of a Tabernacle on Temple Block, 124 by 64 feet, is nearly completed. The Desert Pottery is nearly completed, and two carding machines are in operation. There are four grain and five saw-mills in operation or nearly completed, in Great Salt Lake County; two grain and two saw-mills in Weber County; one grain and two saw-mills in Utah County; one grain and two saw-mills in San Pete County; one grain and two saw-mills in Iron County, and one mill in Tooele County. The birth-day of the nation, July 4th, was celebrated by the citizens in a most patriotic manner, on the banks of the Great Salt Lake, about 24 miles from the city, attended with every expression of joy and gladness, that could flow from the hearts of a free and virtuous people."

Accident on the Hudson River Railroad.

On Thursday evening, Dec. 4, about dark, a terrible accident occurred near Verplanck's Point, by the collision of three trains, whereby some 25 persons were more or less injured, and probably one or two fatally.

It seems that the 4 o'clock or Poughkeepsie train from this City, stopped at the place of the collision for the purpose of putting down two passengers, (it is said for not paying their fare,) and before they started an engine and tender came rapidly up, supposing the track to be clear, and ran into the aforesaid Poughkeepsie train, smashing one car, and injuring several persons.

Word was immediately sent back to the next switch to turn the approaching Albany train (5 o'clock from New-York) off to the last even track, (the new track,) which is seldom used. This was done, and the Albany train stopped alongside the Poughkeepsie train to take off the passengers and carry them forward.

The same messenger who went back to switch off the Albany train was also charged to order the Peekskill train, which left New-York at 5½ o'clock, to take the same course, with the additional injunction to run slow. This latter part of the message was forgotten by the messenger and the switch tender, and when the conductor of the Peekskill train passed the switch he increased his speed for the purpose of reaching Peekskill before the passage of the 3½ o'clock mail train from Albany.

It would seem that the Peekskill conductor was not aware that the Albany train had stopped alongside the Poughkeepsie train, and when he came in sight of them he was under full headway. The utmost effort was made to slacken speed, but the collision was nevertheless terrible. Two of the Albany cars were smashed into splinters, and about 25 persons were badly injured; but none were absolutely killed, although it is presumed that one or two will die of their injuries.

The Farmers' Bank of Mina has resumed payment.

SEIZING LIQUOR—FATAL AFFRAY.—A dispatch from Belfast, Me., dated Friday, Dec. 5, says that on the previous day, several men were dangerously, if not fatally, stabbed at Frankfort, in attempting to seize a quantity of liquor on board the steamer Boston, Captain Sanford. The steamer was from Boston, bound to Bangor, and reached Frankfort on Wednesday night, where she was detained by the ice. Captain S. had left for Bangor, giving orders not to land the liquor until the charges were paid.

Deputy Sheriff Mills, with a posse of officers, attempted to seize the liquor, when he was requested by Loomis Taylor, agent of the boat, to wait the return of the Captain. He refused, and attempted to make the seizure, when resistance was offered by the crew, and the officers driven off with violence. In the melee, officer Staples was very severely wounded, and his recovery is considered doubtful. Mr. Wilson Chace, of Frankfort, was reported to be dead. A man named Carlton was also seriously injured, as well as two of the boat's crew. The boat afterward started for Boston, the Captain having returned, but on her arrival at Belfast, she was boarded by Sheriff Rust, and the Captain and crew were arrested. The Captain gave bail in $5,000, but the crew were committed. Mr. Taylor, the agent, who is reported to have directed the crew to resist, was also arrested, and held to bail. The first pilot, Davison, cannot be found. The liquor was finally seized and destroyed.

RETURNED CALIFORNIANS.—One day last week, the Coroner of New York held an inquest at French's Hotel, upon the body of John Hervey, a native of Ohio, 33 years of age, who arrived in this city from Chagres, in the "Brother Jonathan," on the 28th ult., suffering from an attack of the Southern fever, which he had contracted in California. Deceased leaves a wife and three children, residing in Millwood village, Guernsey County, Ohio. He brought with him about $1,200 in gold. Mr. Hervey was one of the six individuals, residents of the same village in Ohio, who, about 18 months since, started for the gold regions. One of them, a Mr. Alexander Wheeler, died on board the Brother Jonathan on her late passage from Chagres. The others are now at French's Hotel, suffering from the same complaint of which Mr. Hervey died.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.—On Second-day, Dec. 1, an Englishman, named Bainbridge, while going over the foot-bridge to the Tower, near the Horse-Shoe Falls, at Niagara, slipped on the ice, fell into the rapids, and was carried near the great falls, when he managed to catch hold of a rock, which he clung to for half an hour, when he was fortunately seen by a party passing round Goat Island. Two guides, named H. Brewster and J. Davy, took the reins from some horses, tied them together, and threw them to Mr. Brainbridge, who had just enough strength left to tie them round his body, when he was drawn on shore in a very exhausted state.

SUMMARY.

A dispatch from Louisville, Ky., dated Wednesday, Dec. 3, says: The Steamers Archer and Die Vernon—the former ascending, and the latter descending—came in collision about five miles below the mouth of the Illinois River, on Thursday last, by which the Archer was cut completely in two, and sunk in fifteen feet water. All the persons on the lower deck were drowned, including ten deck hands. The total number of lost, as far as ascertained, is thirty. None of the books and papers belonging to the boat were saved.

Mr. George Hugland, of Jamaica, Long Island, has lately killed a one year old hog, weighing, when dressed, 512 pounds. At Springfield, in the town of Jamaica, Mr. John Remson killed four one year old hogs, which weighed when dressed, 1,984 pounds. At Brushville, (also in the town of Jamaica,) Mr. William Coud killed six one year old hogs, weighed as follows:—335; 417; 502; 500; 539; 477. Total weight, 2,770 pounds.

Horace Greeley, writing from Washington, says that John M. Bernhisel, Delegate from Utah, peremptorily contradicts the current account of disloyalty to the Union, abuse of Gen. Taylor's memory, seizure of public funds, &c., by Gov. Brigham Young and the Mormons. He says he left Salt Lake twenty days after the reported troubles there, and all was peace, loyalty, and good will, up to the moment of his departure.

The House of Representatives, according to the full returns, will stand 197 Whigs and 202 Coalitionists. This will give the Coalitionists 11 majority on joint ballot at the organization, and 23 when the vacancies in the Senate (12 in number) shall have been filled, as they of course will be by Coalitionists. Last year the Coalition majority was 47.

Arrangements having been made for a complete course of medical instruction, by six Professors, in the different departments, the Boston Female Medical School is hereafter to be known by the name of New England Female Medical College; and a term, under this arrangement, is to commence in February.

An article on the Coffee Trade in Hunt's Magazine for December is to the point that the annual production of the world is below the consumption in the proportion of 525 millions produced to 625 millions consumed in 1851. The argument mainly rests upon the condition of and diminished means of production by Brazil.

We learn by telegraph from New-Orleans of the arrival there of the steamer Meteor, from Galveston, in 32 hours. She brings intelligence that the Mexicans had mustered in Matamoros to the number of 2,000 men. Carvajal was at Camargo, with only 600 men, awaiting the arrival of Captain Ford, who had gone to Texas for reenforcements.

The Common Council of New York are about applying to the Legislature for a law authorizing the election of four Coronors for the City and County of New York, one Coronor being considered inadequate to perform all the duties of the office as at present arranged.

Gold, it is stated, has been discovered in large quantities in Hawaii, Sandwich Islands. Perhaps the fact accounts for the secret expedition to those Islands reported by the last California arrival.

There is at present living on Green Point, in Suffolk County, L. I., an old lady 84 years of age, who has for the last twenty years been toothless, but now is cutting a new set of masticators.

The New York Tribune of the 4th inst., says: There has been no entrance at the Custom-House of a vessel from a foreign port for two days in succession (yesterday and today)—a singular circumstance, not known to occur during the past forty years. About seven years since there was one day on which no vessel entered from a foreign port, caused then by severe snow storm; but no occurrence like the present has taken place within the period above named.

The Jersey Blues and Mercer Rifles at Trenton have resolved to celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of Trenton by a Sham Fight on the 26th of December, and appointed Col. S. Dickinson, Major W. Napton, and Capt. S. Mulford, T. D. Hutchinson and S. Van Sickle a Committee to extend invitations and make arrangements.

Hon. Townsend E. Cidley, of Michigan, met with a most serious accident on Saturday, Nov. 22d. He was attending a threshing machine, in which his clothes got somehow entangled, and before he could be extricated, one of his shoulders was broken, and the other dislocated.

The Portland Times (Oregon Territory) of the 23d Oct., gives the particulars of a wanton murder committed by a young man named Creed Turner, of Kentucky, on the person of E. A. Bradbury, of Cincinnati, at that place. Both lived in the same house, and it is said jealousy was the incitement.

In the Merchants' Magazine for December, Mr. Alexander B. Johnston, of Utica, makes a bold, and in argument somewhat extraordinary, tilt at Life Insurance, its morality, economy, and adaptation to the ends designed, putting the objections to the system in contrast and competition with Savings Banks.

Lola Montes, Countess of Landsfeldt, who has obtained an unenviable notoriety throughout the world on account of her romantic disposition and singular conduct, arrived at New York upon the Humboldt, accompanied by her agent, Mr. Edward Willis, and several servants.

A very respectable married lady of Boston, the wife of a worthy man, has latety been conveyed to an Insane Asylum by her friends. The insanity is attributed in part, if not wholly, to her consultation with professors of the so-called mesmeric art.

Mrs. Harriet Lum has recovered a verdict for $8,500 against the Naugatuck Railroad Co., for damages by the overturning of a car in 1849, by which she was injured for life. Erastus Burr and wife recovered $1,000 on the same account.

Mr. Thomas Smith, Jr., of Jamaica, L. I., owns a cow which gave birth a few days since to a calf without eyes or anything resembling an organ of vision. The calf is some 9 days old, and is doing well.

The Santa Fé mail arrived at Independence, Dec. 4. In the trip the contractors encountered a snow storm at Cedar Springs, which caused the loss of fourteen of their mules. The snow was two feet deep on the plains to Fort Atkinson.

The ship Sultana left Boston on the 28th for Malta and Smyrna, having on board Rev. William W. Eddy, and wife; Rev. Henry Lobdell, wife and child, Rev. Joseph W. Lutphen and wife (Missionaries.)

The Globe confirms the report that the Queen of Spain has pardoned 28 British subjects taken in Cuba. They are chiefly young lads inveigled by the plotter of the expedition to join it under false representations.

The Cleveland Plaindealer says that between one hundred and twenty and one hundred and fifty German residents of that city, will leave for their fatherland, to participate in the expected revolution there in May next.

The closing of the Erie Canal has locked up a large amount of produce on the line, part or most of which will probably be forward by the Railroads.

The Christiana Treason Trials are dragging their slow length along through a Philadelphia Court.

The Erie Canal is fairly closed, and a large number of loaded boats were frozen in between Albany and Utica.

There were twenty-five deaths from cholera at New-Orleans during the week ending the 22d ult.

A man named Samuel Badeste was arrested in New-Bedford, Dec. 2, on a charge of beating a girl named Mary Brown to death.

Joshua Leavitt, the hermit, died a few days ago in the Cambridge Alms-House, aged 88.

New York Market—December 8, 1851.

Ashes—Pots $4 87 a 4 94; Pearls 5 37 a 5 44.

Beans—Western white Beans 1 31 a 1 50 per bush.

Beeswax—Southern yellow 26c., Western 26¼c.

Flour and Meal—Flour, 4 06 a 4 12 for common to straight State, 4 18 a 4 31 for Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana, 4 37 a 4 56 for fancy Ohio and Genesee. Rye Flour 3 25. Corn Meal 3 12 for Jersey. Buckwheat Flour 2 25 a 2 50 for 100 lbs.

Grain—Wheat is held firmer in consequence of favorable advices from Europe; red Long Island 83 a 86c., white Michigan 92c., white Southern 95c. Rye 75c. Barley is in demand at 80 a 83c. Oats 36 a 40c. for Jersey, 44 a 45c. for State. Corn, 60c. for Western mixed, 62c. for round yellow.

Hay—60 a 62c. for 100 lbs, River.

Hops—Active at 30 a 35c.

Lime—1 00 for common, 1 31 for lump.

Provisions—Pork, 13 62 a 14 00 for prime, 15 25 a 15 37 for mess. Beef, 4 00 a 5 00 for prime, 7 75 a 9 75 for mess. Butter is in demand at improved prices; 8 a 12c. for Ohio, 11 a 17c. for State. Cheese 6 a 7c.

Seeds—Flaxseed 1 30 for 56 lbs.; Clover 8½ a 9c.; Timothy 14 00 a 19 00 per tierce.

Tallow—7 a 7¾c.

Wool—Domestic Fleece 36 a 42c.; pulled is scarce and wanted.

MARRIED.

In Alfred, N. Y., Nov. 29th, by E. A. Green, Esq., Mr. STEPHEN THOMAS to Miss EMMA LANPHEAR, all of Alfred.

In Alfred, N. Y., Nov. 29th, 1851, by Eld. Jared Kenyon, Mr. THOMAS PLACE to Miss ELIZABETH BURDICK, both of Alfred.

LETTERS.

Wm. M. Jones, A. G. Coon, J. Kenyon, S. Menter, L. T. Rogers, B. Clarke, W. B. Maxson, D. Stillman, E. A. Green. G. McNeil, Jonathan F. Randolph (not received—will write,) N. V. Hull (received.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Kenyon Crandall, S. Brookfield,	$2 00	to vol. 8	No. 52
Benj. Burdick, "	2 00	8	52
Jabish Brown, Leonardsville,	2 00	8	52
L. H. Babcock, DeRuyter,	2 00	8	52
R. W. Folger, New York,	4 00	8	52
H. S. Menter, Fond-du-Lac, Wis.	2 00	7	52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

Missionary Society—Board Meeting.

A QUARTERLY MEETING of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society will be held at the house of Randolph Dunham, in Plainfield, N. J., on the afternoon of Fourth-day, Jan. 7, 1852, commencing at 1 o'clock. G. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

Publishing Society—Board Meeting.

A QUARTERLY MEETING of the Board of Managers of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society is appointed to be held at Plainfield, N. J., (house of Randolph Dunham,) in the evening of Fourth-day, Jan. 7, 1852, commencing at 6½ o'clock.

T. B. STILLMAN, Rec. Sec.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Winter Arrangements.

LEAVES New York at 9 A. M. and 4½ P. M., foot of Cortlandt-st.; at 11 A. M. (freight) and 4.10 P. M., Pier No. 1 North River—for Elizabethport, Elizabethtown, Westfield, Scotch Plains, Plainfield, Boundbrook, Somerville, Raritan, White House, Easton, &c.

Daguerrean Gallery.

GURNEY'S Daguerrean Gallery, No. 189 Broadway has been known for years as one of the first establishments of the kind in the United States, and the oldest in the city of New York. He has recently greatly enlarged his Gallery by the addition of more rooms and large skylights, and other improvements, rendering it one of the most extensive establishments in this country. Mr. G. attends personally to his sitters, and from his great experience in the art he is enabled, at all times, to give perfect satisfaction. The large-sized pictures recently taken by his new process are universally acknowledged superior to any heretofore taken in this country. A large collection can be seen at all hours of the day. Ladies and gentlemen are respectfully invited to examine them.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of WM. DUNN & Co. have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 163 William-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 163 William-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH Jr.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Hoe's Cast Steel Circular and Long Saws.

THE subscribers manufacture from the best cast steel, Circular Saws, from two inches to five feet diameter. These Saws are carefully hardened and tempered, and are ground and finished by machinery designed expressly for this purpose, and are therefore much superior in truth and uniformity of surface to those ground in the usual manner. They require less set, less power to drive them, and are not so liable to become heated, and produce a saving in timber.

They also manufacture cast steel MILL, PITT, and CROSS-CUT SAWS and BILLET WEBS, of superior quality, all of which they have for sale at their Ware-Rooms, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st., or they may be obtained of the principal hardware merchants in the United States. R. HOE & CO., Printing-Press, Machine, and Saw Makers, Nos. 29 and 31 Gold-st.

The following extract is from a report made by a Committee of scientific and practical gentlemen, appointed by the American Institute:—

"Your Committee are of unanimous opinion, that in the apparatus invented by Mr. R. M. Hoe, for grinding saws, he has displayed great ingenuity and tact in the adaptation of machinery to the production of results in the manufacture of Saws, which may with propriety be denominated the ne plus ultra of the art."

Publishers of newspapers who will insert this advertisement three times, with this note, and forward us a paper containing the same, will be paid in printing materials, by purchasing four times the amount of their bill for the advertisement. nov13 3t

Chambers' Works.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. A selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time. Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Forming two large imperial octavo volumes of 700 pages each, double-column letter-press; with upwards of 300 Illustrations. Edited by ROBERT CHAMBERS. Embossed cloth, $5.

The work embraces about one thousand Authors, chronologically arranged, and classed as Poets, Historians, Dramatists, Philosophers, Metaphysicians, Divines, etc., with choice selections from their writings, connected by a Biographical, Historical, and Critical Narrative; thus presenting a complete view of English Literature, from the earliest to the present time. Let the reader open where he will, he cannot fail to find matter for profit and delight. The selections are gems—infinite riches in a little room; in the language of another, "A whole English Library fused down into one cheap book!"

☞ The American edition of this valuable work is enriched by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint Engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron; a full-length portrait of Dr. Johnson; and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson. These important and elegant additions, together with superior paper and binding, render the American superior to all other editions.

CHAMBERS' MISCELLANY OF USEFUL AND ENTERTAINING KNOWLEDGE. Edited by WILLIAM CHAMBERS. With elegant Illustrative Engravings. 10 vols., cloth, $7 50.

☞ This work has been highly recommended by distinguished individuals, as admirably adapted to Family, Sabbath, and District School Libraries.

"It would be difficult to find any miscellany superior or even equal to it; it richly deserves the epithets 'useful and entertaining;' and I would recommend it very strongly, as extremely well adapted to form parts of a library for the young, or of a social or circulating library, in town or country."—George B. Emerson, Esq., Chairman Boston School Book Committee.

The above works are bound in various styles, prices varying accordingly. A liberal discount made to Booksellers and Agents. GOULD & LINCOLN, Publishers.
59 Washington-st., Boston.

Woodworth's Youth's Cabinet.

New Series—Enlarged—January Number Ready.

WOODWORTH, determined that his Magazine shall excel all its rivals in the quantity as well as the quality of its contents, has enlarged it, so that it will hereafter contain a greater amount of reading matter for one dollar, than any other illustrated Magazine of the kind in the world. With the January number, now ready, commences an entirely new series. Each number will hereafter contain 48 pages, and will be embellished even more elegantly than before. The January number, with its handsome vignette title-page, got up with express reference to the holidays, is the most charming number we have ever issued.

The Cabinet will still be under the entire editorial control of FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH, who designs to spend a considerable portion of the year 1852, traveling in Europe. To secure all his letters from over sea, it will be necesssary for new subscribers to commence with the January number, as hereafter all subscriptions must commence either in January or July; and no subscriptions will be received for less than a year.

It is unnecessary, at this late day, to tell the public what the Cabinet is. It has long had the reputation of being the "best juvenile Magazine in America—ever readable, entertaining, instructive, without any sectarianism, and free from every thing which can do harm."

Terms.

For a single copy, $1 a year; 4 copies, $3; 7 copies, $5. Cash in advance in all cases. Those who form a club of 7 copies, shall receive an extra copy for their trouble. A specimen of the January or holiday number will be sent (postage prepaid) to any part of the Union, on the receipt, in postage stamps or otherwise, of 12 cents, without expense to us.

Traveling and Local Agents Wanted.

The new series is just the thing for traveling agents and local dealers. Twenty or more agents are wanted to travel in different States, to solicit subscribers for the new series, and to sell the bound volumes of the old series or "Cabinet Library." Full particulars will be given, and specimens sent on application (post paid) with good references. Agents ought to be in the field as soon as possible. Those who are out of employment, and who wish to engage in lucrative business, and at the same time to circulate useful reading for the family circle, are particularly invited to give this agency a trial. To good agents, who will devote their time wholly or mainly to this work, the publisher will make very liberal terms.

Postmasters, Clergymen, and School Teachers, are authorized to obtain subscribers, and are allowed to retain 25 per cent. on all new subscriptions, when the full price (one dollar) is paid.

Address D. A. WOODWORTH, Publisher,
2w 118 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Miscellaneous.

Trust to the Future.

Trust to the future though, gloomy and cheerless
Prowls the dark past like a ghost at thy back;
Look not behind thee; be hopeful and fearless;
Steer for the right way, and keep to the track.
Fling off despair—it has strength like a giant—
Shoulder thy purpose, and boldly defiant,
Save to the right stand unmoved and unpliant!
Faith and God's promise the brave never lack.

Trust to the future; the present may fright thee,
Scowling so fearfully close at thy side;
Face it unmoved and no present can blight thee;
He who stands boldly, each blast shall abide:
Never a storm but the sunshine succeeds it;
Each has a lesson, and he alone reads it
Rightly, who takes it and makes it his guide.

Trust to the future; it stands like an angel,
Waiting to lead thee, to bless and to cheer;
Singing of hope, like some blessed evangel,
Luring thee on to a brighter career.
Why should the past or the present oppress thee?
Stamp on their coils; for, with arms to caress thee,
See, the great future stands yearning to bless thee;
Press boldly forward, nor yield to a fear.

Trust to the future; it will not deceive thee,
So thou only meet it with brave heart and strong;
Now begin living anew, and, believe me,
Gladness and triumph will follow ere long.
Never a night but there cometh a morrow,
Never a grief but the hopeful will borrow,
Something of gladness to lighten the sorrow;
Life unto such is a conquerer's song!

Trust to the future, then; cease from your weeping;
Faith and a firm heart are all that you need—
God and his angels have yet in their keeping
Harvests of love, if we'll but sow the seed!
Trust to the future; all life will be glorious;
Trust, for in trusting the soul is victorious;
Trust, and in trusting be strong and laborious;
Up and be doing, and give God the meed.

Abstract of the Postmaster-General's Report.

The Annual Report of the Postmaster-General is a long document, and gives a clear idea of the vast extent of the Post-office operations of this country.

It appears that an actual increase of 18.65 per cent. occurred during the past fiscal year in American postages. Or, in figures, the receipts from American postages for the fiscal year, exceeded those of the preceding year $997,610,79. During the last quarter of the fiscal year, a sensible reduction took place in domestic postage, attributable to the near approach of that period to the time fixed by the Act of March 3d, 1850, to establish cheaper rates of postage. A similar reduction was observed upon the adoption of the reduced rates under the Act of 1845.

The Report contains a formidable array of figures relating to the business of the Department during the year; of which the important points are as follows, viz:

Number of Mail Routes,	6,170
Length of Mail Routes, miles,	196,290
Number of Contractors employed,	5,544
Annual Transportation of Mails, miles,	53,272,252
Annual cost of Transportation,	$3.421,754
Miles of Railroad Transportation,	8,568,707
Miles of Steamboat Transportation,	6,454,982
Number of Postmasters appointed,	5,339
Number of Post Offices, June 1, 1851,	19,796
Gross Receipts of the Department,	$6,786,493
Total Letter Postage,	$5,369,243
Newspaper, Pamphlet, &c., Postage,	$1,035,131
Ordinary Revenues of the year,	$6,551,978
Increase over those of last year,	$999,006
Expenditures of the year,	$6,278,402
Ordinary Expenditures,	$6,024,567

Within the last two years, the cost of mail transportation has largely increased. New contracts for the north-western and south-western sections involved an increase of 25 per cent. in aggregate cost, and of 10.4 per cent. in service; while other contracts in the southern section, the extension and opening of the Erie Railroad, increased mail facilities on the routes leading from the Atlantic cities to important points in the West, and upon the Western Rivers; added to the placing of two steamers, the Franklin and Humboldt, on the New York and Havre line, have all contributed to entail burdens on the revenues of the Department. The Report refers, in this connection, to the subject of compensating Postmasters, and suggests the propriety of making liberal provision for this purpose.

The Special Agents of the Department have been actively employed. Mr. Hobbie was dispatched to Cuba and Panama to effect suitable mail arrangements for the West Indies, South America, and points on the Gulf of Mexico. These objects were temporarily attained, but the increase of correspondence will soon render more perfect arrangements desirable. It is recommended that adequate provision be made for the payment of Mr. Hobbie's expenses, while he was absent upon this mission. As to California and Oregon, contracts have been executed for the residue of the contract term, to end on the 30th June, 1854. The Report also refers to the opening of the route now in operation by way of Lake Nicaragua.

The contracts with the Cunard and Collins steamships; the subject of postal communication between the United States and Mexico, by a line of steamers running from New Orleans to Vera Cruz via Tampico; the conveyance of letters hither from foreign ports without delivery at the Post Office; the necessity of guarding the mails from robbery, and the increasing abuses of the Franking Privilege—are severally dwelt upon, and recommendations are made in relation thereto, which will doubtless prove advantageous.

Certain improvements in the organization of the Department are suggested; and the Report concludes with a recommendation for a thorough revision of the laws which affect the government and the officers of the General Post Office.

The question of Cheap Postage is discussed at considerable length. The Postmaster-General compares the results of the system in Great Britain with the reduced rates of the United States, and believes that we are admonished by the comparison not to attempt any further reduction, until it shall be justified by the revenues. He suggests that the rates of postage on all printed matter can be rendered more uniform and less complex by the adoption of suitable rates, without diminishing the revenue very materially. We copy this portion of the Report:—

"In my last annual report, I recommended certain reduced rates of postage, under the operation of which, it was foreseen, a large deficiency of revenue for a few years would occur. It was supposed that if those rates were adopted, the accumulated surplus to the credit of the revenues of the Department, and an annual appropriation from the Treasury, equal to the postage, at the usual rates, upon the matter then free, would be required to meet this deficiency, and would be nearly or quite sufficient for that purpose. My recommendation was, however, only partially adopted by Congress in the passage of the act of March 3, 1851.

The rate recommended for ordinary inland letter postage was adopted, but six cents when pre-paid and ten when unpaid was made the single rate of letter postage to California and Oregon, instead of twenty cents, as recommended. The rates of postage on most printed matter was reduced much below the rates recommended; weekly papers were allowed to circulate free of postage in the counties of their publication; and the free exchange of newspapers, periodicals, &c., was greatly increased.

The reduction in the rates to California and Oregon will greatly diminish the revenues from that source. A statement of the Auditor shows that the nnmber of letters received and sent by the New York, New Orleans, and Chagres line, during the month of September, 1850, was 112,085, and the postage thereon $44,385 60; and that the number of letters received and sent by the same line during the month of September, 1851, was 118,934, and the postage thereon, under the reduced rates, was $12,854 81.

It was supposed that the reduced rates of postage on printed matter recommended in my report would diminish the revenue from that source about two hundred thousand dollars per annum. The rates adopted, with the free circulation of weekly newspapers within the counties where published, and the very great extension of the privilege of free exchange between publishers, will, it is believed, diminish the revenue at least five hundred thousand dollars per annum, unless the quantity of such matter be increased more than is now anticipated.

Notwithstanding this diminution beyond that which would have resulted from the adoption of the rates recommended, no change in the present rates of letter postage is deemed advisable.

It was recommended in my last annual report, that uniform inland rates, without regard to distance, should be established on newspapers and other printed matter. It was immediately urged that the postage recommended would be unequal and unjust, and that a newspaper carried fifty miles only should not be charged with the same postage as one carried twenty-five hundred miles. The force of this objection was felt by this Department and by Congress, and the experiment of numerous rates, graduated according to distance, has been tried. From the results of this experiment, I am satisfied that there should not be more than two, or at most three, different rates of inland postage on newspapers sent to actual and bona fide subscribers; and that those on periodicals and other printed matter, including transient newspapers, should be reduced in number, and more nearly assimilated to the newspaper rates. It is difficult to assign a sufficient reason for charging upon such periodicals as the reviews, the numerous magazines, and theological, medical, and law journals, more than three times the amount of postage charged for the same distance on an equal weight of newspapers. Such periodicals are less ephemeral than the ordinary newspapers, and certainly not less beneficial in their influence. The same rates of postage, according to their weight, would be just and equitable, would simplify the accounts of the Department, and relieve it from the perplexing and often invidious duty of discriminating between different publications, and declaring one a newspaper and another not a newspaper, in cases where a little difference can be perceived, and where the changed character of the next number of both might render it proper, in respect to such numbers, to reverse both decisions."

The rates of postage on all printed matter can be rendered more uniform and less complex by the adoption of suitable rates, without diminishing, very materially, the revenue. Whenever newspapers and periodicals can be sent otherwise than in the mails, at a cost less than the postage established by law, such cheaper modes of conveyance are generally adopted. For this reason, if graduated rates be established, they may be comparatively high for short distances, where the means of conveyance are cheap and rapid, without being oppressive or seriously objectionable.

There is a disposition manifested in certain quarters to urge a further reduction in our inland rates of letter postage, before the results of the last reduction are properly ascertained.

Those who take the position that the people of this country should not rest satisfied with any reduction of postage until it be made as cheap as that of Great Britain, seem to forget that our rates of postage are now, in fact, comparatively much cheaper than those of Great Britain; and that the condition of the two countries in regard to nearly everything which should influence the rates of postage, is widely different.

The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland has an area of about 120,000 square miles and a population of about 28,000,000; while the area of the inhabited portions of the United States may be estimated at more than 1,100,000 square miles, with a population of 24,000,000.

The results of the cheap postage system in Great Britain, and of reduced rates of postage in this country under the act of 1845, are continually referred to as evidence that this Department can sustain itself with a letter postage of two cents the single rate; but these results, when carefully considered, admonish us not to attempt a further reduction until justified by our revenues."

A Visit to Japan.

We find in The Alta California the following interesting account of a visit paid to one of the Japanese Islands. It presents a striking instance of the singular jealousy of the exclusive inhabitants of Japan, and a most contradictory evidence of their hospitality:

"The Hamburg brig Rose, Capt. Anderson, on a trip from Singapore to this port, met with a severe typhoon, was disabled and obliged to put into the nearest port for repairs. This happened to be one of the Islands of Japan. Capt. Anderson states that the name of the village is Nipaking, and this visit of a foreign vessel is believed the first ever made to that place. Of this, however, it would be impossible to state with accuracy.

No sooner had Capt. Anderson dropped anchor, than his vessel was surrounded by three hundred Japanese boats, which guard was kept up, with alternate relief, until he sailed from the harbor. After some little difficulty, he was allowed to go singly on shore, when an escort of sixty men conducted him with great watchfulness a short distance through the principal street. On landing, he found all the marts and public places closed, although while leaving his vessel he had seen extensive market places thrown open, and an appearance of animated trade going on. Everything presented a blank wall to him, and he was not permitted to gratify his curiosity in the slightest particular. Yet he was treated with great respect and kindness, and furnished with sixty men to prosecute repairs on his vessel.

The population of Nipaking he estimates at 25,000 souls. A very large police force was constantly on duty, and during his stay three or four thousand from a neighboring island (probably sent for by the authorities of Nipaking) arrived, who kept a diligent watch on the strangers. In their treatment of him, they were reserved and courteous, and evidently desired to hasten his departure from their shores. When his vessel was ready for sea, they accepted a trifling amount of goods in payment for labor, and without pushing investigations further he left the place.

Nipaking is represented to be a safe and convenient harbor, and the city presents a bustling and animated appearance."

Who is Kossuth?

This question was asked us the other day by one who said he was tired of reading eulogies without facts. For his benefit, and that of others in like circumstances, we copy from the New York Daily Times the following synopsis of Kossuth's acts:—

From time to time the Magyar race had made gigantic efforts to break their chains. Battles were fought, heroic labors were performed, great men arose as leaders, and the dark despotism of Austria was illuminated by fierce but transient gleams of patriotic endeavor on the part of the subject people But all had been in vain. Hungary lay to all appearance dead. Her people were crushed by the most oppressive imposts, the most cruel enactments. The great mass of them had been serfs, bound to the soil, by Austrian law, bought and sold like Southern slaves. Maria Theresa had modified their condition to some extent, but still they were subject, in property, in personal liberty, and in military fealty, to the dominant race.

The Hungarian Diet of 1832 laid the basis of a democratic movement. Composed, as it was, mainly of land-holding classes, it took great strides towards the emancipation of the peasant serfs. Every male inhabitant of mature age was made a voter. The language of the country was restored to its laws. National institutions were incorporated and endowed. Public works of internal improvement were constructed. And all needful steps were taken to elevate that depressed and sinking land to the freedom and condition of a modern State. All these measures were steadily opposed by the Austrian Government; but they were advocated with energy and eloquence by the young and resolute patriots of the Hungarian Diet. Foremost among them in activity, enthusiastic devotion to the cause of his country, and in overwhelming power, was Louis Kossuth. Debarred by his position from taking part in the debates, he spoke to the great mass of the Hungarian people through the press. He was seized by myrmidons of Austrian law, in the dead of night, on the banks of the Danube, blindfolded, and thrown into a dungeon. After a long time he was brought out, subjected to the form of a trial, condemned, and let down into a deep, damp dungeon, within the castle of Buda Pesth.

His imprisonment did more for the cause than his presence. He was regarded as a martyr to the liberty of speech. For three years, while he lay in his unwholsome dungeon, his patriotic fellow-laborers were at work upon the public mind; and when he emerged, in broken health, but with heart untouched, and unabated courage, he found his countrymen ripe for the work of self-deliverance. All men sought him; all were ready to labor with him. In 1847, in spite of Austrian gold, he was returned a member of the National Assembly for the city of Pesth. He became at once the leader of that great body, and the champion of his country's cause. Unrivaled as a debater, clear, bold, uncompromising in the service he had undertaken, he roused the whole nation to a sense of its wrong, and demanded from Austria a restoration of the rights of the Hungarian people. He claimed her old Constitution. He sought no new privilege; he only demanded that her old degree of independence should be restored. He carried the Assembly with him. A deputation was appointed to the Emperor. Kossuth was upon it. The Emperor yielded every point—conceded the Constitution, appointed a Cabinet, and the Hungarian revolution was complete. A Constitution was proclaimed by the Emperor; the revolution was legally confirmed and every house in Vienna blazed with the illumination of rejoicing at the event.

The Assembly of 1847, Kossuth being foremost, set itself zealously to work to carry out the desired reforms. Laws were passed, mainly through Kossuth's influence, establishing perfect equality of civil rights and burdens among all classes, emancipating every serf, tolerating all religions, transferring to the peasants half the land of the kingdom, and investing them with full civil and political rights. The elective franchise was extended; the nobles were required to pay taxes; special legislation for particular classes was abolished; and eight millions of the public money were devoted to such internal improvements as the condition of the country required. All these laws were laid before the King for his signature. He gave it, and solemnly swore that he would support the said laws, and cause them to be respected. This was upon the 11th of April, 1848.

Universal joy reigned throughout the kingdom. Never had so great a work been accomplished in so short a time. Never had one man shone forth so proudly preëminent as Kossuth through all this struggle.

This joy did not continue long. Ferdinand soon proved himself a worthy scion of his house. He proved as treacherous as the worst of his predecessors. He set himself diligently at work to destroy the laws he had sworn to support. He fomented rebellion in Hungary; disavowed the act; deposed his own agent; revoked the act; and by a series of falsehoods, as shameless as even an Emperor could devise, plunged into war with the kingdom whose independence he had but just confirmed. Kossouth became again the soul of the contest. His clarion voice summoned the millions of his native land to the defense of their rights. His transcendant genius disciplined, organized, and wielded their armies. Courage, method, and power, sprung up at his word. Victory waited upon his steps. The power of Austria was hurled back from the Hungarian borders, and even the capital was within his grasp. Russia poured forth her hosts to the aid of Austria. Kossuth, the animating spirit of the nation, still maintained the struggle—still continued to be victorious. His deeds rang throughout the world. His name was upon every tongue. Admiration of his genius, faith in his purposes, joy at his success, filled every heart. He fell, and his country fell, at last—not in open war, but through the purchased treason of one of her sons. The whole world wept over her fate, and the sympathies of all nations went with Kossuth and his companions to his Turkish prison.

Hanging for Arson.

The case of young Conklin, who was recently executed in Oneida County for the crime of arson, awakened a good deal of sympathy, which expressed itself in numerous petitions for a commutation of his sentence. In reply, the Governor, after setting forth the enormity of the offense, and the certainty of the guilt of the condemned, says:—

"I has been urged in mitigation, that the fires which he kindled did not result in the destruction of life. But it must be remembered that the completeness of crime, or the degree of punishment, are not permitted by the law to depend upon any such contingency. the burning of an inhabited building constitutes the offense, and the measure of guilt is not to be determined by the actual extent of the injury. It is enough that human life is placed in danger, and the incendiary who applies the midnight torch is not absolved from his awful responsibility by the timely discovery and extinction of the flames. That the facts proved against Conklin bring the case within the letter and spirit of the law defining arson in the first degree, and prescribing its punishment, does not appear to admit of serious question.

"I am aware that the terrible penalty which the law imposes is regarded by many as unnecessarily severe. Even if this were so, the law, as it stands, must be my guide, unless it can be shown that the crime was accompanied by incidents of an extenuating character. It is not for me in a clear case of guilt to dispense with the penalty which the legislative power has pronounced necessary for the protection of persons and property.

"After much reflection, my sense of public duty constrains me to decide that the law must have its course. The public safety requires an example. I do not come to this conclusion without emotions of pain and sorrow. My heart melts with compassion before the tears and entreaties of his venerable parents, his wife and children. But my calm judgment admonishes me to adopt the celebrated expression of Sir Matthew Hale, 'When I find myself swayed to mercy, let me remember that there is likewise a mercy due to the country.' In the struggle between personal sympathy and official responsibility, the civil magistrate must not forget the sacredness of the law and the rights of society.

"Upon what ground of justice or policy can I relax the law, when crimes abound beyond all previous example in our history? The present condition of society, the frequent occurrence of offenses fatal to the safety and good order of the community, call emphatically for firmness in the administration of justice. It becomes necessary not only for the vindication of the law, but the vigorous exercise of the civil power in the punishment of the guilty can alone inspire confidence in its ability to maintain public order and individual security.

Very respectfully, WASHINGTON HUNT.

Slavery.

The following tables show pretty conclusively the relative value of the institution of domestic slavery and universal freedom. Arkansas and Michigan were admitted together; they are of the same age, but of vastly disproportioned growth. In manufacturing and agricultural progress, the free, State trebles the slave State while in moral growth and social elevation, no comparison can be made:—

Census of Michigan—1850.

Dwelling-houses in the State,		71,616
Families in the State,		72,611
Whites,	395,097
Colored,	2,557
Total population		397,654
Farms in cultivation,		34 089
Manufacturing establishments producing annually $500 and upward,		1,979

Census of Arkanas, 1850.

Dwelling-houses in the State,		28,252
Families in the State,		28,416
Whites,	162,068
Free Colored,	589
Total free population,		162,657
Slaves,		46,982
Total population,		209,639
Farms in cultivation,		17,758
Manufacturing establishments producing annually $500 and upward,		271
Federal representative population,		190,849

[Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Ground and Unground—Cooked and Uncooked Food.—In a communication from the Society of Shakers, at Lebanon, New York, in the Patent Office Report, we find the following upon the relative value of ground and unground, cooked and uncooked corn for feeding cattle, &c. "The experience of more than thirty years leads us to estimate ground corn at one third higher than unground, as food for cattle, and especially for fatting pork; hence it has been the practice of our Society, for more than a quarter of a century, to grind all our provender. The same experience induces us to put a higher value upon cooked than upon raw meal, and for fatting animals, swine particularly, we consider three of cooked equal to four bushels of raw meal. Until within the last three or four years, our Society fattened annually, for thirty years, from 40,000 to 50,000 pounds of pork, exclusive of lard and offal fat, and it is the constant practice to cook the meal, for which purpose six or seven potash kettles are used." The Shakers are a close-observing, calculating people, and go for the practical realities of life; and therefore, in the economy of food, must be presumed to be good judges. For ourself, we are disposed to believe the conclusions to which they have arrived are correct. [Farm.

Threatenings not Fulfilled.—Being once in company with a mother and her three children, we observed one of them, a boy about six years old, who was particularly unruly and mischievous. At one act of his rudeness his mother, being somewhat excited, turned to him and threatened to punish him severely if he should repeat it. In a few minutes the little fellow did precisely the same thing, and as the mother did not notice it, we ventured to say to him, "Did you not hear your mother say she would punish you if you did that again?" The urchin, with the expression of bravado on his countenance, quickly replied, "I aint afraid; mother often says she'll whip me, but she don't do it." The mother smiled, as if her little boy had really said a smart thing. But, alas! she was teaching him a lesson of insubordination which would probably make her heart sore. Mothers, never unnecessarily threaten; but when you do threaten, be careful not to falsify your word.

Variety.

There is said to be an extraordinary cave in Calveras county, California about six miles from San Antonio, which has been entered and partially explored to a distance of over 1400 feet. It is described by those who have seen it as being divided into countless chambers and apartments, all of easy access, and adorned with curiously-shaped figures of stone, making them resemble well-furnished rooms; and from the ceilings, hanging pendant in huge masses, bright crystals, flashing in the light of torches, give the appearance of gorgeous chandeliers suspended from a richly-furnished dome, to shed their lustre upon the magnificence that lies scattered around; while in some of the apartments, floor, walls and cellings, reflect back such a flood of light from innumerable stalactities, as to be almost blinding. There is a gentle and regular descent to the cave of about 35 degrees.

It is stated that in 1837, when condemned to three years' imprisonment by the Austrian Government, Kossuth, at the end of the first year, was offered the choice of one book for his amusement, provided that it was not political. He replied that if, instead of one, they gave him three, they should not be political; he selected an English Grammar, Walker's Pronouncing Dictionary, and Shakspeare. Having obtained these books, he commenced the study of the language, beginning with the translation of the first scene of the "Tempest," which occupied him about a fortnight. This was in 1847; and how well he now understands the language is shown by his speeches.

A most wonderful piece of linen was weven for the World's Exhibition in the North of Ireland, near Waringstown, by a weaver named George Haddock. It is a web of fine cambric handkerchiefs. Small print can be read through it, and yet the web is so close and compact that a single thread could not be distinguished without the aid of a microscope, or rather web-glass. The cambric, when held up to the light, looks like a fine and airy fabric.

The clipper ship Game Cock, and the brig Fremont, recently left Francisco with a large number of passengers for the Sandwich Islands. Before their departure a considerable excitement existed from a suspicion which seems to have gained ground, that they constituted a revolutionary band against the possessions of King Kamehameha. The probabilities are that the passengers were mere pleasure travelers going to the island to "spend the winter."

One of the greatest pedestrian feats ever attempted came off at San Francisco, on the 26th of October, between John Gildersleeve and William Peck, for $2,000 a side. The distance to be run was twenty consecutive miles; if either backed down, the one who ran the farthest distance to take the money. Gildersleeve ran seventeen miles and a quarter, when he was stopped—Peck having backed down after completing his fifteenth mile.

Speaking of the Cathedrals of Cologne and Strasbourg, a traveler remarks, that if these immensely expensive edifices had never been begun, not only would the money have been saved, but the surrounding communities and the world would have sustained no loss spiritually or socially. Such expensive structures are generally worse than useless, whether occupied by Catholics or Protestants.

The reason why the reigning sovereign in England was called by a name so different from that of any of her predecessors on the throne, was the disinclination of her father, the late Duke of Kent, to have her called by the name of any preceding Queen. This disinclination, the correspondent says, arose from a reflection on the fact that almost all the Seconds on the throne had met banishment, deposition, or violent death. The coincidence is certainly very striking.

Dr. Jenner, one of the Professors of University College, chronicles, in the Medical Times, the discovery of a new, and, from the cases he relates, apparently a very efficacious remedy, in some of the most troublesome forms of indigestion. The drug used by the Professor is the sulphite of Soda, not the sulphate.

One of the bricks brought from the ruins of Nineveh, besides the letters inscribe on it, is marked with the footsteps of a weasel, which must have run over the brick before it dried; so that the record of the existence of the mighty Assyrian King and the diminutive animal, has been stamped on the same piece of clay.

Rev. Lemuel Haines happend to go into a a store where ardent spirits were drank as well as sold. In his pleasant manner he addressed them, "How do ye do?" The merchant, willing to jest a little, replied, "O, not more than half drunk." "Well, well," said Mr. Haines, "I am glad there is a reformation bugun."

A Sidney thief committed a theft on board one of the river steamers, was detected, tried by the passengers, found guilty, and was fined $100, which he forked over. The money was given to a sick man named Nathan Spencer on board, who was on his way to the Sacramento Hospital.

John Ritter, the editor of The Readinger Adler, in Berks Co., Pa., is recently deceased. Mr. Ritter edited The Adler over 50 years, and his arguments carried so much weight with them, that his paper was generally denominated the "Berks Co. Bible." He was a Tariff man, and advocated increased protection to American iron.

The clerk of the Dead Letter Office, at Washington, a day or tow since, burned eight hundred and twenty bushels of dead letters, the refuse of three months. Each had been opened and note made if containing any valuables.

A bill is before the Legislature of South Carolina, which proposes to prevent the citizens of the various States in which the action of the Fugitive Slave Law has been obstructed, from using the Courts of South Carolina, to collect debts.

In the Court of Oyer and Terminer, New York, week before last, two men, named Antonio Lopez and Otto Grumzig, were sentenced to be hung on Friday the 23d of January, 1851.

New York and Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE, via Stonington, for Boston Providence, New Bedford, Taunton, and Newport, carrying the great Eastern U. S. Mail, without change of cars or detention. The secure and elegant steamers C. VANDERBILT and COMMODORE leave on alternate days (Sundays excepted) Pier No. 2 North River, (first wharf above Battery-place,) at 5 o'clock P. M. For passage, state-rooms, or freight, apply at Pier No. 2, or at the office, No. 11 Battery-place.

New York and Albany Steamboat.

THE splendid steamer RIP VAN WINKLE, Capt. S. Schuyler, runs regularly between New York and Albany, leaving New York on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at 6 o'clock, and Albany on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, or on the arrival of the Express Trains from the West. There is no safer, quicker, or pleasanter boat on the Hudson River than the Rip Van Winkle.

DeRuyter Institute.

THE Academic Year commences the last Wednesday in August, and closes the last Tuesday in June of each year.

Board of Instruction.

Rev. J. R. IRISH, A. M., Principal.
Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress
Rev. J. W. MORTON, } Assistants.
Mr. O. B. IRISH, }

The Terms for 1851 and 1852 are as follows:—

The First commences Aug. 27 and closes Dec. 2.
" Second " Dec. 3 " " March 16.
" Third " March 17 " " June 29.

There will be no vacation between the Terms, but there will be a recess of one week at the middle of the Second Term, and, at the option of the school, one of two days near the middle of each of the other Terms.

In the common branches, and a few others, classes will be formed at the commencement of each Term; but in the higher branches a different arrangement is necessary. Hence Chemistry, Physiology, and Intellectual Philosophy, are assigned to the Fall Term; Philosophy, Astronomy, and Logic, to the Winter Term; and Botany, Geology, and Moral Science, to the Spring Term. Latin, German, and French are commenced in the Fall Term, Greek and Hebrew in the Winter, and Spanish and Italian in the Spring, and continued through the course. Geometry is commenced with the Fall Term, Trigonometry and Conic Sections in the Winter, Mathematical Astronomy, Surveying, and Navigation in the Spring.

Tuition.

Tuition should be arranged before entering classes.

Geography, Elementary Arithmetic, and Beginners in Grammar, per Term,	$3 00
Higher Arithmetic, Advanced Grammar, Composition, Beginners in Algebra, and Analysis,	$4 00
Higher Mathematics, Languages, Natural Sciences, &c.	$5 00

EXTRAS.

Chemical Experiments,	$1 00
Drawing,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Writing and Stationery,	0 50
Vocal Music, Elementary,	1 00
Advanced Class,	2 00
Instrumental Music,	8 00

Use of Organ or Piano, $2 00 per quarter.

BOARD, in private families, per week, from $1 25 to $1 50; in clubs, from 60 to 90 cents.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the Fall Term, and at the middle of the Winter Term, and continue seven weeks. The course will embrace a thorough review of the common school branches, with daily lectures on "The Art of Teaching," Chemistry, Physiology, Laws of Health, School Laws, &c., &c. Tuition $2 50.

Students should not be furnished with unnecessary pocket-money, neither should minors be allowed to contract debts in the village. Either member of the Faculty will superintend the financial affairs of pupils placed under their care, by special direction from parents and guardians, if funds are furnished in advance.

JAS. R. IRISH, Pres., } Of the Board
S. S. CLARKE, Sec. } of Trustees.
DERUYTER, July 18, 1851.

Sabbath Tracts.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
No. 13—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
No. 14—Delaying Obedience. 4 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention isinvited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pp.
The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.
An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.
Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New-York.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Alfred Center—B. W. Millard,
" David C. Green.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
West Edmeston—E. Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Gowanda..Delos C. Burdick.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport..Leman Andrus.
Newport..Abel Stillman.
Petersburg..Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville - Albert B. Crandall.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—J. C. Maxson.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—James Hubbard.
So. Brookfield..Herman A. Hull.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Halsey Stillman.
West Genesee—E. I. Maxson.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford & N. L.—P. L. Berry.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—Charles Spicer
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Jamestown—Wm. A. Weeden
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
Quincy..Abram Burger.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randol
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Christiana—Z. Campbell.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—Abel D. Bond
Berlin—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison
Southampton—J. R. Butts.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to

GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

W B Gillett

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VIII.—NO. 27.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 18, 1851.

WHOLE NO. 391.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH & THE RESURRECTION.

From "An Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the Practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures. By JAMES A. BEGG, Author of a Connected View of the Scripture Evidence of Christ's Speedy Return, &c." [Continued.

The day following the Paschal Sabbath was, also, interesting and important unto the house of Israel. It was the day of First Fruits, established not only as a solemn national recognition, on Israel's part, of the Divine goodness, pledged, when they should have entered the land of Canaan, to give to them the harvest thereof; but important to them, as to us also, on account of its appointments typical of the enjoyment of the glorious results of that redemption to which the eating of the slain lamb typically led.

When the Paschal Sabbath was past, after sunset, the new day then commencing, or in the course of that night, a sheaf of the first-ripe barley, representative of the whole harvest which was to follow, was gathered, with especial ceremony, in the presence of deeply-interested spectators, by messengers sent under the authority of the Sanhedrim, and, at least, in latter times, amid tokens of general rejoicing, brought into the Temple. Having afterwards been prepared for the purpose, in the morning very early, (about the time of sunrise,) took place the presentation of this sheaf to the Lord, the earnest of the ripened or still ripening harvest. The prohibition, which till then was in force against the reaping or eating of the standing crop was thereafter removed, and the joyous harvest followed, throughout the land.

The appointment of this ordinance is briefly presented, in connection with the account of the Paschal solemnity, of which it formed a part, to which we have already referred. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, when ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first fruits of your harvest unto the Priest; and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you; on the morrow after the Sabbath the Priest shall wave it. And he shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf, an he-lamb, without blemish of the first year, for a burnt offering unto the Lord. And the meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth-deals of fine flour, mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord for a sweet saflour. And the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin. And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought an offering unto your God; it shall be a statute for ever, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings. And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath, (from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering,) seven Sabbaths shall be complete; even unto the morrow after the Seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the Lord. Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves, of two tenth-deals; they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baken with leaven; they are the First Fruits unto the Lord." Lev. xxiii. 9—17.

There were thus two kinds of First Fruits, both related to the Passover, and dependant upon it. The first of these was offered the day following the Passovor Sabbath, at the beginning of barley harvest; the second, was seven weeks thereafter, when the whole even of the wheat harvest was completed. The first consisted of a sheaf of the first-ripe barley; the second, of two baked loaves. There is, we believe, much significance in this. The first represents "Christ, the First Fruits of them that slept," who, the Head of a yet uncompleted body, having been speedily and in a sense prematurely snatched from the tomb, may be seen in the sheaf, as distinguished from bread; the second, of the two wave loaves, seem to point to that body perfected, when the harvest shall be completed, the bread perfectly prepared. The time, seven weeks, intervening between the first and second, seems fitly to represent the whole period between the first fruits of the spiritual harvest and its completion in resurrection glory —"Christ, the First Fruits; afterwards, they that are Christ's, at His coming." 1 Cor. xv. 27. The period of His return He has Himself represented thus—"The harvest is the end of the world, [the end of the age,] and the reapers are the angels." Matt. xiii. 39. And it is remarkable, that even this completion of wheat harvest is still spoken of as a "first-fruits;" but, we believe, designedly representing, in the two perfect loaves, the whole company of believers, Jew and Gentile, who are "a kind of first fruits of His creatures;"—"the general assembly and church of the first born which are written in heaven." Jas. i. 18; Heb. xii. 23.

The time of observance of both these kinds of First Fruits depended upon the time of the eating of the Passover lamb; but it is the first of these—that which was on the 16th of the month Abib or Nisan—we now seek to elucidate and apply. From the manner of presentation, the sheaf is called a "wave offering," having been waved before the Lord. This is stated to have been done by a waving of agitation, "to and fro, from the right hand to the left, from east to west, from north to south."—Kitto's Biblical Cyclopædia, Art. "First Fruits."

This might be intended to intimate that this sheaf, so consecrated, dedicated, and accepted, represented all that remained in the field, both unreaped and unripe, which was to be gathered from all directions. This, done in the presence of witnesses, called their attention to grateful consideration of what God has done in our behalf.

The following is the Jewish account of the ceremony:—"On the fifteenth of Nisan, in the evening, when the feast of the first day of the Passover was ended, and the second day begun, the house of judgment deputed three men to go in solemnity, and gather the sheaf of barley. The inhabitants of the neighboring cities assembled to witness the ceremony; and the barley was gathered into the territory of Jerusalem. The deputies demanded three times, if the sun were set? and they were as often answered, It is. They afterwards demanded as many times, if they might have leave to cut the sheaf? and leave was as often granted. They reaped it out of three different fields, with three different sickles, and put the ears into three boxes, to carry them to the temple.

"The sheaf, or rather the three sheaves, being brought into the temple, were thrashed in the court. From this they took a full omer, that is, about three pints of the grain; and after it had been well winnowed, parched, and bruised, they sprinkled over it a log of oil, to which they added a handful of incense; and the priest who received this offering waved it before the Lord, toward the four quarters of the world, and they cast part of it on the altar. After this every one might begin his harvest." Calmet's Dictionary, Art. "Sheaf."

This is usually spoken of as an offering of gratitude to the God of the harvest. And right and beautiful it is that God be acknowledged in our enjoyment of the gifts He bestows. Demand is made upon us by Him, of this acknowledgment; and it was nationally yielded by Israel in the ordinance now recited. But the Lord often effects different ends by the same means; and, while the God of Israel thus prescribed a form of grateful recognition of Him as the Giver of the harvest, in that form higher and nobler objects were also contemplated. The God to whom they owed this appointment, taught His people to look forward to the results of that stupendous plan of man's redemption, which He Himself contrived. And, in the Resurrection of His Son from the dead, the glorious first fruits of redeemed creatures, we find the Antitype of that sheaf which was waved in His temple. In order that the sheaf might be accepted, an offering of a sweet savour, an he-lamb without blemish was an accompanying sacrifice, testifying the need that even this should be purged with blood.

"On the morrow after the Sabbath, the priest shall wave it." (Ver. 11.) The time of offering is therefore prescribed. The significance of the type depends upon this. It is to be "on the morrow after the Sabbath"—not the weekly Sabbath, but that spoken of immediately before—the Paschal Sabbath, observed on the 15th of the month, which we have already so fully considered. This farther service is the exhibition or manifestation of the complete result of that which was symbolized in the Sabbath, which commemorated their going forth from Egypt, in the sight of all the Egyptians. It is, therefore, only this Sabbath that is now referred to—being the one previously spoken of in the immediate context. The weekly Sabbath had no relation to the offering of the sheaf, as is evident from the statement of the whole solemnity in the text.

In the appointment, the order, indeed, is not strictly preserved. That of the wave-sheaf does not immediately follow after the mention of the first day of the Feast of unleavened bread, the holy convocation unto the Lord, the Sabbath in which no servile work was to be done. (Ver. 6—8.) But the the reason is obvious. Though to be on the morrow after that Sabbath, it was not to be immediately observed by Israel. It could not be observed in Egypt or in the Wilderness; and is, therefore, placed separately by itself, avowedly for an after period, with distinct intimation of its relation to that Paschal Sabbath, when the opportunity should at length be afforded in the land of promise for its observance. (Ver. 9—11.) The ordinance was given to Israel while they were yet in the wilderness; but it presented an assured hope, as it furnished the divine pledge, of their yet receiving and enjoying a better inheritance. Meanwhile, they sowed no seed and reaped no harvest; the type bearing so gloriously on man's future destiny must be preserved in all its perfectness, and God rains manna and sends quails for their present maintenance, until more fittingly the type can be exhibited. This type is that of the earnest of redemption perfected—"the redemption of our body;" and the enjoyment of "an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, that fadeth not away," in the land of promise—while the entering into the wilderness, under the grace and guidance of God, was the type of salvation begun, and maintained, in the life of God in the soul of man, in blessed hope of what we shall hereafter be.

But it is the type of the earnest only, which we are at present called to consider. Forming part as that type did of the Paschal solemnity, the Feast of First Fruits could be celebrated only with the very first of the harvest. The period of the year was fixed; the offering made in the Temple. At that season in Judea, barley might be found in a perfectly ripened state; but wheat, later in attaining maturity, could not till a considerable time after. And in the first fulfillment of the promise, immediately after they had crossed the Jordan, "the children of Israel encamped in Gilgal, and kept the Passover on the fourteenth day of the month, at even, in the plains of Jericho. And they did eat of the old corn on the morrow after the Passover, unleavened cakes and parched corn, in the self-same day. [For the offering of First Fruits was not till the day following.] And the manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land, [on the day of First Fruits, therefore,] neither had the children of Israel manna any more; but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year." Josh. v. 10—12.

In practice, we have seen, that after sunset, when the Passover Sabbath was past, and, therefore, at the very commencement of the 16th day, the sheaf of barley was brought into the temple, where it was prepared, and made ready to be offered in the morning, Very early, about the time of sunrise, or shortly after, the sheaf was presented, in the manner prescribed—the daily morning sacrifice, which was later, being only prepared and offered between the hours of 8 and 9, according to our reckoning. This morning belongs to the third day of the Paschal solemnity, and, as a part of the third day, stands for the whole.

[To be continued.

A POETIC GEM.

If a more devout, touching, and beautiful song for the Sabbath, than the following ever came from the depths of the human heart, we have not seen it. It was written for, and sung by Catherine Hayes at her recent concerts in Boston—the words by George P. Morris—the music by William Vincent Wallace. [Day Book.

THY WILL BE DONE.

Searcher of Hearts!—from mine erase
All thoughts that should not be,
And in its deep recesses trace
My gratitude to Thee!

Hearer of Prayer!—oh guide aright
Each word and deed of mine;
Life's battle teach me how to fight,
And be the victory Thine.

Giver of All!—for every good
In the Redeemer came:—
For shelter, raiment, and for food,
I thank Thee in His name.

Father and Son and Holy Ghost!
Thou glorious Three in One!
Thou knowest best what I need most,
And let Thy will be done.

THE DEATH OF THE CHILDREN.

On the Sunday following the calamity by which some fifty children of a Public School in New York were suddenly cut off, Rev. H. W. Bellows, pastor of one of the churches in the city, preached on the subject from the text, "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted because they are not." We copy a part of his discourse:—

"We are not permitted to hesitate to-day in the choice of a subject or a text. Divine Providence has selected the theme, and universal consent must have fastened upon the familiar words I have announced as the appropriate text. Never since Herod's day were they more laden with meaning. I need not recount the painful circumstances which, within a few days, have made so many happy homes houses of mourning; which have converted so many cheerful Mothers into sorrowing Rachels, and filled all parental breasts with sympathetic anguish. The Prophet Zachariah has anticipated the story. 'Smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered; and I will turn my hand upon the little ones.' Fifty new made graves are yawning this morning for 'the little ones dashed against the stones.' A hundred parents are washing with fruitless tears the bruised clay that was so lately animated and vocal with the souls of their children. Hundreds of Brothers and Sisters, with swollen eyes, are gathered round the little coffins that imprisoned the mute and mangled remains of their play-fellows. In one sad district of our city, every street has its hearses, every neighborhood its mourners, as if Pestilence had just stalked through its chambers. But neither sickness, nor age, nor want, nor vice has been there. Health and innocency and youth are the victims, claimed as suddenly, and by a peril as unfeared, as though the wild beasts that avenged the insulted prophet Elisha, of old, had swept in from the distant forests and devoured them up. We mourn, my Brethren, only sympathetically, and our tears are easily dried; but may God grant his best consolations to the hearts which this terrible catastrophe has shattered.

* * * * *

"It is an idle task to attempt to trace the direct hand of Providence in such sweeping bereavements, such awful calamities, and presumptuous to prononce what are the special lessons He intended to teach by such events. It violates both our universal sense of the generality on which the Divine Government proceeds, and profanely lifts that inscrutable veil which wraps God's dispensations in a holy mystery. But it is quite a different thing to ask ourselves what lessons, warnings, consolations, may be drawn fiom even the most dark and dreadful providences of the Almighty. The reasons for God's dealings in cases like the present are utterly obscure; but the use to which those dealings are to be turned, it becomes our most imperative duty to investigate.

"And our first lesson is here, as ever, one of trust—a confidence that there is mercy even in the severest afflictions. It is the sum and substance of all consolation to know and feel that this world, and the Divine Government which controls it, are so arranged that all things do work together for good to them that love God; that nothing is so dark in itself that it does not shed light upon something else; nothing so inscrutable in its cause that a manifest blessing may not be wrung from its effect; nothing so appalling in its speciality that the rule under which it falls is not plainly a wise and benevolent one. Each particular case of sudden or violent death, may be wholly without discoverable object or justifying nature, so far as man can see into the divine purpose; but no considerate student of human nature would think it an improvement in the order of Providence, that sudden death itself should be abolished. It is good for man, on the whole, whether as a social, a rational, or a moral being, that this possibility should hang over him. It stimulates his energies and his power of self-protection; makes him more sensible of the value of his life, softens his affections, and holds him closer to the scene of his accountableness. It is dreadful for youth and innocency and health to be snatched away by sudden violence or mysterious calamity! But it would be a sad change for society in all its prospects, if our children were not vulnerable; were we not called upon for a constant and solicitous protection, which doubly endears them; called to watch over their health and safety, and sometimes to do it in vain! Cruel and ill-timed as it would be to attempt directly to stanch the bleeding hearts of the parents bereaved by this recent blow, with such a consolation, yet is it not really doubtful to calm reflection whether the calamity of Thursday, hightened or diminished the happiness of the community? If we reckon on one side the anguish of those hundred parents, who came to receive their dead, must we not consider the joy of those two thousand, who came to find their living? If we figure to ourselves the bitter tears of bereavement that bathed the pale faces of lifeless little ones, must we not count the tears of joy that fell upon the necks of the saved? In how many more homes in that district on that appalling night were hosannas and thanksgiving and speechless gratitude ascending, than moans and lamentations and appealing prayers? For every Rachel, refusing to be comforted, how many parents were there saying, 'It is meet that we should make merry and be glad; for this thy Brother was dead and is alive again; and was lost and is found.' How many thousands, not immediately interested, have strained their children more fondly to their bosoms, or kissed them sleeping with a holier gratitude to God, since that calamity? And when the tidings are borne wherever our language is known, will not the grateful and affectionate parental emotions it will excite, indirectly increase the sum of of human good and human happiness more than it has been directly diminished? It is only in thus considering God's Providence in its comprehensive plan, that we can escape the depression which is produced by the observation of its details.

"Again, my brethren, our second lesson is one of parental patience. We do not love our children so well but that we are often wearied with the care of them, impatient at the drafts thus made on our strength and time and watchfulness, and this is likely to be the case in a special degree with those who pass laborious and self-sacrificing lives. Certain it is—and children themselves would be better if they understood it—that despite our affections the rearing of our offspring is the most anxious, trying, and often-times dependent duty of human life. We need some stimulus under this faintness. And who has not felt the grateful support which the sickness of a child has given to the general domestic patience, ready, perhaps, to give way under the demands of rude health and buoyant spirits? Much more does the death of one hallow those who remain, and fortify our courage with livelier affection to meet the increaing cares and support the trials and demands of the nursery and the fireside. And doubtless all the homes in this city will contain, for a little while at least, more forbearing, patient and tender hands and hearts, because so many of our little ones have been thus snatched away. It is thus that our sorrows, by softening our hearts, harden our resolution and our patience, and animate our parental fidelily and energy."

DUTIES OWING TO A PASTOR.

By J. FLETCHER, in the "Baptist Pulpit."

The first duty of a church to its pastor is that of submission to his righteous and scriptural authority. That the exhortation addressed by Paul to the Hebrew believers, to obey them that had the rule over them, was intended to refer to ministers, is evident from the fact that the word here expressive of authority corresponds with one of the titles applied to them, that of bishop or overseer; and that the churches are exhorted to remember them that had spoken to them the word of God, or, in other words, preached to them the gospel. Every one acknowledges a minister to be an officer, and a principal officer in the church; and an officer without authority is a solecism. But the authority of a pastor is neither that of a lord, nor a lawgiver; but he is the organ of the Divine law, and possesses executive power. The rule, then, to which a church is required to yield obedience and subjection, is not the will of the minister, but the will of Christ. The minister goes forth as the ambassador of Christ, to enforce his laws, and preside over the interests of his militant kingdom. He is clothed with authority from the throne, and whosoever refuses to obey him, while he adheres to his written instructions, refuses to hear and obey Him that sent him.

It is the duty of the members of a church to attend regularly upon the ministrations of their pastor. The great object for which a church call and settle a pastor, is, that he may prepare for them, from week to week, a spiritual repast; and if he fails to do this, rather than treat his ministrations with contempt, and thus bring into disrepute the sacred office, let him be dismissed from his charge. It is said by an eminent writer on etiquette, that "a dinner engagement should be regarded as particularly binding, and as imposing an obligation to be strictly punctual." But how many church members are there who, in such a case, would allow no ordinary incident to disappoint the expectations of a friend, and who, for no trifling reason, would violate the rules of etiquette; yet, for the slightest cause, do not hesitate to absent themselves from the spiritual repast prepared for them by their pastor, and thus treat him who has cherished the most anxious solicitude for their eternal welfare, and tasked his powers to the utmost for their good, as though he had no sensibility. Suppose a neighbor should express a wish to dine with you, and you had been at the trouble and expense of making suitable preparation, and fixing on a day named by himself, would it not wound your feelings were he subsequently to make another engagement for the same time, and comply therewith, to the neglect of the previous one? How, then, do you suppose the steward of the mysteries of God feels when you slight the entertainment which, by the direction of the Great Master of the feast, he has prepared, and in the preparation had especial regard to your highest, your eternal interests?

It is not only the duty of church members to attend upon the ministrations of their pastor, but they should attend to them. Their decorous deportment and serious attention should evince an ardent desire to receive the truth in the love of it. No listlessness, nor sleeping, should be indulged during the solemnities of divine worship. A member of a church who sleeps under the dispensation of Divine truth, not only renders to God a spiritless sacrifice, but offers a public insult to his pastor, and owes a public apology to the congregation.

Another duty of a church member to his pastor is to remember him in his prayers. It indeed appears strange, that so plain a duty as this need be enjoined upon any church, or any Christian. We would naturally suppose, if a professor of religion ever prayed at all, or for any thing, it would be for him from whom he expected spiritual instruction and Divine consolation. But alas! it is not so. How often do the members of our church assemble together professedly for prayer, and offer their supplications before the throne, without even remembering him on whom rests the responsibility of feeding them with knowledge and understanding? Can such Christians feel their dependence upon Divine influences? Do they realize that, without Christ, their pastor can do nothing? The duty of a church to pray for their pastor is most forcibly enjoined by Divine authority. We hear an inspired apostle, with great importunity, saying, "I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me!" As though the prayers of the church were of the greatest, yea, of the very last importance to the successful labors of a minister of the gospel, we hear even the chief of the apostles, with much entreaty, saying to the church at Thessalonica, "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified." Yea, these ancient preachers, though inspired, did not expect any freedom in their ministrations, without an interest in the prayers of the saints. Hence, we hear them saying, "Pray for me, that utterance may be given to me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the gospel." If, then, these inspired men of God were so dependent on the Spirit's influences for success in preaching the gospel, and those influences were secured only in answer to the prayers of their brethren, how can the ministers of the present day even hope for a blessing to accompany their labors unless the church help together by prayer to God for them? Oh, then, my brethren, if you would have the labors of your pastor prove a blessing to you, and a blessing to the world, remember him in your prayers.

But remembering them who have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God, means something more than merely praying for them, or merely saying, "Be ye warmed, and be ye filled, while you give them not the the things which are needful in this life." Hence we remark, that it is the duty of a church to give the minister a competent support. This is a duty founded upon the principles of common justice, and enforced by the expressed authority of the sacred scriptures. Hence, the apostle reasons, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we reap your carnal thinks?" If an individual should risk his life to save your child's, would it be too great a demand on your gratitude for him to require of you the hospitalities of your house, or a suit of clothes even, if his necessities demanded? And shall the servant of God, who devotes all his energies to your spiritual benefit, and to the eternal salvation of your children, have less claim on your gratitude than he who saved the life of your child? The duty of supporting a minister is enjoined upon the church, both under the old and the new dispensations.

CHINESE JEWS.

A paper called the North China Herald contains a detailed narrative of an excursion made by two Chinese Christians, in search of a colony of Jews, who were supposed to exist at K'hae-fung-foo (latitude 34 deg. 66 min., N. long. 1 deg. 50 min. W. of Pekin.) As was anticipated, the people they were in search of were discovered, but in the most abject and wretched condition, having for their bed bare ground, with only rags to cover them, and with means barely sufficient to support nature. It appears that their existence was known to the Jesuit missionaries some century and a half ago; but up to the present time nothing had been done towards gaining a knowledge of their history. And what a history would not this prove, if it could be traced back to the date at which they separated from the rest of their people! In poverty and abject wretchedness they now exist, living apart from the idolaters by whom they are surrounded. On the first visit little else was accomplished than the procuring of a few Hebrew manuscripts, containing portions of the Old Testament scriptures. On a second visit to this interesting colony, six copies of the Pentateuch, in the original Hebrew, were obtained. Two of the Jews themselves have arrived at Shanghae. The copies of the Pentateuch, ere long, will be forwarded to Europe, and will prove of intense interest to the learned in the Hebrew language. The knowledge of this language has entirely passed away from this community, not one member of it being able to speak or read it. The last person who could do so, they state, was their priest, who died some fifty years ago.

MINISTERIAL TACTICS.

The late Dr. John H. Rice was a man of great practical wisdom. A late eminent judge of Virginia once told a friend that the most cutting reproof he had ever received for profaneness, was from this distinguished minister, and without words. They were crossing a ferry together, and on account of shallows, the boat could not be brought to land, so that they were compelled to be carried to the shore by the colored ferrymen. One of these was so careless as to suffer Judge H.'s clothes to become wetted, and the Judge expressed his anger by an imprecation. Dr. Rice, without saying a word, turned to him his large, speaking eyes, with a sorrowful expression. "I never so felt a reproof (said the Judge) in my life; and instantly I begged his pardon." "Ask pardon of God," said Dr. R. "I shall never forget it." At this time Judge H. was entirely ignorant who his reprover was.

When the late Rev. Dr. Staughton resided at Bordentown, he was sitting at his door, when the infidel Thomas Paine, who also resided there, addressed him and said, "Mr. Staughton, what a pity it is that a man has not some comprehensive and perfect rule for the government of his life." Mr. Staughton replied, "Mr. Paine, there is such a rule." "What is that?" asked Mr. Paine. Mr. Staughton repeated the passage—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself." "Oh!" said Paine, "that's in your Bible," and immediately walked away.

A fine specimen of ministerial tact is related by Dr. Beecher of the late Rev. Dr. J. M. Mason. In a notice of the formation of the American Bible Society, he says:—

"When the vote was put that it was expedient at that time to form an American Bible Society, there was a moment of exulting, grateful, prayerful silence. There was but one short moment in our proceedings, when things seemed to tangle, and sad feelings began to rise. At that moment, Dr. Mason rose hastily and said, 'Mr. President, the Lord Jesus never built a church, but that the Devil built a chapel near to it; and he is here now, this moment, in this room, with his finger in the ink-horn, not to write your constitution, but to blot it out.' This sudden address convulsed the convention with laughter, which in a moment dispelled the storm, and revealed a clear sun, which, instantly perceiving, he added, 'There, there! he has gone already to his blue brimstone!'"

MISSIONARY HOSPITAL AT CANTON.

Rev. A. P. Hopper, writing from Canton, says that the mode of conducting a hospital there is as follows: A house being rented, and medicines and instruments being ready, the physician fixes his days and hours for attending to patients, and notice is given out and circulated. The door of the hospital is opened early in the morning of the receiving days, and a man gives a numbered ticket to each one as he enters, and in ordinary cases they are attended to in the order of their arrival. At ten o'clock, religious service is held with those who have arrived, making known to them that there is "Balm in Gilead" for the more inveterate malady of sin, and that there is an Almighty "Physician" there. At eleven o'clock the physician commences his labors. Near to the general reception and preaching room, there is a prescribing room, where all kinds of medicines, in great quantities, have been prepared, and where several native assistants are waiting. A certain number of males and females, in the order of their arrival, are called in alternately into the prescribing room. They are each one examined in succession, and prescribed for, and given over to an assistant to give the medicine, or apply the remedy. By tact and dispatch, in this way, Dr. Hobson is enabled to get through from two hundred and fifty to three hundred in a day, after five hours of hard work. Of course nine-tenths of all the cases are very simple ones, and those cases that require operation or special treatment, are requested to remain in the house, or come back the next day.

During all this time, two or three native Christians are conversing with the patients in the general reception-room, explaining some point of Christian doctrine, or reading a Christian tract to a circle of hearers. And some days, when the Doctor takes a little recess at one o'clock, a second public service is held. The diseases of nineteen-twentieths are not such as to incapacitate them from attending to the presentation of divine truth, and they wait most patiently for their turn to come. For in-door patients a place is given to spread their bed, which they provide for themselves, and some relative comes with them to wait on them, and cook their rice. This is a great security against any incorrect statements being made as to the treatment, as there is always a relative to see that the man was properly taken care of, and it saves the physician a great deal of anxiety, which he would have, if they were to be attended to by paid servants. Twenty-five thousand and ninety-seven persons were prescribed for at Dr. Hobson's hospital, during the year 1850. The whole expense of the hospital, including medicines, rent of building, assistants, &c., not including the doctor's salary, was under $1,000, or in the proportion of forty cents for each patient attended to.

CONVERSION OF A SEA CAPTAIN.

A correspondent of Zion's Herald writes from Canton, as follows:—

This morning returned from a ship whose chief officer lay at the point of death. As I entered his state-room he immediately remarked, "Ah, sir, I did not think, the last Sabbath, I was hearing you preach my last sermon. I want you should repeat that text again." I did so, as follows: "Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him," &c. "I know this is truth," said he, "but 'tis hard for such a sinner as I am to believe." Do you think your case beyond what God calls the uttermost? I asked. After repeating the passage several times, with the eagerness of a dying man, he exclaimed, "It must be, if he saves to the uttermost, that he saves me." Cling to this precious truth, said I, and never for a moment doubt it. After bearing his case to the mercy seat, I left him for a time, but soon a message came that he wished me to come to see him die. I hastened to the ship, and as I entered his room and saw the light of heaven beaming in his countenance, I needed no language to assure me that his pardon was sealed; yet, after a little effort he opened his eyes, and with perfect distinctness whispered, "'Tis true! 'tis true! I know, I feel, he is able to save even to the uttermost, for he saves me;" then closed his eyes, and calmly died. Yes, the same compassionate Jesus, who spoke words full of consolation to the thief on the cross, saved the penitent sailor in the eleventh hour.

There are few qualifications that will so strongly recommend a man as perseverance. If a man possess this faculty, he is sure to succeed in business. He knows no such word as FAIL. If a speculation proves unprofitable, he does not mope through the streets, begging for sympathy and friends, but he is up and doing. He conquers all difficulties by industry, enterprise and perseverance.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 18, 1851.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION.

Our readers will be gratified to be informed, that, after so long a time of silence, our missionaries in China have again spoken to us in regard to their affairs. The subjoined extracts from a communication of Bro. Wardner to the Board, dated Shanghae, August 7th, will be read with interest. The subject which occupies so large a portion of his letter, being one in which the subscribers to the fund for building the missionary chapel feel concerned, we present Bro. W.'s account of it in full; from which it will be seen, that they have not only built a chapel, but secured a dwelling place for each missionary family. We do not suppose, that any of the contributors will find fault with them for the course pursued. There is reason to believe, that our missionaries are heartily devoted to the work to which they have pledged themselves, and that whatever disposition they make of funds entrusted to them, is always made in such manner as to them appears most likely to be for the good of the great cause. They are on the ground, and feel the force of the thousand little circumstances, daily occurring, which must have the effect to modify to a greater or less extent those merely general instructions given by the Board, but which cannot so well be explained to us who are separated from them thousands of leagues.

We trust that the generous proposition of our brother will be appreciated, but not accepted. If he can exile himself from the land of his birth, of civilization and every earthly comfort, to live out his days in "the dark places of the earth," and all for the sake of Christ, surely, we, who are at home, in the full enjoyment of those things, may afford to him the means of furnishing himself in some degree with the conveniencies of life, without expecting him to clip from his already scanty salary. We speak advisedly when we say, that there is not a missionary in China, of any Protestant denomination, who does not receive for his support from fifty to one hundred per cent. more than either of ours. Yet, with this marked difference of equality, not only do our missionaries not complain, but even recommend that we should not increase their salaries.

The closing paragraph of Bro. W.'s letter which we copy, presents a not very pleasant subject to think upon, but it may serve as an additional stimulus to the prayers of our people in behalf of our missionaries. We trust that the good hand of God will be upon them to shield them from all evil. But in these days of change and revolution, who can tell what a few months may bring forth? T. B. B.

Extracts from Mr. Wardner's Letter.

"My object in writing at this time is to inform you of what I have been doing for the last four months, and what disposition has been made of the building funds put into our hands. In reply to suggestions which we had made in regard to building two chapels, Bro. Brown, in a letter which we received in February or March last, remarked as an individual, that if two chapels could be built with the sum subscribed, he thought there would be no objections. But by making an estimate we found that at the rate at which bills were then selling, the three thousand five hundred dollars which had then been subscribed, after being cashed here, and deducting the price of the chapel lot, would not amount to quite two thousand one hundred dollars. We then went into a careful estimate of the cost of building, and made up our minds, that if we should purchase the materials ourselves, hire laborers by the day, and oversee the work, we could erect a chapel of sufficient size, in a plain and neat style, and at the same time strong and durable, with a dwelling over it, for fifteen hundred dollars, after the lot was paid for. Deducting this sum, we saw, that there would be only between five and six hundred dollars left, which would not more than purchase the site for another chapel; and it was doubtful whether it would be sufficient even for that. It therefore seemed necessary to decide, 1st. Whether we would build one chapel, purchase the site for another, and wait for the means to build, and continue to pay rent, (which would eat up this amount in three or four years;) or, 2d. Whether we would expend the whole amount on one chapel and house connected; or, 3d. Whether we should make an effort with the amount provided, as far as it would go, to secure a chapel and each of us a dwelling.

"Our conclusion was, 1st. that our brethren after having donated so liberally to furnish money for one chapel, would not wish to be called upon so soon to subscribe for another; and, 2d. that with fifteen hundred dollars a chapel and dwelling could be built, that would answer every purpose. And as experience had taught us that the house at "Ya-zoo-loong" was not favorably located for a chapel, and as the rent was more than either of us could well pay with our present salaries, and in a few years would amount to a sum sufficient to secure a small residence which would be much more convenient and healthy, we were inclined to think that it would be more pleasing to our brethren, and more for the honor of God, if practicable, to save that amount for the diffusion of gospel light among this benighted people; which could be done in case the object last considered were realized.

"But as our brethren had given no liberty to use the money for any other purpose than for building chapels, there must be some responsibility assumed, in case we pursued the latter course. It had been understood from the first, that Bro. Carpenter should occupy the residence connected with the new chapel; hence, if any of this money were used for building another residence, the responsibility must be assumed by myself. We thought of deferring the matter till our brethren at home could be consulted. But this, we saw, would only be to throw away another hundred and seventy dollars rent; which, considering the limited resources of our denomination, and the perishing need of those around us, we could not think would be advisable. And feeling quite sure that it would not be displeasing to our brethren, should we accomplish more with their money than they had anticipated, I, with Bro. Carpenter's consent, assumed the responsibility of appropriating the overplus towards erecting a house for myself. Accordingly, I purchased a lot outside the city, about a mile and a half from brother Carpenter's new residence, and on the bank of the principal canal in this section, which is elevated about eight or nine feet above the level of the country, and in consequence of which I think it will be more healthy; besides, it furnishes a beautiful prospect. It is about a mile from any foreign resident, but surrounded by Chinese hamlets and farm-houses. And, to my mind, it is quite as inviting a field for private missionary labor as a location in the city, if not more so. The lot is large enough for a house, and small garden spot, which cost one hundred and six dollars and ninety-three cents. Getting it inclosed with a bamboo fence cost thirty-one dollars. Before proceeding farther, I made arrangements with Mr. Fogg, an American merchant, who promised to loan me money and wait till I could refund it. Our object in proceeding immediately with our building operations, was that we might, if possible, leave 'Ya-zoo-loong' at the close of the rent year.

"I have built a one-storied house, just large enough for our present convenience, and well elevated from the ground. We commenced living in it on the fourth of July. In consequence of the scarcity of funds, I have done only just sufficient to enable me to live in it for the time being. It will probably cost about two hundred dollars more to finish it. I used up all my salary at the outset, and borrowed six hundred dollars of Mr. Fogg; four hundred of which I have refunded out of the one thousand dollars just received, hoping to get another remittance before he will want the rest, which he says will probably be within a month or so. The house, as it now is, has cost about six hundred and twenty-three dollars, besides the hundred and thirty-eight dollars for the lot and fence.

"I have neglected to inform you of these movements, as I was anxious to inform you at the same time of what the results would be. Whether or not I have acted wisely or prudently in this matter, I leave it to you to say, hoping to have a full expression of your views on this point. I see by Bro. Brown's last letter, that the subscription has exceeded three thousand five hundred dollars, by which we may be relieved still more, as the chapel may exceed what we anticipated. I propose, if the Lord prospers us, to try to save enough out of my salary to finish the house, which, besides this overplus, will probably be two hundred or two hundred and fifty dollars, which I should wish to make as a donation to the Society.

"If money had been appropriated for the purpose, I should doubtless have built my house in connection with a chapel, as Bro. C. has done, and as I formerly proposed. Still, while there are weighty reasons for that course, there are also weighty ones for seeking a country location, especially if one has children of his own to rear. And I am not sure that the former affords any better prospect of usefulness as to missionary labor, provided a country location is judiciously selected. The Catholics, who have had most experience in missionary operations in China, generally select country locations. There are several hamlets within a short distance of me, where I doubt not schools could be established, which would form the nucleus of a congregation to preach to. The neighboring farms furnish opportunities at nearly every hour of the day for personal conversation with their tenants, without the danger of being thronged by a rabble, ever laboring to turn the subject upon something else, or into ridicule, to which annoyance one is constantly liable in the city. Some missionaries have expressed regret that they did not build in the city. But such are located contiguous to the foreign settlement, where such advantages cannot be so fully enjoyed; and the fact that none have before built in the city, is a pretty good evidence that they do not, on the whole, deem it advisable.

"There has been some little excitement here of late, in consequence of placards that have been posted up throughout Shanghae, of a very bitter and threatening character, proposing to all to rise at a given signal that should be understood, and massacre every foreigner in the place. The three consuls called immediately on the Taou-tai, and in decided terms demanded that the placards be taken down forthwith, and the perpetrators brought to justice, if they could be detected. I do not think there is much danger of an attack just now, as there are a good number of foreign ships in part, and two or three war ships. But it shows that a hostile feeling is growing, and there will be less safety unless the place is well guarded. At Ningpo we also hear of threatening menaces. What may be, we cannot foretell. God knows, and is able to protect all whom he will."

JEWISH MISSIONS.

In 1839 (says the Journal of Missions) the Presbyterian Church of Scotland sent a deputation, of which the lamented McCheyne was one, to the Holy Land, to see what could be done in behalf of the Jews. A part of this deputation returned home by land. On reaching Pesth, in Hungary, Dr. Black was taken sick, and was unable to proceed on his journey for many weeks. While in this condition, he was visited by the Archduchess of Hungary, a lady of a remarkably lovely Christian character, who took a great interest in him, tended him in his sickness, and furnished him with the information he desired in respect to the Hungarian Jews, and promised every assistance in forming the mission. The mission, which was commenced under these auspices, has been greatly blessed. Though designed especially for the Jews, it has not been confined to them. A German service has been sustained for some years, the influences of which have been felt by Catholics as well as Protestants. Through the efforts of untiring colporteurs, most of them converted Jews, the New Testament is in the hands of many Jews in all parts of Hungary. The circulation of this book is rapidly increasing. Whilst the colporteurs distributed four thousand copies last year, they have sold within six months at least eight thousand. Of late, however, much inconvenience has been experienced from the jealous fears of the Austrian government. The Pesth Bible repository has been closed by the police, under the false charge that political pamphlets were introduced in the Bible boxes.

"IS IT FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?"

Dr. Pise, a minister of the Roman Catholic Church, and of high standing among that order in this city, second perhaps to none but Cardinal Hughes, delivered a lecture last Lord's day at the church of St. Charles Borromeo, Brooklyn, in which he said:—

"There are many things believed by all Christians at the present day, not to be found in the Scriptures."

This, said he, is true "with regard to Infant Baptism, that we and all Christians believe in, for there is no authority for it in Scripture. We no where find that the Apostles baptized infants, and if it be proper and necessary to baptize infants as well as adults, we have no other authority, and must depend entirely on tradition."

In this we think Dr. Pise is correct. We know of no precept or example in the Scriptures for infant baptism. And if the practice does really rest on the authority of tradition, we submit it to our Pedobaptist friends, whether it is not in fact a relic of Popery, which the Reformation failed to cast off, and whether they, while upholding this practice, can consistently adopt the immortal declaration of Chillingworth—'THE BIBLE, THE WHOLE BIBLE, THE BIBLE ALONE, IS THE RELIGION OF PROTESTANTS.'

☞ The above—italics, small capitals, and all—is from the New York Chronicle, one of our most Baptist and most Protestant exchanges. We copy it for the double purpose of showing what a distinguished Catholic thinks of infant sprinkling, and how a Protestant garbles the remarks of said Catholic to support his own favorite opinion. Now, according to a report of Dr. Pise's lecture—which we find in two daily papers, and from which the above quotation was doubtless made—he said:—

"There are many things believed by all Christians at the present day, not to be found in the Scriptures. We do not read any where, that 'Sunday' should be kept holy. On the contrary, we shall find that the commandment is to keep holy the Sabbath day, which is the seventh—Saturday. The change was made in the church at an early period, and the authority for it is only tradition. The same with regard to infant baptism, that we and all Christians believe in, for there is no authority for it in Scripture. We no where find that the Apostles baptized infants, and if it be proper and necessary to baptize infants as well as adults, we have no other authority, and must depend entirely on tradition."

Of the truth of what Dr. Pise says, we have no doubt. "We know of no precept or example in the Scriptures for" keeping the Sunday as a Sabbath, or "for infant sprinkling. And if these practices do really rest on the authority of tradition, we submit it to our Baptist friends, whether they are not in fact a relic of Popery, which the Reformation failed to cast off; and whether they, while upholding these practices, can consistently adopt the immortal declaration of Chillingworth—'The Bible, the whole Bible, the Bible alone, is the Religion of Protestants?'" And while our Baptist brethren, particularly the editor of the Chronicle, are thinking on this subject, we commend to their perusal four verses of Scripture which they will find in the second chapter of Romans, commencing with the twenty-first verse—"Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself?" &c.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday in Berlin, Paris, and Scotland—Popery in Ireland and France.

GLASGOW, November 28th, 1851.

A rather curious case was submitted to the decision of the legal tribunal of Berlin, on the 3d instant. The National Zeitung published an article stating that "a party dining at some hotel on a Sunday, during the hours of divine service, had been obliged by the police to postpone their dinner till the church service was over." This information, which had been supplied by a correspondent, proved to be erroneous, and was contradicted the next day, both by the journal in which it originally appeared, and in another by which it had been copied. The Church authorities of Berlin, however, instituted a prosecution against the editors of both papers and the correspondent, all of whom have been acquitted, free of costs, by the law tribunals—a decision which is said to be regarded as indicative of the temper of the latter towards the Court Church Party.

I have formerly remarked upon the fact that when Sir John Musgrove, Bart., Lord Mayor of London, was in France, at the head of a visiting party, he gave offense to those who, without Scripture warrant, will persist in investing Sunday with the sanctions of the Sabbath. The Mayor had not been sufficiently strict in the observance of the Church's chosen day. For this an attempt has just been made to inflict official censure, without success. In the Court of Common Council, when thanks were proposed to be voted for the manner in which he had discharged the duties of Chief Magistrate, Mr. de Jersey, in a lengthened speech, proposed an amendment, excepting that part of the Mayor's conduct which related to the above matter. The amendment was not, however, seconded; and although objections were expressed on other grounds, the vote of thanks was carried by a majority of 118 against 8.

In the far north of Scotland our recent Sunday Postal Law has already come under revision. In September last, at Stornoway, the packet happened to arrive on a Sunday about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and the post-mistress refused to deliver the letters of Sir James Matheson, Bart. M. P., and those of the Dutch Count Reventlow, then on a visit to this country—the office having been closed for the day at 10 o'clock in the morning. This led to a complaint on the part of Sir James to the post-office authorities; and orders were received at Stornoway, that the post-office be opened on Sundays at any hour after the arrival of the packet, except during the hours of divine service in the Established Church. This regulation, if not designed, is calculated to gall the Free Church party, who have taken the most prominent part in the Sunday question. This denomination speak much of the headship of Christ over his church, when the authorities of the land propose to interfere with their liberty to speak and act as they please; but while their avowed creed is in opposition to Scripture on the subject of the Sabbath, human tradition is allowed to have a higher place with them than the law of God.

The Papal priests in Ireland, many of them, are being left in a pitiable plight through the extent of emigration on the part of their flocks, which still continues. Generally, the victims of their superstition seem little concerned about any loss they may sustain through the separation; and still further loss is experienced by the priests, from the efforts now being made to preach the Gospel and read the Scriptures among the benighted of that unhappy land. Every avenue to a true knowledge of divine truth is sought carefully to be closed; and the terrors of priestly anamatha are freely used to prevent the spread of a knowledge of the word of God. Even these are not, however, always successful; and the ugly curses of sinning men are sometimes treated as they ought always to be, and priest Meehan in the Clare District has reiterated his anamatha against those of his flock who send their children to the Protestant school—with but partial effect.

The Court of Cassation in France has decided in the appealed case of Pasteur Lenoir, a Swiss, (who was imprisoned for preaching to a population which had spontaneously called him,) that any foreign minister may exercise his functions publicly, and that religious bodies not salaried by the State have the right to worship without molestation. At Florence, on the other hand, there has been a violent search for Bibles, and persecution of those with whom or in whose houses they are found. Much interest, indeed, attaches to the state of the continent of Europe generally. Espionage is carried on to a great extent against, foreigners especially, under the apprehension that all must be opposed to the existing state of things, ecclesiastical, if not political also. The military commander has, accordingly, forbidden the Protestants of Milan to meet for the celebration of divine worship at the house of Mr. Mylins, a merchant and citizen enjoying universal esteem. And Dr. Marriott has been arrested at Rarlsruke, in Baden, the Protestant capital of a professed Protestant prince, on account of his having circulated a tract by himself, "Anecdotes gathered from Lignori, dedicated to the Jesuits" in Rarlsruke; and a tract of the Religious Tract Society, containing extracts from the writings of this same famous Jesuit. Twenty-four hours after Dr. M. arrived in the town, he was cast into prison. J. A. BEGG.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE UNION.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

It seems that there is in these last days an association of professed Christians calling themselves the American Bible Union, who are making a great outcry about the received English version of the Bible. They say it is not right, and must be altered, or a great portion of the people will remain in ignorance of the truth. And it would seem, from the appearance of a most extraordinary extra of the Sabbath Recorder, that the editors of that paper are about to assist them in their wonderful enterprise. It appeared to me that something ought to be said about it, and fearing that no one else would undertake it, I thought it my duty to make a beginning, hoping that some other pen will do justice to the case, which I am not capable of.

But pray tell us what is the matter with our version of the Bible? It has been for many years thought to be a very good one. Have we all this while been deceived by it? Why, the Bible Union says that King James was a pedobaptist, and that he instructed the translators to translate it so as to agree with pedobaptist practices. But what have those translators done that is so very bad? The Bible Union says that the translators have inserted the word baptize instead of the word immerse. Now, it would seem to me, that if the King instructed them to favor pedobaptist practices, it must have been a remarkable interposition of Divine Providence, that they did not translate that word at all, but inserted the very words of the original; and who dare say the original is not right? Or, if it was not a special interposition of Providence, it must have been a remarkable instance of ingenuity in the translators to give us the exact meaning of the Scriptures, without giving any occasion for the King to complain; for surely he dare not complain of the original.

But, says one, how can we know the meaning of the word baptize, if it is not translated? We must not go to pedobaptist dictionaries, for they will uniformly tell us it means to christen. But, says another, how shall we know the meaning of the word but by the dictionary? I will tell you how I know; I know by the Bible, for the Bible gives us the meaning of that word as exact as it is possible for human language to give it. Nothing can be plainer, than it is from the Bible that the word baptize is used in that book to signify to bury in the water, and that the ordinance of baptism is designed to represent death, burial, and resurrection, which sprinkling or pouring never could do. See Rom. 6: 3, 4, 5—"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried (not sprinkled) with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted (i. e. buried, not sprinkled) in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Now it matters not whether the word baptize was originally Hebrew, Greek, or English, since we are so clearly shown what was the meaning of it, and what it was used for. And I suppose it is now in fact an English word, being taken from the Greek, as many other words were, and adopted into the English dialect, and needs no translating, especially since we are so plainly told in the Bible the exact meaning of it.

The Rev. Dr. Cone, it is true, says that if baptize can be kept untranslated, it may mean sprinkle or pour. Can it be possible that Dr. Cone is so ignorant as not to know that the word baptize was understood by all Christendom to mean burying in water, and that the ordinance was so practiced by all Christians for a long time after the commencement of the Christian era; and that the want of a right understanding of the word was by no means the cause of the introduction of the practice of pouring and sprinkling. And the practice of immersion would no doubt have continued to be the universal practice of the church to this day, had not the Pope, in his matchless perfection and universal authority, ordained that pouring or sprinkling should be deemed valid, in some extreme cases, when a sufficient quantity of water for baptizing could not be procured. If the word immerse had then been used in the Bible instead of baptize, it would have made no difference in regard to the practice, for in those days a decree of the Pope would overbalance any thing the Bible might say.

Seeing, then, that the word baptize agrees exactly with Baptist sentiments and practice, and that there is no hope that its non-translation will ever do the pedobaptists any good, (for it is not probable that they will suffer such a book to be kept in their houses, or, if they should allow their children to read the Baptist Bible, they can just as easily make them believe that sprinkling answers the purpose as if the word baptize was there retained,) of what use will it be to make the proposed alteration? I think it will do nothing at all to advance Christianity; but it will undoubtedly cause divisions and discord among brethren. In fact, it has already produced a division, and not a little discord, in the Baptist denomination, which will be seen by any one who reads the extra to which I have alluded. And, what I think is still worse, it will tend to strengthen the cause of infidelity. How quick the infidel will exclaim, "There, I told you before that the Bible was nothing but the work of men, and now they have fairly made it out, for we see that the members of each denomination must have a Bible to suit themselves." * * * * WM. STILLMAN.

☞ We like to hear both sides of every important question, and we like to give our readers an opportunity to do the same. This it was that induced us to comply with a request to send out gratuitously-furnished copies of an extra giving the proceedings of the Second Annual Meeting of the Bible Union, and this it is that induces us to give place to the foregoing communication. Those who have read the Extra, and especially the Constitution of the Bible Union, need not be told, that the object of the organization is not merely (as Bro. Stillman's letter might be understood as implying) to secure a translation of the word baptize in the English Scriptures, but that it is to secure and circulate faithful translations of the Scriptures in all languages. As the existing Bible Societies seem satisfied to circulate King James' version of the English Bible—a version which the members of the Union consider defective in many respects—they propose, as one of the first things requiring attention, to secure a faithful and thorough translation of the Bible in English—a translation which all who love the unadulterated Word of God can unite in circulating. Whether the Union is so organized and conducted as to give good ground of hope that this object will be secured through its instrumentality, is a question in which all must feel a deep interest, but concerning which there is certainly room for difference of opinion. We confess, that the remarkable prominence which is given to the subject of baptism in all its publications, and the unnecessary zeal which its officers evince in doing battle with those Baptists who refuse to coöperate with them, have greatly reduced our hopes of its success.

RED LAKE, MINNESOTA.—Dr. Lewis, physician of the Red Lake Mission, Minnesota, furnishes the following information relating to Red Lake and the agricultural capacities of the country adjoining:—

"Red Lake is situated on the 48th degree of north latitude. It is 40 miles long, and at the widest part 25 miles. The soil in the vicinity of the Lake is good—much of the land in the surrounding country is barren. Winter wheat has been cultivated with success at the mission. It has been raised for five years in succession, during which time there has been but one failure, and that was last year. By the usually traveled route, Red Lake is nearly 500 miles from St. Paul. There is a band of Chippewas on the lake, numbering 60 lodges, and 300 persons. They receive no annuities or assistance of any kind from the Government; they live by the chase, fisheries, and agriculture. They raised during the past season 2,500 bushels of corn, and a large quantity of potatoes. Rev. S. G. Wright is in charge of the mission. This devoted missionary and his assistants have been true benefactors to this people, having taught them to a considerable extent the germs of Christian civilization."

UNIVERSALIST COLLEGE.—An exchange says that four locations have been urged for the new Universalist College, Brattleboro, Walnut Hill near Boston, Springfield, and Worcester. Twenty thousand dollars are bequeathed to the College on condition it is located at Walnut Hill, twenty more on condition it is within the limits of Massachusetts. Citizens of Worcester will give $30,000 if it be established in that city, and it is understood $20,000 will be raised in Springfield, if it be located in that town. A committee is now engaged in examining different sites.

LOUIS KOSSUTH.

Louis Kossuth, the Governor of Hungary, continues to be the object of attraction and the subject of conversation throughout the country. During the first ten days of his sojourn in America, he made three set speeches, one an elaborate and carefully prepared one, received any number of deputations, replied to an infinity of addresses, giving up almost each entire day to company, and being obliged to devote his nights to study, correspondence, &c. One of the daily papers states that up to Sunday last, he had received 40 official addresses from public bodies, all congratulating him on his arrival, and sympathizing in his cause; 12 especial invitations to visit different cities and towns as a guest; and more than 225 private letters from single individuals, containing sentiments of the warmest character, both for him and for Hungary, and in some instances also sending donations to the Hungarian Fund which it is proposed to raise in aid of her liberty. Letters are daily pouring in upon him, and his correspondence is immense, not only in America, but in almost all the countries in Europe. Throughout the present week he was to continue to receive deputations; in addition to which he was on Second-day evening to attend the dinner given him by the Press, and address at length the assemblage; the following evening was set apart for the dinner given him by the Military of New York, whose noble greeting on his arrival he could not refuse gratefully to acknowledge; the next day was set apart for a reception of the ladies of New York; and Fifth-day he is urged to meet at a public dinner the Bar of New York. The first of next week it is expected that he will proceed to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, &c.; and about the first of February he proposes to sail again for Europe.

In his great speech at the Municipal Dinner given on the 11th inst., after treating at length, and with marked ability, the idea of non-interference in foreign affairs, which is represented by leading politicians as one of the ruling and lasting principles of the policy of the United States, Kossuth stated frankly and fully the object of his visit to this country. We copy the concluding part of his speech, which gives the gist of the matter:—

And so gentlemen, I have respectfully stated what are my humble requests to the sovereign people of this country, in its public and political capacity. It is, that the people of the United States may be pleased, by all constitutional means, to declare—

First, That, feeling interested in the maintenance of the laws of nations, acknowledging the sovereign right of every people to dispose of its own domestic concerns to be one of these laws, and the interference with this sovereign right to be a violation of these laws of nations, the people of the United States—resolved to respect, and to make respected these laws—declares the Russian past intervention in Hungary to be a violation of these laws, which, if reiterated, would be a new violation, and would not be regarded indifferently by the people of the United States—that you, therefore, invite your Government to act accordingly, and so invite Great Britain to unite with the United States in this policy.

Second, That the people of the United States is resolved to maintain its right of commercial intercourse with the nations of Europe, whether they be in a state of revolution against their Governments or not; and that with the view of approaching scenes on the continent of Europe, the people invites the Government to take appropriate measures for the protection of the trade of the people of the Mediterranean, and Third, That the people of the United States pronounces its opinion in respect to the question of independence of Hungary, so as I had the honor to state. I hope no body can reproach me to have done by this anything inconsistent with the high regards which I owe to the United States, or not appropriate to my capacity. I would regard it as a very judicious and beneficial thing, if those generous men who sympathise with the cause of Hungary, would form committees through the different parts of the United States, with the purpose to occasion appropriate meetings, to pass such resolutions as I had the honor humbly to suggest. So much for the generous people of the United States, in its public and political capacity.

And if that sympathy which I have the honor to meet with in the United States is really intended to become beneficial to the cause of my poor native land, then there is one humble wish more which I anxiously entertain. But that is a private business; it is a respectful appeal to the generous feelings of individuals. Gentlemen, I would rather starve than rely, for myself and family, on foreign aid; but, for my country's freedom, I would not be ashamed to go a begging from door to door. [Great cheering.] Gentlemen, I mean financial aid; money to assist the cause of freedom, and independence of Hungary. I took the advice of some kind friends, if it be lawful to express such a humble request, because I feel the honorable duty, neither to offend, nor to evade your laws. I am told it is lawful. There are two means to see this, my humble wish, accomplished. The first is from spontaneous subscription, to put the offerings of kind friends at my disposal, for the benefit of my country's cause. The second is a loan. As to this loan, that is business of a more private nature, which, to be carried on in an appropriate way, requires private consultation in a more close circle. So here I only mention that if there are such generous men who are willing to enter into the idea, provided it will be arranged in an acceptable way, I would most humbly entreat them to enter into a private communication about the subject with me; and, secondly, I express my conviction that even this matter of loan could be efficiently promoted by the other measure of free, gratuitous subscriptions, which would afford me the means necessary for the practical initiation of the loan itself. Now, as to these subscriptions. The idea was brought home to my mind by a plain, but very generous letter, which I had the honor to receive, and which I beg to read. It is as follows:—

CINCINNATI, O., Friday, Nov. 14, 1851.

M. LOUIS KOSSUTH, Governor of Hungary—Sir: I have authorized the office of the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Company, in New York, to hand you drafts on me for one thousand dollars.

Respectfully yours, W. SMEAD.

I beg leave here publicly to return my most humble thanks to the gentleman, for his ample aid, and the delicate manner in which he offered it; and it came to my mind, that where one single individual is ready to make such sacrifices to my country's cause, there may, perhaps, be many who would give their small share to it, if they were only apprised that it will be thankfully accepted, however small it may be.

And it came to my mind then that drops of millions make an ocean, and the United States number many millions of inhabitants, all attached with warm feelings to the principles of liberty, agglomerated by single dollars, is even so one million of dollars, as if it were one single draft, to me yet more precious, because it would practically show the sympathy of the people at large. I will consider it highly beneficial, should I be so happy to see that generous men would form communities throughout the United States, to raise out of the free offerings of the people some material aid to assist the second course of freedom and independence of Hungary. It is a delicate matter, gentlemen, for me to speak so. It is, perhaps, one of the greatest sacrifices to my country that I do so. [Great applause.] But I love my country. [Renewed cheering.] And readily will I undergo even this torturing humiliation for her sake. Would I were so happy as your Washington was, when for your glorious country's sake, in the hours of your need, he also called for money in France. Sir, I have done. Conscious of no personal merit, I came to your shores a poor, persecuted exile, but you poured upon me the triumph of a welcome such as the world has never yet seen, and why? Because you took me for the representative of that principle of liberty which God has destined to become the common benefit of humanity; and it is a glorious sight to see a mighty, free, powerful people, come forth to greet with such a welcome the principle of freedom, even in a poor, persecuted, penniless exile. Be blessed for it! Your generous deed will now be recorded through all posterity; and, as even now, millions of Europe's oppressed victims will raise their thanksgiving to God for the ray of hope which you by this, your act, have thrown on the dark night of their fate; even so, through all posterity, oppressed men look to your memory as a token of God, that there is a hope for freedom on earth, because there is a people like you to feel its worth and to support its cause.

LARGE BEQUESTS.

By the will of the late Mr. Augustus Graham, of Brooklyn, L. I., dated 29th May, 1850, and a codicil of 9th of April, 1851, and a farther codicil of 19th Oct. 1851, the following bequests were made to different charitable and public institutions:—

To the Brooklyn Institute, $27,000, for the following purposes, viz.:

For the support of Free Lectures for the youth of Brooklyn,	$5,000
For a School of Design, and forming a Gallery of Fine Arts,	5,000
For the purchase of specimens of Natural History, and procuring free lectures on the same, in lecture room of the Brooklyn Institute,	5,000
For a course of Sunday Evening Lectures, on the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, as manifested in His works,	12,000
To the American Colonization Society,	10,000
To the St. Andrew's Society in N. Y.	500
To the St. George's Society, N. Y.	500
To the Erin Fraternal Benefit Society, City of Brooklyn,	500
To the Home of Aged, Indigent, Respectable Females, Brooklyn,	1,500
Brooklyn Association for the Improvement of the condition of the Poor,	500
For the purchase of books and newspapers for the use of the inmates of the Insane Asylum and Poor House of Kings County,	500
To the workmen in the employ of the Brooklyn White Lead Company,	500
To the House of Industry and Home of the Friendless, New-York,	5,000
To the Home for Discharged Female Convicts, New York,	1,000
For the purchase of surgical instruments, water-bed, &c., for Brooklyn City Hospital,	5,000
To the Brooklyn Orphan Asylum, incorporated April 15, 1835,	1,000
To the Ch. of Our Saviour, Brooklyn,	2,500
To the Ch. of Restoration, Brooklyn,	2,500
To the Antioch College, Marion N. Y.	1,000
To the Meadville Theological School, Meadville, Pa.	5,000
To the American Unitarian Association, Boston,	10,000
For the promotion of Unitarian Christianity in a district in England,	1,000
To the Woodberry Institute, Eng., founded by him.	500
Total,	$76,000

GOVERNMENT WITNESSES.—The proper officers, says The Albany Evening Journal, are busy in Buffalo to procure the indictment of the persons charged with being concerned in the rescue of the alledged Slave at Syracuse. The Buffalo Express gives the following portrait of some of the witnesses subpenaed to procure the indictment:—

Sottish, sore-eyed, blotched and bloated denizens of the stews of Syracuse. They would shame the worst specimens which our "Five Points," before they were purged by fire, could produce; and we thought that they "were some" in the way of human wickedness and baseness.

There certainly never has been seen in our streets ten vagabonds that would at all compare with these pets of the "State prosecution." Citizens would do well to look to their hall doors and hen roosts, until these "damned souls" of a political prosecution leave town.

Five or six of the worthies were committed to the watch-house night before last, for riotous behavior, and again last evening they made "night hideous" with their noisy debauch. We speak of some ten or a dozen of the chaps most relied on, to swear to enough to fix indictments for vexatious purposes, against a large number of reputable citizens of Syracuse, and not of those who are reputable people at home.

Capt. James West, of the steamer Atlantic, left this port recently on his two hundred and first voyage across the ocean.

Proceedings in Congress last Week.

SECOND-DAY, DEC. 8.

The SENATE, during the early part of the day, was engaged in business of a routine character, such as the appointment of Committees and the adoption of rules. Some petitions were then presented, and new bills introduced; among which is a bill by Mr. Walker, of Wisconsin, ceding the Public Lands to the States respectively, on condition that they grant them without cost to actual settlers only. Mr. Seward introduced his joint resolution welcoming Kossuth as the guest of the Nation, and proposed that it be adopted. The Chair intimated that it required a unanimous vote to adopt it. Gen. Shields introduced an amendment he intended to propose, to the effect that three Senators be appointed a Committee to introduce him to the Senate, in accordance with the precedent laid down in La Fayette's case; hereupon Mr. Seward's resolution was laid over. Mr. Foote then introduced his Compromise Resolution, sustaining it at some length, and with acrimonious aspersions on the motives and character of every man North and South who ventured to oppose him. Senator Butler, of South Carolina, denounced the resolution as uncalled for, unmeaning, purposeless and mischievous. The debate was entirely confined to these two Senators.

The HOUSE was not in session.

THIRD-DAY, DEC. 9.

The SENATE was busy during the morning hour in receiving petitions and introducing bills. On the presentation of a memorial from Newark, New-Jersey, having reference to Mr. Thrasher, Mr. Stockton moved a resolution calling for all papers and communications between our Government and that of Spain, on the subject of Thrasher's trial. Senator Cass proposed a resolution calling for information relative to the firing into the Prometheus. On motion of Gen. Shields, the Kossuth resolutions were taken up. Mr. Seward moved his, and supported it by a brief, pointed and able speech. Gen. Shields proposed as an amendment the course adopted in the instance of La Fayette. The Chair ruled the amendment not in order. Mr. Berrien opposed the wasting of the time of the Senate about what, after all, would only amount to an idle compliment. After a discussion, in which Senators Foote, Hale, Miller, and others, took part, the Senate adjourned without coming to a vote.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the various Committees were announced by the Speaker. A resolution from the Senate, proposing the election of Chaplain by each House, to interchange weekly, was then introduced. Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, opposed the election of such officers, on the ground that there was no authority for it, and because it is a burlesque on the Christian religion. He moved to lay the resolution on the table; rejected—Yeas, 22; Nays, 169. Mr. Henn proposed an amendment, that the Chaplains shall not receive compensation out of the Treasury of the United States; rejected. The Senate's resolution was adopted. The House then proceeded to the election of a Chaplain. There were twelve candidates in the field, and after four votings, M. F. Morgan, Methodist Episcopal, was elected.

FOURTH-DAY, DEC. 10.

In the SENATE, after some routine business of no general interest, the Kossuth resolution was taken up. Mr. Summer, of Massaceusetts, supported it in a lucid, forcible and conclusive speech. He vindicated Kossuth's right to a national welcome on grounds far above the little, narrow, technical ground of precedent. Mr. Stockton of New Jersey followed in favor of the resolution, Mr. Clemens against it, Mr. Shields in favor, and Mr. Foote commenced speaking, but was cut short by the adjournment of the Senate.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Mr. Cobb, of Ala., introduced a bill, explanatory of the Bounty Land Law of September last, saying that it shall be so construed as to authorize the transfer of the said warrants. Mr. Brooks, of N. Y., presented a memorial from the Industrial Congress in New York, remonstrating against the proposed alteration in this act. Mr. Smith, of Ala., gave notice that he should ask leave to introduce a joint resolution, requiring the Secretary of State to furnish Kossuth with copies of all the laws defining treason and misdemeanor. The resolution, he said, comtemplated further action. If, after understanding the laws, Kossuth continued to make incendiary speeches, it shall be the solemn duty of the President to have him arrested. [Laughter.] Mr. Johnston, of Tennessee, on leave, introduced a bill to encourage Agriculture, Commerce, Manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period specified; and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

FIFTH-DAY, DEC. 11.

In the SENATE, several bills were presented; but they were mostly duplicates or unimportant. An attempt was made to have the sentence of Gen. Talcott reviewed by Congress. It was opposed on the ground that Congress has invariably refused to review Court Martial proceedings in the case of privates. Rev. Mr. Butler, Episcopalian, was elected Chaplain by a vote of 25 to 12. The Kossuth resolution was then taken up. Mr. Foote again addressed the Senate. Mr. Cass also made a long speech. The subject was further debated by Messrs. Berrien, Hale, Douglas, Dawson, and Badger, and the Senate adjourned without disposing of the question.

The HOUSE held a short session, but did nothing of importance. Several petitions were presented for aid in constructing public works. Resolutions referring the President's Message to appropriate Committees were introduced.

SIXTH-DAY, DEC. 12.

In the SENATE, Mr. Cass' resolution in relation to the Prometheus was adopted as follows: That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public interest, any information he may have received respecting the firing into the American steamship Prometheus by a British vessel of war in November last, near Greytown, on the Mosquito Coast; and also, what measures had been taken by the Executive to ascertain the state of the facts, and to vindicate the honor of the country. The bill from the House, making land warrants assignable, was taken up and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Mr. Seward's Kossuth Resolution was taken up, and after remarks by Messrs. Mallory, Badger, Dodge, Foote, and Seward, it was adopted by a vote of 33 to 6.

☞ On Second-day, Dec. 15, the House of Representatives adopted the Senate's resolution in relation to Kossuth, by a large majority.

European News.

The steamship Niagara, with the news from Europe arrived at Boston on the 12th inst.

